“We confeſs that the Spiritual Life vouchſafed us by Chriſt in this Sacrament does not only conſiſt in his quickning us by his Spirit: But over and above this Bleſſing by Virtue of his Spirit, he makes us Partakers of that Principle of Life his Fleſh. * By which Participation we are nouriſh'd to Immortal Life. Therefore when we mention the Communion with the Faithful with Chriſt, we underſtand their communicating with his Body and Blood, no leſs than with his Spirit; that thus they may be in Poſſeſſion of their whole Saviour. † For the Scripture plainly declares, that his Fleſh is Meat to us indeed, and his Blood is Drink indeed: And if we expect a Life by Chriſt, we ought to grow and ſupport our ſelves by ſuch Nouriſhment. Thus the Apoſtle had no common meaning, when he tells us, we are Fleſh of Chriſts Fleſh, and Bone of his Bone: No; By this Language he inſinuates our Communion or Communication with his Body: A Myſtery ſo ſublime that no Words are able to reach the Dignity of the Thing. Neither does our Saviours Aſcenſion, nor the Abſence of the local Preſence of his Body, infer any Inconſiſtency with this Privilege. For notwithſtanding in this State of Mortality we live at a diſtance, and are not in the ſame Place with him, yet the Force of his Spirit is not confin'd by any corporeal Interpoſitions, nor hinder'd from uniting things, tho' at the remoteſt Intervals of ſpace: We acknowledge therefore his Spirit is the Principle of Union, and the Band as it were of Communication with himſelf: But then we deſire to be underſtood in this Senſe, that this Holy Spirit does really feed us with the Subſtance of our Lords Fleſh and Blood, and quickens us with the Participation of them for the glorious Purpoſes of Immortality. And that Chriſt offers and exhibits this Communion of his Fleſh and Blood, under the Symbols of Bread and Wine, to thoſe who celebrate the Holy Euchariſt purſuant to his Inſtitution. (d)

(d) Calvin Epiſt. p. 396.

I have been the longer upon this Argument to ſhew the Reader in what Terms of Myſtery and Reverence, Bucer and Calvin diſcourſe upon the Holy Euchariſt. Thus the Fathers of the Primitive Church expreſs'd themſelves with the utmoſt Veneration and Solemnity upon this Subject. For inſtance, Juſtin Martyr tells the Emperor “Antoninus Pius, that the Chriſtians did not receive the conſecrated Elements as common Bread and Wine, but as Jeſus Chriſt was made Fleſh by the Logos of God, and real Fleſh and Blood for our Salvation, ſo we are taught that this Food which the ſame Logos bleſs'd by Prayer and Thankſgiving, is turn'd into the Nouriſhment and Subſtance of our Fleſh and Blood, and is the Fleſh and Blood of the Incarnate Jeſus. But notwithſtanding the ſtrength of Expreſſion in this laſt Clauſe, 'tis plain this Father had no meaning of Tranſubſtantiation: For in the beginning of this Paſſage, he affirms our Bodies are nouriſh'd by this Food, and that the Bread and Wine are turn'd into the Subſtance of our Bodies. (e) Now this cannot with any Conſiſtency of Truth or Regard, be affirm'd of our Saviours Glorified Body.

How the Fathers expreſs'd themſelves upon this Subject.

(e) Juſtin Martyr. Apoll. 2*d*.

Irenæus was of Opinion that by receiving the Holy Euchariſt, our Bodies had a Principle of Immortality convey'd to them, and that by Virtue of this Sacrament, they would be rais'd to Glory at the laſt Day. St. Chryſoſtom, to mention (f) no more, ſpeaks of the Holy Euchariſt in Language of the higheſt Reverence and Admiration; calls it a tremendous Sacrifice, and carries the Idea to the laſt degree of Solemnity: And tho' I think I have made it ſufficiently appear, that neither this Father, nor any of the reſt believ'd Tranſubſtantiation, yet on the other ſide, 'tis evident, the Antients thought this Sacrament the moſt Auguſt Myſtery in the Chriſtian Worſhip, that a peculiar divine Virtue was annex'd to the conſecrated Elements, and that they were to be receiv'd with a diſtinguiſhing Veneration.

(f) De Sacerdot. lib. 6.

Peter Martyr notwithſtanding Bucer's Caution, gave out ſeveral Copies of his Diſputation at Oxford: Upon this his Adverſary Treſham ſends a Tranſcript to Court with a Dedication to the Privy Council. In this Addreſs he acquaints the Council that Peter Martyr had publiſh'd the Conference, but whether he means 'twas printed, is uncertain, for now 'tis only to be ſeen amongſt Fox his Manuſcripts.

“In this Dedication, Treſham complains of Peter Martyr for miſreporting the Caſe; charges him with wreſting the Scripture; with haling the Fathers into his Cauſe againſt their Sentiment; with precarious Principles, and lying expos'd to have his own Arguments turn'd upon him. He pretends he has put a fair Copy into their Hands; that it was taken verbatim from the Clerks who were order'd to write, and that there was nothing in it but what was contain'd in Peter Martyrs Copy.

By the way if Peter Martyrs Copy agreed with Treſhams, I can't imagin why Treſham ſhould charge the other with miſreporting the matter.

Treſham confeſſes, he hath added ſome ſupplemental Paſſages which ſlip'd his Memory in the Diſputation, and hopes 'tis defenſible enough to make uſe of Recollection, and fortifie the Argument.

In the cloſe he lays the Papers before the Lords of the Council with all imaginable Reſpect, and deſires it may be printed with the King's Privilege. *

In June this Year a Diſputation was held at Cambridge upon the ſame Subject. 'Twas manag'd before the King's Commiſſioners, Ridley Biſhop of Rocheſter, Gooderick Biſhop of Eli, Dr. May Dean of Pauls, Dr. Wendy the Kings Phyſician, and Mr Cheek his Præceptor.

The firſt Queſtion was, that Tranſubſtantiation cannot be proved by Scripture, neither is this Doctrine ſupported by the Authority of the Fathers for the firſt Thouſand Years.

Foxii Mſs. Biblioth. R. Harley armig.

Secondly, that in the Lords Supper there is no Oblation or Sacrifice, excepting by way of Remembrance of Chriſt's Death.

The Queſtions were publickly argued three Days. The firſt Day they were defended by Dr. Madew; Glyn, Langdale, Segwick, and Young being Opponents. The Second Day Dr. Glyn defended the other ſide of the Queſtions, and was oppos'd by Perne, Grindal, Gueſt, and and Pilkington. The Third Day Dr. Perne was Reſpondent, Parker, Pollard, Vavaſor, and Young, arguing againſt him: And to conclude, the Determination was made by the Biſhop of Rocheſter. † The Diſputation may be ſeen at length in Fox.

'Tis no Wonder to find the Doctrine of the Holy Euchariſt thus ſolemnly argued in both Univerſities, ſince as the King obſerves this Queſtion had been warmly debated in the Parliament Houſe at the beginning of the laſt Seſſion. *

King Edward Journal p. 6.

To proceed, Bonner notwithſtanding the Flexibleneſs of his Humour was not compliant with the Liturgy to a full Satisfaction. It ſeems he had either not diſpers'd Copies of the New Common Prayer, or not preſs'd the Uſe of them in his Dioceſe, as might reaſonably be expected: The Council therefore thought it adviſeable the King ſhould write to quicken him in his Duty.

The King's Letter to Bonner. July 23. Anno Dom. 1549.

The Letter ſets forth that this Common-Prayer-Book was not only agreed to by the unanimous Conſent of both Houſes of Parliament, but that 'twas ſettled by the like Aſſent of the Biſhops in the ſame Parliament, and of all other Learned Men of this Realm, in their Synods and Convocations Provincial. After ſome Sentences of high Commendation on this Book, the Biſhop is commanded to advertize his Chancellor and Archdeacons of their Neglect, and to preſs frequent Communion and Conformity to the Service.

Bonner finding the King's Command preciſe and peremptory, and perceiving himſelf tax'd with Remiſsneſs, made no ſcruple to execute the Order. (g)

(g) Bonner Regiſt. Fol. 219.

In ſhort, we do not find any Complaints of Noncompliance with the Service eſtabliſh'd excepting in the Lady Mary's Family. This Princeſs ſtill continued the Uſe of the Maſs, and to juſtifie her Conduct ſent her Reaſons in a Letter to the Privy Council. By her Letter it appears the Council had written to her, and complain'd of her Nonconformity to the Conſtitution. In Defence of her Practiſe, “ſhe tells them, ſhe was guilty of the breach of no Law, excepting one of their own making, meaning the Act of Uniformity: And this ſhe believes in her Conſcience does not deſerve the Name of a Law. She puts them in mind that as the late King's Executors, they were all ſworn to fulfill his Will and maintain his Laws. That the Conſtitution, as her Father left it, ſhould be the Rule of her Obedience till the King her Brother was of Age: And beſides all this, ſhe could by no means ſatisfie her Conſcience in the late Alterations in Religion.

June 22. Anno Dom. 1549.

The Lady Mary writes to the Council for Liberty of Conſcience.

In Anſwer to this, the Council order'd her Chaplain Dr. Hopkins to acquaint her with the Inſufficiency of her Objections. “For the purpoſe, he was to repreſent to her that the Act concerning Religion was previouſly debated and agreed to, by the whole Clergy. That 'tis a great Fault in any Subject to remonſtrate againſt the King's Laws, and renounce the Authority of the Legiſlature. That this Fault is heighten'd in her Grace, upon the ſcore of her Birth and near Relation to the King: That Diſobedience to the King her Brothers Government implies particular Unkindneſs, Diſregard to the Crown, and overlooking her own Intereſt; for her Grace ſtands next in the legal Settlement. And that her Example of Incompliance would be remarkably dangerous at this Juncture.

Their Anſwer.

“As to her Graces reminding them, they were ſworn to obſerve the late King's Laws, they grant the Suggeſtion, but reply withal, that when a Law is repeal'd by the ſame Authority it was enacted, it loſes its Force and Denomination. And for her Grace to affirm that no Law can be diſcharg'd during the King her Brothers Minority, is to throw a Blemiſh upon his Majeſties Authority, ſuppoſes the Government maim'd and diſabled, and opens the Way to great Diſorder and Inconvenience:

“And therefore her Graces inſiſting upon ſuſpending her Obedience till the King comes of Age, is by no means to be allow'd. For the King as to the Functions of Government, is always a Major. He is King by the Ordinance of God: His Title is founded upon Royal Deſcent, upon Proximity of Blood, and Computation of Years comes not within the Queſtion. They reinforce their Reaſoning from Scripture Preſidents, and obſerve to her Grace, that young Children have been recogniz'd Kings by Gods Appointment: That he has bleſt their Reigns with extraordinary Succeſs, and that they have been remarkable for reforming Religion during their Minority.

Her Reſolution of not hearing the Points of Religion argued any farther, is diſliked by the Council: “They tell her there is more Will than Reaſon in pitching upon ſuch meaſures. That 'tis not ſafe for her Grace to truſt her own Opinion in matters of ſuch Conſequence. That the Grounds of Religion ought to be brought to the Teſt, and throughly examin'd: That if her Opinion is ſound and orthodox, 'twill be no harm to find it proof againſt Argument and Oppoſition. If there are any Flaws in it, the Diſcovery will be of Service. The bare debating of the Subject therefore can make no Change in her Faith, unleſs ſhe finds herſelf convinc'd by an Over-ballance of Argument. And to make the Propoſal more acceptable, they deſire her Grace would nominate the Perſons for managing the Diſpute, promiſing her withal, that they ſhould never deſire her Grace to move a Step farther than good Anthority, and Dint of Reaſon ſhall carry her. (h) Fox Vol. 2. p. 700.

This Princeſs being apprehenſive of Compulſion in matters of Conſcience, ſent a Gentleman to the Emperor to interpoſe for her.

There was a Complaint at this time at the Emperors Court againſt the Engliſh Embaſſadour Sir Philip Hobby for uſing the new Common-Prayer-Book. The Embaſſadour anſwer'd, he was oblig'd to govern himſelf by the Laws of his own Country: That the Emperors Embaſſadour had Maſs at his Chappel in London: That notwithſtanding this Service was contrary to the Laws of England, there was no Diſturbance given foreign Embaſſadours upon this Score: And that he had reaſon to expect the ſame Liberty, allow'd by his Maſter to thoſe of a publick Character.

The Emperor appears in her behalf.

As to the Lady Mary, the Emperor undertook her Intereſt. To prevent a Rupture therefore Hobby and Paget another Engliſh Embaſſadour promis'd in the King's Name that ſhe ſhould be diſpens'd with for ſome time. This Qualification they afterwards declar'd upon their Honour was thrown in. But the Emperor and his Miniſters averr'd the Promiſe was abſolute, without any Abatement with Reſpect to Time. The Emperor ſent the Protector and Council the Propoſal of a Marriage between the Lady Mary and Alphonſo Brother to the King of Portugal. The Council entertain'd the Motion, and tho' the late King had left his Daughters but Ten Thouſand Pounds a piece, they offer'd to raiſe her Fortune to a Hundred Thouſand Crowns in Mony, beſides Five Thouſand Pounds in Jewels. This Portugueſe Prince was about her own Age, and offer'd Twenty Thouſand Crowns per Annum Joynture, but this Overture came to nothing. (i)

Auguſt. 6. A Proclamation againſt Plays.

This Summer a Proclamation was publiſh'd againſt acting of Plays. It ſets forth that the Arguments of theſe Entertainments of the Stage went upon ſeditious Subjects: Arraign'd the Government, and expos'd the Conſtitution to Contempt: That a great many Tumults and Diſorders had been occaſion'd by this Liberty; that therefore from the Ninth Day of the preſent Auguſt, till the Feaſt of all Saints next coming, no Perſon was to act any Stage Performance in Engliſh, in any Part of the Realm. The Penalty was Impriſonment, and farther Puniſhment at the King's Pleaſure. (k)

(k) Fuller Church Hiſt. Book 7.

It ſeems ſome indiſcreet People of both Religions had applied to the Aſſiſtance of the Stage, and played their Farces againſt each other: This was a fooliſh and prophane Expedient, and tended only to diſſerve Chriſtianity in general, and make it the Sport of Libertines and Atheiſts.

Injunctions ſent by the King to Bonner.

About this time Bonner Biſhop of London receiv'd farther Orders from the King. The Letter ſets forth the Biſhops Negligence and Miſbehaviour in his Paſtoral Office: That many People of London, and other Places of that Dioceſe abſented themſelves from the publick Prayers and Communion: That the Cenſures of the Church were not exerted upon Fornication and Adultery. After this Præfatory Reprimand, the Biſhop is oblig'd to obſerve the following Injunctions.

Firſt, to preach a Sermon at Pauls Croſs upon the next Sunday, after Three Weeks of the Date of this Letter, and once every Quarter, and to be preſent at every Sermon at Pauls Croſs, unleſs prevented by Sickneſs, or other reaſonable Excuſe.

Aug. 7.

Secondly, Upon every Day which were heretofore accounted Principal Feaſts, or Majus Duplex, and at all ſuch times as the Biſhops of London us'd to celebrate and ſing high Maſs, he was to adminiſter the Holy Communion at St. Pauls, for the better Example of others, unleſs diſabled by Sickneſs.

Thirdly, he was bound to cite all ſuch Perſons before him as do not frequent the Common Prayer, or receive the Sacrament at leaſt once a year: He was likewiſe to cite ſuch Perſons as frequent Places where other Rites or Services are uſed different from the eſtabliſh'd Liturgy: Such Offences and Noncompliance was to be puniſh'd by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. He was likewiſe to be particularly careful in puniſhing Adultery and Fornication purſuant to the Laws of the Church.

And laſtly, he was to take care that thoſe who refuſe to pay their Tythes to the London Clergy, might be compell'd to Juſtice. (l)

(l) Regiſt. Bonner Fol. 220.

The Matter of the Sermon preſcrib'd this Biſhop.

Farther, for his firſt Sermon at St. Pauls the Matter was preſcrib'd him by the King, in the Words following. viz.

“That all ſuch as rebel againſt their Prince get unto them Damnation. And thoſe that reſiſt the high Power, reſiſt the Ordinance of God, and he that dies therefore in Rebellion by the Words of God, is utterly damn'd, and ſo loſes both Body and Soul. And therefore thoſe Rebels in Devonſhire and Cornwall, in Norfolk or elſewhere, who take upon them to aſſemble a Power and Force againſt their Prince, againſt the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, and go about to ſubvert the State and Order of the Commonwealth, not only do deſerve Death as Traytors and Rebels, but do accumulate to themſelves Eternal Damnation, ever to be in the burning Fire of Hell, with Lucifer the Father and firſt Author of Pride, Diſobedience, and Rebellion. What Maſſes or Holy Water ſoever they pretend to, or what Pretence ſoever they have, they are in the ſame Guilt with Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, who for rebelling againſt Moſes were ſwallow'd down alive into Hell, altho' they pretended to ſacrifice unto God. And thus Saul was rejected for ſaving the fat Sheep, and Agag for Sacrifice. For, as the Scripture ſaith, Obedience is better than Sacrifice. In Diſobedience, Pride, Diſorder, and Rebellion, nothing can pleaſe God.

The Devonſhire and Norfolk Rebellions not ſuppreſs'd when this Order was ſent:

“Likewiſe in the Order of the Church, and extern Rites and Ceremonies of Divine Service, for ſo much as God requires Humility of Heart, Innocency of living, knowing of him, Charity and Love to our Neighbour, and Obedience to his Word, and to his Miniſters, and ſuperior Powers; theſe we muſt bring to all our Prayers, to all our Service, and this is the Sacrifice that God requires, and theſe be thoſe that make all Things pleaſant to God. The extern Rites and Ceremonies be but Exerciſes of our Religion, and appointable by Superior Powers: In chooſing whereof we muſt obey the Magiſtrates, the which Things we do alſo ſee ever hath been and ſhall be as the Time and Place is, divers; and yet all hath pleaſed God ſo long as theſe before ſpoken inward Things be there. If any Man ſhall uſe the old Rites, and thereby diſobey the Superior Power, the Devotion of his Ceremony is made nought by his Diſobedience: So that which elſe, ſo long as the ſame did ſo ſtand, might be good, by Pride and Diſobedience is now made nought, as Sauls Sacrifice, Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, and Aarons Two Children was, but who that joineth to Devotion, Obedience, he wins the Garland; for elſe it is a Zeal, ſed non ſecundum ſcientiam, a Will, Deſire, Zeal and Devotion, but not after Wiſdom, that is a fooliſh Devotion, &c.

Id. Fol. 221.

“Further, ye ſhall for Example on Sunday come Seven-night celebrate the Communion at Pauls Church. Ye ſhall alſo ſet forth in the Sermon, that our Authority of our Royal Power is (as of Truth it is) of no leſs Authority and Force in this our young Age, than is or was of any of our Predeceſſors, tho' the ſame were much Elder, as may ap“ pear by Example of Joſias, and other younger Kings in Scripture, and therefore all our Subjects be no leſs bound to the Obedience of our Precepts, Laws, and Statutes than if we were of Thirty or Forty Years of Age.

Ridley blam'd by the Protector for his Incompliance at Cambridge.

Before I proceed farther to Bonners Buſineſs, I ſhall add ſomething concerning the Kings Commiſſioners at Cambridge. Ridley was appointed one of the Viſitors, as hath been obſerv'd, and order'd to open the Viſitation with a Sermon. Upon this he wrote to May Dean of St. Pauls, to inform him of what was to be done: He receiv'd Anſwer the Viſitors were only to diſcharge ſome ſuperſtitious Practices and Rites, and to make ſuch Statutes as ſhould be found needful. But when he came to Cambridge, he perceiv'd the Inſtructions went farther. The Commiſſioners were order'd to procure a Reſignation of ſome Colleges, and to convert ſome Divinity Fellowſhips to the Study of the Civil Law. Particularly, Clare Hall was to be ſuppreſs'd. But the Maſter and Fellows tho' ſtrongly ſollicited, would not be prevail'd with to reſign.

He juſtifies his Conduct.

Upon this Ridley declar'd he could not proceed farther with a good Conſcience. The Church to uſe the Words of our Learned Hiſtorian (m) was already ſo rob'd and ſtrip'd, that it ſeem'd there was a Deſign laid down by ſome to drive all Civility, Learning, and Religion out of the Nation: Therefore the Biſhop declar'd he would not concur in ſuch Things, and deſir'd Leave to be gone. The other Viſitors ſent a Complaint againſt him to the Protector, charged him with throwing in unneceſſary Scruples, and barking as they call it, againſt their Proceedings.

June 1. Ann. Dom. 1549.

He wrote a Letter of Excuſe to the Protector, acquaints him he was extremely deſirous to ſtand fair in his Graces Opinion: But that his Conſcience forbad him farther lengths of Compliance: And that notwithſtanding no Perſon was more inclin'd to ſatisfy the Commands of his Prince, yet in ſome Caſes he was bound to make a ſtand, and deliver unacceptable Truths. That a Chriſtian ought not to decline his Duty for the Fear or Favour of any Mortal Man. For our Saviour has forewarn'd us, not to fear thoſe who can kill the Body: And elſewhere the Apoſtle tells us, 'tis a fearful Thing to fall into the Hands of the Living God.

The Protector return'd the Biſhop an Anſwer, blames him for going too far in his ſcruples, and diſagreeing with the reſt of the Viſitors, tells him the King's Buſineſs would be check'd by his Incompliance; however, at laſt he is contented to leave him to the Direction of his Conſcience.

Id. Records Book. 1. Num. 59, 60.

To return to Bonner, who purſuant to the Kings Orders preach'd upon the firſt of September at St. Pauls Croſs. He inſiſted upon the Heads preſcrib'd him, but did not dilate upon ſome things, it ſeems to the Satisfaction of the Audience. He is ſaid to ſpend moſt Part of his Sermon about the manner of our Saviours being preſent in the Holy Euchariſt, and plainly aſſerted the Doctrine of the Church of Rome. When William Latimer Batchellor of Divinity, and John Hooper afterwards Biſhop of Glouceſter, prefer'd an Information againſt him; They depos'd themſelves preſent at the Sermon, and that the Biſhop had fail'd in his Performance, and not anſwer'd his Majeſties Injunctions. That he wholly omitted the Article of the Kings Minority, and manag'd the reſt of his Diſcourſe in ſuch a manner as was moſt likely to create Jealouſies, and make People diſaffected to the Government. (n)

Bonner cited before the Commiſſioners.

Upon this a Commiſſion was iſſued out to Archbiſhop Cranmer, Ridley Biſhop of Rocheſter, Sir William Petre, and Sir Thomas Smith Secretaries of State, and to Dr. May Dean of St. Paul's, to examine the matter. The Commiſſioners are Impower'd to ſuſpend, Excommunicate, or deprive Biſhop Bonner, or uſe any other Cenſure Eccleſiaſtical. (o) Any Three of them are likewiſe Authoriz'd to pronounce Sentence. From whence it follows, that in Caſe of diverſity of Opinions, Petre, Smith, and May, Doctor of Civil Law, might have over-rul'd Archbiſhop Cranmer and Ridley.

On the Tenth of September, Bonner was Summon'd to appear before the Commiſſioners at Lambeth. When he came into the Room where they ſate, he behav'd himſelf as if he had not ſeen them, and being put in mind to pay his Reſpects, he ſmil'd on the Archbiſhop, and proteſted he did not ſee him. (p) Cranmer let him know they ſate by the King's Authority, to call him to an Account for his Sermon. Bonner being willing, it may be, to have it thought he was queſtion'd about matters of Faith, wav'd a direct Anſwer, began to diſcourſe about the Maſs, and wiſh'd it more Reverenc'd. He told the Archbiſhop he had written very well upon this Sacrament, and was ſurpriz'd to find his Practice not Anſwerable.

When the Witneſſes were call'd, he is ſaid to have treated them with Contempt and odd Language. One of them he ſaid talk'd like a Gooſe, and the other like a Woodcock, and that there was no Truth in their Evidence. Thus Fox reports the matter, and charges him with Swearing frequently upon the Courſe of the Tryal. If this is True, he miſbehav'd himſelf extremely, forfeited his Gravity, and talk'd out of Character. But upon inſpecting the Regiſter, I find no mention of this Intemperate Carriage, excepting his Swearing once in Anſwer to Sir Thomas Smith.

The Archbiſhop proceeded to open the Charge, and had the Bill of Complaint read in Court. Bonner came prepar'd with a Proteſtation, in which he ſets forth, that ſince he had not receiv'd a Copy of the Commiſſion, he reſerv'd himſelf the liberty of excepting, either to his Judges, or to any other Branch of the Commiſſion, as occaſion ſhould require. He called the Inſtrument a pretended Commiſſion, which being objected as a failure of Regard, he excus'd this Freedom by alledging theſe were Terms of Law, and cuſtomary Methods of Defence, which he was oblig'd to make uſe off.

After this he deſir'd to ſee the Bill of Complaint: Which being put into his Hands and perus'd, he told the Commiſſioners the Charge was couch'd in ſuch general Terms, that 'twas Impracticable to diſengage himſelf by a particular Anſwer. The Archbiſhop replied, the main Article was his Omiſſion, in ſetting forth the King's Authority during his Nonage. And for the Proof of this, Hooper and Latimer were produced as Witneſſes.

Preſence of our Saviours Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, was that which provok'd them to Spleen and Calumny: And that Hooper had denied this Doctrine the Day that Bonner Preach'd, and miſreported his Diſcourſe.

The Archbiſhop perceiving Bonner inſiſt ſo much upon the true Preſence in the Holy Euchariſt, asked him what preſence he meant: And whether he thought Chriſt was in the Sacrament with Face, Noſe, Mouth, Eyes, and other Lineaments of his Body? Upon which, Bonner ſhaking his Head, replied, he was extremely ſorry to hear his Grace deliver himſelf in that manner, and urg'd him to declare his Belief preciſely. The Archbiſhop let him know this was not a Time to diſpute that Point: That their Buſineſs now was to Execute the King's Commiſſion.

Upon Friday the Thirteenth of September, Secretary Smith ſate with the reſt, which he had not done before, altho' his Name was in the Commiſſion. Upon this, Bonner proteſted, that according to Law, (meaning, I ſuppoſe, the Canon Law) Secretary Smith, by not acting at firſt, had diſabled himſelf from the Function of a Commiſſioner. The Archbiſhop own'd himſelf no Lawyer, but thought the Objection an unreaſonable Bar. Secretary Petres and Smith, told him the conſtant Practice of the Kingdom had been otherwiſe: That all thoſe whoſe Names were in any Commiſſion, might ſit and make part of the Court, tho' they had not been preſent at the firſt opening.

His Proteſtation being thus ſet aſide, he read his Anſwer to the Articles. Firſt, as to thoſe who inform'd againſt him, he Charg'd them with Hereſy, in Reference to the Holy Euchariſt: That lying under this Character of Infamy, they ſtood Excommunicated by the Church, and by Conſequence ought not to be admitted, as Informers againſt their Biſhop.

Id. p. 678.

He defends himſelf againſt the main Article of the Charge.

From hence he proceeded to the Injunctions ſent him, and denied their being Sign'd, either with the King's Hand, or Signet, or any of the Council, and then coming to the main Article, he alledg'd he had fully ſet forth the King's Authority in his Sermon, and Preach'd againſt the Rebels in Devonſhire and Norfolk, to the full meaning and extent of the King's Letter: Particularly, that he was ſo far from the abetting the Inſurrection, or giving Countenance to any Malecontents, that he declar'd in the Pulpit, that all thoſe who rebel againſt their Prince, reſiſted the Ordinance of God, and brought Damnation upon themſelves. (q) That the Rebels in Devonſhire and Norfolk, being bound to Obey their Prince, lay under this Imputation; and that no pretence whatſoever could juſtify their taking Arms againſt their Sovereign. From hence he inferr'd, that ſince he ſpoke ſo fully againſt the Inſurrections above-mention'd, and preſs'd Obedience to the King, it muſt follow of courſe, that he plainly maintain'd the King's Authority during his Nonage, for all the Nation knew the King was a Minor when he Preach'd the Sermon: (r) And therefore he hop'd no little ſlips of Memory, or failing in Punctuality of Expreſſion, would be conſtrued to his Diſadvantage.

(q) Regiſt. Bonner Fol. 221.

(r) Fox p. 681.

The Court replied his Exceptions againſt the Informers were inſufficient, unleſs their Evidence could be diſprov'd. He was told the Injunctions were read to him in Council, by one of the Secretaries, and given him by the Protector himſelf: That afterwards they were called for, and the Article concerning the King's Power of governing in his Minority, being added, they were put into his Hands again by Secretary Smith, and that he promiſ'd to Preach purſuant to theſe Inſtructions. They let him know his maintaining the King's Authority by Inference and Implication, did not come up to explicit Aſſertion, and the Orders he receiv'd; and that 'twas a ſlender defence to pretend his want of Memory.

The Witneſſes Purge themſelves from the Charge of Confederacy.

After Three Days Adjourning the Court met again, and then Latimer and Hooper deſir'd to purge themſelves of the Imputation of Hereſy. They affirm'd they had never advanc'd any thing concerning the Bleſſed Sacrament, but what was agreeable to the Scriptures, and the true Catholick Faith: That they offer'd to be Try'd upon this Article by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, or by any other learned Men, the King or the Commiſſioners ſhould appoint. And whereas they had been charg'd by Bonner, with meeting on the firſt Day of September, and concerting falſe Evidence againſt him, Latimer declar'd, that he had never ſpoken with Hooper, either before the firſt of September that Day, nor till ſome time after.

Bonner's farther Defence with reſpect to the King's Authority in his Nonage.

Bonner being called on to juſtify himſelf more fully, with Reference to the King's Power during his Minority; anſwer'd that for the ſatisfaction of the Council, and the better diſcharging his Duty, he had prepar'd Notes upon this Head; that he had collected ſeveral Inſtances from Scripture and other Hiſtories, to prove, that the Minority of Kings was no diminution of the Royal Character: And that they were to be no leſs Honour'd and Obey'd, than at any other Time of their Age. To this purpoſe he had obſerv'd from our Engliſh Chronicles, that Henry the Third, Edward the Third, Richard the Second, Henry the Sixth, and Edward the Fifth, were none of them of Age, and moſt of them deep in their Minority, at their Acceſſion to the Throne: And yet they were all Obey'd as compleat Soveraigns, and the Allegiance due to them, never ſo much as queſtion'd. He mention'd likewiſe ſeveral Inſtances in the Old Teſtament: That Uzziah and Ahaz were but Sixteen, Manaſſes but Twelve; Joaſh, and Joſiah, but Eight Years Old, when they began to Reign; to which he added that the late King was no more than Eighteen when he ſucceeded to his Father. That he intended to Preach out all theſe Notes, but that his Memory fail'd him. That this Accident happen'd, partly by his diſuſe of the Pulpit, and partly by a long Bill ſent him by the Council to give notice of the defeat of the Rebels. That by the length of this Paper his Memory was broken. And beſides his Book where his Notes were laid, fell out of his Hand in his Sermon. Upon theſe Accounts he was diſabled from delivering himſelf ſo fully, and with that Advantage as he intended: However, he did not omit the citing ſeveral Texts of Scripture, to put the People in mind of their Obedience to Governors, with particular Application to his Majeſty's Caſe.

As to the other Injunctions, he Anſwer'd he had done his Part, and given Orders to his Archdeacon to ſee them Executed. That he knew of no Maſſes, or Latin Service within his Dioceſe, excepting in the Lady Mary's Family, or the Chappels of Ambaſſadors. The Commiſſioners requir'd him to Anſwer more directly to the Point of the King's Authority. That hitherto they thought his defence ſhort: That without farther ſatisfaction they muſt pronounce him Guilty: But in caſe he denied the Fact, they would go on farther to Examine the Witneſſes. The Biſhop giving no farther Anſwer, the Witneſſes were called: And here Sir John Cheek, and Four more had their Oaths given them. Bonner deſir'd time to prepare his Interrogatories, which was granted him. He drew a Paper of Twenty Queſtions, conſiſting of ſeveral Parts, and couch'd Artificially enough. To give a Proof in one of them. The Third Interrogatory then was this. "Whether they, "or any of them were preſent at his Sermon? "Where they ſtood, and near whom? When "they came to it, and at what part of his Sermon? How long they tarried, and at what "part they were Offended? What were the "Form and Words, or ſubſtance of it? Who "heard it in their Company? Where the other "Witneſſes ſtood? How long they tarried, "or when they went away?

Id. p. 686.

Upon Wedneſday September the Eighteenth, Bonner appear'd the Fourth Time before the Delegates: And here becauſe ſome Objections were made againſt the Extent of their Authority, the King ſent them a Declaration in Writing, to try the Cauſe and give final Judgment: And proceed either by way of Denunciation ex Officio, or according to their Diſcretion, as the matter ſhould require. And by virtue of this Inſtrument they are impower'd to wave all ſuperfluous delays, and diſpenc'd with in Caſe there ſhould be any Omiſſion in the Formalities of the Law.

Id. p. 688. His farther exceptions.

Biſhop Bonner produc'd an Inſtrument, to prove himſelf not Oblig'd to make any farther Anſwer to the Charge brought againſt him: And here according to his cuſtomary Language, he called the Proceſs and Commiſſioners Unjuſt and Pretenced. He inſiſted principally, that the Article concerning the King's Authority in his Nonage, was not in the Paper given him by the Protector, but that Secretary Smith inſerted it after the Protector and the reſt of the Council were gone.

He objected likewiſe that the Delegates Proceedings were altogether Irregular, and contrary to the Methods of Law: That ſometimes they proceeded ad Denunciandum, ſometimes ex Officio mero, and ſometimes ex Officio mixto. That this Confuſion and Uncertainty, was altogether unpreſidented, and contrary to the King's Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and more than their Commiſſion would juſtify.

The Commiſſioners to intangle him farther, and drive him from his Defence, gave him new Articles, tho' much of the Tenor with the former, and made him ſware to give a true Anſwer. The Biſhop premiſing his cuſtomary Proteſtation, deſir'd a Copy of the new Charge, with reaſonable Time, to put in his Anſwer. This being granted, he exhibited an Information againſt Wm. Latimer Prieſt of St. Lawrence Poultney.

He exhibits an Information againſt his Informer Latimer.

This Information ſets forth, that Latimer (who inform'd againſt Bonner) had heard People ſpeak Irreverently, and Seditiouſly of the King's Majeſty, in Words to this Effect. "That the "preſent King of England was but a Babe, and "fitter for a Toaſt and Butter, and a Meſs of "Milk than to make Laws: And that they "were not bound to obey his Authority 'till "he was a Major: That the ſaid William Latimer declar'd, at the laſt Seſſion of the Commiſſioners, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the "Biſhop of Rocheſter, Sir Thomas Smith, and "Dr. May being preſent, that he had heard "ſuch Words Derogatory to the King's Authority ſpoken, and that the ſaid Commiſſioners did not command the ſaid William "Latimer to Proſecute the ſaid Perſons that "had ſpoken the ſaid Words: And that the "ſaid Latimer has conceal'd the Words aforeſaid, and not diſcover'd them to any Perſon, "as in bounden Duty he ought. (s)

This Information not only affected Latimer's Evidence againſt Bonner, but came up to an Innuendo of Connivance and Partiality in the Commiſſioners.

Fox calls it a vain Cavillation, neither does he report any Anſwer given it, but by this Expreſſion he diſcovers himſelf either defective in Judgment, or a Party-Hiſtorian. (t)

A farther Declaration of his Loyalty.

On the Twentieth, Bonner appears again, and ſpeaks home to the main Article, declares, as he had formerly done, that the King's Authority during his Nonage, was perfect and compleate: That his Subjects were bound to obey his Laws no leſs, than if they were made after his coming of Age: And here he expreſly Condemns the contrary Opinion as a rebellious Poſition.

He receives harſh Language from Sir Thomas Smith.

Secretary Smith was particularly lively upon the Biſhop, charg'd him with Dilatory and Evaſive Anſwers, fencing with the Formalities of Law, and treating the Court with indefenſible Freedoms: For this reprimanding and unuſual Manner, and ſome coarſe Language given the Biſhop, he entred a Recuſation of Smith's Judgment, and Challenges him off the Bench. In this Inſtrument amongſt other Allegations, he ſets forth, that Smith ſaid the Biſhop acted like Thieves, Murderers, and Traitors, and that unleſs he would Anſwer by Word of Mouth, he ſhould ſmart, and do worſe: And that this Secretary would ſend him to the Tower, to keep Company with the Rebels Arundel and Ket, with other rough and menacing Expreſſions, quite Forreign to the Character of a Commiſſioner.

After this Proteſtation, we read Secretary Smith told the Biſhop he ſhould proceed in his Commiſſion, notwithſtanding his Exceptions. And here he owns his ſaying, that Bonner acted like Thieves, Murderers, and Traytors, and juſtifies the Language.

And makes a warm Return. Id. p. 691.

At this the Biſhop kindles; And it may be, Temper was no ordinary Virtue upon this Occaſion. However he exceeds in his Reſentment, tells Smith as he was the King's Commiſſioner, and Secretary of State, he honour'd him; but as he was only Sir Thomas Smith, and outrag'd him with ſo much Calumny and groſs Language, he told him be lyed, defied him, and bid him do what he could. Quod facias, fac citius.

For this Freedom he was reprimanded by the Archbiſhop, and the reſt of the Court. They told him that for theſe Intemperate Sallies, he deſerv'd to be ſent to Priſon:

Upon this the Biſhop, thinking himſelf not well us'd, reply'd, that de facto, they might ſend him whither they pleaſ'd, and he would Obey them, unleſs they mean't to ſend him to the Divel, for thither he would not go at their Command. I have a right in Three things, ſays he, a few Effects, a poor Carcaſs, and my Soul: The Two firſt you may make Prize off, tho' unjuſtly, but I will keep the laſt out of your Power.

Upon this he was order'd to withdraw, and being call'd again into the Court he put in an Appeal from the Commiſſioners to the King. When

When they requir'd him to make a farther Anſwer to ſome of the Articles, he replied he was not bound in Law to give any farther Satisfaction, unleſs the Charge had been drawn in Terms more particular and certain. This Anſwer, together with the Liberties of his Behaviour, were conſtrued a Contempt of the Court, for which he was committed to the Marſhalſea. At his going off he told Cranmer he was ſorry his Grace ſhould uſe him in this manner. But that which troubled him moſt, was Cranmers ſuffering the Hereticks to take their Range, and poiſon the King's Subjects in London, and elſewhere. And thus he went off with an Air of Warmth and Diſcompoſure.

He appeals to the King. Sept. 16.

On the Three and Twentieth Inſtant being brought again before the Commiſſioners, he ſticks to his former Appeal, declines the Juriſdiction of the Court, and declares that he not only appeals from them, but that he intends to bring in a Charge againſt them, as by the King's Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and the preſent matter of fact, he lawfully may. At this Seſſion a Letter from Bonner to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen was read in Court: The purport of it was to complain, "that ſome Preachers were ſuffer'd in the City to rail, (as he words it) againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, and to deny the real Preſence of Chriſt's Body and Blood. That theſe Preachers told their Audience, that Faith muſt not be forc'd, and that they might believe what they pleas'd. The Biſhop requeſts and requires the Mayor and Aldermen not to connive at theſe Heterodoxes, nor ſuffer the People to be any longer miſled.

Id. Page 695.

Secretary Smith ask'd the Biſhop whether this was his Letter. Bonner replied, he was reſolv'd to abide by his Appeal. Upon this he was remanded to Priſon, and order'd to appear on Friday next, to receive the Judgment of the Court, for they acquainted him, they ſhould proceed to final Sentence, notwithſtanding his Appeal, unleſs he could procure a Superſedeas. And here the Biſhop of Rocheſter quoted a Text out of St. John againſt Bonner, he that does Evil, hates the Light. (u)

(u) Regiſt. Bonner Fol. 241.

As it happen'd the Commiſſioners did not ſit till Tueſday the firſt of October. In the Morning before the Court ſate, the Delegates ſent their Articles privately to the Biſhop in Priſon: They requir'd him to confeſs the Charge contain'd in this Draught. The Articles are in Subſtance the ſame with what had been objected to him before, with ſome additional Clauſes of his Miſbehaviour at his Tryal. Had the Biſhop ſign'd this Paper he had prevented his being deprived.

Id. Fol. 253.

At his appearing before them, they continued to preſs him to an Acknowledgment of Miſbehaviour: And that provided he own'd his Fault, and made his Submiſſion, gave large Promiſes of Favour. But Bonner inſtead of Compliance inſiſted ſtrongly on his Juſtification, and reading a new Proteſtation; diſowns their Authority, calls them pretenſed Judges, and declares that his appearing before them at this time was altogether forced and involuntary: And here by appealing to the King in his Minority, he declares he owns his Majeſties Authority more fully than the Commiſſioners, who refus'd to take notice of ſuch an Application.

The Commiſſioners finding the Biſhop wholly unmanageable proceeded to Judgment, and pronounc'd him depriv'd of his Biſhoprick. The Sentence runs in the Name of all the Five Commiſſioners, tho' Secretary Petre never ſate after the firſt Day. (w)

(w) Biſhop Burnet pt. 2*d. page* 127.

He is depriv'd.

The Inſtrument of Deprivation ſets forth, that the Biſhop had been negligent in making Inquiry after Polygamiſts, "and thoſe who either officiated or were preſent at any Forms of Divine Service not allow'd by the Government. That inſtead of going to the Sermons at Pauls Croſs, and countenancing them with his Preſence purſuant to his Majeſties Order; he the ſaid Biſhop not only went away at the beginning of the Diſcourſe, but wrote to the Mayor and Aldermen to perſwade them to the ſame Practice.

The Grounds of the Sentence.

From hence the Inſtrument proceeds to the Biſhops Omiſſion in his Sermon with Reference to the King's Power in his Minority: And then makes mention of his Contumacy and Miſbehaviour before the Commiſſioners. And theſe are the Grounds upon which the Deprivation is founded. (x) (x) Fox p. 697.

Bonner excepts againſt this Sentence as null in the Authority, and unjuſt in the matter, and appeals once more from the Delegates to the King's Perſon.

And being thus depriv'd, he moved for a Diſcharge from the Marſhalſea, and for Liberty to proſecute his Appeal. To this Cranmer replied, that upon farther Enquiry they found his Cauſe worſe, and himſelf more dip'd in Rebellion, than at firſt they were aware of: And the reſt of the Commiſſioners concurring with the Archbiſhop, he was recommitted.

This Uſage of Bonner was by ſome thought overſevere. 'Twas likewiſe cenſur'd, as our Learned Church Hiſtorian obſerves, as not canoninal, ſince 'twas by a Commiſſion from the King, and ſince Secular Men were mix'd with Clergymen in the Cenſure of a Biſhop. To this it was anſwer'd, (as this Gentleman goes on) that the Sentence being only of Deprivation from the See of London, it was not ſo entirely an Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, but was of a mix'd Nature, ſo that Lay-men may join in it. And ſince he had taken a Commiſſion from the King for his Biſhoprick, by which he held it only during the King's Pleaſure, he could not complain of this Deprivation, which was done by the King's Authority. (y)

Remarks upon his Deprivation.

(y) Biſhop Burnet pt. 2*d. page* 127.

But this Anſwer ſeems ſhort of Satisfaction. For which way is a Deprivation from the See of London not entirely an Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure? Is not the Epiſcopal Office an Eccleſiaſtical Charge? Is not the Biſhops Juriſdiction over his Dioceſe a Spiritual Authority? By being depriv'd therefore of his See, he is depriv'd of his Spiritual Juriſdiction, and by conſequence, the Cenſure muſt be properly Eccleſiaſtical. But he took out a Commiſſion from the King, for the Exerciſe of his Function. That is true: But what can be infer'd from this extraordinary Conduct? Nothing, but that the King may take away thoſe Powers which were granted with a Clauſe of Revocation, provided 'twas within the King's Prerogative to make a Grant of ſuch Powers. But not to inquire farther into this matter, there is a Clauſe in the Commiſſion taken out by Bonner and the reſt of the Biſhops, which ſuppoſes ſome Branches of Authority ſettled by Divine Right, convey'd by Conſecration, and Independent of the Regal Supremacy. Now what can this be but a

The Biſhops not depriv'd by the Emperors in the Caſes propos'd.

Power to exerciſe Diſcipline, to govern their Flocks, and preſide in their See in matters purely Spiritual?

Our Learned Church Hiſtorian continues and obſerves, that others who look'd farther back remembred, that Conſtantine the Emperor had appointed Secular Men to inquire into ſome Things objected to Biſhops: And that ſuch had examin'd the Buſineſs of Cæcilian Biſhop of Carthage, even upon an Appeal, after it had been tryed in ſeveral Synods; and given Judgment againſt Donatus and his Party. The ſame Conſtantine had alſo by his Authority put Euſtathius out of Antioch, and Athanaſius out of Alexandria: —— Afterwards the Emperors us'd to have ſome Biſhops attending on them in their Comitatus, or Court, to whoſe Judgment they left moſt Cauſes, who acted only by Commiſſion from the Emperor. So Epiphanius was brought to condemn Chryſoſtom at Conſtantinople, who had no Authority to judge him by the Canons.

To this it may be anſwer'd, that this Account of the Emperors Proceedings againſt Biſhops, miſreports matter of Fact; For the purpoſe, Euſtathius Biſhop of Antioch was not depos'd by Conſtantine the Great, but by the Council of Antioch. (z) As to the Caſe of Athanaſius, he was baniſh'd by Conſtantine upon a falſe Suggeſtion of diſloyal Practice: And that he threatn'd to ſtop the importing Corn from Alexandria to Conſtantinople. But for this the Emperor did not pretend to depoſe him: To which I may add that during his Baniſhment, he was all along own'd as Biſhop by the Catholick Church. And as to the inſtance of Paulus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, he was remov'd by a Synod; and that not conven'd by Conſtantine, but his Son Conſtantius.

(z) Socrat. Hiſt. Lib. Cap. 24. Id. Lib. 1. Cap. 35.

Id. Lib. 2. Cap. 7.

Farther, to Conſtantines interpoſing in the Caſe between Cæcilian and Majorinus, upon an Appeal of the latter and his Party; this Anſwer may be given; Cæcilian after a fair Election was ordain'd Biſhop of Carthage by Felix Aptungetanus; Secundus, Donatus, Purpureus, and ſome other Biſhops of the oppoſite Party, not being pleas'd with Cæcilians Promotion, conſecrated Majorinus to the ſame See. This Donatiſt Faction pretended Felix who ordain'd Cæcilian was a Traditor, that is, had deliver'd the Holy Scriptures up to the Heathen Perſecutors, and for this crime had loſt his Epiſcopal Character by the Diſcipline of the Church.

This Controverſy was at the Emperors Inſtance firſt examin'd in a Synod at Rome, and afterwards at the Council of Arles, and Judgment given for Cæcilian at both Places. But the Donatiſts refuſing to acquieſce, appeal'd to the Emperor Conſtantine, who in a Letter to the Council conven'd at Arles, blames the Donatiſts extremely for not ſubmitting to the Deciſion of the Biſhops. Meum Judicium poſtulant, qui ipſe Judicium Chriſti expecto. For to ſpeak Truth, continues the Emperor, the Sentence of the Prelates ought to be no leſs regarded than if 'twas pronounc'd by our Saviour himſelf. (a) St. Auſtin commends Conſtantine for not interpoſing, and ſays plainly, the Emperor was not ſo hardy as to try the Cauſe of a Biſhop.

(b) However being at laſt either tired with the Importunities of the Donatiſts, or prevail'd on by the Flattery of his Courtiers; he conſented the Cauſe ſhould have a rehearing before himſelf at Milan. And here after the matter was fully examin'd, the Sentence of the Councils of Rome and Arles was confirm'd, the Charge of Felix his being a Traditor declar'd falſe, and Judgment given for Cæcilian. Thus it appears the Emperor did no more than ſettle matter of fact, and ſee the Records inſpected. If 'tis ſaid he receiv'd the Appeal, review'd the Cauſe determin'd by two Synods, and took upon him the Office of a Judge, to this it may be anſwer'd, that Princes are not infallible in their Conduct: 'Tis poſſible for them to be ſurpriz'd into foreign Buſineſs, and carry their Regale too far.

That the Antient Church did not allow of Appeals to the Civil Magiſtrate, in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, appears from the Council of Antioch (c) held in the Reign of Conſtantius. "This Synod decrees that if any Deacon or "Prieſt degraded by their Dioceſan, or any "Biſhop depos'd by a Synod, ſhould be ſo hardy "as to give the Emperor Trouble by any Ap"plication, whereas in theſe Caſes Recourſe "ought to be had to a Synod, and the matter "determin'd there: If therefore any Perſon "ſhall overlook the Juriſdiction of the Prelates, "and ſollicit the Emperor for Redreſs, he is "not allow'd ſo much as to plead his Cauſe in "a Council, nor ever expect being reſtor'd "to his Promotion.

(c) The Senſe of the Councils of Antioch and Calcedon.

Thus the Biſhops in the Council of Calcedon determine in the Caſe of Photius Metropolitan of Tyre: They declare the Imperial Reſcript is of no Force againſt the Canons. And yet this Caſe related only to a Conteſt of Juriſdiction between a Metropolitan and one of his Suffragans. Thus at the ſame General Council of Calcedon, the Emperor Martian makes no difficulty to acknowledge, that he did not come thither to exerciſe any Power in deciding the Controverſy, but only to fortifie the Decrees of the Fathers with the Civil Sanction. (d) Not that the Canons and Reſolutions of the Biſhops were not binding before with Reſpect to Conſcience; but ſome People are ſo unhappy as to be govern'd farther by Temporal Penalties, than the Terrors of the other World.

(d) Concil. Labbe. and Coſſart.

Farther, The Court Biſhops mention'd by our Learned Hiſtorian did not act by the Emperors Commiſſion, tho' they were ſometimes too flexible and complaiſant. Neither does the Inſtance of Epiphanius his condemning of Chryſoſtom ſupport this Aſſertion. For St. Chryſoſtom was depos'd by the Synod ad Quercum, neither had Epiphanius any ſhare in that Sentence. For this Biſhop had quitted Conſtantinople, and ſet ſail for Cyprus before Theophilus of Alexandria, and the reſt of the Biſhops met for the cenſuring of St. Chryſoſtom. (e)

Bonner's Caſe farther conſider'd.

To return to Bonner. It muſt be ſaid he made a hardy and plauſible Defence. The Grounds of his Deprivation ſeem ſomewhat ſlender, excepting in one Article relating to the King's Authority. And here the Biſhop prov'd he had touch'd the Point in his Sermon, tho' not in the Form preſcrib'd: And that this Omiſſion was only a Misfortune of his Memory: That this was no feign'd Excuſe appears pretty plainly by his owning the Authority of a Minor Prince, ſo fully and ſo often before the Delegates. As to his intemperate Behaviour, if Fox reports him fairly, he was much to blame. For my Part, the Proceſs being very tedious, and printed by Fox, I only examin'd the Regiſter for the Subſtance, and therefore as to the manner, excepting his ſwearing once to Smith, I ſhall neither affirm or deny the Charge.

And tho' Bonner defended himſelf with great Dexterity and Reſolution, yet I ſomewhat queſtion his making the moſt of his Caſe. Had he inſtead of appealing to the King, appeal'd to the upper Houſe in Convocation, he might in all likelyhood have got the Judgment revers'd, and recover'd his See. Now that he had this Remedy ſeems pretty plain by Two Acts of Parliament. (f) By the firſt Statute 'tis expreſly provided, that in any Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes which may touch the King, his Heirs, or Succeſſors, the Party griev'd may appeal to the Spiritual Prelates in the upper Houſe of Convocation: And this Method of appealing is confirm'd by an Act in the next year of the ſame Reign. 'Tis true this Proviſion refers to Tryals proſecuted in the Courts of Biſhops or Archbiſhops, but the Reaſon of the Caſe ſeems to hold againſt any other Court, which undertakes the Cognizance of Eccleſiaſtical matters, but I ſhall determine nothing in this point.

(f) 24. H. 8. Cap. 12. 25. H. 8. Cap. 19.

That Bonner had no gentle Uſage appears from the Courſe of this whole Affair. For firſt the King's or Councils preſcribing him the matter, and in ſome meaſure the Words of his Sermon, was more than ordinary. The putting ſuch ſingular Terms upon him, muſt by Conſequence leſſen his Character, and make him contemptible: Such unuſual Commands as theſe muſt ſuppoſe the Council believ'd him remarkably defective either in Integrity, or Diſcretion. But Bonner was look'd on generally as a Man of no Principles. All the Obedience he gave either to the Laws, or the King's Injunctions was thought a Compliance againſt his Conſcience extorted by Fear. (h) This Cenſure ſuppoſes him flexible to the Orders of the Court, and Compliant to whatever was injoin'd him. But 'twas Fear, and not Conſcience, which brought him to all theſe lengths. This is but diving into Thoughts, and amounts to no more than Conjecture. Hypocriſy keeps under Covert, and Mens Hearts lie open to no View but God Almighties. Beſides, human Laws require nothing more than outward Compliance. Courts of Juſtice don't pretend to examine Principles any farther than Practice diſcovers them. I have inſiſted the longer upon this, becauſe I would gladly ſet the matter in a true Light. I believe Bonner complied beyond his Opinion in ſeveral Inſtances: I am far from defending the Heat of his Temper, or his ſanguinary Proceedings in the next Reign: But Juſtice ought to be done to every Bodies Memory: And the more exceptionable any Mans Practice is, the leſs he is in a Condition to want any Commendation which belongs to him.

The Duke of Somerſet ſent to the Tower and impeach'd.

To proceed to ſome remarkable Occurrences in the State: Dudley Earl of Warwick by ſuppreſſing the Norfolk Rebellion had rais'd his Reputation, and fortified his Intereſt to a conſiderable Degree. And his Ambition growing with his Succeſs, he reſolv'd to puſh his Fortune, and ſet himſelf at the Helm. To make way for this Project, the Protector was to be remov'd. This was look'd on as no impracticable Enterprize, conſidering the preſent Situation of Affairs. For the Protector by abetting the Complaints of the lower Commons, and lately ordering Incloſures to be thrown open, had diſoblig'd the Nobility and Gentry The Earl of Warwick therefore finding himſelf ſupported by a ſtrong Party in the Council, reſolv'd to undertake the Protector. This Duke being inform'd of their Proceedings, wrote to the Londoners to raiſe a Thouſand Men, and march them well arm'd to Hampton Court for the King's Security. He likewiſe levied ſome Men in the Neighbour-hood, and convey'd the King to Windſor with as many of the Council and Court, as he could prevail with to go with him.

The Lords in the Earl of Warwicks Intereſt had now form'd themſelves into a Council at London. Their Names are theſe, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord St. John Preſident, the Marqueſs of Northampton, the Earls of Arundel, Southampton, and Shrewsbury, the Lords Ruſſel, and Wentworth; to which we may add the chief Juſtice Mountague, Sir Edward North, Sir Richard Southwell, Sir Edmund Peckham, Secretary Petres, Sir John Gage, Sir Ralph Sadler, Sir Thomas Cheyney, Sir Anthony Brown, Sir Anthony Wingfield, Sir John Baker Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, and Dr. Wotton. Theſe Noblemen, Privy Counſellors, and Perſons of Diſtinction, wrote to the City of London, to furniſh them with Forces to reſcue his Majeſty out of the Duke of Somerſets Hands, whom they ſtiled an Enemy to the King and Kingdom. And that this Complaint might not appear undeſerv'd, they drew up a Charge in Form againſt him. The Principal Articles are theſe following.

The Articles of the Impeachment.

“ That by creating Diſcords and Miſunderſtandings amongſt the King's Subjects, he had Embroil'd the Commonwealth, which was left in a peaceable and good Condition by the late King. That he had countenanc'd Sedition and Treaſon, and occaſion'd the Loſs of ſeveral Thouſand Men in the late Commotions: That either by his Neglect or Perfidiouſneſs, he had been the Cauſe of loſing ſeveral Forts and Places of Importance beyond Sea. That being made Protector on condition he ſhould do nothing without the Conſent of the Board, he had not obſerv'd that Condition, but had treated with Embaſſadors, made Biſhops and Lord Lieutenants, by his own Authority: That he had done many things contrary to Law, held a Court of Requeſt in his own Houſe, embas'd the Coin, and publiſh'd Proclamations againſt Incloſures contrary to the Senſe of the whole Council: That he had neglected the Rules and Maxims laid down by the late King for the Government of Ireland: That he had arm'd his own Friends and Servants, and left the King's Servants unarm'd. And laſtly, that he had only made it his Buſineſs to aggrandize himſelf, to create Miſunderſtandings amongſt the Nobility; To draw Male-contents into his Intereſt; to laviſh out a vaſt deal of Treaſure in building of Palaces, at a Time of Diſtreſs and publick Calamity.

The Protector finding himſelf deſerted, that the City of London had refus'd to aſſiſt him, and engag'd with the Lords of the other Party, reſign'd to his Miſfortune, and put the King and himſelf in their Hands. Upon this he was ſent to the Tower, and here I ſhall break off his Story till the Conſideration of Time calls for it. (i)

Calvin's Letter to the Protector.

About the latter End of this Month Calvin, who 'tis likely had not heard of the Protectors Declenſion, wrote to him upon the Subject of Religion. The Letter as it ſtands in his Epiſtles, is dated in the year 1548, but in the Paper Office the 22*d* of October is only put down, without the mention of the year: That it was not written the laſt year I think is pretty plain: Firſt from Calvin's Letter to Bucer in which he acquaints him he had written to the Protector to carry on the Reformation: now Bucer did not arrive in England 'till the beginning of the Year, 1549. But this Letter of Calvin's, ſuppoſes Bucer in England. (k) Secondly, Calvin in his Letter to the Protector, makes ſeveral Objections againſt the Common-Prayer-Book, which was not Printed till this Year, nor ſo much as drawn up 'till Winter, 1548.

(k) Epiſt. Calvin p. 108.

To come to the matter in the Letter. In the beginning of this Addreſs, Calvin commends the Protector for the Zeal and Reſolution he had ſhewn in retrieving Religion; and owns the pure Worſhip of God was now reſtor'd in England. He reduces the main of his Diſcourſe to Three Heads. Under the firſt, he would have the People rightly inſtructed, and points to the Method: And here he requires Subſcription to the Articles of Religion: That all Biſhops and Pariſh Prieſts ſhould be oblig'd to this Condition: And that no Perſon ſhould be admitted to any Eccleſiaſtical Function, without giving ſolemn conſent to the Doctrines receiv'd. He likewiſe highly approves a Form of Common-Prayer, and looks upon a ſtated Catechiſm, as a neceſſary Expedient.

He acquaints the Protector with his being inform'd of Two ſorts of troubleſome People in England. One of theſe Diviſions were thoſe they called Goſpellers: Theſe, ſays Calvin, are Men of Whimſey and Enthuſiaſm, and if they might have their Will would quickly confound all Order and publick Settlement. The other Party are ſo far ſmitten with the old Superſtition, that they wont endure the parting with it. Now both the one and the other ought to feel the weight of a ſevere Correction, and have the Sword drawn upon them. * For theſe Men are Revolters againſt God as well as the King. †

Thus we ſee Calvin had no great tenderneſs for Diſſenters: He very heartily recommends Methods of Rigor, and is far from indulging Liberty of Conſcience.

His Second Head touches upon the throwing out Abuſes. And here he declares againſt all accommodating Schemes, and Methods of Moderation. He allows of no Latitude for Diſcretion, nor gives any deference to Antiquity: And ſeems to confine the Rule of Worſhip to expreſs Declarations in Scripture. From theſe narrow Principles he falls upon the Cenſure of the Engliſh Common-Prayer-Book. And as an Inſtance of ſome remaining Corruption, he objects againſt Praying for the Dead in the Communion Office. " And here he freely grants this mention of the Dead does not imply any Approbation of the Popiſh Purgatory. He likewiſe owns himſelf ſenſible, that the Commemoration of the Dead was an Antient Cuſtom in the Church: And that this was done to teſtify the Communion of Saints, to ſhew the Correſpondence between the Church Militant and Triumphant, and to declare their Belief, that the Faithful of This, and the other World, were all of the ſame Society. But this refreſhing the Ideas of the future State, keeping up a Communication between the Living and the Dead, and giving the laſt Proofs of diſintereſted Charity, will by no means paſs Calvin's Teſt. This Man who thought himſelf wiſer than all the Fathers of the Primitive, or Biſhops of the preſent Church, throws in his Magiſterial Exceptions. He argues that the Lord's Supper is ſo Solemn a part of Religion, " that all human Additions do but Pollute the Service. That in our Addreſſes to God Almighty, we are not allow'd to indulge our Fancy, and give way to Sympathy and Compaſſion: On the contrary we are rather to be Govern'd by the Apoſtles Rule, and make the Word of God the ground for our Application: But this mention of the Dead which implies either Commendation or religious Regard, does not come up to warrantable Meaſures, nor Anſwer the true directions for Prayer. * And being therefore no better than Supplemental Invention, is not to be endur'd in the Holy Euchariſt.

His Cavils againſt the Engliſh Liturgy.

Againſt praying for the Dead.

* Non reſpondet veræ ac legitimæ rectè orandi Inſtitutioni.

" There are ſome other things, as he goes on, which tho' they don't fall under ſuch Degrees of Cenſure, are not to be excus'd; and that is the Ceremonies of Chriſm and Anointing. As for Chriſm what is it but the reſult of Weakneſs and Ignorance? The Inſtitution of our Lord wont ſatiſfy ſome People: They muſt have a new Symbol to repreſent the Operations of the Holy Ghoſt in Baptiſm; as if the Water was not ſufficient for this purpoſe. As for Extreme Unction, 'tis the Effect of an inconſiderate Zeal, not ſupported with proportionable Pretentions: People would practice the Cuſtom of the Apoſtles, without Apoſtolick Gifts, to juſtify their Imitation. For when the Apoſtles made uſe of Oyle in the Recovery of the Sick, the meaning of this Ceremony was to ſhew the Supernatural Performance. And therefore when Miracles went off, the Circumſtance of Anointing ought likewiſe to be diſcontinued. 'Tis therefore moſt adviſeable to ſtrike off all theſe, and admit of no Uſages, but ſuch as are Conformable to the Inſpir'd Writings, and tend to Edification. For the Toleration of Peoples Weakneſs ought to be indulg'd only in Order to their better Inſtruction: Neither are we to exceed ſo far in Lenity and Condeſcenſion, as to † continue any fooliſh Cuſtom, meerly for the gratifying Mens Humours, who can give no good reaſon for the ſatiſfying their Demands.

Againſt Chriſm and Extreme Unction.

† Neque intereà ſtultis Immorandum eſt.

Thus Calvin has taken great care to avoid the Imputation he precautions Bucer againſt, to keep cloſe to the Extremes, to guard againſt a Temper, and ſtand off from reconciling Expedients. (l)

This the learned Heylin calls the Reforming the Church, without Fear or Wit, without regard to Peace at Home, or Correſpondence Abroad. (m) Such Lax management ſays Calvin; may paſs in Civil Government, but the Conduct of the Church allows no ſuch prudential Conſiderations. Here we are tied down to the expreſs Will of God, and barr'd all Supplemental Proviſions. (n)

(m) Heylin's Hiſt. Ref. p. 80.

(n) Epiſt. ad Protect.

Under his Third Head for ſuppreſſing Immorality, he ſhews a commendable Zeal, and delivers himſelf with Advantage enough. He lets the Protector know how much his Grace is oblig'd to " diſcountenance Libertiniſm, and puniſh thoſe Crimes which are oftentimes over-look'd by the State. That Governors take care to do Juſtice upon Theft, Rapine, and Murther, with Severity enough: And why? Becauſe they find their own Intereſt ſenſibly touch'd: Whereas Intemperance, Whoredom and Blaſphemy are frequently conniv'd at; as if theſe were lawful Sallies, or Faults almoſt below Conſideration. But Honeſt Zeal againſt Licentiouſneſs.

“God pronounces quite otherwiſe upon theſe Matters: He lets us know how dangerous a thing 'tis, to Inſult his Omnipotence, and not to have his Honour in the higheſt Regard: And that Senacheribs prophane Inſolence was purſued with remarkable Vengeance.

“And as to Adulteries, 'tis a ſhame that thoſe who call themſelves Chriſtians ſhould be more remiſs than Heathens, in puniſhing this Crime! That a wickedneſs of this Size, ſhould paſs for a Jeſt. Is this all the Regard we have for the engagements of Marriage? For the moſt Solemn Alliance, and Incommunicable Friendſhip? For a Relation which repreſents the Union between Chriſt and his Church? As for Libertines, if we believe the Apoſtles, we ſhall find them charg'd with no leſs than Sacrilege: They prophane the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, (o) Forfeit the Divine Protection, the Privileges of Chriſtianity, and make themſelves obnoxious to Eternal Puniſhment. The Apoſtle does not allow us to maintain any Commerce with ſuch Licentious People: They ought not therefore to be ſuffer'd in the Church of God. 'Tis the Winking at ſuch Inſtances of Scandal, which Embroils the World, and draws down the Judgments of Heaven. He therefore very honeſtly ſolicits the Protector, “to interpoſe his Authority, in behalf of Sobriety: He inſiſts upon Diſcipline, and that the Biſhops and Pariſh Prieſts ſhould be particularly careful, not to admit any of theſe Libertines to the Holy Communion. This is admirable Advice, and very well becoming the Character of a Divine.

(o) 1 Cor. 6.

As for his dictating in matters of Religion, intermedling ſo freely in the ſettling Foreign Churches, and making himſelf an Arbiter of Controverſy; this is not altogether ſo Intelligible; eſpecially ſince he delivers himſelf in ſo deciſive a manner. Beſides, he Addreſſes the Protector as if the Government of the Church was almoſt wholly at his diſpoſal: Now this ſuppoſes a vaſt compaſs of Spiritual Authority within the Regale. But that the Civil Magiſtrate was Abſolute in theſe matters, or that the Diſcipline of the Church ought to be over-rul'd by the State, was far from Calvin's Opinion. This may be prov'd by his Conteſt with the Senate at Geneva. (p) His Commentary on Amos, is likewiſe a remarkable Inſtance to this purpoſe. “(q) Where expounding upon theſe Words, But Propheſy not again any more at Bethel, he delivers himſelf thus. Prophecy again no more at Bethel. Why? Becauſe 'tis the King's Chappel. That's one reaſon. Here Amazias the Prieſt Endeavors to prove the Bethel Worſhip warrantable, becauſe 'twas ſettled by the Royal Authority. The King will have it ſo, he has a Right to Execute his Pleaſure, and no Body ought to contradict it. And at this Day there are a great many within the Pope's Communion, who give Princes an extraordinary Latitude, with reſpect to this Matter.——Thoſe who at firſt gave ſuch large Commendations to Henry King of England, were no long headed People: Their Complementing him with ſuch a Soveraign Authority in all matters, ſhock'd me extremely. Thoſe who call'd Him the Supreme Head of the Church, under Chriſt, were plainly Guilty of Blaſphemy. This was extravagantly too much. However, it's being the Effect of an Inconſiderate Zeal is ſome Excuſe, and therefore let us forget it. But that Impoſtor, who was afterwards Chancellor to that Proſerpine, who now out-does all the Devils in Miſchief; * This ſcandalous Impoſtor the Biſhop of Wincheſter, when he was at Ratisbon, did not offer to ſupport this Regal Supremacy by Arguments, nor took any notice of the Counter Evidence in Scripture. He thought it ſufficient to affirm the King's Authority unlimited, and that 'twas in his Power to ſet aſide Antient Uſages, and Introduce new ones at his Pleaſure. If the Queſtion relates to Faſting and Abſtinence, it lies at the King's Appointment: His Majeſty may Command the People to Eat Fleſh upon what Days he thinks fit: The King may bar Prieſts the liberty of Marriage: The King may deny the People the uſe of the Cup in the Lord's Supper. Why ſo? Becauſe the King's Prerogative is Abſolute. Now this is exactly Amaziah his Doctrine: 'Tis the King's Sanctuary, and 'tis the King's Court: Let us Examine the Grounds upon which it ſtands. This Amazias aſſigns the King a double Function; he maintains it is in his Power to transform Religion into what ſhape he Pleaſes: Thus he Charges Amos with diſturbing the publick Repoſe, and encroaching upon the Prerogative Royal. As to the firſt Part, 'tis certain King's, provided they diſcharge their Office, may be ſtiled Protectors of Religion, and Nurſing Fathers to the Church, as Iſaias calls them. It may therefore be reaſonably expected from Princes, that they ſhould make uſe of their Sword, in defence of God Almighty's Worſhip. But then on the other ſide, thoſe are an unthinking ſort of People, who carry the Royal Character too far into Spiritual Matters. * This Extreme is too common in Germany. Neither do the Countries about us ſtand clear from this Infection. And now we are ſenſible of the Conſequence of that unhappy Principle, which gives the Civil Magiſtrate a Soveraignty in Religion, and diſſolves the Church into the State. This Sacrilegious Invaſion rages amongſt us at preſent, by not diſtinguiſhing the Bounds of Civil Authority. As things are manag'd, Princes don't think they can Reign, unleſs they ſtrip the Church of her Authority, and make themſelves Supreme both in matters of Faith, and Spiritual Government. The Devil prompted Amaziah with this Notion. Since 'twas the King's Chappel, there muſt be no Propheſying againſt the Court Belief. No; the King's Religion muſt ſtand, and not be queſtion'd. This is agreeable Doctrine! Theſe ſoft Notes make Muſick in the Ears of Princes: They fall in with the Impoſture, and deſire nothing more than to hear themſelves made Maſters of every thing without Reſerve. Thus, they enter vigorouſly upon the Practice of their Eccleſiaſtick Supremacy, and pretend a Zeal for Religion: But the Spring of this Motion is nothing but Ambition: 'Tis only becauſe they would gladly extend their Authority, and knock down every thing with their Sceptre. There muſt be a Guard upon this Quarter: For Princes have been always remarkable for this Miſcarriage, and made it their Buſineſs to draw Religion within their Juriſdiction, to bend it to their Humour, and ſometimes to their Intereſt too. For 'tis Do-

Biſhop Gardiner*'s Letter to the Lords for his Inlargement.*

The Duke of Somerſet being now forc'd from the Adminiſtration, and confin'd, Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter had hopes of recovering his Liberty. But finding himſelf over-look'd, he wrote to the Lords of the Council for his Inlargment. He complains of being denied the Privilege of his Peerage, and hindred from appearing in Parliament: That his being Arbitrarily excluded the Houſe of Lords, might affect the reſt of the Members, and prove a dangerous Preſident: However, he declines conteſting his Right any farther, and is willing to ſubmit to the Judgment of the learned in the Law. But after all this Reſignation, he ſuggeſts that if a General Council were call'd, and any one who had a Right of Voting excluded, this ſingularity would break the Authority, and Invalidate the Decrees of the whole Synod. He goes on to complain of the late Protector's Proceedings, and hopes better Uſage from their Lordſhips. He inſiſts boldly upon his Innocence; preſſes to be brought to his Anſwer, in the Houſe of Lords, and inſtead of Impriſonment, makes no Queſtion of being commended for what he has done. (r)

Cardinal Pool hinders his own Promotion to the Popedom.

About this time Pope Paul the Third departed this Life. The Cardinals immediately appear'd in the Conclave for a new Election. Cardinal Pool was not forgotten upon this occaſion. His royal Extraction, the advantage of his Behaviour, and his Acquirements in Learning, were ſtrong Recommendations. However, the Cardinals were divided, part of them were in the French, and part in the Emperors Intereſt: Theſe were the Two biggeſt Diviſions: But ſome there were who ſtood clear of Parties, and altogether unengag'd. The Imperial Cardinals voted unanimouſly for Pool. This Prelate inſtead of acknowledging their Favour, blam'd their Precipitancy: Earneſtly intreating them not to be ſway'd in the leaſt by Fancy or Regards of Friendſhip, but to make the Honour of God, and the good of the Church the chief Motive to their Reſolves. The ſpeed of Pool's Friends being thus check'd, gave the French an opportunity of moving the Poſtponing the Election, 'till all the Members of the College had time to appear. And here Cardinal Caraffa, afterwards Paul the Fourth, expecting to gain the Chair, if Pool could be ſet aſide, applied to Calumny, and diſparaged his Competitor. Thus he endeavor'd to draw a ſuſpicion of Hereſy and Inſobriety upon Cardinal Pool, charg'd him with keeping too great a Correſpondence with the Lutherans, and entertaining one Flaminius in his Family, who lay under that Imputation. That being Commiſſionated to enquire into Hereſy at Viterbo, he diſcharg'd moſt of the Criminals; gave a gentle Correction only to ſome few, but puniſh'd none Capitally. He told them likewiſe that Pool had ſent a Young Woman to a Nunnery, which many believ'd was his own Daughter: He was therefore at a loſs to underſtand their Zeal for chuſing this Cardinal: Was Italy ſo barren in Learning, Probity and other Qualifications, that they muſt go to the farther end of Europe, to furniſh them with a Pope? To what purpoſe is all this Pains? Every Body knows this Cardinal is wholly in the Intereſt of the Court of Vienna: Have we a mind the Emperor ſhould make himſelf Maſter of the Patrimony of the Church, and plunder Rome again by way of Diverſion? And to make his Army an Entertainment? Pool defended himſelf ſo handſomely againſt this Invective, that the Conclave clearly perceiv'd there was nothing but Envy and Ambition in the Charge: And thus their Inclination to chuſe him was ſtronger than before. Soon after a Majority of the Cardinals came to his Appartment late in the Night, order'd the Servants to wake his Friend Priuli a Venetian Gentleman; their Buſineſs was to acquaint him with Pool's Election, and that they came to Adore him, as they call it, according to Cuſtom, which Ceremony was to paſs before the Affair could be Finiſh'd. Priuli having told Pool the News, with an Air of Pleaſure, the other gave him a friendly Check, and refuſ'd to receive the reſpect of the Conclave. He told them a Preferment of that Nature, was more to be dreaded than deſir'd, that it ought to be regularly manag'd, and not carried on in a tumultuary manner: That Night was an improper Time to conclude ſo great a Concern: That God was the God of Light and not of Darkneſs. He deſir'd them therefore to defer their Reſolution 'till next Day: And that the matter might then, if God ſo pleas'd, be brought to a better Iſſue. The Italian Cardinals interpreting this Backwardneſs, to a ſleepy Phlegmatick Temper, began to drop their Opinion of Pool's Capacity: And thus recalling their Votes, they Choſe the Cardinal De Monté, who took the Name of Julius the Third. (s)

An Act for calling in the Old Service Books, and deſtroying Images.

Nothing in the firſt Reform'd Common-Prayer-Book, but what is evidently grounded upon the Word of God.

To return to England: On the Fourth of November the Parliament ſate, after a Prorogation. I ſhall mention thoſe Statutes which concern the Church. The firſt of this kind Enacts the recalling the old Liturgick Books, and taking away Images out of Churches. The Preamble ſets forth, That whereas the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty, has of late ſet forth, and Eſtabliſh'd by Authority of Parliament, an uniform, godly, and quiet Order, of common and open Prayer, in a Book Entitled, the Book of Common Prayer, and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies after the Church of England, to be us'd and obſerv'd in the ſaid Church of England, agreeable to the Order of the Primitive Church, much more comfortable unto his loving Subjects, than other diverſity of Service, as heretofore of long time has been us'd, being in the ſame Book Ordain'd, nothing to be Read but the very pure Word of God, or which is evidently grounded upon the ſame; And in the other, things corrupt, untrue, vain, and ſuperſtitious, and as it were a Preparation to Superſtition. “ That the not calling in and “ defacing theſe Books gave occaſion to the “ depraving, and hindring the reception of “ the ſaid Common-Prayer-Book, incourag'd People in their old Superſtitious Service, and “ kept up a diverſity of Opinions and Ceremonies. 'Tis therefore Enacted, That all Books called Antiphoners, Miſſales, Grailes, Proceſſionales, Manueles, Legendes, Pies, Portuaſſes, Primers in Latin or Engliſh, Couchers, Journalles, Ordinalles, or other Books or Writings, whatſoever heretofore uſed for Service of the Church, wryten or printed in the Engliſh or Latin Tongue, other than ſuch as are or ſhall be ſet forth by the King's Majeſty; ſhall be by Authority of this preſent Act, clearly and utterly Aboliſh'd, extinguiſh'd, and forbidden for ever to be be uſ'd, or kept in this Realm, or Elſewhere, within any of the King's Dominions.

“It is farther Enacted, that all Images, of whatſoever Materials, taken out of Churches or Chappels, or yet ſtanding in any ſuch Places, ſhould be deſtroy'd and defac'd.

“As for the Books they were to be deliver'd to the Mayor, Bailiffs, Conſtables, or Churchwardens, in their reſpective Towns, who within Three Months after they came to their Hands, were to deliver them over to the Archbiſhop, Biſhop, Chancellor, or Commiſſary of the Dioceſe, in order to be by them, either openly Burn'd, or otherwiſe defac'd and deſtroy'd. And that in Caſe any of the Perſons above-mention'd, kept any of the Books, and did not bring them in to the Archbiſhop, Biſhops, &c. They were for the firſt Offence to Forfeit Ten Shillings, Four Pounds for the Second, and for the Third, to ſuffer Impriſonment at the King's Pleaſure.

“And if the Archbiſhop Biſhops, &c. Fail'd to Execute the Act, and did not burn, deface, and deſtroy, all the ſaid Books, within Forty Days after they receiv'd them, they were to Forfeit Forty Pounds, half of which Summ was for the King, and the other Moiety for the Informer.

“By this Statute 'tis provided firſt, that any Figure, or Picture, upon any Tomb, in Churches or Chappels might ſtand, in Caſe the Perſon repreſented had not the Character of a Saint.

Secondly, 'Tis provided, That any Perſon may keep, or uſe, any Primmers in the Engliſh or Latin Tongue, ſet forth by the late King Henry the Eighth, ſo that the Sentences of Invocation, or Prayers to Saints in the ſame Primmer, be blotted, or clearly put out of the ſame. (t)

(t) 3 and 4 Edw. 6. c. 10.

'Tis almoſt Pity there was not a Clauſe in this Act, to allow the Biſhops the Liberty of reſerving a Copy of all theſe Cenſur'd Books, and lodging them in their Cathedral Libraries. Thus the Form and Diſtinction of the Old Offices, might have been better known, and ſome valuable Curioſities remain'd.

On the Fourteenth of November, the Biſhops complain'd in the Houſe, to the Temporal Lords, of the great Increaſe of Immorality: That their Juriſdiction was ſo check'd and ſtraitned, that they could Summon no Offenders to appear before them, puniſh no Vice, nor exert the Diſcipline of the Church. To prevent theſe diſorders, a Bill was brought in, but miſcarried at the firſt Reading, becauſe it ſeem'd to intruſt the Biſhops with too much Power. (u) However, the matter was not laid aſide, but a Second Bill was drawn by a Committee, paſs'd and ſent down to the Commons, where it ſunk after the Second Reading. But then, there was an Attempt made in another Form, for reviving the Spiritual Juriſdiction. To this purpoſe an Act paſs'd, impowering the King to Nominate, by the Advice of his Council, Sixteen of the Clergy, Four of which were to be Biſhops, and Sixteen of the Temporalty, of whom Four were to be Common Lawyers, to Peruſe and Examine the Eccleſiaſtical Laws us'd in England, and to make ſuch an Extract, as they ſhould think proper for the uſe of the Realm. This Committee had Three Years Time to Finiſh their Buſineſs. And what was either agreed by an Univerſality or Majority of this Number, was to be Publiſh'd by Proclamation under the Broad Seal, and put in Practice as the King's Eccleſiaſtical Laws.

(u) Journal Procer. Cotton Libr. Tiberius. D. 1. Nov. 18.

The Biſhops complain their Juriſdiction was all taken from them.

'Twas likewiſe provided, that no Perſon ſhould incurr any Forfeiture, or Suit of Premunire for Executing, or making uſe of any Laws, drawn up by the ſaid Committee.

Thirty Two Perſons nominated to review the Eccleſiaſtical Laws.

On the other ſide, 'tis provided, that every Eccleſiaſtical Judge and Miniſter, ſhall be bound to obey the King's Writs of Prohibition, and of Attachment upon Prohibition and Indicavit. And laſtly, 'tis provided, that the ſaid Two and Thirty Perſons, or the greater Number of them, ſhall not have any Authority to Compile, or Publiſh any thing contrary to the Common Law, and Statutes of this Realm. One Reaſon of their Diſſent, I ſuppoſe, was, becauſe only Four Biſhops were appointed to aſſiſt in the Committee of Two and Thirty.

Purſuant to this Act, the King directed a Commiſſion to Archbiſhop Cranmer, and the reſt whom he thought proper for that Employment. (x) The Reader may find their Names among the Records. The Liſt is not drawn exactly upon the Direction of the Statute, for there wants one of the Number, and beſides, there are Eight Biſhops, and as many Common Lawyers, which is double the Number allow'd by the Act, and yet we have no Reaſon to queſtion the Commiſſions being drawn by the Advice of the Council.

(x) See Records. N°. 61.

There was a Subcommittee of Eight Perſons appointed, to digeſt the matter, to throw it into Form, and prepare it for the Peruſal of the reſt. This was done for quicker diſpatch. The Perſons employ'd were Archbiſhop Cranmer, Thomas Goodrick Biſhop of Ely, Dr. Cox the King's Almoner, Peter Martyr Doctor in Divinity, William May, and Rowland Taylor Doctors of Law, John Lucas, and Richard Goodrick Eſquires. But this Order for conſtituting a Subcommittee, being not given out 'till the Eleventh of November, 1551. I ſhall Poſtpone it to that Time, and at preſent, only take notice, that when the Bill for conſtituting the Two and Thirty Commiſſioners, was paſs'd in the Houſe of Lords, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of Durham, Ely, Carliſle, Worceſter, Weſtminſter, Chicheſter, Lincoln, Rocheſter, and St. David's, proteſted againſt it. The Submiſſion of the Duke of Somerſet.

Decemb. 23.

The Duke of Somerſet's Buſineſs came before the Lords this Seſſion. This Nobleman was ſolicited to make his Submiſſion, and confeſs the Charge. This he was told was the beſt method to diſentangle himſelf, and get gentle uſage. The Duke was ſo flexible as to Comply with this Advice: Thus he Subſcrib'd the Articles of Impeachment, and caſt himſelf upon the King's Mercy; and thus the Lords being Furniſh'd with ſufficient matter to ground their Judgment upon, Sentenc'd him to the loſs of his Offices of Earl Marſhal, Lord Treaſurer, and Lord Protector. He was likewiſe adjudg'd to Forfeit all his Goods, and an Eſtate in Lands, of near Two Thouſand Pounds per Annum. Being Inform'd of this Judgment paſs'd by the Peers, he ſent a Letter to the Houſe, in which he owns their Lordſhips Goodneſs, in carrying their Sentence no higher than a Fine: “Which although his Circumſtances were almoſt Cruſh'd by it, yet he reſolv'd never to diſpute the Point with their Lordſhips, nor “ juſtify himſelf in any particular. He confeſs'd, that a Man as he was, of no great Penetration, might eaſily miſtake his Way: And that 'twas almoſt Impracticable to manage in ſo high a Station, without falling ſometimes under the Cenſure of the Law. He deſired them to Interpret his Conduct to the moſt favourable Senſe, and believe his Failings proceeded more from want of Judgment, than Deſign. That he was ready to Act, or Suffer, as their Lordſhips ſhould think fit to appoint. And laſtly, he humbly Intreats their Pardon, and Promiſes ſuch an Abſolute Obedience to their Orders, as he hopes might make amends for his former Folly. (z)

By this remarkable Submiſſion he gain'd his Liberty, was diſcharg'd of his Fine, and not long after ſworn of the Privy Council: But his waving his Defence, and reſigning with ſo much Paſſiveneſs, weaken'd his Character, and made him little conſider'd.

Bonner petitions his Appeal may be admitted but without Succeſs.

The Fall of the Duke of Somerſet, and the Earl of Warwick having the Aſcendant in the Miniſtry, gave Bonner ſome hopes of retrieving his Affairs. He petition'd the King therefore for a Superſedeas againſt the Commiſſioners, and deſir'd his Proceſs might be review'd, and that he might be heard before the Privy Council, where he did not queſtion acquitting himſelf to the Satisfaction of the Board. The King upon this Application order'd the Lord Chancellor, the Marqueſs of Dorſet, the Biſhop of Ely, the Lord Wentworth, Two of the Judges, and ſeveral other Members of the Privy Council, with ſome common Lawyers and Civilians to examine his Petition and Appeal. This Committee after inſpecting the Proceſs, and debating upon the Courſe of the Tryal, came to a Reſolution that the Appeal having no Weight in it, the Judgment ought to ſtand in Force. (a)

The Earl of Warwick declares for the Reformation.

Thoſe who were averſe to the Reformation made their Court to the Earl of Warwick, expecting his Inclination lay for their purpoſe: But this Nobleman being more concern'd for his own Greatneſs, than any Syſtems of Religion, diſappointed their Hopes. He found the abetting the Reformation was the moſt effectual way to recommend him to the King. Thus he put on a new Diſguiſe, and appear'd ſtrongly in his Maſters Sentiment. The Earl of Southampton who was heartily of the Popiſh Party, was in no Condition to exert himſelf, for he was neither reſtor'd to his Office of Chancellor, nor made Lord Treaſurer, nor ſo much as admitted into the Number of thoſe who had the Care of the King's Perſon: 'Tis ſaid he attempted to heave at the Earl of Warwick, but his Deſign being diſcover'd before he could make it bear, he retir'd ſuddenly from the Court, fell into a deep Melancholly, and died in July following.

To return to the Parliament in which an Act paſs'd for drawing up an Ordinal. The Act being ſhort, and not printed except in the Statutes at large, I ſhall tranſcribe it for the Reader.

VI. Edw. K.

An Act to empower a Committee of Biſhops, &c. to draw up an Ordinal.

Forasmuch as Concord and Unity to be had within the Kings Majeſties Dominions, it is requiſite to have one uniform Faſhion and Manner, for making and conſecrating of Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, or Miniſters of the Church. Be it therefore enacted by the Kings Highneſs, with the Aſſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame, that ſuch Form and Manner of making and conſecrating of Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and other Miniſters of the Church, as by Six Prelates, and Six other Men of this Realm, Learned in Gods Law, by the Kings Majeſty to be appointed and aſſign'd, or by the moſt Number of them ſhall be deviſed for that purpoſe; and ſet forth under the great Seal of England, before the Firſt Day of April next coming, ſhall by Virtue of this preſent Act be lawfully exerciſ'd and uſed, and none other, any Statute, or Law or Uſage to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding. (b)

When this Act paſs'd, the Houſe of Lords the Biſhops of Durham, Carliſle, Worceſter, Weſtminſter, and Chicheſter, proteſted againſt it. (c)

Heath Biſhop of Worceſter was one of the Six Prelates appointed by the King, but refuſing to conſent to the Alterations propos'd, he was called before the Council, on the Eighth of February, and on the Eighth of March committed to the Fleet for perſiſting in his Incompliance. This Uſage look'd like a Strain of Juſtice, but Heath having been obſerv'd to diſſent from all the Bills which promoted the Reformation, he was probably upon this Score more rigorouſly treated.

The Committee appointed for compiling the Ordination Book ſtruck off the Additions of later Ages, and govern'd themſelves by the Forms of the Antient Church. Thus in the Conſecration of Biſhops, the Gloves and Sandals, the Mitre, Ring, and Croſier were omitted: Neither in the ordaining of Prieſts was there any anointing, or delivering the conſecrated Plate. (d)

That the Office was not maim'd by leaving out theſe Ceremonies, I ſhall prove from the Forms of Ordination in the Primitive Church, and the Conceſſions of the famous Morinus.

The Forms of Ordination in the Antient Church.

To begin with the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, who is ſuppos'd to have written before the Council of Nice. By theſe Conſtitutions when a Prieſt is to be ordain'd, the Biſhop was to lay his Hand upon his Head, the Prieſts and Deacons ſtanding by, whilſt the Biſhop was to ſay the Prayer following.

The Apoſtolical Conſtitutions.

Almighty God who has created all Things by Jeſus Chriſt, and by him do'ſt govern the Univerſe ſuitably to the reſpective Nature of Things. For the ſame Power which is able to produce different Beings, can likewiſe govern them by different Laws and Meaſures. Thus thoſe Beings which are Immortal are ſupported by the Conſervation of the Individual, and thoſe which are Mortal by Succeſſion. Thou provideſt for the Mind by Precepts and Rules of Life, and for the Body by repairing the Decays of Nature. We beſeech thee therefore to look down upon thy Holy Church, and bleſs her with farther Improvement; increaſe the Number of thoſe who preſide in her, and furniſh them with Strength that they may labour both by Inſtruction and Example for the Edification of thy People; And now we beſeech thee to behold thy Servant Elected by the Suffrage and Conſent of the whole Clergy to the Order of Prieſthood, repleniſh him with Grace and Prudence to aſſiſt and govern thy People with Purity of Intention, vouchſafe him the ſame favourable Regard which thou wer't pleas'd to afford thy peculiar People, when thou commandeſt Moſes to make choice of the Elders, to whom thou gaveſt a ſupernatural Aſſiſtance. And now, O Lord, let the ſame Bleſſing deſcend upon us, and continue the Operation of thy Holy Spirit, that ſo this Perſon being furniſh'd with the Gifts of healing, and an inſtructive Talent, may teach thy People with Gentle-

The Fourth Council of Carthage. Anno Dom. 401.

In the Fourth Council of Carthage, the Rules for Ordination are thus ſettled. When a Biſhop is to be Conſecrated, Two Biſhops are to hold the New Teſtament over his Head, and while one of the Biſhops pronounces the Prayer of Conſecration, the reſt of that Order who are preſent lay their Hands upon his Head.

At the Ordination of a Prieſt the Biſhop pronounces the Bleſſing, or makes the Prayer for conveying the Character. All the Prieſts likewiſe then at Church lay their Hands next the Biſhop on the Head of the Perſon to be ordain'd.

At the Ordination of a Deacon only the Biſhop who gives him the Bleſſing, lays his Hand upon his Head, becauſe the Office of a Deacon is not Sacerdotal, but Miniſterial.

The Forms of the lower Orders are likewiſe preſcrib'd, which the Reader may ſee in the Records. (g)

The pretended Dionyſius.

"To proceed, the pretended Dionyſius the "Areopagite, whoſe Works were publiſh'd in the "beginning of the Sixth Century (h) gives "this Account of the Ceremonies at Ordina"tion. The Biſhop Elect ſays he, who comes "for Conſecration, is to kneel before the Al"tar, the Goſpels are held over his Head, he "receives Impoſition of Hands from the conſe"crating Biſhop. There is likewiſe a ſolemn "Form of Prayer us'd upon this occaſion. A "Prieſt at his Ordination kneels likewiſe be"fore the Altar, the Biſhop laying his Right "Hand upon his Head, and compleating the "Ordination with ſolemn Prayer. When a "Deacon is ordain'd, he kneels only before "the Altar on one Knee, and then the Biſhop "laying his Hand on his Head, pronounces a "Prayer proper for thoſe of that Order. All "theſe reſpective Orders are ſign'd with the "Sign of the Croſs, the Names and Degrees "of the Perſons publiſh'd, and at laſt they are "ſaluted by the Biſhop, and the reſt of the "Clergy.

The Greek Church.

The Learned Morinus from an authentick Manuſcript of more than Eight Hundred Years Antiquity, gives us a farther Account of the Forms of Ordination practis'd in the Greek Church. When a Biſhop was to be conſecrated, the Archbiſhop ſtanding before the Holy Table prays for the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon the Elect, and holding his Hands upon his Head reads the Inſtrument of his Election, then after ſome Prayers the Archbiſhop opening the Goſpels lays them on the Head of the Perſon conſecrated: The Archbiſhop likewiſe makes Three Croſſes on his Head, and then pronounces the Prayers of Conſecration. (i) After this one of the Biſhops reads Part of the Litany, then the Archbiſhop with his Hand upon the Head of the Elect makes another Prayer with Reſpect to the Ordination, then he takes the Goſpels from the conſecrated Biſhops Head, and puts the Omophorion, or Pallium upon him. After this the conſecrated Biſhop is ſaluted by the Archbiſhop, and the reſt of the Biſhops, and conducted to the Biſhops Seat, and then the remaining Service is perform'd. (k)

(i) See Records num. 63.

(k) Morin. page 64.

At the Ordination of a Prieſt, the beginning of the Office is much the ſame as that at a Biſhops Conſecration, the Biſhop or Archbiſhop makes Three Croſſes over him, laying his Hand upon his Head; in the Prayer, the Order to which he is ordain'd is mention'd, after this one of the Prieſts of the Church reads Part of the Litany. Then the Archbiſhop puts him on a Habit proper to his Character, and ſalutes him, which is likewiſe done by the Prieſts then preſent. Then the conſecrated Elements being uncover'd, the Biſhop puts a Piece of Bread into the Hands of the Perſon ordain'd, and laying his Hand upon his Head bows his Body over the Holy Table. Then the Perſon ordain'd returns the Bread to the Biſhop, and receives the Euchariſt before the reſt of the Prieſts.

Miſſale Francorum.

In the Franks Miſſal, a Copy of which may be ſeen in Morinus and Mabillon, and which the firſt of theſe Learned Men believes to have been written before the Year Five Hundred and Sixty, tho' the latter thinks it ſomewhat later than the Popedom of Gregory the Great. However, by the Prayers in it for the Kings of France, 'tis plain that Country was not govern'd then by a ſingle Perſon, and by conſequence the Miſſal muſt reach conſiderably higher than the Reign of Charles the Great. (l)

The Form of Ordination in this Miſſale Francorum, is exactly the ſame with that of the Council of Carthage, with Reſpect to the Three Orders, of Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons.

Thus we ſee the Antient Rituals for Ordination, agree with that drawn up in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth. There is no anointing the Hands and Head of the Prieſt and Biſhop. No Chalice or Paten deliver'd to the Second Order, nor any Ring or Croſier to the Firſt.

'Tis true about the Ninth Century, we find the Uſe of theſe Ceremonies. But then as the Learned Morinus obſerves, theſe ſupplemental Rites in the Forms of Ordination, were added only upon the ſcore of Solemnity. (m)

The Eſſentials in Ordinations

This Learned Perſon grants the Latin Church has all along own'd the Orders of the Greek, after the Schiſm, as the Weſterns call it: And yet as he takes notice, it neither is, nor was the Cuſtom of the Greek Church to deliver the Chalice and Paten to the Prieſt at their Ordination. He obſerves farther, that Prayer and Impoſition of Hands are the only Eſſentials in Ordination. He acquaints us that the Antient Pontificals are charg'd with feweſt Ceremonies. That Thomas Aquinas and other Schoolmen peruſing only the Rituals of latter Ages inſer'd the Uſages of Antiquity from thence, which is a wrong way of arguing. That from this Principle they have been led into Miſtakes, made the Delivery of the Holy Veſſels neceſſary to the Conveyance of the Sacerdotal Character, and embaraſs'd themſelves with inexplicable Difficulties in reconciling the Allowance of the Orders of the Greek Church, with the Cuſtoms and Conſtitutions of their own.

The Rites in the Antient Ordinals.

To proceed, in latter Ages the Ceremonies at Ordination grew more numerous: Thus, as Morinus obſerves, the Pontificals of leſſer Antiquity, tho' they omit none of the Antient Rites, are inlarg'd to conſiderable Additions. Thus for inſtance, the Sacramentary tack'd to the End of the Manuſcript of the Ordo Romanus, publiſh'd by Hittorpius, makes mention of putting ting the Paten and Chalice into the Prieſts Hands with theſe Words, receive thou Authority to offer Sacrifice to God, and to celebrate Maſs both for the Living and the Dead. (n) But here we may take notice that Hittorpius believ'd the Ordo Romanus it ſelf later than our Alchuinus who lived in the Ninth Century. Beſides 'tis poſſible, this Manuſcript of the Pontifical may not be of the ſame Age with the other Part of the Ordo Romanus, neither does Hittorpius vouch it ſo far. The Sacramentary attributed to Gelaſius, tho' it mentions the Offering of Sacrifices, yet we meet with nothing of the delivering the Holy Veſſels. (o)

The Pontifical belonging to the Monaſtery of Corbey, publiſh'd by Morinus, and ſuppos'd to be at leaſt as Old as the beginning of the Ninth Century, gives an Account of the anointing the Hands of the Prieſt, and his offering Sacrifices for the Sins and Offences of the People, but neither the Paten or Cup are put into his Hands by this Form.

In an Engliſh Saxon Ordinal publiſh'd by Morinus from a Manuſcript of above Eight Hundred Years Antiquity, the Prieſts Hands are bleſs'd and anointed with Oyl and Chriſm; his Head is likewiſe anointed, and an officiating Habit put upon him. The Ordination Prayers likewiſe mentions his offering Sacrifice for the Sins of the People, but there is nothing of the delivering of the Paten and Cup, nor that Sentence ſo much inſiſted of, to celebrate Maſs, and offer Sacrifice for the Living and Dead. This Ordinal being about Two Hundred Years prior to the Conqueſt, and belonging to the Engliſh Nation, I ſhall tranſcribe that Part of it which relates to the ordaining and conſecrating of Prieſts and Biſhops. (p)

(p) See Records n. 64,

In ſhort, by the Variation in theſe Rituals for Ordination, both with reſpect to Age and Country, we may infer the Antient Biſhops did not conceive themſelves bound up to Preſident in theſe Caſes, but, that provided the Eſſentials were retain'd, they were at Liberty to alter or add as they thought fit.

To return Home. The Act for authorizing a Committee to draw up an Ordinal, calls Deacons, Miniſters, agreeably to the Language of Antiquity. The Committee are impower'd by this Act to ordain the lower Orders, that is Subdeacons, Readers, Acolyths and the reſt, for all theſe ſeem comprehended in the Clauſe of other Miniſters of the Church. But the Biſhops and Divines appointed for this purpoſe, went no farther than the Superior Orders of Biſhop, Prieſt, and Deacon. Their Motive for ſtopping here, as we may reaſonably conclude, was becauſe none but theſe Three, were of Apoſtolical Inſtitution, the reſt being the Proviſion of after Ages.

Remarks on the ſuppos'd Difference in the Engliſh Reform'd Ordinals.

'Tis affirm'd this Form of ordaining Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, is the ſame with that we yet uſe, excepting ſome few Words that have been added ſince in the Ordination of a Prieſt or Biſhop. For there was then no expreſs mention made in the Words of ordaining them, whether it was to the one or other Office: In both it was ſaid, Receive thou the Holy Ghoſt in the Name of the Father, &c. But that having been ſince made uſe of to prove both Functions the ſame, it was of late years alter'd as it is now. (q) This Remark put me upon comparing the Firſt Ordinal with that publiſh'd in the Third Edition of Sparrows Collection: And here I found them exactly the ſame. But afterwards peruſing this Office as it ſtands review'd at the Savoy, I perceive the Authors Obſervation is right.

The ſame Learned Hiſtorian mentions another Difference between the Ordination Book ſet out at that Time, and that we now uſe: In the former the Biſhop was to lay his one Hand on the Prieſt's Head, and with his other to give him a Bible, with a Chalice and Bread in it, ſaying the Words now ſaid at the Delivery of the Bible. In the Conſecration of a Biſhop, there was nothing more than what is now in Uſe, ſave that a Staff was put into his Hand with this Bleſſing, be to the Flock of Chriſt a Shepherd. And in another Part of this Book (r) ſpeaking of Archbiſhop Parkers Conſecration, he acquaints us the Office was perform'd according to the Book of Ordinations made in King Edwards Time: Only the Ceremony of putting the Staff in his Hands was left out of the Office in Queen Elizabeths Reign.

(r) Id. p. 403.

But here as it happens, this Learned Hiſtorian has been led into a Miſtake. For the Two firſt Editions of the Ordinal made in King Edwards Reign, printed with Privilege by Grafton and Whitchurch, have none of the different Rites mention'd by this Gentleman. Neither are they to be found in any Edition ſince: There is nothing of a Chalice and Bread deliver'd to the Prieſt, nor any Rubrick for putting a Staff in the Biſhops Hand, with the Sentence of being a Shepherd to the Flock of Chriſt. Farther the Form of Ordination uſed in Queen Elizabeths Time, was altogether the ſame with that in the Reign of King Edward, as Maſon informs us. (s)

(s) Maſon de Miniſt. Anglic. p. 338. 342. 358.

By the Rule of this Ordinal, a Deacon was not to be ordain'd under One and Twenty Years of Age, nor a Prieſt under Four and Twenty, nor a Biſhop under Thirty. (t)

(t) Edit. Graft. in præf.

The Meaning of being moved by the Holy Ghoſt.

And here it may not be improper to take notice of a remarkable Paſſage in the reform'd Ordinal: 'Tis this, do you truſt that you are inwardly mov'd by the Holy Ghoſt to take upon you this Office and Miniſtration, to ſerve God, &c. To this an Affirmative Anſwer is requir'd from the Perſon ordain'd. Now the Meaning of this Queſtion cannot import ſo ſtrong a Senſe as extraordinary Afflation, or prophetick Impulſe. 'Tis not ſuppos'd the Perſon ſhould be under the Privilege of Supernatural Light, and be conſcious of a diſtinguiſhing Operation of Divine Grace. The being mov'd therefore by the Holy Ghoſt can imply nothing farther than ſerious Preparation, honeſt Intention, and holy Reſolution of acting ſuitably to the Office. Now ſince all good Motions deſcend from above, he that is thus virtuouſly qualified and reſolv'd, may be in ſome meaſure ſaid to be mov'd by the Holy Ghoſt. We may obſerve farther, that this Queſtion in the Ordinal is only put to the Deacons: That to which the Prieſts and Biſhops are requir'd to anſwer is couch'd in leſs myſterious Language. It ſtands thus. Are you perſwaded that you be truly called to this Miniſtration according to the Will of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the Order of this Realm? As for previous Recollection, diſintereſted Views, and ſerious Application for the Diſcharge of the Holy Function, nothing is more neceſſary. (u) Theſe Things recommended at large by our Learned Hiſtorian, are admiral Advice.

Orders not accounted valid by the Antient Church unleſs receiv'd from a Biſhop.

Before I part with the Ordinal, I muſt obſerve that the Three Orders of Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, are all confer'd by the Authority of the Biſhop. And in this the Engliſh Reformation is exactly conformable to the Practice of the Antient Church, who never allow'd any Ordinations perform'd by Perſons beneath the Epiſcopal Character. To give ſome Inſtances: After the Second General Council of Conſtantinople had declar'd Maximus no Biſhop, 'tis immediately added, that thoſe ordain'd by him ſhould not be reckon'd amongſt any Diſtinctions of the Clergy, (w)

(w) Can. 4.

When 'twas objected againſt Athanaſius, that Macarius one of his Deacons had broken a Chalice, the Synod conven'd at Alexandria, examining the Charge, found upon Enquiry, that there was no Prieſt belonging to the Place where the Chalice was broken, excepting one Iſchyras, who pretended an Ordination from Coluthus: But upon looking into the Character of this Coluthus, he was prov'd to be no more than a Prieſt. Upon this the Synod decreed Iſchyras his Orders to be perfectly null, that he was to be ſtruck out of the Liſt of the Clergy, and paſs for no more than a meer Layman. And the Ground of this Sentence, as the Synod continues, was ſo clear and unconteſted, that no body could call it in Queſtion. (x)

The Council of Sardica is full for the ſame point, and declares Iſchyras no Prieſt. (y) Thus St. Jerome, tho' ſetting the Prieſts Character as high as 'twould bear, grants the Privilege of ordaining peculiar to the Biſhop. Quid facit, exceptâ Ordinatione, Epiſcopus, quod Presbyter non faciat? (z)

The Antients, as they had reaſon, were ſo conſtant in keeping cloſe to this Rule, that when the Second Council of Sevill underſtood that at the Ordination of a Prieſt and two Deacons, the Biſhop having ſore Eyes, had only laid his Hands upon them, and that the Prieſt pronounc'd the Prayer for conveying the Character; The Council, I ſay, underſtanding this, cenſur'd the whole Proceſs of the Ordination as ſcandalous and invalid, and gave Sentence that neither of the Orders ſhould be allow'd. (a)

The firſt Biſhop conſecrated by our Reform'd Ordinal, was Poynet, prefer'd to the See of Wincheſter the next Year. (b) At the Alteration of the Common-Prayer-Book in the Year 1552. this Ordinal was annex'd, and confirm'd by Act of Parliament. (c) This Ordinal is likewiſe mentioned in the Church Articles, paſs'd in the Convocation Anno Dom. 1562; in one of which 'tis declar'd, (d) that whoſoever are conſecrated or order'd according to the Rites of this Book, or hereafter ſhall be conſecrated or order'd according to the ſame Rites, are decreed to be rightly, lawfully, and orderly conſecrated. This Declaration of the Church was afterwards confirm'd by Act of Parliament, in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. (e)

The Objection againſt the Reform'd Ordinal not conſiderable.

The Objection, that the Words for conveying the Biſhops and Prieſts Character, are the ſame in the Ordinal ſet forth in King Edward's Reign, goes partly upon a Miſtake; For at the Ordination of a Prieſt, the Words runs thus; Receive the Holy Ghoſt, &c. Take thou Authority to preach the Word of God, and to miniſter the Holy Sacraments in the Congregation, where thou ſhalt be ſo appointed. But at the Conſecration of a Biſhop the Form ſtands as follows; Remember that thou ſtir up the Grace of God, which is in thee by Impoſition of Hands: For God has not given us the Spirit of Fear, but of Power, and Love, and of Soberneſs.

I grant there is ſome Reſemblance in theſe Forms, but then there is a plain Diſtinction in other Parts of the Office. For inſtance, there is an expreſs Declaration of two Biſhops, that the Perſon preſented is to be conſecrated to their own Order. There are more Queſtions put to him by the Archbiſhop, than are mention'd in the Office for ordaining Prieſts; ſome of which ſuppoſe a ſuperior Authority in his Character, and that the Exerciſe of Diſcipline, and the Government of a Dioceſe, are Branches of his Function. The Archbiſhop, and two other Biſhops lay their Hands upon the Head of the Elect, whereas at the Ordaining of a Prieſt this Ceremony is perform'd only by the Dioceſan, with ſome Prieſts aſſiſting. Theſe ſhort Remarks may be ſufficient to diſcover the Weakneſs of the Exception againſt this Ordinal.

Towards the End of this Year, there was another Creation of Noblemen: The Lord Privy Seal Ruſſel, was made Earl of Bedford, the Lord William St. John Earl of Wiltſhire, and Sir William Paget Lord Paget. Soon after the receiving theſe Titles, the Lords Bedford and Paget, with Sir William Petre, and Sir John Maſon, were diſpatch'd into France to treat a Peace. Paget had been lately ſent to the Emperor to acquaint him what Diſturbance the Engliſh receiv'd from the Scotch and French, and how much the Kingdom was embroil'd by Inteſtine Commotions: That things being in this Poſture of Diſadvantage, there would, unleſs the Emperor lent his Aſſiſtance, be a Neceſſity of coming to a Peace with the French. This Application meeting with no Succeſs from his Imperial Majeſty, a Peace was concluded upon the following Articles with France and Scotland. As to the French Part, Bouloign with the Dependencies, together with the Train of Artillery, were to be deliver'd to the French. For this the King of England was to receive four hundred thouſand Crowns (the Crown being worth Six Shillings and Eight-pence) at two Payments. The Scotch being comprehended in this Treaty Roxborough and Aymouth, Lauder and Dunglaſſe were to be raz'd. There was likewiſe to be an open Trade between England, France, and Scotland. This Treaty was proclaim'd in London on the 3d of March, and on the 25th of April, Bouloign was evacuated, and the Engliſh Hoſtages return'd. (f)

A Peace with France and Scotland.

(f) Godwin Annal. Stow Annal.

In the beginning of the next Year, Joan Butcher, commonly called Joan of Kent, was burnt in Smithfield for Hereſy: She was convented the laſt Year before Archbiſhop Cranmer, and other Commiſſioners, for reviving Part of the Valentinian Heterodoxy, and denying our Saviour's having taken Fleſh of the Bleſſed Virgin. The Archbiſhop omitted nothing to recover her to a right Belief, but ſhe prov'd incurably obſtinate, and reproach'd Cranmer with paſſing Sentence upon Anne Askew, for denying the Corporal Preſence in the Euchariſt. She told him he had condemn'd Anne Askew for a Piece of Bread, and was now ready to treat her with the ſame Uſage for a Piece of Fleſh. Thus their being no Hopes of reclaiming her, ſhe was Convicted, and a Certificate of her Conviction tranſmitted to the King's-Bench, for the delivering her over to Secular Juſtice, part of the Form runs thus.

May the 2d Anno Dom. 1550. Joan Butcher burnt for Hereſy.

The King very unwilling to ſign the Warrant for her Execution.

Thus far the Proceſs was carried on the laſt Year; however her Execution was reſpited till now. In the mean time, nothing was untryed to bring her off from her Hereſy: But all Application proving unſucceſsful, the King was ſolicited to ſign the Dead Warrant. The Lords of the Council ſuggeſted, that her Perverſneſs, in caſe ſhe was ſpar'd, might encourage Deluſion, and occaſion the ſpreading of ſuch dangerous Opinions: The King not being ſatisfied with what was urg'd by the Council, the Archbiſhop was deſired to try his Intereſt: But all Cranmer's Arguments could not remove the King from his Opinion. To execute her under ſo deſperate a Misbelief, was to conſign her, he ſaid, to inevitable Damnation: That therefore 'twas better to correct her with ſome corporal Puniſhment, and leave her her Life for Recollection. At laſt, the King being prevail'd with by Cranmer's Remonſtrance and Importunity, he ſign'd the Warrant with Regret, and told the Archbiſhop he ſhould charge him with anſwering what was done to God Almighty. The unhappy Woman was kept a Week after this at the Lord Chancellor's Houſe, where Cranmer and Ridley viſited her every Day, and did their utmoſt to undeceive her, but ſhe prov'd impenetrable to all Arguments. When ſhe was brought to the Stake, Dr. Scory, afterwards Biſhop of Rocheſter, preaching to the People in Confutation of her Hereſy, ſhe interrupted him and told him he lyed, with ſome other intemperate Language.

John A-laſco ſettles in England, and has a Church allow'd him with extraordinary Privileges.

About this time, John A-laſco a Poliſh Gentleman ſettled in England; He was forced out of his Country by the Rigor of the Roman Catholicks. His firſt Stage was Embden in Eaſt Friezland, where he was Preacher to a Congregation of the Reform'd; But here being no likelyhood of any long Shelter or Repoſe, he embark'd for England. He was hoſpitably entertain'd by the Archbiſhop, made an Acquaintance with Sir John Cheek, and Sir William Cecil, and was by them recommended to the Duke of Somerſet. By this means gaining an Intereſt at Court, he mov'd his Congregation might have leave to tranſport themſelves to London, with the Privilege of an Independent Church. The Council looking upon them as People in Diſtreſs upon the Score of Conſcience, mov'd the King in their behalf. In ſhort, their Requeſt was granted, and Auguſtine Friers Church, aſſign'd them for the Exerciſe of their Religion. And to give them a farther Settlement, the King by his Letters Patent makes them a Corporation, conſiſting of a Superintendent and four aſſiſting Miniſters. By this Charter they are impower'd to fill the Vacancies by Death or otherwiſe; with this Condition however, that the Perſons elected ſhould be approv'd by the King and Council. And to leave them more fully to their Conduct, the Lord Mayor, the Aldermen, and Sheriffs of London are commanded not to interpoſe or moleſt them in their Eccleſiaſtical Government. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the other Biſhops are likewiſe forbidden to cite them into their Courts, or call them to an Account for their Diſagreement with the Engliſh Church. This Inſtrument, by virtue of which John A-laſco is made Superintendant, bears Date the 24th of July. (h)

(h) See Records Num. LXV.

This Indulgence, tho' going upon Motives of Generoſity and Compaſſion, prov'd unſerviceable to the Engliſh Reformation. For this German Congregation was very remote both in Government and Worſhip from our Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution. The allowing therefore a Religious Society, ſo widely different from that of the Country, and the exempting theſe Foreigners from the Juriſdiction of the Biſhops, was thought in effect an Encouragement of Schiſm, and ſetting up one Altar againſt another. It muſt be ſaid, this Friendſhip and Correſpondence with the Reform'd of other Nations, diſturb'd our Harmony at home, and prov'd an Occaſion of Diviſions. And of this we have a remarkable Inſtance in John Hooper, nominated about this time to the Biſhoprick of Glouceſter. This Clergy-man perceiving himſelf in Danger from the Six Articles in the late Reign, withdrew to Zurich in Swiſſerland. When King Henry died, he return'd for England, his Acquaintance with Bullinger, and frequenting the Zuinglian Churches, made him ſtrongly prepoſſeſs'd in Favour of their Cuſtoms. Being a popular Preacher, and a zealous Antipapiſt, he was taken notice of by the Earl of Warwick. By this Nobleman's Intereſt, the King prefer'd him to the See of Glouceſter lately void by the Death of Wakeman Abbot of Tewkſberry, and firſt Biſhop of that Dioceſe. When Hooper came to the Archbiſhop for Conſecration, he ſcrupled the Epiſcopal Habit, for which reaſon Cranmer refus'd him. The Earl of Warwick wrote to the Archbiſhop, requeſting him to wave the inſiſting upon theſe Ceremonies, and that this was the King's Deſire no leſs than his own. 'Twas likewiſe mov'd, that the Archbiſhop would not charge the Elect of Glouceſter with any Oath againſt his Conſcience. For it ſeems, Hooper had ſcrupled an Oath, which by the Law he was obliged to take.

July. Hooper nominated to the See of Glouceſter.

The Archbiſhop, 'tis likely, having neither Liberty nor Inclination to gratify ſuch Singularities, refus'd to comply. Upon this the Earl of Warwick prevail'd with the King to write for a Diſpenſation with Hooper, diſcharging Cranmer from all Penalties and Forfeitures to which he might otherwiſe be lyable. (i) The Archbiſhop not willing to run the Riſque of a Præmunire, by obeying the King's private Will, againſt his publick one in the Laws, crav'd leave to be excuſed. And ſince there was no coming at the Epiſcopal Character, without going through the cuſtomary Forms, Endeavors were us'd to ſatisfy Hooper's Conſcience. To this purpoſe, Ridley Biſhop of London had a Conference with him, and argued the Point at length, but without Succeſs. The Council being apprehenſive theſe Diſputes might ſtart more Queſtions, and grow to farther Inconvenience, ſent for Hooper, and adviſ'd him to acquieſce. He intreated the Board he might have the Liberty of putting the Reaſons of his Opinion in Writing, which was granted. This Paper was given Ridley to anſwer it.

He ſcruples wearing the Epiſcopal Habit.

Hooper to inform himſelf farther, wrote to Bucer and Peter Martyr for their Judgment upon the Controverſy. He receiv'd an Anſwer from both; Peter Martyr's Letter was to this effect. (k)

Peter Martyr's Anſwer to his Objections.

“where the Diſtinctions of Habit, with reſpect to Holy Miniſtrations was laid aſide: That in Religious Rites he was for keeping as cloſe as poſſible to the Preſidents of Holy Scripture, and the moſt uncorrupted Ages of the Church. However, he could not go ſo far in the other Extreme, as to believe the Subſtance of Religion affected by Cloaths: He thought things of this Nature altogether indifferent, and left at Liberty by the Word of God. Had he been of Hooper's Mind, that the cuſtomary Habits for Prieſts and Biſhops had been clearly unlawful, he would never have joyn'd himſelf to the Engliſh Communion. He thought Conformity in theſe Matters at preſent might be a ſerviceable Expedient. That the conteſting Circumſtantials ought to be declin'd till the Reformation was better ſettled: That exerting our Zeal upon indefenſible Points, and things of ſmall moment, might loſe the good Opinion of the People, make them queſtion the Judgment of the Reform'd Preachers, and give no Credit to what they deliver'd in Matters of the laſt Importance. He proceeds to commend Hooper for his great Pains in Preaching: That by his Talent and Application this way, he had gain'd a conſiderable Reputation, and put himſelf in a Condition of doing a great deal of Service. And here he precautions him not to overſhoot in his Zeal, and launch out into Invectives, for that this would be the way to diſappoint his pious Intention. Beſides, by charging theſe indifferent things as altogether unlawful, we ſhall, ſays he, draw an Imputation upon unexceptionable Communions, and condemn the Practice of the moſt celebrated Antiquity.

“And whereas Hooper had objected, that the ſacerdotal Habits were Marks of Judaiſm, and would in effect return us to the Aaronical Prieſthood; to this Peter Martyr replies, that abſtaining from Blood and things ſtrangled, were part of the Judaic Inſtitution; however the Council of Jeruſalem commanded the Gentiles upon the ſame Obſervance: That this was done out of a Reconciling Principle, and to avoid giving Offence. That Tythes for the Maintenance of the Clergy, were likewiſe a Branch of the Moſaick Law. That it would be difficult to produce a Command in the New Teſtament for ſinging Pſalms in publick Aſſemblies. That the Chriſtian Church from the very beginning had gone upon the Imitation of the Jewiſh Oeconomy in ſeveral particulars. That the Feſtivals of Eaſter and Whitſontide, are not without ſomething of Ground from the Solemnities of the Old Law. Are theſe Holidays therefore to be ſet aſide, becauſe of their Reſemblance with the Jewiſh Practice?

“To proceed; Hooper objected farther, that theſe Diſtinctions of Habit were Inventions of Antichriſt, and that we ought not only to renounce the Pope's Juriſdiction, but ſtand off from all the Novelties and Cuſtoms of that See.

“To this Martyr anſwers, That to maintain the Unlawfulneſs of all Rites and Cuſtoms practis'd in the Church of Rome, looks like an indefenſible Aſſertion: That to govern by ſuch narrow Maxims would draw a very inconvenient Reſtraint upon the Church of God. Our Anceſtors mov'd much more freely than this comes too. They made no Difficulty of turning Heathen Temples into Chriſtian Churches: They tranſlated the Revenues dedicated to the Support of Idolatry, to pious Uſes, and the Maintenance of the Clergy. Beſides, he thought Hooper miſtaken in his Suppoſition: He could not grant, that theſe Veſtments for Officiating, were brought into the Church by the Pope. For, ſays he, don't we read in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, that St. John the Apoſtle wore a gold Plate, or Miter? And does not Pontius in the Life of St. Cyprian acquaint us, that this Saint at his Martyrdom gave Part of his Epiſcopal Robes to his Deacons, and was executed in a Linnen Habit? Thus St. Chryſoſtome makes mention of the white Veſtments, in which the Clergy perform'd their Miniſtration: And here he puts Hooper in mind, that Perſons at their Baptiſm put on a white Habit.

“On the other ſide, granting theſe Diſtinctions were the Inventions of the See of Rome, he did not think the Contagion of Popery ſo malignant as to carry Infection to every thing it touch'd, and make it prove mortal to a good Man that made uſe on't. Hooper himſelf own'd that every thing in Religion was not to be condemn'd upon the Score of its being a human Conſtitution. For inſtance, to communicate in the Forenoon faſting, ſtands upon no higher Ground than Eccleſiaſtical, that is, human Authority, and yet he conceiv'd Hooper would not cenſure this Cuſtom. His Opinion was therefore, the antient Uſage ought to be continued for a time: That the preſſing unſeaſonable Alterations might obſtruct Advantages of a more ſignificant kind. That to prevent any weak Brothers being miſled by the continuance of the cuſtomary Habits, the People ought to be reminded of the Indifferency of theſe things, that they don't reach into the Subſtance of Religion, nor make part of the Eſſentials in Divine Worſhips.

“Hooper had objected in the third place, that the Particularity and Richneſs of this Religious Equipage, would be apt to draw the Eyes of the Congregation, to break their Attention, and turn to an Amuſement; whereas if the Habit was plain and unornamented, nothing of this would happen.

“To this Martyr replied, that things commonly ſeen, are ſeldom gaz'd at to any Diſorder: And if the People ſhould be affected to any Degree more than ordinary, 'tis to be hoped the Solemnity of the Habit, the Holy Pomp might prove ſerviceable to them, that it might awaken their Reſpect, and recollect their Thoughts for the Buſineſs they were about; and this ſeems to be one end of the Inſtitution of the Sacraments, that by ſenſible Signs the Mind might be wrought up to proper Meditations.

Hooper argued, that whatſoever is not of Faith is Sin; to diſentangle him from the Miſinterpretation of this Text, Martyr refers him to the Epiſtles of Timothy and Titus, where 'tis ſaid, that to the clean, all things are clean, and that every Creature of God is good.

Hooper urg'd in the laſt place, that we ought to have an expreſs Warrant from Scripture for every thing belonging to Religion. Martyr was of a different Sentiment, and believ'd, that provided the Subſtance was ſecur'd, and the General Rules obſerv'd, the Governors of the Church had a diſcretionary Latitude in leſſer Matters.

This is Peter Martyrs Reſolution upon the Queſtion. And Bucer in his Anſwer to Hooper is of the ſame Opinion: To give the Reader part of his Letter, he begins with lamenting the Riſe of the Controverſy, and wiſhes it may be ſpeedily taken up. He diſcovers his Inclination for the Removal of the cuſtomary Habits, and tells him that at Strasbourgh, Ulm, Augſbourg, and other Places in Germany where he had any Intereſt, he prevail'd that the Sacraments might not be adminiſtred with any ſuch Peculiarity. He complains of the Abuſe of theſe things in England, and that the Marks and Support of Antichriſtianiſm were ſcandalouſly common and apparent: To make good this Charge, he offers at ſeveral Inſtances. And here he begins with the Sacrilegious Invaſions of the Laity; That they ſeiz'd and plunder'd the beſt Preferments, gave two or three Benefices to their Stewards and Huntſmen, but with Reſervation of part of the Profits to themſelves: Thus they put ſuch Vicars upon the People; not thoſe who were beſt qualified, but ſuch as would engage upon the loweſt Terms, and afford the beſt Bargain. The Univerſities, as he goes on, which were to furniſh the Church with proper Guides, had no ſmall Number of Students either erroneous in their Belief, or licentious in their Practice: And as to the Service of the Church, 'twas perform'd in ſuch a cold, lame, and unintelligible manner, that the People were little better edified, than if the Office were ſaid in the Phenician or Indian Language. Neither Baptiſm nor Marriage were celebrated with that Gravity and Solemnity the Buſineſs required: That the People can hardly diſtinguiſh between the Lord's Supper and the Maſs, excepting that the Liturgy is in Engliſh. That paſtoral Duties are lamentably neglected, that there are no Catechetical Inſtructions, no private Admonitions, no publick Cenſures of Diſorder: The Diſcipline of the Church is ſo little put in ure, that the Spiritual Authority is in a manner diſregarded, and few Perſons will ſo much as own, that Chriſt gave his Miniſters the Power of binding and looſing. That People are promiſcuouſly admitted to the Privileges of Communion, without any Proof of being qualified either in Faith or Manners: That they appear empty before the Lord, and take little Care of the Poor at their Religious Aſſemblies: That the Churches are made Places for Commerce and Diverſion: And that the Audience are ſo far from obſerving that Plaineſs and Sobriety in Cloaths recommended by the Apoſtles, that the higheſt Solemnities of Religion cannot make them baulk their Vanity, nor come to the Lord's Table without Gold and Jewels, without Expence and Gaudineſs in Dreſſing. Alas! as he goes on, the meaning of the Church, the Communion of Saints, and the Kingdom of Chriſt is little underſtood: The want of Diſcipline is the Occaſion of this unhappy Ignorance: Thus the Fear of God, and the Notion of Religion makes a very faint Impreſſion; and hence it is, that Lying, Cheating, Theft, Perjury and Whoredom, are ſo much the Complaint of the Times.

Bucer's Letter to Hooper upon the ſame Subject.

Theſe Diſorders, he tells Hooper, are the main Properties, the Strength and Sinews of Antichriſt: Theſe therefore are the things which ought to be combated in the firſt place, and againſt which our Zeal ought to be principally employ'd.

As to the Diſtinction of Cloaths, he does not think their being formerly abus'd a ſufficient Reaſon not to uſe them, or that there is any Iniquity in the Shape or Colour of what we put on. He would gladly know, what Text of Scripture there is to prove, that the Devil, or ill Men, have ſuch a Power over God's Creatures, as to make them good for nothing, or unlawful.

'Tis certain, continues Bucer, that our Saviour has only preſcrib'd the Subſtance in Matters of Order, and the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, and that the Circumſtances are left to the Regulations of thoſe who preſide.

Thus for inſtance, we neither receive the Communion in the Evening, nor in a private Houſe, nor in a Poſture of Diſcumbency, nor yet in a Congregation of Men only. And who could juſtly condemn the Church, if all thoſe who came to receive the Lord's Supper ſhould appear in a white Habit as they formerly did at Baptiſm? To deny a Liberty of Practice within this Compaſs, will bring us upon one of theſe Concluſions; either that the Church has no Power to appoint any thing with reſpect to the Lord's Supper, without expreſs Command from our Saviour: Now this can't be affirmed without charging all Places of Chriſtendom with ſcandalous Prevarication. For what Churches are there that don't vary from the Inſtitution of the Lord's Supper in ſeveral Circumſtances? They are ſo far from having their Time, and Place, and Poſture commanded by our Saviour, that on the other ſide his Example is quite different from the general Practice: For our Lord inſtituted his Supper in the Evening, in a private Houſe, after the eating the Paſchal Lamb, in a Poſture different from that now receiv'd, neither were there any Women at the Solemnity. Another Abſurdity is, that the ſtanding clear of the Abuſe of God's Creatures, tho' receiv'd with never ſo much Purity of Intention, is impracticable upon theſe Principles. And laſtly, at this rate wicked Men may in a great meaſure deſtroy the Benefit of the Creation, and make thoſe things they have miſemploy'd a ſort of forbidden Fruit to others.

Theſe Fancies therefore ought to be diſcharg'd by good Men; neither is there any Fear the granting the Church a Liberty in theſe matters, ſhould give our Holy Miniſtrations a Tincture of Superſtition or Paganiſm, or revive the Ceremonial Law.

As to Religious Rites and Externals, the Deſign of them is to recommend the Service of God Almighty. Now we know Diſtinction and Richneſs of Habit in Civil Offices, are a Service to the Character. An extraordinary Appearance in theſe Caſes operates upon the Generality, ſtrikes their Mind thro' their Senſes, and awakens a Regard for the Magiſtracy. Now what ſhould hinder its having the ſame good effect upon Religion? As for the Texts of Scripture againſt human Tradition urg'd by Hooper, Bucer replies they don't reach the Caſe in hand: The Cenſure of theſe Traditions affects only thoſe who make them part of the Vitals of Religion, and prefer them to the Divine Commands. In this Letter, we ſee Bucer makes a Tragical complaint of the Licentiouſneſs and Diſorder of the Times. If 'tis enquir'd why the Biſhops did not Exert their Character, and apply the uſual Remedy? It may be Anſwer'd, they lay under the Diſcountenance of the State. The Cenſure of Excommunications had been diſus'd, ſince the beginning of this Reign: Whether there was any Command laid upon the Biſhops, to forbear the Exerciſe of their Juriſdiction, or that there was a Project on Foot for drawing the Cognizance of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes to the Secular Courts, or that the Publiſhing the Proceſs, under the King's Authority, weakn'd the Terror of the Sentence, is not eaſy to determine. However, 'tis certain this Solemn Part of Diſcipline was, as it were ſuſpended, or of little ſignificancy.

Latimer's Sermon.

Thus almoſt every thing grew out of Order, and Prophaneneſs and Immorality had an unlimitted Range. "This made Biſhop Latimer, "preſs for the Reſtitution of the Antient "Diſcipline in his Sermon before the King. "The Engliſh ſays he, are Infamous for "Whoredom, beyond any other Part of the "World. Beſides, they glory in their Shame, "and make a diverſion of being Wicked. To "check this outragious Diſorder, he Intreats "the King to reſtore the Diſcipline of Chriſt, "and return the Church the Power of Ex"communication. That excluding Offenders, "from the Benefit of Communion, is our Sa"viours Appointment: Now no Body is able "to make a better Proviſion, than Infinite "Wiſdom: And that the Exerciſe of Diſci"pline was the likelieſt way to ſtop the Pro"greſs of Vice, and avert the Judgments of "Heaven.

But if the Caſe was thus, and the Regale lay too hard upon the Church, the Queſtion is, whether it had not been more Adviſeable for the Biſhops to have reſum'd their Spiritual Authority, acted upon our Saviours Commiſſion, and ventur'd the Diſpleaſure of the State.

As for Bucer, and Martyr's Letters, they had not that Effect upon Hooper, which might reaſonably have been expected. He ſtill continued under his former Prejudices, and no Arguments could reach him; and by Martyr's cautioning him againſt unſeaſonable, and cenſorious Declamations, we may Imagine he had play'd his Satyr pretty freely againſt the Cuſtoms of the Church. And from his Conduct in this Diſpute, we may in ſome Meaſure Collect the Strength of his Prepoſſeſſion, and the Condition of his Judgment. For this Incompliance and Liberty in the Pulpit, he was firſt Silenc'd, and Confin'd to his Houſe by the Council. (m)

(m) Council Book.

Hooper thought this Uſage ſomewhat ſevere: To miſs his Promotion, 'tis likely was no diſappointment, but to be Puniſh'd becauſe he would not be a Biſhop, to be perſecuted about Cloaths, and loſe his Liberty for not being in the Faſhion, was poſſibly more than he underſtood. He ventur'd therefore to take no notice of the Order of Council, and Printed a Confeſſion of his Faith. He was afterwards committed to the Cuſtody of Archbiſhop Cranmer, who tried to bring him off from his Singularities, but without Effect. The Archbiſhop complain'd in a Letter to the Council, that Hooper was not contented with bare Diſconformity to the Cuſtomary Practice, but offer'd to Preſcribe to the Publick on this Head. Upon this Cranmer was order'd to ſend him to the Fleet, which was done accordingly. (n)

Auguſt 8. An. Dom. 1550.

A Publick diſputation at Cambridge.

In the beginning of Auguſt this Year, there was a publick Diſputation at Cambridge, where the following Queſtions were defended by Bucer.

Firſt, The Canonical Books of Scripture are abundantly ſufficient to Inſtruct the Regenerate in every thing neceſſary to Salvation.

Secondly, There is no Part of the Church Militant, exempt from a Poſſibility in Erring, both in Faith and Manners.

All good Works which Men ſeem to Perform, before Juſtification, are really Sins, and Merit the Divine Diſpleaſure, but after we are Juſtified, good Actions are neceſſarily done by us. (o)

(o) Bucer Script Anglic.

At the entring upon the Diſputation, Bucer declares his Opinion, of what Books ought to be receiv'd as Inſpir'd Writings: And here he ſettles the Canon agreeably to the Articles of the Church of England. And for this he has the Suffrage of Antiquity. For the Canonical Books mention'd by Euſebius, (p) Gregory Nazianzen, Amphilochius, Athanaſius, Epiphanius, the Council of Laodicea, and John Damaſcen, to which we may add St. Jerom, and Ruffinus, go no farther than thoſe Two and Twenty receiv'd by the Jews. And thus the Books of Maccabees, the Wiſdom of Solomon, Eccleſiaſticus, Judeth, Tobit, &c. are ſtruck out of the Canon: And tho' they were allow'd to be Read in the Church, yet their Authority was not to be vouch'd, for eſtabliſhing any Point of Doctrine. (q)

(p) Hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 4. c. 25.

(q) Athanaſ. in Synopſ. & Epiſt. de Feſtis. Epiphan. de Ponder. & Menſur. Hieron. præf. in Proverb. Solom. & Prolog. Galeat. Ruffin. Expoſ. Fid. Damaſcen. de Orthod. Fid. lib. 4. c. 8.

But notwithſtanding his Orthodoxy, in ſetling the Canon, he ſeems ſomewhat Perplex'd about other matters: He makes the Privilege of ſufficient Inſtruction, peculiar to the Regenerate: By the Regenerate he means the Predeſtinate, and affirms they cannot Sin finally, ſo as not to recover. He maintains inward Light, and ſupernatural Direction, neceſſary to Judge between the Canon and the Apocrypha. Now this Aſſertion, to ſpeak ſoftly, ſeems extremely Myſterious. For if we muſt have a new Revelation to underſtand the old one, to what purpoſe were the Scriptures Written, and why is the Church of Rome blam'd for locking them up in unknown Language? What ſignifies the Tranſlation of the Bible into the Mother Tongue, if we can't come at the meaning, without extraordinary Illumination? Are thoſe Books which were Written for general Uſe, which contain matter of the greateſt Concern, leſs Intelligible than Human Compoſitions? Or can't God who made the Underſtanding, proportion his Inſtructions to it? Farther; If we ſet aſide the Authority of the Church, and the concurrent Teſtimony of Succeſſive Ages, what Motives of Credibility can we urge to a Deiſt, to prove the Scripture the Word of God? What Poſſibility of converting Infidels is there left upon theſe Grounds? To ſay we are Inſpir'd with a certainty of what we Deliver, will look like Enthuſiaſm, unleſs we can make good our Pretenſions by Miracles, as the Apoſtles did.

Bucer Script. Anglic. p. 718. 719. 732. 737.

Id. p. 715.

Upon the Second Queſtion he Infers the Church not Infallible, becauſe ſhe is not Impeccable, as if Sin proceeded more from want of Light in the Underſtanding, than Predominancy of Appetite and wrong Byaſs upon the Will; or that 'twas impoſſible to ſee an important Truth, without being under a neceſſity of Living up to it. He endeavors to prove his Third Queſtion; that whatever is done before Juſtification, tho' with all the advantage of Intention, and the faireſt Appearance Imaginable, is plainly Sinful. His Medium is this; before Juſtification no Man can lament his Failings and Miſperformance out of a Principle of Faith: But the Apoſtle tells us, whatſoever is not of Faith is Sin. And thus by plainly miſtaking the Apoſtles Senſe, he builds upon the Sand, and falls into no ordinary Error. Of the Miſconſtruction of this Text, I have had occaſion to take notice already: To add ſomething farther to what has been already obſerv'd. Thoſe of Bucer's Opinion, without Queſtion, muſt grant a Man can't be juſtified, before he believes the Doctrine of Chriſtianity; but that every Action done under ſuch a State of Ignorance, and defective Perſwaſion, is not Sinful, ſeems plain, from the Tenth Chapter of the Acts of the Apoſtles. Cornelius, before St. Peter was ſent to him, was but at the moſt a Jewiſh Proſelyte. Notwithſtanding this diſadvantage, his Charity and Devotion recommended him to God Almighty. Thus an Angel is ſent to him to applaud his Practice, and acquaint him, that his Prayers and Alms were come up for a Memorial before God. Thus we ſee, Cornelius is evidently commended for his Piety, and Benevolent Temper, before he could have any thing of Faith in Bucer's Notion. He is Honour'd with a Meſſage from Heaven, and an Apoſtle order'd to make him a Viſit, as a reward of his preſent Attainments. Now if Cornelius had been in a State of Enmity with God Almighty, and never done any thing but what was provoking, which according to Bucer, is the condition of a Man unjuſtified; we have no reaſon to believe he would have been thus commended in the Inſpired Writings. Beſides; if this Point wanted farther Confirmation, St. Peter in the beginning of his Diſcourſe to this Centurion, puts it beyond all Queſtion. The Words are theſe. (r) St. Peter open'd his Mouth, and ſaid of a Truth, I perceive, that God is no reſpecter of Perſons: But in every Nation, he that Fears him, and Works Righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. Thus we ſee the Apoſtle makes no difficulty to declare Cornelius's Alms and Prayers, Works of Righteouſneſs. And that he was acceptable to God Almighty upon this Score: That the Obſervance of theſe Branches of natural Religion, qualified him for farther Bleſſings, procur'd his Inſtruction from St. Peter, and brought him within the Pale of the Church.

Rom. 14.

(r) Acts c. 10. v. 34. 35.

Bucer was Oppos'd by Segwick, Pern, and Young. And here by going upon theſe Principles, he is very much Embarras'd in the Diſpute, lies unguarded, and miſcarries not ſeldom in his Defence. To Tranſlate the Diſputation at length, would be Foreign to this Work: But what I have already related, may ſhew the Reader his manner in arguing.

Bucer's Animadverſions upon the Engliſh Common-Prayer.

Towards the latter end of this Year, Bucer wrote Animadverſions upon the Engliſh Common-Prayer-Book, which I ſhall mention now, that the Hiſtory of this learned Man may lie more together. Archbiſhop Cranmer it ſeems had ſent to Bucer, to deſire his Opinion upon this Book: And whether ſome things did not require a farther Explanation. Bucer to qualify himſelf for a Reſolution of this Caſe, had gotten the Common-Prayer-Book tranſlated into Latin, by one Aleſs a Scotchman. And writing his Cenſure, by way of Letter to the Archbiſhop, he makes this remarkable Confeſſion in the beginning: That upon his Peruſal of the Service Book, he thank'd God Almighty for giving the Engliſh Grace to reform their Ceremonies to that degree of Purity; and that he found nothing in them but what was either taken out of the Word of God, or at leaſt not contrary to it, provided it was fairly interpreted. Now if things were in this commendable Condition, to what purpoſe did Bucer take ſuch Pains, as we ſhall ſee he has done, to bring on an alteration? Was not this Divine ſenſible, that the refining upon what is ſettled, and putting an Eſtabliſhment to a new Teſt, is not to be undertaken without apparent Neceſſity? Inconſtancy of Meaſures, new Draughts, and retouching Things, ſuppos'd to be Finiſh'd, are by no means ſerviceable to the Governors either of Church or State. The People are apt to take Exceptions at ſuch new Appearances: They are apt to Arraign the publick Wiſdom, and queſtion the Conduct of their Directors upon this Score. It has been therefore accounted Prudential, rather to let little defects paſs, than bring them to a rectified Condition, for fear there ſhould be more loſt in the Authority of the Government, then gain'd in the Amendment.

His Conceſſions.

To proceed to Bucer's Animadverſions, which are divided into Eight and Twenty Chapters.

CHAP. I.

His Objections.

In his firſt Chapter he allows of the diſpoſition of the Pſalms and Leſſons, and the Doctrine of the Collects, and pronounces the management of this matter agreeable to the Word of God, and the uſage of the Antient Church: But then he is diſſatisfied at the Choirs being ſo remote from the reſt of the Church, and affirms the performing the Service only in that Place, an Antichriſtian Practice. Why ſo? Becauſe it ſuppoſes the Clergy ſtand in a nearer Relation to God, than the Laity. And what harm is there in this Suppoſition? Don't thoſe who repreſent a Prince, attend his Service, Publiſh his Laws, and Act by his Authority, ſtand cloſer related than other Subjects? And to come to the Caſe in Hand, does not Moſes upbraid Corah, and the reſt of the Tribe of Levi, for miſbehaving themſelves under their Privilege; does he not tell them God had ſeparated them from the Congregation, and brought them near to himſelf? And are not particular Powers given by our Saviour to the Evangelical Prieſthood? Does not Clemens Romanus ſay, that the Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, anſwer to the diſtinctions of the High Prieſt, the Second Order, and the Levites under the Jewiſh Law? (s) His Obſervation upon the Figure of the Churches, in the Primitive Times; and that they were almoſt round, is a miſtake. For they were generally Built upon a reſemblance of the Jewiſh Tabernacle and Temple, which anſwer'd to the Modern Form.

(s) Epiſt. ad Corinth.

In his Second Chapter, he diſcourſes upon the officiating Habits. And here he continues ſo far in his former Opinion, as to declare them not abſolutely ſinful: However, he would willingly have them Reform'd to the Apoſtolick plainneſs: But here he might have conſider'd the diſparity, between the firſt Age of Chriſtianity, and later Centuries. In the Apoſtles Times the Church was Poor, and could not go to the expence of Ornament, and rich Diſtinctions.

Beſides; the Apoſtles could work Miracles, and therefore needed no advantage from Figure to ſupport their Character. To cure Diſeaſes, and raiſe the Dead, was a higher Recommendation, than if they had Officiated in Gold and Purple, and appear'd in the Splendor of the Jewiſh High Prieſt: But ſince the Gifts of Miracles are recalled, ſome Marks of Diſtinction are no leſs neceſſary in the Eccleſiaſtical, then in the Civil Government. Another Argument why he would have the Habit for Holy Miniſtrations alter'd is, becauſe 'tis much the ſame, uſed with that in the Church of Rome, which he generally Salutes by the Name of Antichriſt; ſtanding off from all Conformity with the Roman Catholicks, is a thing he commonly Inſiſts on, but whether this is a good Reaſon or not, I ſhall Examine afterwards.

See Bucer's Letter to Hooper.

In his Third Chapter, ſpeaking of the Holy Euchariſt, he has nothing to eccept againſt the Figure of the Conſecrated Bread, and concludes it indifferent, whether 'tis round or otherwiſe: But then where 'tis ſaid, that no Body ought to ſuppoſe, that there is leſs to be receiv'd in Part, than the whole, but in each of them, the whole Body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: This he thinks may be miſinterpreted by ignorant People, as if the Body of Chriſt was locally Circumſcrib'd within the Dimenſions of the Bread. This ſeems an unneceſſary Exception: The Deſign of the Rubrick, is rather to prevent ſuch a Conſtruction.

He Objects farther againſt the Rubrick, for giving thoſe whoſe Courſe 'tis to offer, towards the Charge of a Communion, and to Receive; the liberty of ſometimes Subſtituting another. This Latitude he conceives may make the Wealthy neglect the receiving the Holy Euchariſt themſelves, and put them upon hiring ſome poor People to appear in their Place: This he thinks, differs little from purchaſing of Maſſes, excepting in the cheapneſs of the Bargain. But ſince this Indulgence was granted, to keep up frequent Communions, and that the Prieſt might have always ſome Perſons to Communicate with him; for this Reaſon, I ſay, Bucer might have given his Animadverſions a more Charitable turn.

He Inſiſts upon having this Sentence, that every one ſhould Communicate once in the Year at the leaſt, expung'd in the Rubrick, becauſe it ſeems to Imply a Liberty of coming no oftner.

He Declaims in his Fourth Chapter very Piouſly, againſt the Prophaning of Churches. The neglect of Religion upon Holy-days, and the Intemperate Abuſe of thoſe Solemn Anniverſaries. He conceives the Reaſon aſſign'd by the Bubrick for the Prieſt, putting the Conſecrated Bread into the Communicants Mouth, and not into their Hands, Inſufficient. He Fancies this Cuſtom took its Riſe from a ſuperſtitious Opinion, that the Laity, not having their Hands Bleſs'd, and Anointed like the Prieſt, were not Holy enough to touch the Conſecrated Elements. Beſides, he rightly Obſerves, 'tis but comparatively a modern Uſage, and that our Bleſſed Saviour gave the Holy Symbols into the Apoſtles Hands. But then, another Diſcourſe of Bucer's already related, (t) ſeems to overthrow his Reaſoning upon this Head. For there he makes no ſcruple to affirm, that our Saviour Preſcrib'd no farther than the Subſtance in theſe things, and left the Circumſtances to the Churches Regulation. And that the Church has all along Practis'd upon this Latitude, he gives ſeveral Inſtances, with Reſpect to the Lord's Supper.

In his Fourth Chapter, he finds fault with the Rubrick, for ordering the Miniſter that is the Deacon; to take ſo much Bread and Wine, as ſhall ſuffice for the Perſons appointed to receive the Holy Communion. This Appointment he conceives gives occaſion to ſuperſtitious Fancies, and makes ſome People Imagine it a piacular Offence, to put the Conſecrated Elements to common Uſe: As if, ſays he, after the Communion was over, there was ſomething of Divinity, or at leaſt ſome peculiar Holineſs in the Bread and Wine. Now tho' Juſtin Martyr, Iræneus, Tertullian, and the reſt of the Fathers, ſpeak of the Conſecrated Elements in the higheſt Language of Veneration, and ſeem to have a particular Regard for them, even after the ſolemnity of Receiving, yet Bucer is of a different Sentiment, and finds fault with the Remainders being Eaten and Drunk by none but the Communicants: Nay he ſays plainly, that after the Act of Communicating, the Conſecrated Elements have no more relative Holineſs in them, than common Bread and Wine.

In the Fifth Chapter, he Objects againſt the cuſtomary Geſtures us'd at the publick Devotions, ſuch as Kneeling, Croſſing, holding up their Hands, knocking upon their Breaſts; Tho' by the way, theſe Geſtures are left at diſcretion by the Rubrick, and may be either uſed or let alone, as every Body thought fit. But what defenſible Exceptions can be made againſt theſe Poſtures? To go thro' the particulars, Daniel, and St. Paul Kneel'd at their Devotions; making the Croſs upon every occaſion, more remarkable than ordinary, was the general Practice of the Church in Tertullian's Time. (u) And the Publican Mention'd by our Saviour, who ſmote upon his Breaſt, went Home juſtified, rather than the Phariſee, who found fault with him. But theſe Geſtures, ſays Bucer, are made uſe of in the Maſs, and that 'tis to be fear'd the continuance of them, Confirms ſome People in the good Opinion of that Worſhip.

How can this be reaſonably inferr'd, when the known Doctrines, and Uſages of the Church, are ſo very different?

In his Sixth Chapter, he is not ſatisfied with Two Communions upon Chriſtmaſs Day. If 'tis ſaid Servants, have a better opportunity of receiving the Holy Euchariſt by this Order, Bucer, thinks this Reaſon has not Weight enough in it: That upon this Ground, the ſame direction ſhould reach to every Holyday, and Sunday, for it ſeems, he is not willing to allow our Saviour's Nativity any Preference, to other Days of leſſer Solemnity.

Towards the end of his Remarks, finding a double Communion order'd at Eaſter, he recollects himſelf, and recalls his Cenſure.

Cap. 7.

He allows the reading of the Homilies, where there are none qualified to make Sermons; In other Caſes he prefers Preaching: He complains the Homilies don't take in ſubjects enough, and would have new ones Compos'd upon the following Heads. Firſt, concerning the true Communion with Chriſt. Secondly, Touching the dedicating Places and Times, to the Honour of God Almighty. Thirdly, For frequent coming to Church, and communicating in the Prayers, Hymns, and Sacraments. Fourthly, Touching liberal Diſtributions of Charity to the Poor. Fifthly, Of the worthy receiving the Sacraments, Sixthly, Concerning ning the Admonition and Correction of private and open Offenders. Seventhly, Concerning barring thoſe the privilege of Communion, who are guilty of notorious and Scandalous Behavior. Eighthly, Of the reconciling thoſe who have ſubmitted to the full length of their Penance. Ninthly, Of reckoning thoſe no better than Heathens and Publicans, who Contemn the Diſcipline of the Church. Tenthly, Touching making proper Proviſion for the Indigent, purſuant to the direction of Holy Scripture. Eleventhly, Of the incouraging Schools, and ſubſiſting poor Children for a learned Education, who diſcover a promiſing Genius. Twelfthly, of Marriage, and that this relation ought to be Ingag'd in with none, but Perſons of Probity and Religion. Thirteenthly, Of Education, proper for the Children of Chriſtians. Fourteenly, Of Honeſt Employment, and avoiding Idleneſs, Fifteenly, Of Uſury. Sixteenly, Touching Fraud, and Circumventing our Neighbor. Seventeenthly, Of all ſort of Rapine, and unjuſt Seizure of Property. Eighteenthly, Concerning Epicuriſm in Eating, and expenſive Vanity in Cloaths.

His Exceptions, againſt recommending the Dead to the Mercy of God, have been conſider'd already. His other Objection againſt theſe Words in the Prayer of Conſecration, Cap. 9. And with thy Holy Spirit and Word, vouchſafe to Bleſs and Sanctify theſe thy Gifts and Creatures of Bread and Wine, that they may be unto us the Body and Blood of thy moſt dearly Beloved Son Jeſus Chriſt: This Objection has been Obviated elſewhere.

In the Third Preface of the Communion Office, he would have this Sentence alter'd, And command theſe our Prayers and Supplications, by the Miniſtry of thy Holy Angels, to be brought up into thy Holy Tabernacle, before the Sight of thy Divine Majeſty. His firſt Reaſon is, becauſe this Form of Prayer is not deliver'd in Holy Scripture. But then he muſt Condemn a great Part of the Communion Office, which notwithſtanding its being unmention'd in Scripture, he is willing to allow.

In the next Place, he ſuppoſes, that this Form of Prayer Extant in the Antient Greek and Latin Liturgies, (w) was uſed with Reference to the Oblations, made by the Faithful, and plac'd upon the Lord's Table: But now, ſays he, there are no ſuch Gifts and Oblations. To this it may be replied, that the Bread and Wine, are Offer'd to God the Father, as the giver of ſuch Bleſſings, and as a Commemorative Sacrifice, of the Paſſion of our Saviour, and that the Preceding Words, Accept this our bounden Duty and Service, may refer to this Oblation.

Bucer urges in the laſt Place, that the beſeeching God Almighty to Command his Holy Angels, to preſent our Prayers to his Divine Majeſty, ſeems borrow'd from the Apocryphal Book of Tobit. (Tobit 12.) That our Saviour Commands us to Addreſs God the Father in his Name; and elſewhere in Scripture, he is ſaid to be our Prieſt and Mediator. Thus the Angel that appear'd to Cornelius, (Acts 10.) did not tell him, that either himſelſ, or any other Angel, offer'd his Prayers and Alms to God Almighty.

Notwithſtanding this Reaſoning, 'tis certain that Angels have Part of the Adminiſtration of our Saviour's Kingdom Aſſign'd them; and that they are concern'd in the Preſidency, and Guardianſhip of the Faithful. (x) Thus we are Taught by the Author to the Hebrews, that they are all Miniſtring Spirits, ſent forth to Miniſter for them, who ſhall be Heirs of Salvation. And may it not be part of their Imployment, to Inſpect the Behaviour, to report the Devotions, and intercede in behalf of their Charge? If 'tis ſaid that God Almighty is Omnipreſent, and needs no Information; to this it may be Anſwer'd, he is Omnipotent too, and therefore has no need of the Miniſtry of Angels to aſſiſt him in his Government, and protect his Church, and yet the Scripture acquaints us he is Pleas'd to make uſe of them for this laſt purpoſe. 'Tis hard for us to pronounce upon the Extent of an Angels Commiſſion, or to what charitable Offices their own Benevolence may carry them. 'Tis true St. Paul mentions one Mediator between God and Man, the Man Chriſt Jeſus. (y) But then by the next Verſe 'tis plain, he means a Mediator of Redemption, and not a Mediator of Interceſſion, ſo far as to exclude all others. For every one who Solicits his Neighbors Happineſs, and recommends him to God in his Devotions, may be ſaid to be a Mediator in a lower Senſe. Now ſuch Inſtances of Charity are not only Lawful; but the Duty of one Chriſtian towards another. And that an Angel is barr'd the liberty of ſuch friendly Applications, is more than Bucer has prov'd.

Cap. 9. In the Sacrament of Baptiſm, he would have but few Ceremonies made uſe of, and takes the Freedom to tax the cuſtomary Rites, with indulging the humour of the Vulgar too far; and that theſe things nouriſh Superſtition, and approach too near the Levity of a Theatre. From this general Cenſure, which ſeems to bear hard upon what was the Antient Practice in Tertullian's Time, (Tertull. de Coron. Milit. Cap. 10.) he goes on to particulars. Here in the firſt Place he would have the white Habit and Chriſm laid aſide. He grants both theſe Rites have great Antiquity to Plead, but ſince the religious Ardor of the firſt Ages is gone off, theſe Ceremonies which were Signs of it, ought not to be continued. But here one would have thought he might have concluded the other way: That ſince theſe Ceremonies were us'd to honour and explain the Sacrament, they ſhould ſtill have been continued, to retrieve the ſame Regard, and make the deeper Impreſſion.

Cap. 11. In the firſt Prayer at publick Baptiſm, he would have this Sentence expung'd: Jeſus Chriſt in the River Jordan, did Sanctify Water to the Myſtical waſhing away of Sin. He affirms the Scripture does not Teach us thus far; and that this Form is productive of Superſtition, and ſeems to imply the Baptiſm of Chriſt had impreſs'd a ſanctifying Virtue on the Element of Water. And both here, and in other Places he ſeems ſo extravagantly afraid of bordering upon Magick, that ſome Times one would almoſt think him under the Power of it.

He grants the ſign of the Croſs a very Antient Uſage, and thinks the Continuance of it may be ſerviceable, provided 'tis rightly underſtood, and recover'd from modern Abuſe. But then when the Child is Sign'd with the Croſs, he does not approve the Words then uſed, ſhould be ſpoken to him, becauſe he can't underſtand them. But may not the ſame reaſon be alledg'd againſt the Promiſe made by the Godfathers in the Child's Name, becauſe he is in no Capacity of knowing the meaning, or giving his conſent to the Stipulation? (Cap. 12.) Beſides, I don't find Bucer diſlikes theſe Words at Infant Baptiſm, I Baptize Thee, &c. Tho' here is a direct Application to the Child himſelf. Afterwards he is ſo ſo full of Scruples, that inſtead of the coming to thy Holy Baptiſm, he would have it put, being brought to thy Holy Baptiſm.

He confeſſes the exorciſing of Perſons baptiz'd, is a Cuſtom of the higheſt Antiquity, but then he is of Opinion, that no Perſon ought to conjure evil Spirits, but thoſe who have a miraculous Power to diſpoſſeſs them: And even here he conceives their Commiſſion did not extend to exorciſe any other Perſons but thoſe who were Dæmoniacks. Now he does not think all Perſons unbaptiz'd in this unhappy Condition; if all People before their Admiſſion into the Church, were thus in the Power of the Devil, he concludes the Miracles of our Saviour and his Apoſtles in caſting out evil Spirits, will fall under a Conſtruction of Diſadvantage. But the Neceſſity of this Inference is more than I can diſcover; for without Queſtion there are Degrees of Juriſdiction and Miſchief in theſe Caſes: Evil Spirits may be ſuffer'd to make a malignant Impreſſion, without having the Liberty of an abſolute Conqueſt, and commanding the Motions of Mind and Body.

Cap 13.

From hence he proceeds to rally the old Objection, and diſapproves of the Godfathers and Godmothers Undertaking for the Child, and anſwering the Queſtions put to him. Inſtead of this he would have them interrogated, whether they would do their Endeavour to make the Child learn his Catechiſm, to renounce the Devil, and profeſs his Belief in the Creed.

As to Confirmation, he ſeems to think the Rubrick ſomewhat ſhort in the Direction, and that the ſaying the Articles of the Faith in the vulgar Tongue, the Lords Prayer, and the Ten Commandments and the reſt of the Catechiſm, are not ſufficient Qualifications. Not ſufficient, unleſs the Children are grown up to ſome Degree of Underſtanding in theſe Principles: And before they are confirm'd he would likewiſe have them diſcover a religious Inclination, ſay their Prayers without Menaces or prompting, ſhew themſelves dutiful to their Parents, reſpectful to their Betters, and compaſſionate to the unfortunate: And that thoſe Children who were backward in theſe Improvements, ſhould be refuſed Confirmation, and ſhamed to an Emulation of ſuch as are better diſpoſed.

Cap. 17.

Cap. 21.

He conceives the intermitting Catechiſing for Six Weeks together, too long an Interval, and would have it repeated every Holy Day.

Anointing the Sick, tho' 'tis left at the Patients Liberty, won't paſs Bucers Teſt, but this Point has been ſpoken to already.

At the churching of Women, he excepts againſt offering the Chriſome for his Reaſon abovemention'd.

1 Tim. 5.

In the Commination, he ſuggeſts the changing the Order of the Curſes, and would have them ſtand as they are placed in the Decalogue. He would likewiſe have the Clergy rebuke thoſe publickly who have been publickly ſcandalous, that others alſo may fear; that thoſe who are under Pennance ſhould be oblig'd to Abſtinence and Self Denial; to be more frequent in the Exerciſes of Religion, and exceed the uſual Proportion in charitable Diſtributions: That no Perſons ſhould be readmitted to Communion without good Proof of their Repentance, and ſtrong Applications for that Privilege: And here he very piouſly exhorts the Clergy to manage the Keys with Reſolution, and not to be govern'd by any Regards of Intereſt or Fear. And in the cloſe of the Chapter laments the Calamities of Germany occaſion'd by the Neglect of Diſcipline.

Cap. 26.

In the next Chapter, which is the laſt I have occaſion to mention, he moves for the retrenching the Holy Days, and diſapproves of ringing the Bells, unleſs upon publick or religious Accounts. (z)

Peter Martyr concurr'd with Bucer in his Animadverſions upon the Common-Prayer-Book, as appears by his Letter to him upon that Subject. (a)

However, from what has been obſerv'd the Reader may perceive Bucer was ſomewhat overcharg'd with ſcruples, and carried his Cenſure too far. Neither are his Remarks at all reconcileable with his Conceſſions in the beginning of his Diſcourſe.

And amongſt other Things his ſetting aſide Antiquity with ſo much Eaſe, is particularly remarkable. There is a great Deference without doubt due to the Authority of the firſt Centuries. 'Twas then the Apoſtolical Traditions were freſh, Miracles were frequent, and the Church under the Conduct of a diſtinguiſhing Illumination. Then ſecular Views and Projects of Ambition were foreign to Inclination. Under ſuch Opportunities and Qualifications what Room is there for Suſpicion of Ignorance or foul Dealing?

To reject the Uſages of the Antient Church, becauſe we don't meet with them in Scripture, is no good Logick. 'Tis plainly not the Deſign of the New Teſtament to furniſh Liturgies and Rituals. The Converts to St. Peter's Sermon continued ſtedfaſtly in breaking of Bread, that is adminiſtring the Holy Euchariſt, and in Prayers. But what the Prayers were at this Solemnity is no where deliver'd in Scripture. Where the extraordinary Effuſions of the Holy Ghoſt were not ſupplied, Things of this Nature were left to the Diſcretion of the Spiritual Directors; who were to govern themſelves by St. Paul's General Rule, let all Things be done decently and in Order.

Acts 2. v. 42.

1 Cor. 14.

'Tis true, if the religious Cuſtoms of Antiquity were plainly inconſiſtent with the Doctrine of the inſpired Writings, we ought to ſtand off from them: But in other Caſes our Saviours Saying is applicable to the preſent purpoſe, he that is not againſt us, is for us. And where the Governors of the Church are under no Reſtraint as to Ceremonies and Compoſitions, what ſhould hinder them from following their Judgments, and directing as they think fit? For where there is no Law there can be no Tranſgreſſion. What ſhould hinder them in this Caſe from inlarging the Circumſtances of Worſhip? From aſſiſting the Memory, raiſing the Affections, and explaining the Myſteries, with additional Ceremonies and Devotions?

His Objection againſt Primitive Uſages, becauſe they have been overvalued and miſapplied by the Church of Rome, goes upon a miſtaken Ground. For granting, the Allegations hold good, there is no Conſequence in the Reaſoning. To argue from the Abuſe againſt the Uſe of Things, is the way to take our Bibles from us: For what Book has been more abus'd than the inſpir'd Text? By this Topick almoſt every thing in Religion and Nature muſt be contra-band, and prohibited. Bucer was formerly ſenſible of this Fallacy: He ſaw the danger of diſputing at this rate, and and determines againſt it. * To quit Antiquity in any Cuſtom, becauſe 'tis continued in the Church of Rome, has neither Reaſon nor Charity in it. It is a peeviſh Principle, and helps to keep up a Spirit of Diviſion. We ought rather to lament the Breaches in the Church, than make them wider. All reproachful Language, humourſome Diſtance, and unneceſſary Squabbles, ſerve only to exaſperate one Part of Chriſtendom againſt another, and make our common Religion the Jeſt of Infidels and Atheiſts. But notwithſtanding theſe Abatements, I may ſeem to have made him, where the Subject furniſh'd matter, and the Argument would drive, Bucer could work the point, and do Juſtice to the Cauſe, with Advantage enough.

Bucers Book concerning the Kingdom of Chriſt.

About this Time he wrote a Book, entitled, concerning the Kingdom of Chriſt, and dedicated it to the King. To bring Things to the Condition deſired, he propoſes the ſending a conſiderable Number of Preachers to all Parts of the Kingdom, and that People ſhould be recover'd from Superſtition by Perſwaſion rather than Rigour. That the Univerſities ought to be Seminaries for this purpoſe, and that thoſe Fellows of Colleges, who either oppoſe the right Belief, or ſpend their Time inſignificantly, ſhould be turn'd out. He is afterwards more particular in his Scheme for the retrieving of Religion, and propoſes ſeveral Laws to the King's Conſideration. (b)

Firſt, he would have Parents oblig'd to inſtruct their Children in the Principles of Religion, and lie under a Civil Penalty in Caſe they miſguide their Conſcience, ſet them an Example of Licentiouſneſs, or ſuffer them to be corrupted by other People.

His Second Law, as he calls it, relates to the ſtrict Obſervance of Holy Days. He is of Opinion that theſe Feſtivals ſhould be wholly ſpent in Religious Exerciſes without any Allowance for Recreation.

Thirdly, he ſollicits the King for a Law, that Churches may not be prophan'd with ſecular Buſineſs, nor made Places for Walking and Diverſion.

His Fourth Law points to Methods for the due Exerciſe of the Paſtoral Function: And here he adviſes the Biſhops to apply themſelves wholly to the Buſineſs of their Character, and not liv'd embarraſs'd with Secular Employment: He would have a proper Form of Doctrine and Diſcipline offer'd to them, and that they ſhould take an Oath to govern accordingly: He would not have them manage altogether at Diſcretion, but take in the Advice of their Prieſts. Upon the Progreſs of his Diſcourſe, he recollects and relaxes a little, and believes that Biſhops acting in the Civil Adminiſtration may not only be lawful, but ſerviceable to Religion. But then when they are employ'd in Princes Courts and Buſineſs of the State, he adviſes the conſtituting a Co-adjutor, to manage their Authority and ſupply their Abſence.

He would have the Biſhops viſit their Dioceſs every year, and oftner upon any particular Emergency. And that the Biſhop may be the better appriz'd of any Diſorder, he adviſes the ſetting Suffragans over every Twenty Pariſhes, or thereabouts: And if any thing happens too hard for them within their Diviſion, they ſhould apply to their Dioceſan for a Remedy. He adviſes the Meeting of Provincial Synods twice a Year, and would have the King ſend ſome Secular Perſons to repreſent his Majeſty, to preſide with the Metropolitan, and ſecure good Order in their Proceedings.

His Fifth Law ſuggeſts the preſerving the Revenues of the Church, diſpoſing of it to Perſons duly qualified, and preventing Simony.

He precautions the King ſtrongly againſt Sacrilege.

And here he charges the Pope with plain Sacrilege, for exacting firſt Fruits and Tenths of the Biſhops and Clergy: And puts the King in mind that nothing can be more remote from Piety, than to imitate the Court of Rome in this particular. He grants Church Lands ought to pay Taxes, no leſs than the Eſtates of the Laity, and for this he quotes the Juſtinian and Theodoſian Codes: And adds that the Clergy were only excus'd from the Burthen of mean Offices, from quartering Soldiers, or entertaining Perſons belonging to the Court. From hence he proceeds to take notice what large Penſions were paid out of the Exchecquer for the Support of the Clergy, and the Poor.

That thoſe Religious Emperors always accounted the Revenues of the Church ſacred and unalienable. That they would never ſo much as exchange them with the Crown Lands, unleſs the Church had ſomething better, or at leaſt equal, in Value. And for this he cites a Law of Juſtinian; and another of Valentinian and Marcian, to the ſame purpoſe. (c)

From theſe Authorities he proceeds to take the Freedom to adviſe the King to drop the demanding of Firſt Fruits and Tenths: And that unleſs his Majeſty waves this Exaction, he can't avoid the Imputation of Sacrilege. He deſires him therefore not to uſe the Church more hardly than the reſt of his Subjects: Nor charge thoſe Eſtates which are ſettled for the Service of God, the Incouragement of Learning, and the Maintenance of the Poor, with heavier Taxes than are requir'd from other People: He ſhould he ſorry to find his Majeſty ſhew leſs Regard to the Intereſt of Religion than his Royal Progenitors. Theſe Princes, ſays he, tho' under the Conduct of a leſs Orthodox Perſwaſion, founded Schools and Hoſpitals. And notwithſtanding the Remarkableneſs of their Bounty, wanted no Fund to keep up the Grandeur of their Court, and furniſh them for Succeſs in the Field. And that unleſs his Majeſty governs by theſe Meaſures, he can neither juſtifie his Conduct to God nor Man. And here he cries out againſt the Sacrilege of charging Biſhopricks or Benefices with Penſions to Secular Men, who neither officiate in the Church, nor are really indigent.

Church Lands not to be exchang'd without an equal Value return'd.

He tells the King plainly, that exchanging of Church Lands ought by no means to be allow'd, unleſs any Perſon has a Mind to give the Church the beſt of the Bargain, or at leaſt an undiſputed Equivalent. He complains that Colleges and Churches have been extremely injur'd this way: That good condition'd Eſtates have been wreſted from them, and nothing but Impropriations, that is the Plunder of the Parſonages, given in Return. And here he repeats the Singularity, of laying particular Hardſhips upon the Church. To treat, ſays he, the Miniſters of Chriſt, and thoſe who are particularly inſtrumental to make us eternally happy; to treat thoſe worſe than the reſt of Mankind, who have no ſuch Recommendation to our Regard, is no better than downright Wickedneſs.

I am inform'd, continues Bucer, your Majeſties Treaſury is exhauſted by the Expence of a long War. If the Caſe ſtands thus, this Difficulty may be got over by cuſtomary Supplies, without having Recourſe to the ſacrilegious Expedient of the Court of Rome. He puts his Majeſty in mind to take care not to be impos'd on by any Miſrepreſentations. That ſome People pretend a great Zeal to improve the Royal Revenues, when nothing but their own Covetouſneſs and Ambition lies at the bottom. That ſome Courtiers, 'tis likely may tell his Majeſty how liberal his Father was to his Miniſters, to what Degree of Wealth they were rais'd in that Reign by having Abbey and Church Lands beſtow'd upon them; and why may not the Son be govern'd by the Preſident of his Fathers Bounty? Tully, as Bucer goes on, ſhall anſwer theſe Men. No Man ought to be liberal beyond his Power, nor exhauſt himſelf for the Character of a kind Maſter. And to come to the Caſe in hand, where has your Majeſty any Abbey Lands now to beſtow upon your Courtiers? But if the Biſhops Revenues and other Wealthy Promotions muſt be ſeiz'd, and put under Contribution for this purpoſe, which way can the Clergy of impropriated Pariſhes be provided with a Competency? How can Learning be encouraged, or the Poor taken care of? But theſe Men will object farther, that the Biſhops and Rich Clergy miſmanage their Fortunes, and don't anſwer theſe Expectations of Charity. They entertain an idle unneceſſary Retinue, Squander away and ſpend their income in making a Figure. And now ſince they are allow'd to marry, the Patrimony of the Church will be ſpent upon their Wives and Children.

A Reproof of the Hypocriſy, &c. of ſome Goſpellers.

To this Bucer returns an Anſwer, in the Perſon of our Saviour. “Becauſe pretended and diſorderly Biſhops have formerly miſſpent my Patrimony, does it become you who account it an Honour to profeſs my Goſpel to ſeize the Remainder? Is it tolerable in you who complain of thoſe Drones, to practice what you condemn, to rob the Hives, and devour the Honey? Are you willing to receive me for your Soveraign, and come under the Adminiſtration of my Kingdom? If you are thus reſolv'd, I would have you conſider whether there muſt not be ſelect Officers to execute my Orders, and repreſent me in my Government? And whether 'tis not neceſſary ſuch Perſons ſhould have a Maintenance ſuitable to their Character and Buſineſs? And that thoſe I have bleſs'd with Genius and Talent, ſhould be ſupplied with Opportunities of Improvement? And ſince the Laws of my Kingdom require General Kindneſs, and Offices of Humanity and Compaſſion. I would have you examine your ſelves, and ſee, whether my Government does not require a ſtanding and well furniſh'd Treaſury? Without ſuch a Proviſion, which way can the Poor be made eaſy, and prove ſerviceable to me, or the Commonwealth? Ought I not to be furniſh'd for that Exerciſe of Beneficence, which even Heathens expected from every Wealthy Perſon? That is to be provided with a Fund for the Redemption of Captives; to engage for an indigent Friend, and to encourage the honeſt and induſtrious.

——What Commonwealth was ever ſo barbarous and wicked, as not to make a Diſtinction between private or publick Property, and thoſe Things which are dedicated to the Maintenance of Religion? Theſe laſt even Heathens look upon as the Demeans of the ſupreme Being. For this Reaſon they were accounted Sacred, and above the Claim of any Mortal. And if the State was ſometimes ſo far preſs'd as to make uſe of them, they look'd upon the Mony no otherwiſe than borrow'd, and always took care to reſtore it when the Difficulty was over: For they believ'd it Part of the Law of Nature, that no Government could make Seizure of what belong'd to the Gods, or preſcribe againſt them upon any Pretence whatever. Thus who ever made bold with any thing conſecrated to Religious Uſes, was charged with Sacrilege, and puniſh'd with more Severity than if he had rob'd the Commonwealth.

'Tis objected by ſome continues Bucer, that the Church Eſtates were in a great meaſure gain'd by Impoſture: That the Weakneſs of the Benefactors was ſurpriz'd with Expectations of being diſcharg'd from Purgatory, and convey'd to Heaven: That the Colleges and Abbeys were founded upon the Proſpect of this imaginary Return. Since therefore both the Crown and ſeveral conſiderable Families have ſuffer'd in their Revenues by this Fraud, 'tis but reaſonable to make them Reſtitution: For God allows neither to rob, nor cheat for the furniſhing of his Altar.

To this Objection Bucer anſwers firſt, that thoſe Eſtates can never be more ſerviceable to the Publick, than when they are veſted in God Almighty: 'Tis impoſſible they can be better ſpent than in promoting the Intereſt of Religion. Beſides, as to thoſe Families which have been made a Property, and impos'd on to leſſen their Fortune, I deſire, ſays he, to know how many are remaining? Their Poſterity I believe are not commonly met with. However, thoſe Perſons who have this Advantage of Deſcent, and are ſlenderly provided, ought to be aſſiſted by the Church, and have a Preference in her Favour. But then we are to obſerve, that by the Civil Law all Settlements upon the Common-wealth, tho' the Uſes happen to be exceptionable, were reckon'd irrevocable. Thus for inſtance, in Caſe any Perſon bequeath a Legacy to a Corporation for diverting the People with any ſcandalous Spectacle or Entertainment. This Town renounces Paganiſm and turns Chriſtian. And thus the lewd or idolatrous Entertainment becomes impracticable. (d) Notwithſtanding this, the Legacy ſhall not return to the Heirs, but remain in the Corporation: In the Corporation I ſay who are oblig'd to turn the Legacy to ſome juſtifiable Uſe, and do right to the Memory of the Benefactor ſome other way. And thus it follows by greater Force of Conſequence, that thoſe Eſtates which were given to the Church of God, are to remain in their Poſſeſſion: They ſhould indeed be ſpent to better purpoſes, but then the Property ought not to be transferr'd, tho' they were given at firſt upon miſtaken Motives, and for the Support of that which is by no means defenſible.

After this he puts the King in mind that the Honour of our Saviour and the Intereſt of Chriſtianity ſuffers extremely by the Invaſions upon the Church, and that his Majeſty is nearly concern'd to put a Stop to this Diſorder: And that provided he protects the Clergy in the Enjoyment of their Eſtates, he needs not queſtion being rewarded for his Piety and Juſtice, and that God will ſupply him with means for Bounty, and encouraging Deſert.

He propoſes a Proviſion for the Poor.

His Sixth Law propoſes a Scheme for providing for the Poor. And here he would have the Biſhop and his Clergy particularly concern'd: He ſuggeſts the appointing of Deacons for this purpoſe. That they ſhould enquire into the Number and Neceſſity of the Indigent, and enter their Names in a Book: That charitable Collections ſhould be regiſtred, and intruſted with the Deacons: That they ought to give an Account of their Management, to the Biſhop and his Presbytery: That the Biſhops in their Viſitations ſhould enquire what Lands were ſettled for the maintenance of Hoſpitals, and make their Report to the King. And that then it would be his Majeſties Part to recover them to the Uſes they were firſt intended. That in Caſe any Town is not in a condition to maintain all their Poor, ſome of them ſhould be remov'd to wealthier Pariſhes: That Commiſſions ſhould be given out to the Magiſtracy for this purpoſe: And that no Perſon ſhould be allowed to beg, and for this laſt he cites a Law of the Emperor Valentinian. (e)

The next Law he adviſes, relates to Matrimony, upon which Head he runs out into a long Diſcourſe, and ſpends ſeveral Chapters. To touch briefly upon ſome of the more remarkable Particulars. And firſt, he would have matrimonial Cauſes taken out of the Hands of the Church, and put under the Regulations of the State. He declares ſtrongly for the Marriage of Couſin Germans. And tho' St. Auſtin relates the Marriages within this degree, prohibited in his Time; (f) Bucer obſerves, this Law was repeal'd in the Reign of Arcadius and Honorius; and that the matter was thus left at Liberty by the Emperor Juſtinian. St. Auſtin urges that the marrying with Perſons unrelated ſpreads Friendſhip and good Correſpondence to a greater Extent: And that upon this Account Chriſtians ſhould decline marrying where they are of Kin. This Father adds that Modeſty and natural Reſervedneſs is better conſulted this way. Bucer is ſo far from thinking either of theſe Reaſons ſufficient, that he prefers the intermarrying with Kindred, as far as the Degree of Couſin German, to remoter Engagements; becauſe People have better Opportunities of being inform'd of the Religion and Temper of their Relations, than they can have commonly elſewhere.

(f) Auguſt. de Civit. Dei. Lib. 15. c. 16.

He complains of the Canon Law for allowing a Separation from Bed and Board, without diſſolving the Matrimonial Engagement. That this is an unreaſonable Reſtraint he endeavours to prove from the Theodoſian Code. And becauſe his Citations are ſomewhat General, I ſhall point them more particularly to the Reader.

Marriage allow'd after Divorce.

By a Law of Conſtantine the Great, if a Woman could prove her Husband guilty of Murther, Poiſoning, of breaking up Graves, or defacing Monuments, ſhe might ſue for a Divorce, and recover her Fortune. (g) Thus if a Man could prove his Wife falſe to his Bed, a Procureſs, or Poiſoner, he might part with her, and marry again. A Law much of the ſame Tenor was afterwards publiſh'd by the Emperor Honorius. (h) And here there was ſome Difference of Privilege between the Caſe of the Man and the Woman: For by the Law of Honorius, if the Womans Suggeſtions for a Divorce were found juſtifiable, ſhe was to recover her Fortune, and keep what her Husband preſented her with at the Contract, and over and above, ſhe had the Liberty of marrying again at the End of Five Years. If the Husband parted with his Wife upon defenſible Grounds, he was to keep her Fortune, and have his own Preſents and Settlement return'd. And in both theſe Caſes the Husband and Wife have an equal Conſideration. But in another Circumſtance the Man has the Advantage, becauſe he has the Liberty of marrying immediately after the Divorce; whereas the Woman is oblig'd to ſtay Five Years. There is likewiſe ſome Difference made by the Imperial Laws in other Caſes. For inſtance, if a Woman parted with her Husband, and declar'd herſelf diſengag'd, without aſſigning any Reaſons, the Man had the Liberty of marrying another immediately: Whereas if the Woman was thus ill uſed, ſhe was barr'd Marriage for one whole Year. Secondly, if a Woman procur'd a Divorce, and could charge her Husband no higher than Perverſeneſs of Humour, and Miſbehaviour under the Relation; when this happen'd the Woman was condemn'd to live ſingle all her Life time, whereas if the Woman was diſcharg'd upon no ſtronger Imputation, the Husband might marry again at Two Years End: But in one Caſe the Husband and Wife had the ſame Treatment: For if either of them had divorced each other without any Reaſon aſſign'd, they were always to live ſingle, and never permitted to marry elſewhere. To return to Bucer, who takes notice that notwithſtanding St. Jerome was ſo great an Admirer of Celibacy; he was yet overborn by the Equity of the Caſe to defend the Lady Fabiola in her Second Marriage, after ſhe had divorc'd her Husband. (k)

(k) Id. de Regno Chriſt. page 93.

And after Monaſtick Vows.

He obſerves farther, that the Fathers allow'd Marriage in ſome Caſes after Monaſtick Vows. For this purpoſe he produces a famous Paſſage of St. Cyprian. (l) Where ſpeaking of thoſe who had vow'd ſingle Life, he delivers himſelf thus: If ſays he, they are either diſenclin'd, or unable to make good their Engagement, they had better marry than burn: Si autem perſeverare nolunt, vel non poſſunt, melius eſt ut nubant, quam in Ignem Deliciis ſuis cadant. To confirm this Opinion, he cites the Authority of St. Auſtin and Pope Gelaſius the firſt. (m)

(m) Bucer Ibid. p. 95.

And to juſtifie Marriage after Divorce, he appeals to Origen and Leo the Firſt. (n) The Reſolution of this Pope is ſomewhat remarkable. In his Letter to the African Biſhops of Mauritania Cæſarienſis, amongſt other Things, he complains of their Connivance at a Prieſt who had divorc'd his Wife, and married another. However, he only adviſes diſcharging him the Exerciſe of his Function. But he neither declares the Marriage void, nor moves for Excommunication. (o)

Bucer obſerves, Divorces may be allow'd in other Caſes beſides Adultery: Such as Deſertion, &c. And here he offers at anſwering thoſe Texts of Scripture, which are thought to forbid this Liberty. (p) He declares for the puniſhing Adultery with Death both in Man and Woman.

Rules for the Education of Youth.

In his Chapter concerning the Education of Youth, he would have thoſe excommunicated, who refuſe to Work when they are able. To ſecure Young People from Miſcarriage, in their Manners or Employment, he propoſes the chuſing ſome diſcreet People in every Town and Village, to inſpect their Conduct, to Examine their Genius, and ſuit them with Buſineſs accordingly.

Id.*p.*134.135.

He ſpends one Chapter in laying down ſome Rules for the reforming Merchandizing. He grants the Merchants have a creditable Imployment, and that the Commonwealth can't go on without them. But then he would have them reſtrain'd from Importing unneceſſary Commodities, and which tend only to the nouriſhing Luxury and Pride. He complains their Gains are much over-proportion'd to their Induſtry or Pretenſions. That their raiſing great Eſtates by indirect Practice, Tempts People of promiſing Parts to ingage that way, who might be more ſerviceable to the State and Church by a learned Education.

He adviſes the reforming the Merchants.

He complains their bringing over Curioſities and ſhining Trifles, Tempts the extravagant Gentry to run out in Figure, and purchaſe beyond their Pocket. Beſides, the Merchants living at ſuch a rate of Expence and Appearance, puts People of Condition upon a dangerous Emulation. And thus the Nobility and Gentry thinking it beneath them to be out done by Men of ſlender Beginnings, ſtrain beyond their Strength, in their Houſes, Eating, and Equipage: And by this means it often happens, their Fortunes are dip'd, their Families ruin'd, and their Seats Sold to the Merchant.

To prevent this Miſchief, he would have none bound to a Merchant, 'till they had paſs'd the Teſt of the Pariſh Fryars abovemention'd, and given fair Indications of Induſtry and Conſcience. Then as to their Buſineſs, he would have them barr'd the liberty of Importing any Commodities, which ſerve only for Fancy, and unneceſſary Figure: And laſtly, he thinks the Government ſhould ſet a moderate Price upon every thing they Sell. And that Retailers ſhould be under the ſame Reſtraints, to put a ſtop to Covetouſneſs and Circumvention. And to give a more effectual check to Vanity and Levelling, he recommends the making Sumptuary Laws: That the diſtinctions of Quality, and a reſpect for the Government might be kept up: And that People who are neither in publick Poſts, nor diſtinguiſh'd in their Condition, might not have the liberty to Exhauſt themſelves in Figure, to carry on Extravagance, and diſable themſelves for Charity.

He moves for explaining the Laws, and publiſhing them in Engliſh.

He acquaints the King, the Laws which ſettle Property are much complain'd of, for their Ambiguity and other Defects: That Tenures, and Deſcents, Exchanges, and other Contracts, are perplex'd, and liable to diſpute: That the Laws being Penn'd in a Forreign Language, lie out of common View: That by this means thoſe who profeſs the Law, are put into a Condition to entangle Property, and impoſe upon the Subject. That he is inform'd, his Majeſty's Father being ſenſible of this great Inconvenience, projected a Reformation of the Laws, and Commiſſionated ſeveral Perſons for that Purpoſe; but ſince this Scheme, as it happend, was never executed, he adviſes that the Laws relating to Commerce and Eſtates, may be Publiſh'd in Engliſh, and explain'd in ſuch a Method, that a common Capacity may reach them. For ſince the Laws are every Mans Birth-right, ſince every one is oblig'd to keep them, he thinks it but reaſonable they ſhould lie open in Language and Meaning, that every Body may underſtand them.

From hence he proceeds to lay down ſome Directions for the Regulation of the Magiſtracy. He would have every Perſon nicely Examin'd, before he is put into any Office of Truſt and Power. And here he makes Sobriety and good Life, a neceſſary Qualification: He would have no Man preferr'd for Favour or Mony, nor ſuffer'd to act by a Deputy: He would have the management of the Inferior Magiſtracy, inſpected by thoſe in a higher Station; And that when the Term of the Office is expir'd, they ſhould give a publick Account of their Adminiſtration; And that every Body ſhould have notice to Inform againſt them. He Remonſtrates againſt tedious Impriſonment, and Cites a Law of Gratian and Valentinian for ſpeedy Tryals: And that thoſe committed for Malefactors, might be quickly either Puniſh'd or Diſcharg'd; And whereas long Impriſonment is ſometimes part of the Sentence; he thinks condemning them to ſome ſervile Ignominious Buſineſs Abroad, might prove a more ſignificant Correction. Becauſe the retirement of a Goal keeps People Private, and ſcreens them from Infamy in ſome Meaſure. Beſides, they are commonly uſeleſs, under ſuch Confinements, and left wholly to Idleneſs and ill Company.

And propoſes ſome Regulations of the Magiſtracy.

He proceeds to Diſcourſe, concerning the degrees of Puniſhment: And here he propoſes the Moſaick Law for a Rule as to the main. For tho' we are not bound, either to the Ceremonial Part, or to all the Circumſtances, even of the Judicial: Yet where the Caſes are Parralel, and the Application holds, we ſhould be Govern'd by it. For how can we be ſo certain of Equity, and exact Proportion, as when we proceed by the Meaſures of Infinite Wiſdom? Upon this Ground he would have thoſe Crimes Capitally Puniſh'd in all Commonwealths, which were death by the Law of Moſes. For Inſtance, thoſe who Endeavor to make People deſert from the true Religion, and recommend a falſe Worſhip. (by which Moſes meant Pagan Idolatry;) (q) Thoſe guilty of Blaſphemy, breach of the Sabbath; contumelious Behaviour to Parents; Thoſe who refuſe to ſubmit to the award of the higheſt Court of Juſtice: Thoſe guilty of Murder, Adultery, Inceſt, Stealing of Men, or falſe Witneſs, where the Life of the Perſon is concern'd. Had not theſe Crimes, ſays he, deſerv'd Death, we may be ſure God Almighty would have order'd a gentler Puniſhment. And here he complains of the Partiality and Connivance of human Laws: If you aſk the reaſon, ſays he, why Theft is puniſh'd with Death, and Whoredom, and Adultery over-look'd in ſeveral Kingdoms? The Anſwer is, becauſe the Legiſlators value their Property higher than their Religion; 'tis becauſe they are more concern'd for Wealth, and Power, than for the Intereſt of Virtue, the Honour of God, or their own Salvation (r)

A Recital of ſome Crimes which deſerve Capital Puniſhment.

This Book of the Kingdom of Chriſt, was dedicated to the King, and preſented for a New Years Gift. The Young Prince, it ſeems, was pleas'd with the Performance, began to draw a Plan from ſome part of it, and project a Reformation of the Government. (s)

This Tract of Bucer's, has a great deal of uncommon Thought in't, handſomely ſupported.

Ridley's Viſitation.

(t) King Edward's Remains.

To go back towards the beginning of this Year. Ridley Biſhop of London, made a Viſitation about June. (t) The Articles may be ſeen in Biſhop Sparrow's Collections. They relate to enquiries concerning the Regularity, Doctrines, and performances of the Clergy. For the purpoſe, whether they declar'd themſelves Abettors of the Popes Uſurpation, obſtructed the Exerciſe of Preaching, or Reading the Scriptures in the Engliſh Tongue? Whether they incited Men to Sedition, and admitted any Perſons to Communion before they were ſufficiently inſtructed in the Principles of Religion, and had been Confirm'd by the Biſhop? Whether they Sold the Holy Euchariſt? Preach'd or argued againſt the Common-Prayer-Book? Or had private Maſſes? Whether Anabaptiſts, or any other Sect held Conventicles? Preach'd Heterodoxies, or adminiſtred the Sacrament in a different manner from the publick Eſtabliſhment? Whether any Pariſh Prieſt refuſ'd to make uſe of the Common-Prayer purſuant to the directions of the Rubrick? Whether Baptiſm was adminiſtred contrary to the publick Eſtabliſhment, with reſpect either to Time or Language? Whether Infant Baptiſm was impugn'd? Whether the prohibited degrees of Marriage, publiſhing the Banes, and ſome other Circumſtances were duly Obſerv'd? Whether any Perſons affirm the Wickedneſs of the Miniſter, voids the Effect of the Sacrament? Whether the Curates viſit the Sick, bury the Dead, examine the Children, and expound the Catechiſm according to Appointment in the Book of Common-Prayer? Whether the Holy-days and Ceremonies laid aſide, are kept, and made uſe of?

To theſe Articles the Biſhop added ſome Injunctions. The deſign of them is moſtly to prevent the revival of the old Superſtitions. For Inſtance, the Curates, and Prieſts are forbidden to practice ſeveral Ceremonies preſcrib'd for the Maſs; ſuch as waſhing their Hands after the Goſpel, or receiving the Holy Communion, ſhifting the Book from one place to another, bleſſing their Eyes with the Sudary or Paten, Elevation of the conſecrated Elements before Diſtribution. Theſe with ſeveral other Geſtures and Ceremonies, are prohibited too long to rehearſe. (u)

(u) Regiſt. Ridley Fol. 305.

But the main Buſineſs of this Viſitation, was the taking down Altars, and putting Tables in their Room. The leading motive to this Alteration, as the learned Heylin Conceives, was the giving in, in ſome meaſure, to the Sentiments of Calvin, and thoſe of the Zuinglian Perſwaſion. Some of theſe Forreigners, it ſeems, made it their Buſineſs to bring the Engliſh Church to the Model of Geneva, and Switzerland.

For this purpoſe Hooper, who had no great regard for Antiquity, took occaſion in his Court Sermon this Year, to ſuggeſt, "that the Government would do well to turn the Altars "into Tables, according to the firſt Inſtitution "of Chriſt, that by this Expedient, the People "would be cur'd of a falſe Perſwaſion of the "performing Sacrifices: That as long as the Altars continued, both ignorant People, and ignorant Prieſts, would always dream of Sacrifice.

This Diſcourſe was well receiv'd by ſome great Courtiers, who practiſ'd upon the Hint; and as it is to be fear'd, not altogether upon religious Conſiderations. That Intereſt had the Aſcendant, ſeems not improbable, by the Enquiry made ſome time after, what Jewels, Gold, and Silver Plate, Hangings, and other rich Ornament and Furniture, belong'd to Cathedral or Parochial Churches; with Orders to leave only a very ſlender Remainder. The King's Letter for changing Altars into Tables.

Nov. 24. An. Dom. 1550.

The alteration abovemention'd being reſolv'd, a Letter in the King's Name was directed to Biſhop Ridley; it ſets forth, "that notwithſtanding Altars had been taken down upon "good Conſiderations in moſt parts of the "Kingdom, yet they were continued in ſeveral Churches: That this occaſion'd a great "deal of claſhing and diſpute, and therefore "to avoid all Occaſions of Conteſt and Miſunderſtandings, his Majeſty Commands the "Biſhop, that all Altars ſhould be taken away "in the Dioceſe of London, and Tables ſet up "in their Room. And that weak People might "not be ſhock'd at this new Appearance, there "were ſeveral Reaſons digeſted into Form, "and ſent with the Letter, to juſtify what was "done. With theſe Arguments the Biſhop "was to furniſh ſuch Preachers as he thought "diſpoſed for the Service. This Letter was Subſcrib'd by the Duke of Somerſet, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Admiral Clinton, the Earls of Warwick, Bedford, and Wiltſhire, the Biſhop of Ely, the Lords Wentworth and North.

The Reaſons for this Alteration.

The Arguments convey'd with the Letter, to reconcile the People to the Order, were to this Effect. Firſt 'twas urg'd an Altar was for Sacrifice, and a Table for Eating, the latter therefore was more proper for the Solemnity of the Lord's Supper. Secondly, That in the Book of Common-Prayer the Words, Altar, the Lord's Board, and Table, are promiſcuouſly uſed, without preſcribing any thing, with reſpect to Figure and Form. That 'tis called a Table, with Reference to the Lord's Supper: And an Altar upon the Score of the Sacrifice of Praiſe and Thankſgiving there offer'd to God Almighty. That therefore the changing Altars into Tables, is no contradiction to the Rubrick. The Third Reaſon aims at the reforming the Superſtition of the Maſs, and recovering the People from their Miſapprehenſions, concerning the Sacrifice offer'd there. Fourthly, 'tis argued that Altars were erected for the Sacrifices of the Moſaick Inſtitution; that ſince the Obligation of this Law was now at an end, the form of the Altar ought not to continue. Fifthly, Our Saviour inſtituted the Sacrament of his Body and Blood at a Table, and not at an Altar; neither does it appear the Apoſtles made uſe of this latter in their Miniſtrations. Laſtly, 'tis declar'd in the Preface to the Book of Common-Prayer, that if any doubt ſhould happen concerning the uſe of that Book, the reſolution of the difficulty ſhould be referr'd to the Biſhop of the Dioceſe. How cogent theſe Reaſons were, I ſhall not Examine. However, Biſhop Ridley, as far as it appears, comply'd with the Order, without any Reluctancy. And afterwards when there happen'd a Conteſt about the Form of the Lord's Board: That is, whether 'twas to be made upon the reſemblance of an Altar, or like a Table, he declar'd for the latter Figure, and gave a Preſident of it in his own Cathedral of St. Paul's; where he order'd the Wall ſtanding on the backſide of the Altar, to be broken down. However, it ſeems this Change did not make its way thro' all the Kingdom, 'till the firſt Liturgy was diſcharg'd by Act of Parliament: The firſt Liturgy, I ſay, where by the Rubrick, the Prieſt is order'd to ſtand before the middle of the Altar, whereas by the Second Liturgy, the Prieſt being appointed to ſtand on the North ſide of the Table, put an end to the Diſpute.

June 9.

'Twas now thought fit to try the Temper of Biſhop Gardiner, and whether Two Years Impriſonment in the Tower, had made him more flexible. To this purpoſe the Duke of Somerſet, the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Privy Seal, the Lord Great Chamberlain, and Secretary Petre, were order'd to go to him. Being ask'd whether he would conform to the Government, he anſwer'd in the Affirmative, and that he was ready to recommend and promote the keeping the King's Laws. Some few Days after, the Duke of Somerſet, and others of the Council, asking his Opinion of the Book of Common-Prayer, his Anſwer was, that notwithſtanding he would not have drawn it up altogether in that manner himſelf; yet he could fairly reconcile it to his Conſcience, and therefore ſhould Officiate by it, and take care to bring others to the ſame Conformity. (x)

Biſhop Gardiner farther Examin'd.

This one would think, look'd like reaſonable Satisfaction: But 'tis poſſible ſome great Men were willing to intangle the Biſhop, and prevent his Diſcharge. But let this be as it will, 'tis certain he was put to a ſtricter Teſt. In the firſt Place there were ſeveral Articles given him to Subſcribe. By theſe he was to make an Acknowledgment of his Miſbehavior, and own the Juſtice of his Confinement. He was likewiſe to own the King's Supremacy: That the Power of making and diſpenſing with Holydays, was part of the Prerogative: That the Common-Prayer-Book was a godly and commendable Form. That the King was a compleat Sovereign in his Minority: That the Act of the Six Articles was juſtly repeal'd: And that the King had full Authority to Correct and Reform what was amiſs in the Church: The Biſhop put his hand to all the Articles, excepting the firſt: He ſtood upon the Inoffenſiveneſs of his Conduct, and declar'd he could not Subſcribe himſelf guilty of Faults he had never committed.

Articles injoin'd him to Subſcribe.

Upon this, the Council order'd new Articles, and a fuller Submiſſion ſhould be drawn for the Biſhop to Subſcribe: The Articles were Two and Twenty, and comprehended the greateſt part of the Reformation made in the late and preſent Reign. For the purpoſe, that King Henry the Eighth, had juſtly diſſolv'd the Monaſteries, and that the Chauntry Lands were defenſibly taken away: That Images in Churches, and Miſſals, were likewiſe taken away upon juſtifiable Accounts: That the Homilies, and Ordinal, are good Books, and ought to be receiv'd: That the lower Orders of Subdeacon and downward, are unneceſſary, and that the Omiſſion of them in the late Ordinal, is altogether juſtifiable: That all Points neceſſary to Salvation are contain'd in the Holy Scripture: That the ſetting up Eraſmus his Paraphraſe in Churches, was done upon good Grounds. The reſt have been mention'd already. Theſe Articles which were put into Form by Ridley, Petre, Cecil, and Goodericк, a common Lawyer, the Biſhop was to Subſcribe, and declare himſelf willing, to recommend and Publiſh them from the Pulpit. But Gardiner abſolutely refuſ'd the Article of Submiſſion, requeſted he might be brought to his Tryal, and deſir'd nothing but Juſtice. As to the other Articles he told the Biſhop of London, and Secretary Petre, that when he was at Liberty, he would diſcover his Opinion: But did not think it reaſonable to be preſs'd to a Subſcription, during his being in Priſon. This Anſwer being reported to the Council, 'twas agreed to ſend for him: And in Caſe he gave no farther Satisfaction, to put his Biſhoprick under Sequeſtration for Three Months, and then deprive him, provided his Incompliance continued.

July 19. His Biſhoprick is ſequeſtred.

When the Biſhop was brought before the Board, and the Queſtion put to him, his Anſwer was, that he would gladly Obey his Majeſty's Commands in every thing: But at preſent his Conſcience not giving him leave to go the length requir'd, he deſir'd they would be pleas'd to excuſe him. Upon this the Council proceeded to the Sentence of Sequeſtration.

December 15.

In December following, a Commiſſion was directed to Archbiſhop Cranmer, the Biſhops of London, Ely, and Lincoln, to Secretary Petres, Sir James Hales, and ſome other Lawyers, to call the Biſhop of Wincheſter before them, and proceed to Deprivation, in Caſe he continued Obſtinate. When Gardiner was brought to Lambeth, before the Commiſſioners, he made a Proteſtation againſt his Judges, and excepted to the Legality of their Commiſſion, and deſir'd a Copy of that and the Articles, which was granted. (y)

Upon the Fourteenth of February following, he was brought again before the Commiſſioners and depriv'd: He appeal'd from them to the King, and deſir'd a Copy of the Sentence, to which the Commiſſioners demurr'd, 'till the Pleaſure of the King and Council was farther known.

He is Depriv'd

The next Day the Council ſitting at Weſtminſter, after a debate upon the Biſhops Caſe, came to the following Reſolution. That ſince this Prelate had Miſbehav'd himſelf with reſpect to the King, and reproach'd his Judges with the Names of Hereticks and Sacramentaries, he ſhould be remov'd to worſe Lodging, and have but one Perſon, of the Lieutenants appointing, to attend him: That he ſhould not be allow'd any Company, nor ſend Letters or Meſſages to any Perſon, or receive any thing from them. His Books and Papers were likewiſe order'd to be taken from him.

And more cloſely Impriſon'd. Council Book.

Theſe Proceedings ſeem'd very Arbitrary, and by no means conſiſtent with the Engliſh Claim of Liberty and Property. 'Twas thought ſomewhat ſingular to Impriſon a Man upon a Complaint, and after Two Years Confinement, to put new Articles to him, without farther enquiry into the Reaſons for his Commitment. Beſides, to deny the Biſhop the benefit of the King's Courts, and ſtop the Channels of Juſtice, was ſomewhat extraordinary, and came too near the Rigors of the Inquiſition, as ſome ventur'd to ſay. (z) To alledge that the Canon Law was not rectified, and that the King ſtood in the Popes Place, ſeems an Inſufficient Defence. For by the Canon Law, Lay Men had no Authority to make part of the Bench for ſequeſtring, or depriving a Biſhop. Beſides, to bring Liberty and Freehold under the cogniſance of an Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, is bearing ſomewhat hard upon Magna Charta.

Our learned Hiſtorian does not ſtick to Confeſs, that Cranmer was carried beyond his ordinary Temper, and ſtretch'd a little in the Proceedings againſt Gardiner and Bonner.

Nov. 30. An. Dom. 1550. Day Biſhop of Chicheſter committed to the Fleet.

This Year Day, Biſhop of Chicheſter, was call'd to an Account, for not complying with the King's Letter, for taking down Altars; to prevent Proſecution, he came to the Duke of Somerſet's, and deſir'd he might be excus'd upon the Score of Conſcience. The next Day appearing before the Council, he declar'd 'twas his Opinion, that the taking down the Altars, and ſetting up Tables, was more than could be juſtified by the Scriptures, or the Fathers of the Church; and that the Six Reaſons publiſh'd by the Biſhop of London, were ſhort of Satisfaction. (a) The Board requiring him to alledge his Scripture Authorities, he cited a Text from Iſaiah, (b) but this was over-rul'd by Cranmer, Ridley, &c. as not pertinent to his Point. The Two Biſhops abovemention'd, argued the Caſe with him, and laid down ſome of the Grounds of their Opinion. To this Chicheſter replied, he could not perceive their reaſoning was ſtrong enough to command his Practice: However, he was willing to be farther Inſtructed. The Council remitted him to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London, and gave him Four Days to return his Anſwer. The Biſhop at his next appearing perſiſted in his former Sentiment, and urg'd a Text from the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, where 'tis ſaid, We have an Altar, whereof they have no Right to eat, which ſerve the Tabernacle. (c) But the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of Ely told him, this Citation was Forreign to the purpoſe. That Chriſt was meant by the Word Altar in this Place as appears by the Context. As to the Authorities of the Primitive Church, the Biſhops urg'd that 'twas clear by Origen againſt Celſus, that the Chriſtians had no Altars when this Father liv'd. This they think may be concluded by Negative Proof. They added that in regard the Altars had been abuſed, 'twas neceſſary to have them removed. However, they own'd the Lord's Table was call'd an Altar by Antient Writers. In fine, the Biſhop of Chicheſter continued unſatisfied, and was order'd on Sunday following to give in his final Anſwer. He appear'd accordingly, and told them, he could by no means prevail with himſelf to act againſt his Conſcience. That if there was no help for it, he thought it a leſs evil to ſuffer the Body to Periſh, than to deſtroy the Soul. This Anſwer being conſtrued Contempt, he was committed to the Fleet, by the order of the whole Board.

This Biſhops Incompliance, had occaſion'd ſome diſturbance in his Dioceſe, as appears by the Council's Letter to Dr. Cox, who was order'd to go into Suſſex, to quiet the People, and remove their Scruples, who, as the Letter Words it, were now troubled, by the ſeditious Preaching of the Biſhop of Chicheſter and others. *

The Judges Opinion concerning a Spiritual Office.

In November following, the Juſtices, Leiſter, Bromley, and Portman, appear'd before the Council, where being demanded why they had proceeded in the Premunire againſt the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, contrary to the countermand of that Board: They anſwer'd they were Sworn to ſuffer the Laws to have their due Courſe. At laſt this Queſtion was given them to Anſwer upon the Twenty Sixth Inſtant, viz. "Whether if a ſpiritual Office was ſurrendered to the King, and afterwards the King by Parliament, newly Erects the ſame Office, whether the ſame be a Spiritual Office or no?

Council Book.

To this the Judges above-mention'd, by the Advice of the reſt of their Brethren, anſwer'd thus in the Affirmative. "That a Spiritual Office ſo ſurrendered to the King, notwithſtanding the new Erection of the ſame by any Act of Parliament, remains ſtill a ſpiritual Office as before.

The See of Exeter voided.

Voiſy Biſhop of Exeter was depriv'd, or as ſome ſay reſign'd this Year. He was ſuſpected for ſecretly abetting the late Rebellion in Devonſhire. This Prelate was no Friend to the Reformation, nor yet true to the Intereſt of his See: For he convey'd away Fourteen of the beſt Mannors, and made long Leaſes, charg'd with Penſions of the reſt. And thus he betray'd his Church, either out of Covetouſneſs or Cowardiſe. (e)

Great Alienations of Biſhops Lands.

Kitchen Biſhop of Landaff, and Salcot, alias Capon Biſhop of Salisbury, and Sampſon Biſhop of Lichfield and Coventry, tho' they made ſhift to comply with the Orders for the Reformation, yet it ſeems they did it with an ill Grace, and diſcover'd their Diſaffection. Thus lying expos'd to the diſpleaſure of the Court, they were forc'd to compound at high Rates, to keep their Station. Thus the Cathedral of Coventry and Lichfield, was ſtrip'd of a great part of its Patrimony, to raiſe a Barons Eſtate for Sir William Paget. Salcot of Salisbury, bought his Peace of ſome great Men, by making long Leaſes of the beſt of his Farms and Mannors. And Kitchen Biſhop of Landaff, was ſo falſe and poor Spirited, as to convey away almoſt all the Lands of that rich See, and let the reſt for a very long Term upon a ſmall Rent reſerv'd. (f)

The Submiſſions of Dr. Oglethorpe, *and Dr.*Smith.

Towards the latter end of this Year, there was great Complaint made againſt Dr. Oglethorpe, Preſident of Magdalen College in Oxford. To ſecure himſelf from the Information which related to Religion, he Sign'd a Paper, by way of Letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to this Effect. "That he had never Preach'd againſt, nor openly contradicted any Points of Religion, ſet forth by his Majeſty, or Enacted in Parliament: That he thought the King's Proceedings in this matter pious and good, if us'd according to the Intendment of his Highneſs his Laws: And that the Form and Order of Religion now ſet forth, was nearer the Practiſe of the Apoſtolical and Primitive Church, then that which was formerly us'd in England: And particularly that Communicating the Laity under both kinds, that ſome of the People ſhould always receive the Holy Euchariſt with the Prieſt, the Common-Prayer in Engliſh, the Homilies lately ſet forth, and many other Alterations, were Commendable and Pious, provided they were rightly uſed. And laſtly, he declares his diſlike of the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, thinks it neither agreeable to the Scripture, nor the Belief of the Antient Church: However, he owns a Myſterious and Incomprehenſible Preſence of Chriſt's Body: That therefore it ought to be Adminiſtred with Solemnity and Reverence, and not receiv'd without great Preparation. (g)

(g) Bp. Burnet pt. 2. Records, p. 207.

Dr. Smith is another Inſtance of Compliance farther than was expected. He had Written a Book for the Cælibacy of the Clergy, and appear'd pretty much againſt the Changes in Religion. Complaints being ſent up againſt him from Oxford, he was brought to London and impriſon'd: But after ſome little time was admitted to Bayl. And growing more inoffenſive in his Behaviour, Cranmer got his Sureties diſcharg'd; upon which he writ him a Letter of Thanks. " In this Addreſs he tells the Archbiſhop, he ſhall always be ſenſible of his Favour, he thanks him for his gentle Uſage of thoſe in the Univerſity who differ'd from his Graces Opinion in matters of Religion: he deſires to ſee ſome part of Cranmers Collection againſt his Book for the ſingle Life of the Clergy. He profeſſes he wrote this Diſcourſe only with a Deſign to diſcuſs the Queſtion, and reach the Truth, and that it was afterwards printed againſt his Will: He heartily wiſhes it had never been written, becauſe he found himſelf miſtaken in his main ground: He then believ'd the Engliſh Prieſts were under a Vow of Celibacy after Ordination, but now he was of another Opinion. And laſtly, he wiſhes the Archbiſhop a long Life for the Countenance and Advancement of Piety.

Bucers Death.

This Year in February Martin Bucer departed this Life at Cambridge. This Learned Perſon having the Countenance of the Court and Archbiſhop Cranmer, was buried with all imaginable Reſpect. The Vice Chancellor and all the Graduates, together with the Mayor and Aldermen accompanied the Corps to St. Maries, where after Prayers, Haddon the Univerſity Orator made a Speech in Commendation of the Deceas'd. After this, his Friend Dr. Parker pay'd him the ſame Regard in an Engliſh Sermon, and Sir John Cheek in a conſolatory Letter to Dr. Haddon laments Bucers Death with a great deal of Rhetorick, and gives him an honourable Character. He was a Perſon of good Learning, and regular Behaviour: And notwithſtanding his Singularity in ſome matters, he ſeems to have been all along acted by a Principle of Conſcience, without popular Humour, or mercenary Deſigns. To the ſame Year we may reckon the Privy Councils Letter to the Biſhop of London, to forbid the Curates of his Dioceſe preaching on any other Days than thoſe hereafter mention'd. They acquaint the Biſhop with their being inform'd by the Lord Chancellor, that ſeveral Preachers in the County of Eſſex got too often into the Pulpit, and preach'd on Working Days: That this over frequent Preaching drew the People from their Buſineſs, and gave occaſion to Idleneſs. To this End they pray the Biſhop to reſtrain theſe Performances only to Sundays and Holydays, and that on Working Days they ſhould only read the Prayers preſcrib'd.

Feb. 25. 1550. The Libraries at Weſtminſter and at Oxford almoſt deſtroy'd.

About this time the Council Book mentions the Kings ſending a Letter for the purging his Library at Weſtminſter. " The Perſons are not nam'd, but the Buſineſs was to cull out all ſuperſtitious Books, as Miſſals, Legends, and ſuch like, and to deliver the Garniture of the Books being either Gold or Silver, to Sir Anthony Aucher. Theſe Books were many of them plated with Gold and Silver, and curiouſly emboſſed: This as far as we can collect, was the Superſtition that deſtroyed them. Here Avarice had a very thin Diſguiſe, and the Courtiers diſcover'd of what Spirit they were to a remarkable Degree.

The Oxford Libraries had much the ſame Quarter this Year from the Kings Viſitors as that at Weſtminſter. To give ſome Inſtances, Merton College had almoſt a Cart load of Manuſcripts carried off, and thrown away to the moſt ſcandalous Uſes: Theſe Books were written upon the Subjects of Divinity, Aſtronomy, and Mathematicks by ſome of the moſt eminent of that Society. Baliol, Exeter, Queens, and Lincoln Colleges were purg'd of a great Part of the Fathers and Schoolmen; and to ſhew the Diſcretion of ſome People was much of the ſame Size with their Juſtice, and what an Antipathy they had to the Memory of Learned Men; great Heaps of theſe Books were ſet on Fire in the Market Place. This Execution of the Muſes, ſome young Members bigotted to Ignorance, called Scotus his Funeral. (i) The publick Library, made up in a great meaſure of the Books given by Angerville Biſhop of Durham, Cobbam Biſhop of Worceſter, and Humphry the good Duke of Glouceſter, underwent the ſame Fate. The Books mark'd with Red were generally condemn'd at a venture for Popery, and where Circles and other Mathematical Figures were found, they were look'd upon as Compoſitions of Magick, and either torn or burnt. And thus an almoſt ineſtimable Collection both for Number and Value, were either ſeiz'd by the Viſitors, turn'd into Boneſires, or given to Binders and Taylors, for the Uſe of their Trade. This was a ſtrange Inquiſition upon Senſe and Learning. And looks as if the Earl of Warwick and ſome others of the Viſitors had a farther Project: And that they intended to ſeize the ſuperſtitious Foundations, and Reform them to nothing. That this is no uncharitable Cenſure upon the Earl of Warwick will appear afterwards. The Univerſity languiſh'd in their Studies the Remainder of this Reign: And were remarkable for nothing but ſome trifling Performances in Poetry, and Grammar. (k)

March 8. An. Dom. 1550. Hooper gets over his Scruples and is conſecrated.

Hooper having now overcome his Scruples againſt the Epiſcopal Habit, was conſecrated Biſhop of Glouceſter by Archbiſhop Cranmer, the Biſhops of London and Rocheſter aſſiſting at the Solemnity. He was likewiſe diſentangled from the other Difficulty of taking the Oath requir'd: This Oath which he ſtuck at before, was the Oath of Supremacy, and not that of Canonical Obedience, as is commonly ſuppoſed. This Miſtake in Fullers Church Hiſtory ſtands thus corrected, in his Worthies of England. (l) That this was the Caſe, appears by Cranmers objecting the Danger of his incurring a Præmunire; for the bare diſpenſing with Hoopers Oath of Canonical Obedience, had no ſuch Penalty annex'd; but if Hooper had been conſecrated without ſwearing the Supremacy, this Omiſſion might have brought the Archbiſhop under a Præmunire.

(l) Fullers. Worthies Somerſetſhire.

This Compliance of Hooper, as repreſented by our Learned Hiſtorian, looks ſomewhat remarkable. He was to be attir'd, ſays this Author, in the Veſtments that were preſcrib'd, when he was conſecrated, and when he preach'd before the King, or in his Cathedral, or in any publick Place; but he was diſpenc'd with upon other Occaſions. * If Hooper could conform thus far, one would think there ſhould be little Occaſion for a Diſpenſation. Beſides if he believ'd the Epiſcopal Habit ſinful, which way could he reconcile himſelf to the wearing it at all? If he did not, what made him ſcruple appearing in it upon any cuſtomary Occaſion? Why did he affect a Singularity againſt the Uſages of the Church, and give a Preſident of Exception? * Fox is diſpleas'd with Hooper for yielding in this point: He rallies him for his Conformity, repreſents him as a Player, and paſſes an aukward jeſt upon his Habit.

* Biſhop Burnet pt. 2*d.* p. 166.

* Fox vol. 3. p. 147.

Upon the Deprivation of Heath Biſhop of Worceſter, Hooper held the See in Commendam with his own. This gave his Enemies a Handle to report him to Diſadvantage. They wondred a Man that had his Conſcience ſo lately embaraſs'd with little matters, could reconcile himſelf to Two Sees; but 'tis thought Hooper was not much the Richer for his double Preferment. The Courtiers 'tis likely found him paſſive in parting with the Revenues, and took care to eaſe him of the Imputation of an avaritious Prelate. Latimer had preach'd againſt Sacrilege, and therefore little of this Complyance could be expected from him: This 'tis probable, was one Reaſon of his not being reſtor'd to his Biſhoprick upon Heaths Removal. But whether Latimer was overlook'd upon this Motive, or whether he declin'd the Exerciſe of his Epiſcopal Character, is ſomewhat uncertain.

Endeavours to bring the Princeſs Mary to the Reformation but without Succeſs.

Great Endeavours, as has been already obſerv'd, had been uſed to bring the Princeſs Mary from the Church of Rome, but as it happen'd, no Arguments or Methods of Application could make an Impreſſion. 'Tis likely Cranmers pronouncing her Mothers Marriage void, might give her an Averſion to the Reformation. As for her Title to the Crown, 'twas not concern'd in this Diſpute: Whether the Divorce was lawful or not, ſhe ſtood next upon the Succeſſion: The Crown was deviſ'd to her by her Fathers Will, who by Act of Parliament, was impower'd to diſpoſe of it, either by Letters Patent, or his laſt Will and Teſtament. However, as her Education had given her a Præpoſſeſſion, ſo 'tis likely her Inclination might ſtand for the Belief and Ceremonies formerly receiv'd. Thus ſhe kept up the Roman Religion in her Family, and permitted more than her Servants to be preſent at the Maſs. This being conſtrued an Exceſs of Liberty, Mallet and Barclay her Two Chaplains were committed: She complains of this Uſage in a Letter to the Lords of the Council, but receiv'd no ſatisfactory Return.

This Treatment it ſeems, making her willing to quit the Kingdom, a Deſign was laid to convey her into Flanders. The Regent of the low Countries had hired one Scipper to cruize upon the Coaſt of Eſſex, to come aſhoar under Pretence of victualling his Ship, and take her on Board: There was likewiſe a Commotion concerted in that County to amuſe the People, and cover her Eſcape. (m) But this Enterprize being diſcover'd by the King of France to the Engliſh Reſident, proved abortive. For now the King being inform'd of the Practice, order'd the putting out ſome Men of War, marched down ſome Troops under the Command of Sir John Gates to ſecure the Coaſt, and ſent for the Princeſs to Court; ſhe complied with great Unwillingneſs: And to give her a farther Mortification, her chief Servants Inglefield, Walgrave, and Rocheſter, were ſent to the Tower. When ſhe was brought to the King he told her ſhe had been indulg'd the Liberty of having Maſs a great while, in hopes that Time and Argument might recover her to a better Perſwaſion: But now perceiving her reſolv'd to continue in her Errors, he ſhould be oblig'd to take other Meaſures, and recal his Indulgence. The Princeſs replied, Her Soul was God's, and that ſhe would neither change her Faith, nor diſſemble in her Practice. The King anſwer'd he did not intend to force her Belief, but only to reſtrain her in the outward Profeſſion: That ſhe ought to be govern'd by Authority, and live like a Subject, and not diſturb the Kingdom by a dangerous Incompliance. After this Diſcourſe ſhe was order'd to continue with the King, but neither Mallet, or any other Chaplains were permitted acceſs to her.

This Reſtraint upon the Princeſs was highly reſented by the Emperor, who ſent an Embaſſador to England, and threatned the King with a War, in caſe his Couſin the Princeſs Mary was denied Liberty of Conſcience. The Lords of the Council were very inclinable to gratify his Imperial Majeſty: They conſider'd a Refuſal might fall heavy upon the Engliſh Intereſt. The Merchants had Effects to a great Value in Flanders. The King had Five Hundred Quintals of Powder there, beſides other Proviſion for the War. All this they knew would be ſeiz'd, if a Rupture happen'd. The King therefore was adviſ'd by the whole Board, to relax a little, to diſpenſe with his Siſter, and let the Law ſleep for ſome time, to keep fair with the Emperor. The King being ſtrongly averſe to the Religion formerly receiv'd, and having more Conſcience than Politicks, refuſed the Expedient. Upon this the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London were appointed to try how far they could work upon his Reſolution. The Point was argued with all the Advantage they could give it, and at laſt to come cloſe to the Queſtion, they told him tho' the licenſing what was ſinful was a Sin, yet a temporary Connivance might be allow'd, where there was hopes of reforming the Party. This Diſtinction was too fine for the King's Conſcience. He expreſs'd himſelf with a great deal of Concern, broke out into Tears, and declar'd he was reſolv'd to run the utmoſt Hazards, rather than give way to ſo ſtrange a Permiſſion. The Biſhops tho' ſorry to find the King ſo unalterable in his Judgment, were not ill pleas'd with ſuch Indications of Piety in ſo young a Perſon.

Hayward.

By the way, this Principle upon which the King denied the Lady Mary the Exerciſe of her Religion, makes all Toleration of Diſſenters unlawful. For without doubt 'tis a Sin to diſobey our Lawful Spiritual Guides, and continue in a State of Separation from the Church; from the Church I ſay where no exceptionable Terms of Communion are requir'd.

The King being not to be remov'd from his Opinion, the Council thought it proper to diſmiſs the Emperors Embaſſador in the moſt obliging manner the Caſe would bear. They acquainted him the King would ſhortly ſend a Reſident to the Emperors Court, with full Inſtructions to ſettle a right Underſtanding between both Princes. And not long after Dr. Wotton was diſpatch'd into Germany upon this Affair. "He was to deſire the Emperor not to concern himſelf ſo deep in this matter, to put him in mind that as the Lady Mary was his Imperial Majeſty's Couſin, ſo ſhe was the King's Siſter, and his Subject too: That ſince the King was a Soveraign Prince, 'twas ſomewhat ſingular the Emperor ſhould interpoſe in his Government, over-rule his Laws, and preſcribe to him in “ the Management of his Subjects. Notwithſtanding the King was willing to practice by the Emperors Preſident, in tolerating a different Religion, and ready to allow the ſame Liberties of Worſhip to the Emperors Subjects, which the Engliſh receiv'd in the Dominions of that Prince.

An Alliance with France.

The King perceiving himſelf upon cold terms with the Emperor, thought it adviſeable to make an Alliance with France; and having receiv'd ſome hints at the Treaty of Boulogne, that the Overture of a Marriage would not be unacceptable, 'twas reſolv'd to try the Diſpoſition of that Court. To this purpoſe, the Marqueſs of Northampton, the Biſhop of Ely, Secretary Smith, and ſome other Gentlemen of Diſtinction belonging to the Court are furniſh'd with a publick Character. And to make the Embaſſy more ſplendid, the Earls of Arundel, Rutland, and Ormond, the Lords Liſle, Fitzwater, Abergaveny, Bray, with ſeveral other Perſons of Condition, went along with them. The Marqueſs at their firſt Audience, preſented the French King with the Order of the Garter. After this the Biſhop of Ely in a ſhort Speech declar'd how deſirous his Maſter was to cultivate his Friendſhip with that Monarch, and that he had ſomething of moment to propoſe relating to that matter.

The French King order'd the Cardinal of Lorrain, the Conſtable Chaſtillon, the Duke of Guiſe, and ſome other Perſons of Quality to manage the Treaty.

The Engliſh began with their old Demand of the Queen of Scots. To this the French anſwer'd, they had loſt too much Blood and Treaſure to part with her upon any Terms; and beſides, her Marriage with the Dauphine had been long ſince concluded. The Engliſh finding this Point impracticable, propoſed a Match between King Edward and the Lady Elizabeth, Eldeſt Daughter of France. This Motion was well receiv'd by the French Commiſſioners: However, they threw in this Condition, that neither Party ſhould be bound till the Lady was Twelve Years of Age. The adjuſting the Portion was ſomewhat more difficult. The Engliſh demanding Fifteen Hundred Thouſand, and the French offering no more than Two Hundred Thouſand Crowns. That Summ was at laſt accepted, and an Embaſſy agreed to be ſent into England, to ſettle the Joynture, and finiſh the remaining Articles; all which was perform'd, and the Alliance concluded at London. The Council Book gives a farther Account of the perfecting this Alliance in theſe Words.

Hayward

This Day the Lord Admiral being return'd out of France, deliver'd to the Lords the Ratification of the Marriage, between the King's Majeſty and the Lady Elizabeth, the French King's Daughter, under the Great Seal of France. And it was accorded that the ſame Treaty ſhould be deliver'd to the Lord Treaſurer, to be by him repoſ'd, in the Treaſury of the Exchequer, to remain there of Record in ſafe keeping.

This cloſe Correſpondence with France, ſet the Kingdom more at Eaſe, and encourag'd to a farther Reformation: For now we were reinforc'd to a balance of Strength againſt any Attack from the Emperor. Notwithſtanding the Advances made in the Engliſh Churches, as to other matters, there was yet no Syſtem of Doctrine form'd for a Standard of Communion. 'Tis true ſomething of this kind might be collected from the Homilies and Common-Prayer-Book. But this did not diſcover the Churches Senſe in many important Points, nor reach to all the Controverſies then on foot. The ſcrupling the Sacerdotal Habit, and the Privileges granted to John Alaſco's Congregation, awaken'd a diſputing Humour, diſturb'd the publick Harmony, and diſſerv'd the Authority of the Church. 'Tis thought likewiſe the turning the Altars into Tables, abated the Peoples Regard for the Holy Sacrament, and had no good Effect on their Devotion. And to make this ſolemn Myſtery go leſs in the Peoples Eſteem, John Alaſco's Book in Defence of ſitting at the Communion, may be ſuppoſ'd to contribute. While the Altars continued, there was no occaſion to preſcribe the People the Poſture for receiving: They kneel'd of courſe, and as they wanted no Direction, ſo neither was there any Appointment in the Rubrick touching this matter. But now John Alaſco's Congregation ſitting, and the Figure of a Table having a leſs Air of Solemnity, made it more neceſſary to ſet them a Rule. Beſides, the Clergy were divided in their Opinions, and ſomewhat unreſolv'd at what Place of the Holy Table they were to officiate. 'Twas thought fit therefore a Rubrick ſhould be made to determine this matter.

The Common-Prayer-Book review'd.

But much greater Alterations than this, were now coming forward. The Common-Prayer-Book was to be review'd; Calvin Bucer, and Peter Martyr, by making Exceptions againſt the Service eſtabliſh'd, had their ſhare in bringing on this Change. Calvin, who thought himſelf wiſer than the Antient Church, and fit to dictate Religion to all Countries in Chriſtendom, had taken no ſmall Pains in this matter. Something of this kind has been obſerv'd already in his Letter to the Protector: He continued ſtill to intermeddle, and ſollicit for his own Fancy, as appears by ſeveral other Epiſtles. In his Letter to Bullinger he takes notice of his interpoſing in Hoopers Caſe, and that he did not approve the Rochet and Cap in the Epiſcopal Habit, tho' he would not have had Hooper gone quite ſo far in his Oppoſition. (n) In another of his Letters to Cranmer, he ſpeaks diſgracefully of the Engliſh Reformation: “ That there was ſo much Popery and intolerable Stuff ſtill remaining, that the pure Worſhip of God was not only weaken'd, but in a manner ſtifled, and overlaid with it. * This Letter, tho' there is no Date printed, ſeems to have been written after the Book of Articles was drawn, and therefore probably after the Review of the Common-Prayer. That the Time may be thus reckoned ſeems pretty plain by his congratulating the Engliſh for coming to a State or Settlement in Religion, that by this means the People would not float any longer, nor be at a Loſs about Belief or Practice. The Learned Heylin cites another of Calvins Letters to the King, in which he acquaints his Highneſs, that a great many Things were ſtill out of Order in England, and ſtood in need of a farther Reformation. (o)

*Quæ non obſcurat modo ſed propemodum obruat verum & genuinum Dei cultum. Id. page 135.

And as this Hiſtorian continues, Calvin being apprehenſive he might not paſs altogether for an Oracle with the Council and Biſhops, tryed his Intereſt in other Places, and puſh'd his Deſign by his Agents in the Court, the Country, and the Univerſities. Bucer was a ſtrong Second to Calvin, and what Efforts he made has been ſeen already. Peter Martyr agreed agreed to Bucer's Amendments, as appears by his Letter in which there are ſome remarkable Paſſages. For the purpoſe: "He gives God Thanks for making himſelf, and Bucer, inſtrumental in putting the Biſhops in mind of the exceptionable Places in the Common-Prayer. That Archbiſhop Cranmer told him they had met about this Buſineſs, and concluded on a great many Alterations: But what thoſe Corrections were, Cranmer did not acquaint him, neither durſt he take the Freedom to enquire: But that which pleaſes me not a little, continues Martyr, Sir John Cheek acquaints me, that if the Biſhops refuſe to conſent to the altering what's neceſſary, the King is reſolv'd to do it himſelf, and recommend that Affair at the next Seſſion of Parliament. (p)

Theſe foreign Divines had gain'd the Eſteem of ſome of the Engliſh Biſhops ſo far, that in the laſt years Convocation there was a Conteſt in the upper Houſe concerning ſome controverted Paſſages in the Common-Prayer-Book. For inſtance, ſome Queſtions were mov'd concerning the Holy Days abrogated and continued by that Book. The Words uſed at the giving the Bread, and ſome other Circumſtances relating to the Holy Euchariſt, came under Debate. The lower Houſe had lately receiv'd a Meſſage from the Biſhops to conſider this matter, and when their Anſwer was requir'd, they acquainted the upper Houſe by the Prolocutor, that they had not as yet ſufficiently conſider'd the Queſtions, but that in the following Seſſion they would report the Senſe of the Houſe to their Lordſhips. But what Account was return'd does not appear in the Acts of that Convocation, there being nothing but the Paſſage already mention'd left upon Record. (g)

Some Differences between the Firſt and Second Liturgies.

To proceed, the Common-Prayer-Book was brought to a Review, and alter'd to the ſame Form in which it ſtands at preſent, ſome little Variations for clearing Ambiguities excepted. The Differences between the firſt and Second Liturgy have been partly obſerv'd already, therefore I ſhall be more brief upon this occaſion. However to mention ſomething in the Office of the Communion, the Ten Commandments were added in the Beginning. This is ſuppos'd to be done to awaken the Conſciences of the Congregation. There was likewiſe a Confeſſion and Abſolution added in the beginning of the Morning and Evening Prayer. The reſt of the Changes conſiſt moſtly in diſcharging ſeveral Rites and Parts of the Service retain'd in the former Book.

For the purpoſe, the Uſe of Oyl and the Sign of the Croſs was thrown out of the Office of Confirmation. There is no Liberty left for extreme Unction at the Viſitation of the Sick. The Prayers for Perſons deceas'd in the Communion Service, and the Office of Burial are expung'd. And ſome remarkable Paſſages in the Conſecration of the Euchariſt, together with the Uſe of the Croſs upon that occaſion are omitted. The Introites or Pſalms in that Office are likewiſe left out.

In this new Common-Prayer-Book. there was a Rubrick inſerted for kneeling at the Holy Euchariſt. By this Direction it was declar'd, that the Poſture of kneeling was retain'd for a Signification of our humble and grateful Acknowledgment of the Benefits of Chriſt, therein given to all worthy Receivers, and for the avoiding ſuch Profanation and Diſorder in the Holy Communion as might otherwiſe enſue, yet leaſt this Geſture ſhould by any Perſons, either out of Ignorance and Infirmity, or out of Malice and Obſtinacy, be miſconſtrued and deprav'd; it is here declar'd, that thereby no Adoration is intended, or ought to be done, either to the Sacramental Bread and Wine there bodily receiv'd, or unto any corporal Preſence of Chriſt's natural Fleſh and Blood. For the Sacramental Bread and Wine remain ſtill in their very natural Subſtances, and therefore may not be adored, (for that were Idolatry to be abhorr'd of all Faithful Chriſtians) and the natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Chriſt are in Heaven, and not here; it being againſt the Truth of Chriſt's natural Body, to be at one Time in more Places than in one.

This Rubrick was order'd to be left out of the Common-Prayer-Book in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, to prevent giving Offence to ſome People otherwiſe inclinable to the Communion of the Church of England. But ſince the Reſtoration of King Charles the Second, ſome People either of weak Judgments, or contentious Humours, excepted to the Poſture of kneeling, as if ſome dangerous Superſtition might be cover'd by it; to ſatisfy theſe Scruples the Church thought fit to condeſcend ſo far as to reſtore the Rubrick of King Edwards Reign above-mention'd.

There is another material Difference between the Two Books at the Delivery of the conſecrated Elements, the Form in the Firſt Book ſtands thus.

The Body of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt which was given for thee, preſerve thy Body and Soul unto Everlaſting Life. In the Second Book thus. Take and eat this in Remembrance that Chriſt died for thee, and feed on him in thy Heart by Faith with Thanſgiving. At the giving the Cup the Words in the firſt Book are theſe. The Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt which was ſhed for thee, preſerve thy Body and Soul unto Everlaſting Life. The Second Book ſtands thus. Drink this in Remembrance Chriſt's Blood was ſhed for thee, and be Thankful. To create a greater Reverence for the Holy Euchariſt on the one Hand, and prevent Miſconſtruction on the other, the Church of England has now taken in the Firſt and the Second Book, and added both the Forms in this Part of the Solemnity.

Archbiſhop Cranmer draws up a Book of Articles of Religion.

The ſettling the Articles was the next material Occurrence in the Church that happen'd this Year. Archbiſhop Cranmer together with Ridley, had the Principal Direction in this Affair. For this Year he receiv'd an Order from the King and Council to draw a Book of Articles for preſerving the Peace and Unity of the Church. The Archbiſhop is ſaid to have executed the Order, and ſtruck out a Syſtem. This Draught he put into the Hands of ſeveral Biſhops to be farther examin'd. Thus the matter reſted till the next Year, when the Council wrote to the Archbiſhop, to deliver in the Articles: They were ſent accordingly, and ſoon after return'd to Cranmer, who digeſted them to a better Method, diſtinguiſh'd them with Titles, and threw in ſome ſupplemental Paſſages where they ſeem'd too ſhort. Not long after this, he waited on the King with the Book, and deſir'd it might be publiſh'd with the Advantage of his Highneſs his Authority. The Articles being left with the King and Council, a Letter was directed to Harley, Bill, Horn, Grindal, Perne, and Knox, to conſider certain Articles (which without Queſtion muſt be theſe) and make a Report of their Opinion. By the way the Firſt Four of theſe Divines were the Kings Chaplains in ordinary. And being eminent for their Talent in the Pulpit, were order'd for itinerant Preachers, and to go a Circuit as it were, for the Inſtruction of the People. They wereSix in all, who were ſelected for the Buſineſs of preaching. Two of them were to be always at Court. The other Four were to execute their Charge in the manner following. In the Firſt Year that is One Thouſand Five Hundred Fifty One, two of them were to travel into Wales, and the other two into Lancaſhire. The next Year, two had the Marches of Scotland aſſign'd them, and two went into Yorkſhire: The Third Year two of them preach'd in Devonſhire, and two in Hampſhire: And the Fourth Year, two in Norfolk, and two in Kent and Suſſex. (s)

(s) Biſhop Burnet pt. 2d. p. 171.

To return to the Articles: The Archbiſhop receiv'd the Book from the Privy Council, with Orders to examine them farther, and give them the laſt Improvement of his Judgment and Pen: That being in this Condition of Advantage they might paſs the Convocation, and come abroad by the Royal Authority. The Archbiſhop having made ſome Remarks upon the Book, incloſed them in a Letter to the Lords of the Council. In his Letter he requeſted the Lords to ſollicit the King, that all the Biſhops might be impower'd to oblige their Clergy to ſubſcribe the Book. And that if this Point were gain'd, ſuch a Harmony in Religion he hop'd would follow, as could not otherwiſe be expected in many Years. (t)

The Order to the Archbiſhop for drawing the Articles happening in the Time before me, I have added the reſt for the Unity of the Relation: Tho' Part of the matter of fact did not come up till the next Year.

The Sweating Sickneſs.

This Summer the Sweating Sickneſs return'd in England, and rag'd to that degree, that in the City of London only, there died Eight Hundred a Week. This Peſtilential Diſtemper appear'd firſt in this Country in the Reign of Henry the Seventh. It ſeem'd particularly levell'd againſt the Engliſh Conſtitutions, purſued them into other Countries, and diſtinguiſh'd them for the Calamity; which beſides the breaking out of it here, might be one Reaſon of its being call'd Sudor Anglicus. The Patients when firſt ſeiz'd, ſweat plentifully. The Malignity proved frequently Mortal within Four and Twenty Hours, and ſometimes in leſs than Twelve. Women, Children, and old Men were ſeldom viſited: People in the Strength and beſt Period of their Life lay moſt expos'd to the Infection; and if they happen'd to ſleep a little after the Diſeaſe had reach'd them, they died immediately. Scarce One in a Hundred eſcap'd at firſt, till Time had farther inform'd the Phyſicians, and directed to a proper Management. The true Regimen was this: If a Man happen'd to fall ill in the Day Time, he was to lie down in his Cloaths as the Diſeaſe found him: If in the Night, he was to keep his Bed, and lie without Motion for Four and Twenty Hours. He was not to load himſelf with Cloaths ſo far as to force a Sweat, but to keep it in its natural Courſe, and prevent its being check'd: Nothing of Meat was to be taken during the Time of Danger, if the Patient could poſſibly forbear: As for Drink that which was cuſtomary to the Patient was allow'd, provided 'twas warm'd, and taken in moderate Quantities. He was to be particularly careful to keep his Limbs in the Bed, for the putting out a Hand or a Foot, was certain Death. That which was remarkably ſtrange in this Diſtemper was its hunting out the Engliſh, as it were thro' all Countries, and laying no hold of the Natives. Several Perſons of Condition were carried off with this Sickneſs, and amongſt the reſt Henry Duke of Suffolk and his Brother. They were Couſin Germans to the King, Sons to the Famous Charles Brandon, and of a very promiſing Genius. Henry the Eldeſt died firſt, and left the Title to his Brother, who did not enjoy it the length of a whole Day. And thus Henry Gray Marqueſs of Dorſet, who married Frances Eldeſt Daughter to Charles Brandon, had ſome Proſpect of the Honour, and on the Strength of this Pretenſion was ſoon after created Duke of Suffolk.

Anno Dom. 1551.

The Lady Mary ſollicits the King and Council for the Exercise of her Religion.

About this Time, there paſſing ſeveral Letters between the Privy Council and the Lady Mary, I ſhall proſecute the Remainder of that Affair. She had ſome Months ſince complained to the Council of her Chaplains Dr. Mallet and Barclays being indicted, and an Attachment awarded againſt them for ſaying Maſs in her Houſe: She remonſtrates this Uſage was a Breach of Promiſe made to the Emperors Embaſſadour. To this the Council in their Letter to her, reply, that this Engagement was made under Reſtrictions: “ That her Grace “ was only to have private Maſs in her Cloſet “ for a little Time: And that this was done “ in hopes ſhe would ſhortly be better informed. “ That during this Interval of Connivance, “ ſhe was only to have a few in cloſe “ Attendance at the Old Service. As for the “ reſt of her Family they were to be preſent “ at the Reading of the Reform'd Liturgy. “ They acquaint her Grace the Emperors “ Embaſſador preſs'd to have the Promiſe “ above-mention'd under the Broad Seal: And “ being denied this, he mov'd for the Kings “ Letter, but that was likewiſe refus'd: Not “ that there was any Intention of failing in “ the Promiſe, but that they hop'd the Princeſs “ would quickly be brought over to the Religion “ eſtabliſh'd. As to the Embaſſador, “ he was told that the licenſing any Worſhip “ againſt Orthodoxy, and known Truth, was “ a Sin againſt God. And therefore all that “ the King could do was only to ſuſpend the “ Execution of the Law, provided the Indulgence “ was made uſe of within the Compaſs “ of the Grant. They are inform'd as they “ continue, that her Grace is reſolv'd not to “ admit of any farther Debate in the Controverſy, “ nor to hear any thing offer'd againſt “ the Perſwaſion of her Education: That this “ Management looks as if ſhe was apprehenſive “ her Belief would not ſtand the Teſt of “ a thorough Examination. They add the “ Chriſtian Faith profeſs'd is the ſame in Subſtance “ as before, and that every Article of “ the Creed are common to both Communions: “ That the Difference lies in the Cermonies “ and Uſe of the Sacraments. That in theſe “ particulars, the Engliſh Reformation had “ recover'd the Worſhip to the Directions of “ Scripture, and the Uſage of the Primitive “ Church. (u)

" the Common-Prayer ſhould not be in Engliſh?
" And what Grounds ſhe can produce to juſtify the ſetting up of Images of God in the " Church?

This Letter was Written in the latter end of the Year, one Thouſand Five Hundred and Fifty, when the firſt Common-Prayer-Book was us'd and unreview'd. As to that part of the Letter which relates to Religion, 'twas Penn'd in all likelyhood by Cranmer and Ridley, who were then of the Privy Council. That 'twas drawn by one, or both of theſe Prelates, may be reaſonably concluded from their arguing ſo much at length from the Scriptures, from the Citation of the Fathers, and the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. That which I mention this is to ſhew, that the Council were then intirely ſatisfied about the firſt Common-Prayer-Book: With what Conſcience elſe could they have told the Lady Mary that we uſe, to ſpeak in their own Words, the Ceremonies, Obſervations, and Sacraments of our Religion, as the Apoſtles and firſt Fathers in the Primitive Church did? That the Princeſs Mary pleaded for later Cuſtom againſt Truth, and the Engliſh Church for Truth againſt Cuſtom.

Aug. May 2. 1551. To proceed, The Princeſs Mary wrote again to the Council, complains of Dr. Mallet's being ſent to the Tower, and inſiſts on the Promiſe made to the Emperor formerly mention'd. The Council in their Anſwer deny, there was any Promiſe that Maſs might be ſaid in her Houſe, when ſhe was not there. That Mallet and Barclay had broke the Conditions of the Indulgence: Officiated in her Abſence, and fled from Juſtice over and above.

The Princeſs Mary not ſucceeding with the Council, Addreſs'd the King. In her Letter, ſhe moves in very ſtrong and tender Expreſſions, that the Permiſſion of the Cuſtomary Worſhip, and that which was uſed in the King their Fathers Time, might be allow'd her: She repeats the Promiſe made to the Emperor by the Privy Council, and ſeems to charge them pretty plainly with denying their Ingagement, or explaining it to Inſignificancy. She puts the King gently in mind of his Minority, and that notwithſtanding his Capacity is much

August 19. greater than could be expected from his Years, yet 'tis Impoſſible he ſhould already be grown up to that pitch of Knowledge and Judgment, as to pronounce upon Matters of Religion. She Intreats therefore ſhe may be permitted to Govern her Practice by her Conſcience in things of the laſt Importance: And that this Reſpite may continue, 'till Age has qualified his Majeſty for a Judge himſelf. If this Requeſt cannot be granted, ſhe reſigns her Life, as ſhe had done once before, to the King's Pleaſure, and declares ſhe had rather Dye than go on at the Expence of a good Conſcience.

About a Week after the King's receiving this Letter, he wrote to the Princeſs, by the Lord Chancellor Rich, who with Sir Anthony Wingfield Comptroller of the Houſhold, and Sir William

August 24. Petre Secretary of State, had farther Inſtructions. By the particulars with which they were Charg'd, it appears her Three Servants abovemention'd, Rocheſter, Ingleſield, and Walgrave, were ſent to the Tower, for diſobeying the King's Orders, in not prohibiting the Houſhold from ſaying, and hearing Maſs.

But in April the next Year they were Diſcharg'd, and commanded to return to their Ladies Service.

The Buſineſs of the Lord Chancellor, Wingfield, and Petres, was to diſcharge the Maſs, and anſwer the Plea in the Princeſſes Letter. They were to acquaint her that her Requeſt of an Indulgence, with reſpect to Religion, could not be granted upon any Conſideration. And as for her offering her Life, rather than alter her Perſwaſion, The King was extreamly troubled to find her ſo far Confirm'd in a miſtaken Conſcience. However, neither himſelf, nor any of his Council, have any Intention of doing the leaſt harm to her Perſon. Theſe Courtiers, after they had ſpoken to the Princeſſes Letter, and acquainted her with the King's Reſolution, were order'd to call the Chaplains, and the reſt of the Houſhold before them, and ſtrictly forbid the firſt to ſay, or the other to hear Maſs, under the utmoſt Penalties of the Law.

She is refus'd, Id. p. 710.

In September this Year, Heath Biſhop of Worceſter, and Day Biſhop of Chicheſter, were thrown out of their Sees for their Incompliance abovementioned. They were deprived by a Commiſſion, directed to Sir Robert Cholmley Chief Baron of the Exchequer, Sir Richard Read, Richard Goderick, John Goſnold, John Oliver, Richard Ryal, all Laymen. After Judgment given, the Council ſent a Letter to the Chancellor of the Court of Augmentations, for the Seizing the Temporalities of theſe Biſhopricks to the King's Uſe. It ſeems the loſs of their Sees was not thought Puniſhment enough, therefore they were kept Priſoners in the Fleet 'till next Summer, when upon their Petition for more Liberty and Air, Day was put into the Hands of the Biſhop of Ely, and Heath was ſent to the Biſhop of Londons Cuſtody, who were ordered by the King to Treat theſe Prelates, as Charity and Diſcretion ſhould Suggeſt. *

To proceed to ſomething remarkable relating to the State. The Court had been for ſometime divided into Two Factions, the one headed by the Duke of Somerſet, and the other by the Earl of Warwick. There had been lately an Alliance made between theſe Two great Men, the Lord Liſle, the Earl of Warwick's Eldeſt Son, being Married to a Daughter of the Duke of Somerſet. (w) But this Relation was too weak to keep them upon good Terms. The Earl of Warwick 'tis ſaid, had projected beyond the Ambition of a Subject, and entertain'd a Fancy of bringing the Crown into his Family. 'Tis ſuppos'd the Illegitimating the Lady Mary, and the Lady Elizabeth, by Act of Parliament, might lead him into this Thought: But to this it may be anſwer'd, that if an Act of Parliament could diſable the Two Princeſſes from Inheriting the Crown, a ſubſequent Act which ſettled them in the Succeſſion, (x) muſt give them an unexceptionable Right: However, the Earl of Warwick's Marrying his Fourth Son, the Lord Guilford, to the Lady Jane, Eldeſt Daughter to the Duke of Suffolk; This I ſay, together with his Management afterward, confirm'd the Suſpicion. But that he had form'd a Conſpiracy againſt the Duke of Somerſet, (y) and entred into a Practiſe to deſtroy him, is no more than Conjecture: For neither the Duke of Somerſet, or any of his Party, offer'd to prove any ſuch matter. However 'tis certain the Earl of Warwick, being a Man of Reach, and of a puſhing Temper, roſe quickly to an Over-ballance, and gain'd the Aſcendant at Court. He is ſaid to have procur'd a Creation of Honours, in which himſelf and his Friends, were principally conſider'd. Gray Marqueſs of Dorſet was made Duke of Suffolk, and himſelf Duke of Northumberland: For Henry Piercy the laſt Earl of Northumberland, dying without Iſſue, his next Heirs were the Sons of Thomas Piercy, who had been attainted in the laſt Reign for the Yorkſhire Rebellion; and thus the Title ſlept, as to that Family. To go on; Pawlet Lord Treaſurer and Earl of Wiltſhire, was made Marqueſs of Wincheſter, and Sir William Herbert who Married the Marqueſs of Northampton's Siſter, was made Earl of Pembroke. At this Solemnity Secretary Cecil, and Cheek one of the King's Preceptors, were Knighted. (z)

The Duke of Somerſet had made ſome unwarrantable Efforts to recover his former greatneſs, and gone too far in his Meaſures againſt the other Party. And thus his Enemies having Trac'd his Progreſs, and furniſh'd themſelves with Evidence againſt him, he was ſent to the Tower. Sir Ralph Vane, and Sir Thomas Palmer, Sir Miles Patridge, Sir Michael Stanhope, Sir Thomas Arundel, Hammond, Newdigate, and Two Gentlemen of the Seymour's Family, were committed at the ſame Time. Palmer, Vane, and Arundel, were kept in diſtinct Apartments, to prevent concerting their Story, and impoſing upon the Council. The next Day the Dutcheſs of Somerſet, and Crane and his Wife, her Two Favorites, were likewiſe ſent to the Tower.

The Duke of Somerſet ſent to the Tower.

There was Six Weeks Interval between the Dukes Impriſonment and his Tryal. And thus the King had leaſure to ſound the Deſign, and relieve his Uncle: But whether he had Judgment to diſentangle this matter, or was altogether Governed by the Duke of Northumberland's Creatures, is ſomewhat uncertain. An unſeaſonable Amuſement happen'd to lie in his way, which might poſſibly engage the fancy of a Young Prince ſo far, as not to leave any room for much other Buſineſs.

November 2. The Queen Regent of Scotland Honorably receiv'd.

The Queen Regent of Scotland, having made her Daughter a Viſit in France, was deſirous to ſhorten her Voyage, and return Home thro' England. The King's Leave being granted at her Requeſt, ſhe came a Shore at Portſmouth, where ſhe was honourably receiv'd, and convey'd towards London. From Greenwich ſhe came by Water to St. Paul's Warf. From hence ſhe was attended to the Biſhops Palace, with a Cavalcade of Quality of both Sexes. And here ſhe was preſented by the City with Wine, and all other ſorts of Proviſion. After Two Days Repoſe, ſhe came in a Chariot to the Court at Whitehall, where ſhe was Entertain'd with the uſual Marks of Solemnity and Regard. The King ſhew'd her every thing that was valuable, either for length of Time, Curioſity, or Expence. And before ſhe took her leave, as Leſley reports, he endeavor'd to perſwade her to conſent to the Marriage between her Daughter and Himſelf, purſuant to the Overture made by the Scotch Nobility: That this would be a beneficial Alliance to both Nations: On the contrary, the diſpoſing the Young Queen to the French King's Son, would prove unſerviceable both to the French and Scotch; for he was reſolv'd to be a perpetual Enemy to whatever Prince ſhould Marry her. The Queen Regent replied, that the Protector Seymour's attacking the Scotch, and ravaging their Country in ſo unexpected a manner, was the reaſon of the engaging her Daughter to the Houſe of France. That this Engliſh General miſtook in the way of Courtſhip: That to make their Addreſſes to a Princeſs with Fire and Sword, was a rough and unuſual way of managing ſuch an Affair. That the Scotch being thus Harraſs'd by the Engliſh, were neceſſitated to apply to the French King, and to ſend the Young Princeſs thither, as it were for an Hoſtage, to gain his Protection: That ſhe was very ſorry the Juncture had almoſt brought this matter to an Iſſue, ſo much different from what his Majeſty deſired. However, ſhe promis'd to uſe her Intereſt at the French Court, to give his Highneſs Satisfaction. (a) If this Hiſtorians Relation holds good, we muſt ſuppoſe the Queen Regents Arrival in England, happen'd before the Treaty with France abovemention'd. For otherwiſe the King would not have been at Liberty to make this Motion. However, by Stow's Account, the French Treaty ſeems to have been prior to this Interview. To conclude this matter, after a very honourable Reception, this Queen was attended by Perſons of Quality the whole length of her Journy, and entertain'd by the King's Order all along at the County Charge.

While this Solemnity laſted, the Duke of Somerſet's Buſineſs ſlept, and ſeem'd to be forgotten. But now the Proſecution came on in Earneſt. And to make way for his Tryal by his Peers, he was Indicted before Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, at Guild-hall London. (b) For as Sir Edward Coke obſerves, a Peer muſt either be Indicted before Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, or elſe in the King's Bench, if the Teaſon, Miſpriſion of Treaſon, Felony, or Miſpriſion of Felony, be committed in that County where the King's Bench Sits. When he is Indicted, the King by his Commiſſion under the Great Seal, Conſtitutes ſome Peer of the Realm to be hâc Vice, Steward of England. The Commiſſion likewiſe recites the Indictment as 'tis found: And the Lord Steward is impower'd to receive the Indictment, &c. and to proceed, Secundum Legem & Conſuetudinem Angliæ: There are ſeveral other Circumſtances too long to Inſert. (c) The Indictment conſiſts of Three Branches, firſt, that he Treaſonably Endeavor'd to Depoſe the King, &c. quod falſe malitioſè & proditoriè per apertum Factum circumivit, compaſſavit, & Imaginavit, cum diverſis aliis Perſonis, Dominum Regem de ſtatu ſuo Regali deponere & deprivare. This Part of the Indictment Coke affirms was againſt Law, becauſe there is no Circumſtance ſpecified to prove the Overt Act.

The Second Branch of the Indictment reaches no farther than Felony, & ulterius Juratores prædicti præſentant, quod præfatus Edvardus Dux Somerſet, Movit & Inſtigavit complures ſubditos ipſius Domini Regis ad Inſurgendum, &c. & ad tunc, & Ibidem Felonicè ad capiendum & Impriſonandum prænobilem Johannem Comitem Warwick de privato Concilio Domini Regis. The Third Branch of the Indictment begins thus, & ulterius Juratores prædicti preſentabant, quod prædictus Edvardus, &c. that is that the Duke of Somerſet, &c. Feloniouſly moved, and incited divers of the King's Subjects to make an Inſurrection upon the Government, and to Seize, and Impriſon, the Earl of Warwick. And thus this laſt Charge is much the ſame with the Second.

Id. Entries Ibid.

The Proceſs being thus far advanc'd, the Duke was on the firſt of December brought to Weſtminſter Hall and Arraign'd. The Marqueſs of Wincheſter was Lord High Steward, he ſat under a Cloath of State, Three Degrees higher than the reſt of the Scaffolds: The Lord's Summon'd to try him, were the Twenty Seven following, The Dukes of Suffolk and Northumberland, the Marqueſs of Northampton, the Earls of Derby, Bedford, Huntington, Rutland, Bath, Suſſex, Worceſter, and Pembroke, the Vicount Hereford, the Lords Abergaveny, Audley, Wharton, Evers, Latimer, Burrough, Zouch, Stafford, Wentworth, Darcy Sturton, Windſor, Cromwel, Cobham and Bray. (e)

'Twas thought ſomewhat hard, that the Duke of Northumberland, the Earls of Northampton, and Pembroke, who were preſum'd diſaffected to the Priſoner, and againſt the firſt of which he is charg'd to have conſpir'd in the Indictment; 'twas thought ſomewhat hard I ſay, that theſe Lords ſhould be ſummon'd in the Precept for the Tryal. However, here was nothing done againſt Law, for 'tis in the Princes Pleaſure to Summon what Peers he pleaſes, provided the Number exceeds Twelve, neither has the Priſoner the liberty of Challenging any of his Judges.

The Charge againſt him.

To proceed, the Duke of Somerſet was charg'd with making a Party, for getting himſelf declar'd Protector in the next Parliament. This was poſitively affirm'd, by the Earl of Rutland, and ſo faintly anſwer'd by the Duke, that it ſeem'd true. (f) Tho' this might be a ſtrain of Ambition, there was nothing in it that could either touch his Life or Liberty. But the other Articles went much deeper: There was Evidence produc'd, that this Duke lately contriv'd an Entertainment at the Lord Pagets Houſe, near St. Clement's in the Strand, that the Duke of Northumberland, the Marqueſs of Northampton, and the Earl of Pembroke, were to be invited thither, and either ſet upon by the way, or Aſſaſſinated at Dinner: And that the Priſoner had planted a Hundred Men in Somerſet Houſe, to Execute the Murther. This Plot was firſt confeſs'd by Crane and his Wife, and afterwards own'd by Sir Thomas Palmer before the Lord's of the Council. He was likewiſe Charg'd with holding ſome Conſults for raiſing Forces in the North, and for attacking the Gensd'armes or Guards; that Two Thouſand Foot, and a Hundred Horſe, were ready for this purpoſe. And when the Scheme was thus far Executed, the Duke was to ride thro' the City, and Proclaim Liberty, in order to raiſe the Burghers. All this was Confirm'd by Crane, with an Additional diſcovery, that the Earl of Arundel was privy to the Attempt, upon which Evidence the Earl, and the Lord Paget, were ſent to the Tower. And laſtly Hammond, a Servant of the Dukes, being Examin'd, confeſs'd his Maſter's Chamber had been ſtrongly guarded at Greenwich, to prevent his Perſon being Surpriz'd.

Heylin and Biſhop Burnet.

Thus there were Five main Articles in the Charge: Firſt, a deſign to Kill the Lords abovemention'd, and having Men in a readineſs at his Houſe for that intent. Secondly, An Attempt concerted for attacking the Gens d'arms. Thirdly, A contrivance for levying Men in the North. Fourthly, A Practiſe for raiſing the City of London; and laſtly a Reſolution of reſiſting an Arreſt by the Government, and keeping a Guard at Greenwich for that purpoſe.

The King's Council inlarg'd upon the Proof, and aggravated the Crime according to the cuſtomary manner: And if Fox reports them right, (g) they ſaluted the Duke roughly, and run out into Intemperate Language. They argued that the lodging Men at his Houſe, with the intention of killing the Duke of Northumberland was Treaſon, by an Act againſt unlawful Aſſemblies, made in the Third Year of the preſent Reign: That to concert the Aſſaſſinating the Lords was Felony: That to reſolve upon reſiſting his Attachment was Felony: That to raiſe the City of London was Treaſon, and to Aſſault the Lords Felony: (h)

The Dukes Defence.

To this the Duke anſwer'd, that he never had any deſign of raiſing the North, but that upon ſome Reports and Apprehenſions of Danger, he ſent to Sir William Herbert to ſtand his Friend: That he had no intention of killing the Duke of Northumberland, or any other Lord, but mention'd it only, and afterwards determin'd the contrary. That the charging the Gend'arms, a Body of Nine Hundred Men, with a Hundred of his own, was an Enterpriſe fit for a Man out of his Wits; And beſides, if he had prevail'd, 'twould have ſignified nothing as to the ſucceſs of the Main. This part of the Evidence, being therefore altogether without Colour or Senſe, might reaſonably ſhock the Credit of the Reſt. That he never concerted the raiſing of London, and thought upon it no otherwiſe than a Place of Security. That by the keeping Men in his Chamber at Greenwich, 'twas plain he meant no harm, becauſe, when 'twas in his power, he made no uſe of them to any ſuch purpoſe. He urg'd ſeveral things againſt the Witneſſes, whoſe Examinations were only Read, without their appearing: He deſir'd theſe Men might be brought into Court, and that he might have the liberty of confronting them. This, conſidering his Quality, he ſaid, was no more than a reaſonable Requeſt. Id.

Sir Edward Cokes Remarks upon the Indictment.

Thus we ſee the Duke went a great way in his Confeſſion; but whether far enough to reach his Life, is not ſo clear. By the Statute upon which the Indictment is grounded, 'tis enacted that if any Perſon or Perſons, by the ringing of any Bell, &c. or by malitious ſpeaking or uttering of any Words, or making any Outcry, &c. or by any other Deed or Act ſhall Raiſe, or cauſe to be rais'd, or aſſembled any Perſons, to the Number of Twelve or above, to the intent that the ſame Perſons ſhould do, commit, or put in Ure, any of the Acts or things abovemention'd; (Whereof to take, and Impriſon, any of the King's moſt Honourable Privy Council, was one.) And the Perſons to the Number of Twelve or above, ſo Rais'd or Aſſembl'd, after Requeſt and Commandment, (in ſuch ſort as in the Act is Preſcrib'd,) ſhall make their abode, or continue together, as is aforeſaid, (in the Act) or unlawfully perpetrate, do commit or put in Ure, any of the Acts or Things abovesaid. That then all and ſingular Perſons, by whoſe ſpeaking, Deed, Act, or any other the means above ſpecified, any Perſons to the Number of Twelve or above, ſhall be rais'd and aſſembl'd for the doing, committing or putting in Ure any of the Acts or Things abovemention'd, ſhall be adjudg'd for his ſo ſpeaking, and ſo doing a Felon, and ſhall ſuffer Execution of Death, as in caſe of Felony; And ſhall loſe his Benefit of Sanctuary and Clergy. (i)

From hence Sir Edward Coke takes notice, that this Noblemans Attainder is miſreported by ſome of our Hiſtorians, and in ſome Points contrary to Law. Firſt, whereas it has been ſaid, he might have had his Clergy upon Demand, this is plainly a miſtake: For the Benefit of the Clergy is expreſly ouſted by the Act abovemention'd. Secondly, That he was not indicted for going about, &c. the Death of the Earl of Warwick, then of the King's Privy Council, but only for his taking or Impriſonment, and that therefore could not be indicted upon the the Statute of 3 H. 7. as ſome have Imagin'd. To which I may add that none but Commoners are liable to be tried for any thing done againſt that Statute of Henry the Seventh, Sir Edward Coke remarks in the Third Place, that the Dukes Indictment, is altogether inſufficient, for it purſues not the Words or Matter of the ſaid Branch of the ſaid Act, as by comparing of them it manifeſtly appeareth. He means I ſuppoſe that theſe Inſurrections or Conſpiracies were neither Treaſon nor Felony, unleſs the Perſons ſo gather'd together, had refuſ'd to diſperſe upon Proclamation made by the Sheriff, or ſome Juſtice of Peace in the King's Name: And that this was the Dukes Caſe is neither laid in the Indictment, nor pleaded by the Council: and the Duke's omitting to inſiſt upon this, is reckon'd by our Learned Church Hiſtorian, an overlooking the beſt thing in his Defence. (k) That ſuch Proclamation was not made, this Author thinks very plain; For if it had, the Duke would either have obey'd it, or tryed his Fortune by Force.

(h) Bp. Burnet Hiſt. Ref. pt. 2d. p. 180.

The Branch of the Statute with which the Duke was moſt preſs'd.

But neither this Learned Hiſtorian, nor Sir Edward Coke, ſeem to have conſider'd that Branch of the Statute which lay heavieſt upon the Duke. 'Tis this; And furthermore it is ordein'd and enacted, by the Auctoritie aforeſaid, that if any Perſon or Perſons, after the ſaid xii day of February, by open word or dede, ſhall procure, move, or ſtirre any other Perſon or Perſons to ariſe, or make any trayterous or rebellious Aſſemblie, to the Intent to do, or exerciſe, or put in ure any of the Thinges abovementioned; That then every Perſon ſo procuring, moving, or ſtirring any other, ſhall therefore be demed, and adjudged a Felon, and ſuffre Pains of Death, and forfeite his Goods, Catalles, Lands and Tenements, as in Caſes of Felony, and ſhall alſo leeſe the Benefit of his Clergye and Sanctuarye. (l)

This Part of the Statute ſeems to preſs the Duke much harder than the other: For here the bare moving and ſtirring any Perſon to make a rebellious Aſſembly, in order to kill or impriſon any of the Lords of the Council is declar'd Felony, without the Benefit of the Clergy: Here's no actual Inſurrections, nor any Proclamation to diſperſe them required, to make the Penalty inure. And to apply the Statute to the Caſe: By Palmer and Crane's Evidence it appears, this Duke had concerted the Murder of the Duke of Northumberland, the Marqueſs of Northampton, and the Earl of Pembroke: He confeſs'd himſelf in his Defence that he had ſpoken of this Matter: Now to what purpoſe ſhould he mention ſo dangerous and criminal an Enterprize, unleſs it was to engage Aſſiſtance, and make it practicable? That he had no good meaning towards theſe Lords, appears by his asking their Pardon (m) when his Tryal was over. To ſet this matter in a fuller Light, I ſhall tranſcribe the King's Letter to his Favourite Barnaby Fitzpatricke.

EDWARD.

“Little hath ben done ſince you went, but the Duke of Somerſet's Arraignment for felonious Treaſon, and the Muſters of the new erected Gendarmery. (n) The Duke the 1ſt of this Month was brought to Weſtminſter Hall, where ſat as Judge, or High Steward, my Lord Treaſurer, Twenty Six Lords of the Parliament went on his Tryal, Indictments were read, which were ſeveral; ſome for Treaſon, ſome for Traiterous Felony. The Lawyers read how Sir Thomas Palmer had confeſſed, that the Duke once minded, and made him privy, to raiſe the North, after to call the Duke of Northumberland, the Marqueſs of Northampton, and the Earl of Pembroke, to a Feaſt, and to have ſlain them. And to do this thing (as it was to be thought) had levied Men a Hundred at his Houſe at London, which was ſcanned to be Treaſon, becauſe unlawful Aſſemblies for ſuch Purpoſes, was Treaſon by an Act made the laſt Seſſions. Alſo how the Duke of Somerſet minded to ſtay the Horſes of the Gendarmery, and to raiſe London. Crane confeſs'd alſo the murdering of the Lords in a Banquet. Sir Miles Partridge alſo confeſs'd the raiſing of London. Hamman his Man having a Watch at Greenwich of Twenty weapon'd Men to reſiſt, if he had been arreſted, and this confeſſed both Partridge and Palmer. He anſwered, that when he levied Men at his Houſe, he meant no ſuch thing, but only to defend himſelf. The reſt very barely anſwer'd. After debating the matter from Nine of the Clock till Three, the Lords went together, and there weighing that the matter ſeemed only to touch their Lives, altho' afterwards more Inconvenience might have followed, and that Men might think they did it of Malice, acquitted him of High Treaſon, and condemn'd him of Felony, which he ſeem'd to have confeſs'd. He hearing the Judgment, fell down on his Knees, and thanked them for his open Tryal. After he asked Pardon of the Duke of Northumberland, the Marqueſs, &c. whom he confeſſed he meant to deſtroy, altho' before he ſwore vehemently to the contrary. Thus fare you well.

From Weſtminſter the 20*th of* December, An. Dom. 1551.

He is acquitted of Treaſon, but found guilty of Felony.

When the Duke had gone thro' his Defence, the Peers withdrew, and after a long Debate, acquitted him of Treaſon: But the greater Number found him guilty of Felony: Thus our Learned Church Hiſtorian. (o) But by the Record it appears, that not only the greater Number, but all his Judges agreed in their Verdict againſt him. Et ulterius quilibet eorum ſeparatim dixerunt, quod prædictus Edvardus nuper Dux Somerſ. de Feloniis prædictis ſibi ſeparatim in Formâ prædictâ ſuperius impoſitis, fuit culpabilis, &c. When the Duke receiv'd Sentence, he thank'd the Lords for the fair Uſage at his Tryal, ask'd the Duke of Northumberland, and the other Two Noblemen above-mention'd Pardon, for his ill Intentions towards them. Then intreated his Life might be ſpar'd, and his Wife and Children gently dealt with.

'Tis the Cuſtom at the Tryal of a Peer for Treaſon, to have the Axe carried before him to the Bar, with the Edge towards the Priſoner, and in caſe of Acquittal, the Edge is turn'd the other way at his coming back. The Duke of Somerſet having this good Sign at his coming out of Weſtminſter Hall, the People concluding him ſafe, ſhouted ſo loud, that the Noiſe was heard as far as Long-acre:

(q) Stow & Godwin Annal.

(q) But when they heard of the Diſtinction between Felony and Treaſon, and that the Duke miſcarried under the latter Charge, their Satiſfaction was over, and they diſcover'd a different Paſſion.

There ſeems to have been one Circumſtance of Hardſhip in this Nobleman's Tryal; and that is, that the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes againſt him, were only read in Court: That he had not the Liberty of confronting them, and putting what Queſtions he thought proper. 'Twas generally believ'd, ſays our Learned Church Hiſtorian, that all this pretended Conſpiracy upon which he was Condemn'd was only a Forgery. (r) But if this was the Caſe, what made the Duke betray his Innocence, and make ſo dangerous a Confeſſion? However, it may not be amiſs to examine the Reaſons of this Conjecture. The firſt is both Palmer and Crane, and the reſt of the Witneſſes who had been made Priſoners on the pretence of this Plot, were ſoon after diſcharg'd. But how does this prove the Plot no more than a Practice againſt the Duke of Somerſet? Is it not cuſtomary to give Conſpirators a Pardon upon making a Diſcovery? and diſcharge them for the Merit of their Evidence? The Hiſtorians next Reaſon for proving the Witneſſes perjur'd, is ſtill more unſerviceable. 'Twas generally thought, continues this Gentleman, that all was an Artifice of Palmer*'s, who had put the Duke of* Somerſet in Fears of his Life, and ſo got him to gather Men about him for his own Preſervation; and that he afterwards being taken with him, ſeem'd thro' Fear to acknowledge all that which before he had contrived. But according to this account, if Palmer was ſo inſidious as to lay a Snare, 'tis plain the Duke fell into it, for he gather'd Men about him for his own Preſervation: That is at the loweſt, he reſolv'd to make uſe of Force, and defend himſelf againſt the Government, and if ſo, how can the Depoſitions to prove the Plot be reck'ned a Forgery?

Remarks upon his Tryal.

Ibid.

'Tis plain by the King's Letter and Journal, that he was fully perſwaded of his Uncle's Guilt, and therefore left him to the Law. However to prevent his being work'd to a Tenderneſs, 'tis ſaid the Duke of Somerſet's Enemies made it their Buſineſs to divert his Highneſs with Balls, Tiltings, Reviewing his Troops, and ſuch other entertaining Amuſements, which they thought would go fartheſt in his Fancy. And thus tho' the Duke liv'd almoſt Two Months after Judgment given, there was little or nothing done for his Preſervation. In ſhort, an Order being ſign'd at laſt for his Execution, he was brought to the Scaffold on Tower-hill, where his Speech was to this effect.

His Speech upon the Scaffold.

“ He declares he had never offended the King either by Word or Action, and that he had always been as true to the Government, as any Subject whatſoever: But ſince he was legally condemn'd, he owns himſelf ſubject to the Conſtitution, is willing to ſuffer in Obedience to the Laws, and gives God Thanks he had Time for Recollection and Repentance allow'd him. He puts the Company in mind how much he employ'd his Authority in promoting the Intereſt of the Chriſtian Religion. That he now received great Satiſfaction for his having ſome ſhare in bringing Belief and Worſhip to the preſent Condition, and recovering them to a ſtrong Reſemblance of the Primitive Church. This he accounts a great Bleſſing, and exhorts the People to receive it as ſuch, and anſwer it in their Practice: And that unleſs this was done, greater Calamities than what had been felt already, would follow. (s)

(s)Holinſhead pag. 1068.

When the Duke had proceeded thus far, the People were much frighted, and ſeiz'd with an extraordinary Pannick. Now becauſe the reaſon of this Conſternation has been miſtaken, and conſtrued to a Prodigy, I ſhall give the Reader an Account of it from Stow the Annaliſt, who was then upon the Spot. The People, ſays this Hiſtorian, of a certain Hamlet, who were ordered to attend the Lieutenant of the Tower by ſeven of the Clock, came thro' the Poſtern, and perceiving the Duke on the Scaffold ſooner than they expected; the foremoſt of them called out to the reſt to mend their Pace: Theſe Men ruſhing forward to the Scaffold with Bills and Halberts, made the Company, which firſt ſaw them, imagine ſome Forces were advancing to reſcue the Duke: Upon this, they cryed out Away, Away; This Alarm made the reſt of the People run off with great Confuſion, inſomuch that many of them fell into the Tower Ditch; And thoſe which ſtayed upon the Hill concluded a Pardon had been brought. And having their Heads almoſt turned with the Surprize, ſome fancied it Thunder'd, ſome ſaid there was an Earthquake, and that the Ground rumbled under them; but all this Noiſe was nothing more than what they had made themſelves, by the Trampling of their Feet. (t)

The People in a Pannick, and why?

(t) Stow Annal. pag. 607

Fox, in relating this Story, ſeems to write under the Impreſſion of the Terror. It happen'd here, ſays he, as the Evangeliſts write, it did unto Chriſt, when as the Officers of the High Prieſt and Phariſees coming with Weapons to take him, being aſtonied, ran backwards and fell to the Ground. (u) Thus this Martyrologiſt brings in a Miracle to atteſt the Duke's Innocence, and draws an odd, not to ſay a profane, Parallel, between his Caſe, and our Saviour's: And thus we ſee to what injudicious Exceſſes a Byaſs of Inclination may carry a Writer.

Fox his Obſervation upon this Fright.
(u) Fox vol. pag. 754.

To return; before the Conſternation was well over, the People eſpyed Sir Anthony Brown a Courtier riding haſtily towards the Scaffold, upon which they ſhouted a Pardon, and God ſave the King: But there being no ſuch good News, the Duke having made a Sign for Silence, went on with his Speech.

“ He told them, there was no ſuch thing to be expected as they had the good Nature to believe: That Providence had thus order'd the Event: and that therefore 'twas both his Duty and theirs to acquieſce and ſubmit: He deſired them to behave themſelves without Tumult and Diſorder: That for his Part he was in a ſedate Diſpoſition, and deſired they would join with him in his Prayers for the King, to whom he wiſhed all imaginable Proſperity. To this the People anſwer'd Amen. The Duke went on in his Prayers for the Lords of the Council, that God would bleſs their Management, and give them Grace to act in their Station with Integrity and Juſtice: And here he exhorted the Audience to obey their Orders: That ſuch Submiſſion was neceſſary to cover them from the Penalties of the Law; and that the King's Preſervation was likewiſe better ſecured by ſuch Behavior. He “asked Pardon of all he had injured, and declar'd he heartily forgave all thoſe that had offended him. He deſired the People once more to compoſe themſelves, and told them that tumultuous Behavior would neither do him, nor themſelves, any Service. And laſtly, he deſired them to aſſiſt him with their Prayers, and bear him witneſs, that he dyed in the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt.(w)

This Duke is deſcribed as a Perſon eminent for Piety, humble, and affable in his Greatneſs, ſincere and candid in all his Tranſactions. (x) But this Character runs the Hiſtorian upon a ſtrong Inconſiſtency with what he had writ before. (y) Fox tells us the innocent Duke was condemn'd to dye for Felony: (z) He never heard the Duke rob'd or murder'd, and therefore wonders how he ſhould be guilty of this Crime. And yet a little before he had mention'd the Statute on which the Duke was indicted. And thus this Martyrologiſt to relieve the Memory of one Nobleman, lays a black Imputation on ſeven and twenty; and brings in a great part of the Privy Council guilty of Murther: And of thoſe Lords of the Council too, who appear'd ſtrongly for the Reformation. Fox goes on and flouriſhes extravagantly on the Duke's Commendation, runs a Compariſon between him and the good Duke of *Glouceſter, and paints beyond the Life: And when he has done, diſcharges ſome of the beſt Colours with his own Pencil. For he is of Opinion, that the Duke by ſuffering or procuring the Death of the Admiral his Brother, ſtain'd his Honour, weak'ned his Intereſt, and drew the Judgment of God upon him in his Execution.

* He was Protector in the Reign of King Henry VI.

Ibid. & pag. 756.

After all, the Duke was a fortunate General, and had done good Service. He was likewiſe a Favourite of the Commons, and very well deſerv'd their Regard. He riſqued his Intereſt to ſcreen them from Oppreſſion, and did his Part to break ſome very unkind meaſures concerted againſt them. For by raiſing Rents, incloſing Grounds, and turning Arable to Paſture, the Commons of England ſaw they were like to be reduc'd to great Miſery. (a) And, as the Hiſtorian goes on, indeed there ſeem'd to have been a general Deſign amongſt the Nobility and Gentry, to bring the inferior ſort to that low and ſervile State, to which the Peaſants in many other Kingdoms are reduc'd.

The Lord Chancellor Rich reſigns the Broad Seal.

The Duke of Somerſet, during his Impriſonment, had made the Lord Chancellor his Friend: This Nobleman was to recover the King to a better Opinion of his Uncle. The Duke's Confidence was not miſplac'd, for the Chancellor ſent him ſome Intelligence which might have been ſerviceable. But the Letter being written in haſte, and ſuperſcrib'd only to the Duke, the Servant who carried it, having no particular Directions, deliver'd it to the Duke of Norfolk, whom he knew well acquainted with his Maſter. The Lord Chancellor finding the Miſtake at Night, concluded the Duke of Norfolk, to make his Court to the Duke of Northumberland, would certainly diſcover him: and therefore to break the Misfortune, and make it lighter, he went immediately to the King, and deſired Leave to reſign, and falling ſick upon this Application, the Broad Seal was ſent for, and put into the Hands of Gooderick Biſhop of Ely, who was ſworn Lord Chancellor, on the 22d of January following.

Stow Annal. Dec. 21. 1551.

It is given to the Biſhop of Ely.

2 Tim. 2.

Upon this Occaſion our Learned Church Hiſtorian, not only cenſures Gooderick for accepting this Poſt, but runs out into a General Invective againſt all Biſhops who concern themſelves with Affairs of State, and Civil Juriſdiction. He obſerves Chriſt being ſpoke to, to divide an Inheritance between Two Brethren, ſaid, who made me a Judge or a Divider? (c) But this Text does not ſeem ſerviceable to the Author's Purpoſe: The meaning of it appears only to be this. That ſince our Saviour's Kingdom was not of this World, ſince he had no Commiſſion from the Government to determine Property, his interpoſing in ſuch an Affair was not to be expected. But, as our Author goes on, St. Paul ſpeaking of Churchmen, ſays, No Man that wars, entangles himſelf with the Affairs of this Life; which was underſtood “by St. Cyprian as a perpetual Rule againſt the Secular Employment of the Clergy. This Father was ſo ſtrict in this Point, that he thought the being Tutor to Orphans was a Diſtraction unſuitable to their Character. That Paulus Samoſatenus is repreſented as one of the firſt eminent Churchmen that involved himſelf in Secular Cares, and that there are three Apoſtolical Canons againſt it; he muſt mean the Sixth, the Eighty firſt, and the Eighty third; But this latter only forbids a Biſhop a Command in the Army, and ſtanding upon the military Liſt. The other Two Canons look nearer his Point; but then we are to conſider, the Circumſtance of Time often alters the Caſe. When the Apoſtolical Canons were made, the Emperors were unconverted, and Paganiſm the Eſtabliſh'd Religion. Under this Diſadvantage of the Conſtitution, the Magiſtracy were oblig'd to exhibite Shews, to countenance the idolatrous Sacrifices, and be preſent at them. 'Tis no Wonder therefore, when Offices were thus incumbred, the Canons ſhould forbid the Clergy having any ſhare in the Adminiſtration. As for Paulus Samoſatenus, beſides the Charge of Hereſy for which he was depoſed, he is cenſured for Bribery and Sacrilege, for affecting a military Diſtinction: * For ordering Hymns to be ſung in his own Commendation in the Church, and procuring People to clap him, as if he had been acting upon a Stage. Our Hiſtorian obſerves farther, that the Clergy's medling in Secular Matters is condemn'd moſt copiouſly and amply by the General Council of Chalcedon. I ſhall cite the Canon to which he muſt refer: 'Tis the Third, and ſtands thus; “The Holy Synod is inform'd that ſome of the Clergy turn Farmers, concern themſelves in Secular Affairs, and neglect their Function out of an avaritious and mercenary Temper. 'Tis therefore decreed that for the future no Biſhop, Clerk, nor Monk ſhall turn Farmer, or intrude ἐπεισάγειν ἑαυτὸν into Secular Employment, unleſs he is oblig'd by the Civil Conſtitution to take care of ſome Minor related to him, or the Biſhop of the Dioceſe has appointed him to manage the Secular Intereſt

Secular Employments whether inconſiſtent with a ſpiritual Character.

Bp. Burnet's Objections conſider'd.

“ tereſt and Revenues of the Church, or order'd him to undertake the Guardianſhip and Protection of Orphans and Widows, and ſuch unſupported Perſons, who ſtand moſt in need of the Aſſiſtance of the Clergy. (d)

This Canon is much the ſame with the Emperor Juſtinian's Conſtitution upon this Subject; where he won't allow a Biſhop, or any other Clerk, to be a Collector of the Royal Revenues, a Farmer of the Lands belonging to the Crown, or any Corporation, a Steward, Attorney, or Surety. (e) But here the Reader may take notice that all ſort of Employments are not barr'd the Clergy either by the Emperor or the Council. To ſpeak only to the latter, the Council we ſee gives a Liberty for the Office of Guardian, and thus the Authority of St. Cyprian is plainly over-rul'd.

“ Our Hiſtorian takes notice, that Charles the Great and his Son gave large Territories and Juriſdictions to many Sees, and that their Lands gave them a Right to have a ſhare in all the publick Councils, and to be chiefly employed in all Affairs and Offices of State, (f) and that the Ignorance of theſe Ages made this in a manner neceſſary. Now if the Ignorance of the Times made Secular Employments in a manner neceſſary to the Clergy: If few or none were qualified for the Adminiſtration but the Biſhops, and the Government could ſcarcely go on without them; if the Caſe ſtood thus, why are they blamed for aſſiſting the State, and doing good in their Generation? When they ſerv'd their Prince and Country under ſuch Exigencies, and were employ'd to ſuch ſignificant Purpoſe, why are they tax'd with Ambition, and graſping an Authority excentrick to their Calling?

To diſengage the Clergy farther from this Imputation, the Reader may pleaſe to conſider, that under the Jewiſh Oeconomy 'twas part of the Prieſts and Levites Buſineſs to give Reſolutions in Points of Law, to ſettle Property, and try Cauſes both Civil and Criminal. The High Prieſt and others of that Tribe and Function, were Members of the Jeruſalem Sanhedrim. This Sanhedrim was the laſt Reſort of Juſtice, (g) and there was no Appeal from it.

Now the Jewiſh Prieſts had a Religious Calling, were to inſtruct the People, and had Souls to be ſaved no leſs than the Chriſtian. We are to conſider farther, that God was the Author of this Appointment. And therefore Bucer very juſtly recommends the Imitation of the Judicial Law.* Indeed where there is nothing of Type or Figure, nothing particular as to Time, Country or Neighborhood of the Jewiſh Nation: In ſuch Caſes we may ſuppoſe the Ground of the Law goes upon the Reaſon of the Thing. And to apply this, the Prieſts having a ſhare in the Civil Adminiſtration, was the Practice of a State under Supernatural Direction, and where God was their immediate Governor.

Under the Chriſtian Emperors the Biſhops had Judicatures, called Courts of Audience, and Conſtantine the Great made a Law, that if any Parties to a Sute had a Mind to appeal from their Temporal Judges to the Dioceſan, the Biſhops Sentence ſhould be unalterable, have the ſame Force as if it had been pronounc'd by the Emperor himſelf, and the Governors of the Provinces had Orders to ſee it put in Execution. (h) Nothing was more common in thoſe early Times than to pitch upon the Biſhops for Referees. And therefore Syneſius calls arbitrating Civil Differences, Part of the Epiſcopal Function. (i) St. Auſtin, tho' he complains of judging in References, yet was willing to bear it, and often ſpent the whole Morning, and ſometimes the whole Day in hearing Cauſes. (k) And further 'twas St. Auſtin's Opinion, that the Apoſtle St. Paul inſtituted Eccleſiaſtical Judges, and laid the Burthen of Secular Cauſes upon them. (l) So far was this Father from interpreting the 2d of Tim. 2. & 4. in our Hiſtorian's Senſe. The Emperor Juſtinian grants the Biſhops the ſame Privilege of receiving References with his Predeceſſor Conſtantine, and declares their Judgment irrevocable. (m) 'Tis plain therefore neither theſe famous Emperors or Fathers, thought Secular Employment altogether inconſiſtent with a Spiritual Character: They did not believe it diſſerv'd the Biſhops in the Management of their Functions, or indiſpos'd them for that Seriouſneſs, that Application to Religious Study and Exerciſes, and that Care of Souls, which might be juſtly expected from them. (n)

And to come to the Caſe remark'd by our Learned Hiſtorian: The Engliſh Biſhops who were Lord Chancellors, had Suffragans to inſpect their Dioceſe, and repreſent them in the Functions of Government: And theſe Suffragans, as hath been obſerv'd, were no leſs Biſhops, as to Character, than themſelves. Now even Bucer will allow Biſhops to reſide at Court, provided they had Coadjutors in the Country. (o) And if they may attend on Princes, and appear at the Council-Board, why not on the Bench in Chancery? If it is objected the Biſhops are not bred to the Profeſſion of the Law, and therefore ſeem unqualified for ſuch a Station: To this it may be anſwer'd, that a Man of Senſe and General Learning, may underſtand Law, if he pleaſes, without entring himſelf in the Inns of Court. Beſides, in the Chancery there are Two Courts, one Ordinary, and the other Extraordinary. (p) The firſt is govern'd by Statute and Common Law; and here if the Chancellor is at a Loſs, he hath Judges on the Bench to direct him. The other is a Court of Equity, and extends to Caſes where the Law gives no Remedy. (q) Such as Accidents, Frauds, Breach of Truſt, and Confidence. And who can be ſuppoſed fitter than a Biſhop to decide in ſuch Caſes? St. Germain in his Doctor and Student, ſeems to give the Advantage to a Religious Character in a reſembling Inſtance. He tells us the Adminiſtration of the Goods of the Inteſtate was committed to the Biſhop, and not to the Secular Courts, becauſe the Law ſuppoſed the Clergy better fenc'd againſt Temptation than the Laity. He is of Opinion the Nature of their Buſineſs, and the Force of their Calling, would keep the Conſcience of the Clergy more awake, and fortify them farther againſt Covetouſneſs, than other People. Now when a Biſhop is ſupplying the Defects of the Conſtitution, and reſcuing Orphans out of the Hands of Harpies, a Man ſhould not be over-haſty in pronouncing him miſemployed: Eſpecially if we conſider a Biſhop's Character is ſometime ſtrengthned by a Civil Station, and he is put in a Condition of doing more Service to Religion. As for Tindal's and Barnes's Remonſtrance mention'd by our Hiſtorian, (r) their Teſti-

Teſtimony ſignifies not much. To ſpeak clearly, their playing a Satyr upon the Biſhops, arraigning their Conduct, and weakning their Authority, was rather an Inſtance of Miſbehaviour in theſe Men. Had they remember'd the Text, thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the Ruler of thy People, and that St. Paul applied it againſt himſelf to the Privilege of the High Prieſt, they would probably have been more ſparing in their Language.

Upon the Fall of the Duke of Somerſet, Farrar Biſhop of St. Davids was cruſh'd for want of his Aſſiſtance: Not that he was ſuſpected of any Practice charg'd upon the Duke. But this Prelate it ſeems, being a Man of ſome Singularity in his Management, adhering to his Opinions with remarkable Stiffneſs, and making higher Demands of Obſervance than was expected from his Character, loſt ground with his Clergy, and was particularly embroil'd with the Canons of his own Cathedral. Young and Merrick, the firſt of which was afterwards prefer'd to the See of York, and the other to the See of Bangor, by Queen Elizabeth; tho' they did not appear above board, were moſt active in carrying on an Information againſt him. Amongſt other things he was charg'd with officiating at a Marriage without requiring the married Perſons to receive the Communion, contrary to the Rubrick in the Firſt Common-Prayer-Book, which was then in Force. His Diſconformity to the cuſtomary Habit was another Article; he was likewiſe complain'd of for ordering the Communion Table which had been plac'd by the Official of Carmathen in the middle of the Church, to be carried back into the Chancel, to the Place where the Altar ſtood. His ſuffering ſuperſtitious Uſages in his Dioceſe contrary to Law, was another Branch of the Information. But the main Charge was his exerciſing Epiſcopal Juriſdiction in his own Name, in Derogation of the King's Supremacy. And thus the Duke, and his other Friends of that Party, being either executed, or under Diſgrace, a Commiſſion was iſſued bearing Date the Ninth of March, to enquire into the Articles, and upon the Return made by theſe Commiſſioners, he was indicted upon the Statute of Præmunire at Carmarthen Aſſizes in July following. And here it may be concluded, the Verdict went againſt him by his being committed to Priſon, where he continued the Remainder of this Reign. *

Anno Dom. 155½.

* Heylin Hiſt. Ref. pag. 120.

Adam Wallaſe tryed for Hereſy in Scotland.

This Year in Scotland, one Adam Wallaſe a Man of little Knowledge, but very zealous in his Religion, was apprehended at Winton in Lothian, and tried for Heterodoxy. The Earl of Arran Governor, the Earl of Argyle Great Juſtice, the Earls of Angus, Huntley, Glencairn, and ſeveral others of the Nobility were preſent at the Tryal. A Charge conſiſting of Five Articles was brought in againſt Wallaſe. Firſt, that he had taken upon him the Office of a Preacher without any Lawful Calling. Secondly, that he had baptiz'd one of his own Children. Thirdly, that he had denied Purgatory. Fourthly, that he had aſſerted Invocation of Saints, and Prayer for the Dead, was down right Superſtition. And fifthly, that he had called the Maſs an idolatrous Service; and that in the Sacrament of the Altar the Elements remain'd Bread and Wine, after Conſecration.

To the firſt Article he anſwer'd, that he never thought himſelf worthy of ſo excellent an Employment, as the Functions of the Pulpit; nor did he ever preſume to preach. He confeſs'd notwithſtanding that in ſome private Places he read a Portion of Scripture ſometimes, and made a ſhort Exhortation upon the Text to thoſe that would hear him. Upon this 'twas told him, he ought not to have medled with the Scriptures. Wallaſe replied, he look'd upon it as the Duty of every Chriſtian to acquaint himſelf with the Doctrine of the Scriptures, and the means of his Salvation; which was not to be found any where but in the inſpired Writings. And one of the Company happening to ſay, if every Man may be a Babler upon the Bible, what Buſineſs will be left to the Biſhops and the reſt of the Clergy? He told him he ought to have mentioned God's Word with more Reverence, and that if the Judge did right, he would puniſh him for his Blaſphemy. But to your Queſtion, ſays he, I tell you, that tho' you and I, and Five Thouſand more, ſhould read the Bible, and diſcourſe upon it, there would be Buſineſs enough left for the Biſhops. For we ſhould leave them the Preaching the Goſpel of Chriſt, and the feeding their Flocks, which would give them ſufficient Employment. Neither are we at all injurious to them in working out our own Salvation, as far as we can.

To the Second Article he anſwer'd, that ſince he could not have a true Miniſter, 'twas as lawful for him to baptize his own Child, as 'twas for Abraham to circumciſe Iſhmael and his Family. (s)

His Defence againſt the Third and Fourth Articles were, that he never believ'd or maintain'd any thing but what he found in the Book hanging at his Girdle, which was the Bible in French, Dutch, and Engliſh. And being called on to keep cloſer to the point, and be more particular, he replied, that in Caſe he were inclined to declare his Mind farther upon theſe Heads, he ſhould require a more upright and indifferent Judge. Upon this the Earl of Huntley told him he was a Fool for deſiring more competent and qualified Judges than the Governor, and the Biſhops. To this Wallaſe return'd, that the Biſhops ought not to be his Judges, becauſe they were declared Enemies to the Doctrine he profeſs'd: And as for the Governor, he queſtion'd whether he had knowledge enough to diſcover Truth from Error, and to diſtinguiſh the Inventions of Men from the pure Worſhip of God. The Judge that he deſired, he told them, was the Book of God; and that if he could be convinced out of the inſpired Writings, to have either aſſerted, or done any thing with Reference to Religion, that was repugnant to the Will of God, he was contented to die. But provided they could fix no Imputation of this Kind upon him, he deſired the Protection of the Governor, and Nobility, againſt the Tyranny of malicious Men.

He is condemn'd and burnt at Edinborough.

Being asked what he thought of the Maſs, he anſwer'd he had read the Bible in Three Languages, and had never found the Maſs in any of them: And that what was higheſt eſteem'd with Men, was no better than Abomination in the Sight of God. Upon this, all the Company cried out, Hereſie, Hereſie, let him be condemn'd. Thus the poor Man was pronounced a Heretick, deliver'd over to the ſecular Power, and put into the Hands of Sir John Campbell, of Lundie, Juſtice Deputy; who having paſs'd Sentence of Death, remanded him to Priſon. He ſpent that Night in ſinging Pſalms, and was brought to the Stake the next Day on Caſtle Hill. Where notwithſtanding he was order'd not to make a Speech to the People, he took the Liberty to deſire them not to be offended with the Truth, becauſe of his Sufferings: For the Diſciple is not above his Maſter. As he was going on, the Provoſt of Edinburgh, who had the Charge of the Execution, bid him break off; upon which he recommended himſelf to God Almighty in a ſhort Prayer, and ſuffer'd with remarkable Reſolution.

Id.

About this Time there happen'd a great Conteſt amongſt the Churchmen concerning the Object of Invocation in the Lord's Prayer. The Occaſion was this. One Richard Marſhall Prior of the Black Friars at Newcaſtle in England, had lately come into Scotland, and preach'd at St. Andrews, that the Pater noſter ſhould be addreſs'd to God, and not to the Saints. Some Doctors of the Univerſity being diſguſted at this Aſſertion, prevail'd with one Tottes a Grey Friar to undertake Marſhal, and prove that the Pater noſter might be ſaid to the Saints. The Friar having Ignorance and Aſſurance enough to engage in the Cauſe, took his Text out of the Fifth of St. Matthew, bleſſed are the Poor in Spirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. From theſe Words he rais'd this Doctrine. "That "the Lord's Prayer might be ſaid to the Saints, "becauſe all the Petitions in this Form are ap"plicable to them. For inſtance, if we meet "an Old Man in the Street, ſays the Friar, "we ſalute him, good morrow Father; and there"fore with greater Propriety of Language, "we may call the Saints our Fathers. And "ſince 'tis granted they are in Heaven, we may "ſay to every one of them, Our Father which "art in Heaven. Then we know, continues "the Friar, God has dignified them ſo far as "to make their Names Holy, why then may "we not apply, Hallowed be thy Name, to any "of the Saints? And ſince they are poſſeſs'd "of the Kingdom of Heaven, we may upon "the Strength of this Privilege of theirs, ſay to "any of them, Thy Kingdom come. And thus, "unleſs their Will had been God's Will, they "had never been advanc'd to that Kingdom. "Since therefore there is an Uniformity of "Deſire between them and their Maker, we "may ſay to every one of them, Thy Will be done. "When he came to the Fourth Petition, he "was at a Loſs for a Colour, and confeſs'd "'twas not within the Saints Power, to give us "our daily Bread. However, they may pray "to God for us, that he will pleaſe to give it. "He ſtuck no leſs in the remaining Petitions, "and carried on his Paraphraſe with ſo much "ſhuffling and whimſey, thar the Audience fell "a laughing. And at laſt, meeting with far"ther Mortifications, and being a Jeſt to the "Boys in the Street, who call'd him Friar "Pater noſter, he grew aſham'd of his Perfor"mance, and quitted the Town.

Friar Tottes's Heterodox and whymſical Paraphraſe upon the Lord's Prayer.

The Queſtion determin'd againſt him at the Synod of Edinborough

However the Queſtion did not drop, but was bandied about in the Univerſity, in ſo much that 'twas thought fit, the Point ſhould be publickly argued by the Doctors. When they met they came to no uniform Reſolution; ſome of them held that Pater Noſter ſhould be ſaid to God formalitèr, and to the Saints materialitèr. Others not approving this Diſtinction, affirm'd the Pater noſter ought to be ſaid to God principalitèr, and to the Saints minus principalitèr. The Majority ſeem'd willing to ſettle the Controverſy upon this Foot: That the Pater noſter ſhould be ſaid to God capiendo ſtrictè, and to the Saints capiendo largè! However they came to no final Determination, but refer'd the Diſpute to the Provincial Synod which was to meet at Edinborough in January following.

The Queſtion was accordingly debated at the meeting of the Synod, and being put to the Vote, there was no ſmall Number who agreed the Pater noſter might be ſaid to the Saints. But this Opinion was over-rul'd by the Biſhops, and the moſt judicious Part of the Aſſembly. And thus the Subprior of St. Andrews was order'd at his Return home, to declare the ſetling of the Controverſy, and that tho' the Lord's Prayer was to be addreſs'd to none but God Almighty, yet the Saints ought to be applied to for their Aſſiſtance. At this Synod an Engliſh Catechiſm was drawn up, and publiſh'd. It contain'd a brief Expoſition upon the Ten Commandments, the Creed, and the Lord's Prayer. And the Curates were oblig'd to read Part of it to the People every Sunday, and Holy Day, when there was no Sermon.

To return to England. On the Thirteenth of January this Year the Parliament met at Weſtminiſter upon Prorogation; in which ſeveral material Things were enacted with Relation to the Church. The firſt of this kind which I ſhall mention, is the Act for the Uniformity of Common Prayer, and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments. Thus the Service Book, as it ſtood review'd the laſt Year, was injoin'd for publick Uſe. (t)

The review'd Common-Prayer-Book authoriz'd by Act of Parliament.

(t) 5. & 6. Ed. 6. Cap. 1.

By this Statute the Firſt Common-Prayer-Book authoriz'd by a Parliament in the Second and Third Year of this Reign, is called a very godly Order, agreeable to the Word of God, and the Primitive Church, very comfortable to all good People, deſiring to live in Chriſtian Converſation, and moſt profitable to the Eſtate of this Realm.

This is a very honourable Teſtimony. The Firſt Book is ſaid to be form'd upon the Doctrine of the Scriptures, and the Practice of the beſt Antiquity. And that 'tis very ſerviceable for the promoting of Piety, and publick Advantage. This Commendation is given without Abatement. There is no Stroke of Cenſure, no Charge of Superſtition, no Blemiſh either with Reſpect to Doctrine, or Ceremonies, thrown upon it. Thus Bucers and Calvins Animadverſions are in Effect declar'd frivolous and of no weight. The Men, 'tis likely meant well: But then they ventur'd beyond their Talent, and their Judgment fail'd them. (u)

An honourable Teſtimony given by the Parliament to the Firſt Common-Prayer-Book.

(u) Bucer Script. Anglican. Calvin. Epiſt. ad Protect. & alib.

But if the Book was in this good Condition, why was it brought under a Review? Why are ſome Parts expung'd? Some added, and ſome tranſpos'd? The Statute accounts for this. There were divers Doubts riſen for the Faſhion and Manner of the Miniſtration of the ſame. Then it ſeems there was no Exception touching any Part of the matter. But were theſe Doubts well founded? No; the Act ſays they proceeded rather by the Curioſity of the Miniſter, and Miſtakers, than of any other worthy Cauſe. From hence we may infer that the Explanations, as they are call'd in the Second Book, were not made without Compliance with the Weakneſs of ſome People: Not without Condeſcenſion to thoſe who had more ſcruples, than Underſtanding, more Heat, than Light in them. When this Bill for diſcharging the Firſt Book, and appointing the Second was read in the Houſe of Lords, the Earl of Derby, the Biſhops of Carliſle and Norwich, the Lords Stourton and Windſor, proteſted againſt it. (w)

(w) Journal Procer. Bibliot. Cotton. Tiberius. D. I.

From the full Approbation given by the Statute to the Firſt Book, one may reaſonably infer that the following Clauſe which mentions the explaining, perfecting, and making the ſame Prayer and Service more earneſt and fit to ſtir Chriſtian People to the true honouring of Almighty God: From hence I ſay we may reaſonably infer, that this Clauſe was added rather to recommend the Second, than to faſten any Blemiſh or Abatement on the Firſt Book.

The Ordinal confirm'd by this Statute.

The Ordinal for making Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, was annex'd to the Bill, and paſs'd with it. The Statute was not to inure till the Feaſt of All Saints following, which was almoſt Three Quarters of a Year. This is another Argument of the Inoffenſiveneſs of the firſt Common-Prayer-Book: And that the Parliament believ'd the People would not receive any Harm by the Uſe of it. The Curates are injoin'd to read this Act in the Church every Quarter of a Year for the Firſt Year, and once a Year afterwards. The former Act by which the Firſt Service Book was Eſtabliſh'd, was by this Statute to ſtand in full Force to all Intents and Conſtructions for the Uſe of the Second Book. There is another remarkable Clauſe in this Statute, and that is that all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and all others their Officers exerciſing Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, as well in Places exempt, as not exempt within their Dioceſes, ſhall have full Power and Authority by this Act to reform, correct, and puniſh by the Cenſures of the Church, all Perſons which ſhall offend after the Feaſt of all Saints next coming. If it be asked, does the Legiſlature then make a Grant of Spiritual Juriſdiction? Can't the Biſhops diſcharge the Functions eſſential to their Character without Leave from the Civil Magiſtrate? And can the Power of the Keys given to the Church by our Bleſſed Saviour not be exerciſed without a Warrant from the State? The Anſwer to this Queſtion I ſhall leave to the Readers Collection.

The Common-Prayer-Book being thus confirm'd by Parliament, was by the King's Order tranſlated into French, for the Uſe of the Iſlands of Guernſey, and Jerſey, and for the Town and Dependencies of Calais: But the ſame Proviſion was not made for Wales, till the Fifth of Queen Elizabeth. *

5. & 6. Ed. 6. Cap. 2. An Act for making Overſeers for the Poor.

To proceed, on the Third of March a Bill was brought into the Houſe of Lords for the Relief of the Poor, which paſſed both Houſes, and receiv'd the Royal Aſſent. By this Statute Two Overſeers for the Poor in every Pariſh was firſt ſettled. This Bill by obliging every Town to maintain their Poor, is by Implication a Tax upon the Subject, and yet which is ſomewhat remarkable, 'twas firſt read in the Houſe of Lords. (x)

Holidays and Faſts ſettled by Act of Parliament.

The next Act which relates more immediately to the Church, determines the Number of Feſtivals and Faſts. "The Preamble ſets forth, that in regard Men are apt to be negligent in the Worſhip of God, it has been therefore thought requiſite to ſet a Stamp of Solemnity on certain Days, and aſſign them for Religious Obſervances. That this was done to make People recollect their Duty to God Almighty. And to the End they might come better prepar'd for his Service, Forbearance of Labour and Buſineſs has been cuſtomarily injoin'd upon ſuch Days. That theſe Days are not call'd Holy upon the Score of any inhærent Quality, nor yet in Regard of the Saints whoſe Memories are then celebrated; but becauſe they are dedicated to God's Honour, and diſtinguiſh'd for the Edification of the People. A Caſe debated by the Judges upon this Statute.

Upon this Act an Action of falſe Impriſonment was brought by one George Foreman againſt Two Mounſons Juſtices of Peace in the County of Lincoln, and Commiſſioners in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, &c. The Defendant pleaded the Plaintiff ſtood excommunicated before the purchaſing the Writ, and by Conſequence was diſabled from bringing his Action: That he lay under this Cenſure they prov'd becauſe he drew his Dagger in a Church-yard with an Intention to make a Paſs at a certain Perſon, and that he was indicted for this Offence before the Mayor of Lincoln, and other Juſtices of the Peace. Now whether this was a good Plea to diſable the Plaintiff, was debated at large by the Bench. The Reaſon of the Judges making it a Queſtion was, becauſe Foreman was not convicted of the Breach of the Statute. For a bare Indictment without any Anſwer made to it, or Proceſs of Outlawry upon it, &c. is no Conviction in Law: That is ſo far as to make the Offender liable to the corporal Puniſhment, provided by the Statute before us, that is to have his Ears cut off, or his Cheek branded. And thus far the whole Court was agreed. But whether the Plaintiff by committing the Offence without Proof made of it, or going thro' the Courſe of a Tryal, was immediately to be accounted excommunicated by Virtue of the Act of Parliament above-mention'd, and without any Sentence given, or Proof of Witneſſes made before the Ordinary; That is, whether theſe Words in the Statute, ipſo Facto, without the cuſtomary Proceſs, would affect a Man ſo far as to make him excommunicate in Law, was very much doubted. And this Scruple of the Judges was founded upon theſe Words in the laſt Clauſe of the Statute, viz. And beſides every ſuch Perſon ſhall ſtand and be ipſo Facto excommunicated, as is before ſaid. That is, for ſmiting or laying violent Hands upon any Perſon And thus the Court broke up, and defer'd the Reſolution til the next Term. But the Plaintiff happening to die in the mean time, the canvaſſing the Point went no farther. (a) Thus we ſee the Judges laid the Streſs of the whole Queſtion upon the Statute.

Upon this occaſion I ſhall give the Reader an Argument, together with the Reſolution of the Judges of the King's Bench upon a reſembling Caſe.

“Upon the Tryal of an Action of Treſpaſs, ſued at the King's Bench, 'twas prov'd that one John Bunting, had contracted himſelf to one Agnes Adingſel; And that this Agnes was afterwards Married to one Twine, and cohabited with him. (c) Some time after this, Bunting ſued Agnes in the Court of Audience, and prov'd the Contract: And becauſe Agnes could ſhew no Cauſe to the contrary, the Court gave Sentence that ſhe ſhould Marry Bunting, and Cohabit with him, which ſhe did accordingly: By this Marriage they had Iſſue one Charles Bunting, and the Father died. Now the Queſtion is whether Charles is Son and Heir to John Bunting: If he is, then the Verdict was to go againſt the Defendant, if not for him. The Point therefore to be decided in the King's Bench was this; Whether the Marriage between Bunting and Agnes was Lawful, without a preceding Divorce between Twine and Agnes, and without ſummoning Twine to declare, if he had any thing to alledge why Bunting and Agnes ſhould not be Married. And here the Judges deſired the Civilians to give their Opinion upon the Caſe. Upon this one Dr. Goldingham argued in Court, and endeavor'd to prove Charles Legitimate, and Heir to John Bunting, without making Twine a Party to the Suite againſt Agnes, and notwithſtanding there was no Divorce between Agnes and Twine. Priſon. He ſpent that Night in ſinging Pſalms, and was brought to the Stake the next Day on Caſtle Hill. Where notwithſtanding he was order'd not to make a Speech to the People, he took the Liberty to deſire them not to be offended with the Truth, becauſe of his Sufferings: For the Diſciple is not above his Maſter. As he was going on, the Provoſt of Edinburgh, who had the Charge of the Execution, bid him break off; upon which he recommended himſelf to God Almighty in a ſhort Prayer, and ſuffer'd with remarkable Reſolution.

Id.

About this Time there happen'd a great Conteſt amongſt the Churchmen concerning the Object of Invocation in the Lord's Prayer. The Occaſion was this. One Richard Marſhall Prior of the Black Friars at Newcaſtle in England, had lately come into Scotland, and preach'd at St. Andrews, that the Pater noſter ſhould be addreſs'd to God, and not to the Saints. Some Doctors of the Univerſity being diſguſted at this Aſſertion, prevail'd with one Tottes a Grey Friar to undertake Marſhal, and prove that the Pater noſter might be ſaid to the Saints. The Friar having Ignorance and Aſſurance enough to engage in the Cauſe, took his Text out of the Fifth of St. Matthew, bleſſed are the Poor in Spirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. From theſe Words he rais'd this Doctrine. “That the Lord's Prayer might be ſaid to the Saints, becauſe all the Petitions in this Form are applicable to them. For inſtance, if we meet an Old Man in the Street, ſays the Friar, we ſalute him, good morrow Father; and therefore with greater Propriety of Language, we may call the Saints our Fathers. And ſince 'tis granted they are in Heaven, we may ſay to every one of them, Our Father which art in Heaven. Then we know, continues the Friar, God has dignified them ſo far as to make their Names Holy, why then may we not apply, Hallowed be thy Name, to any of the Saints? And ſince they are poſſeſs'd of the Kingdom of Heaven, we may upon the Strength of this Privilege of theirs, ſay to any of them, Thy Kingdom come. And thus, unleſs their Will had been God's Will, they had never been advanc'd to that Kingdom. Since therefore there is an Uniformity of Deſire between them and their Maker, we may ſay to every one of them, Thy Will be done. When he came to the Fourth Petition, he was at a Loſs for a Colour, and confeſs'd 'twas not within the Saints Power, to give us our daily Bread. However, they may pray to God for us, that he will pleaſe to give it. He ſtuck no leſs in the remaining Petitions, and carried on his Paraphraſe with ſo much ſhuffling and whimſey, thar the Audience fell a laughing. And at laſt, meeting with farther Mortifications, and being a Jeſt to the Boys in the Street, who call'd him Friar Pater noſter, he grew aſham'd of his Performance, and quitted the Town.

Friar Tottes's Heterodox and whymſical Paraphraſe upon the Lord's Prayer.

The Queſtion determin'd againſt him at the Synod of Edinborough

However the Queſtion did not drop, but was bandied about in the Univerſity, in ſo much that 'twas thought fit, the Point ſhould be publickly argued by the Doctors. When they met they came to no uniform Reſolution; ſome of them held that Pater Noſter ſhould be ſaid to God formaliter, and to the Saints materialiter. Others not approving this Diſtinction, affirm'd the Pater noſter ought to be ſaid to God principaliter, and to the Saints minus principaliter. The Majority ſeem'd willing to ſettle the Controverſy upon this Foot: That the Pater noſter ſhould be ſaid to God capiendo ſtrictè, and to the Saints capiendo largè! However they came to no final Determination, but refer'd the Diſpute to the Provincial Synod which was to meet at Edinborough in January following.

Edw. VI. K.

The Queſtion was accordingly debated at the meeting of the Synod, and being put to the Vote, there was no ſmall Number who agreed the Pater noſter might be ſaid to the Saints. But this Opinion was over-rul'd by the Biſhops, and the moſt judicious Part of the Aſſembly. And thus the Subprior of St. Andrews was order'd at his Return home, to declare the ſettling of the Controverſy, and that tho' the Lord's Prayer was to be addreſs'd to none but God Almighty, yet the Saints ought to be applied to for their Aſſiſtance. At this Synod an Engliſh Catechiſm was drawn up, and publiſh'd. It contain'd a brief Expoſition upon the Ten Commandments, the Creed, and the Lord's Prayer. And the Curates were oblig'd to read Part of it to the People every Sunday, and Holy Day, when there was no Sermon.

Id. page 92.

To return to England. On the Thirteenth of January this Year the Parliament met at Weſtminiſter upon Prorogation; in which ſeveral material Things were enacted with Relation to the Church. The firſt of this kind which I ſhall mention, is the Act for the Uniformity of Common Prayer, and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments. Thus the Service Book, as it ſtood review'd the laſt Year, was injoin'd for publick Uſe. (t)

The review'd Common-Prayer-Book authoriz'd by Act of Parliament.

(t) 5. & 6. Ed. 6. Cap. 1.

By this Statute the Firſt Common-Prayer-Book authoriz'd by a Parliament in the Second and Third Year of this Reign, is called a very godly Order, agreeable to the Word of God, and the Primitive Church, very comfortable to all good People, deſiring to live in Chriſtian Converſation, and moſt profitable to the Eſtate of this Realm.

This is a very honourable Teſtimony. The Firſt Book is ſaid to be form'd upon the Doctrine of the Scriptures, and the Practice of the beſt Antiquity. And that 'tis very ſerviceable for the promoting of Piety, and publick Advantage. This Commendation is given without Abatement. There is no Stroke of Cenſure, no Charge of Superſtition, no Blemiſh either with Reſpect to Doctrine, or Ceremonies, thrown upon it. Thus Bucers and Calvins Animadverſions are in Effect declar'd frivolous and of no weight. The Men, 'tis likely meant well: But then they ventur'd beyond their Talent, and their Judgment fail'd them. (u)

An honourable Teſtimony given by the Parliament to the Firſt Common-Prayer-Book.

(u) Bucer Script. Anglican. Calvin. Epiſt. ad Protect. & alib.

But if the Book was in this good Condition, why was it brought under a Review? Why are ſome Parts expung'd? Some added, and ſome tranſpos'd? The Statute accounts for this. There were divers Doubts riſen for the Faſhion and Manner of the Miniſtration of the ſame. Then it ſeems there was no Exception touching any Part of the matter. But were theſe Doubts well founded? No; the Act ſays they proceeded rather by the Curioſity of the Miniſter, and Miſtakers, than of any other worthy Cauſe. From hence we may infer that the Explanations, as they are call'd in the Second Book, were not made without Compliance with the Weakneſs of ſome People: Not without Condeſcenſion to thoſe who had more ſcruples, than Underſtanding, more Heat, than Light in them. When this Bill for diſcharging the Firſt Book, and appointing the Second was read in the Houſe of Lords, the Earl of Derby, the Biſhops of Carliſle and Norwich, the Lords Stourton and Windſor, proteſted againſt it. (w)

(w) Journal Procer. Bibliot. Cotton. Tiberius. D. 1.

From the full Approbation given by the Statute to the Firſt Book, one may reaſonably infer that the following Clauſe which mentions the explaining, perfecting, and making the ſame Prayer and Service more earneſt and fit to ſtir Chriſtian People to the true honouring of Almighty God: From hence I ſay we may reaſonably infer, that this Clauſe was added rather to recommend the Second, than to faſten any Blemiſh or Abatement on the Firſt Book.

The Ordinal confirm'd by this Statute.

The Ordinal for making Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, was annex'd to the Bill, and paſs'd with it. The Statute was not to inure till the Feaſt of All Saints following, which was almoſt Three Quarters of a Year. This is another Argument of the Inoffenſiveneſs of the firſt Common-Prayer-Book: And that the Parliament believ'd the People would not receive any Harm by the Uſe of it. The Curates are injoin'd to read this Act in the Church every Quarter of a Year for the Firſt Year, and once a Year afterwards. The former Act by which the Firſt Service Book was Eſtabliſh'd, was by this Statute to ſtand in full Force to all Intents and Conſtructions for the Uſe of the Second Book. There is another remarkable Clauſe in this Statute, and that is that all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and all others their Officers exerciſing Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, as well in Places exempt, as not exempt within their Dioceſes, ſhall have full Power and Authority by this Act to reform, correct, and puniſh by the Cenſures of the Church, all Perſons which ſhall offend after the Feaſt of all Saints next coming. If it be asked, does the Legiſlature then make a Grant of Spiritual Juriſdiction? Can't the Biſhops diſcharge the Functions eſſential to their Character without Leave from the Civil Magiſtrate? And can the Power of the Keys given to the Church by our Bleſſed Saviour not be exerciſed without a Warrant from the State? The Anſwer to this Queſtion I ſhall leave to the Readers Collection.

The Common-Prayer-Book being thus confirm'd by Parliament, was by the King's Order tranſlated into French, for the Uſe of the Iſlands of Guernſey, and Jerſey, and for the Town and Dependencies of Calais: But the ſame Proviſion was not made for Wales, till the Fifth of Queen Elizabeth. *

By this Statute Two Overſeers for the Poor in every Pariſh was firſt ſettled. This Bill by obliging every Town to maintain their Poor, is by Implication a Tax upon the Subject, and yet which is ſomewhat remarkable, 'twas firſt read in the Houſe of Lords. (x)

"By the Act the Marriage is declar'd "lawful, as by the Law of God indeed it was, "any Decretal, Canon, Eccleſiaſtical Law, or "uſage to the contrary, notwithſtanding. "There was likewiſe a Bill brought into the "Houſe of Lords and paſs'd there, that no "Man ſhould put away his Wiſe, and Marry "again, unleſs he ſhall be lawfully Divorc'd "before ſome Eccleſiaſtical Competent Judge. "(b) But this Bill ſunk in the Houſe of Com"mons.

March 19. an. 1552.

Upon this occaſion I ſhall give the Reader an Argument, together with the Reſolution of the Judges of the King's Bench upon a reſembling Caſe.

"Upon the Tryal of an Action of Treſpaſs, "ſued at the King's Bench, 'twas prov'd that "one John Bunting, had contracted himſelf to "one Agnes Adingſel; And that this Agnes was "afterwards Married to one Twine, and coha"bited with him. (c) Some time after this, "Bunting ſued Agnes in the Court of Audience, "and prov'd the Contract: And becauſe Agnes "could ſhew no Cauſe to the contrary, the "Court gave Sentence that ſhe ſhould Marry "Bunting, and Cohabit with him, which ſhe "did accordingly: By this Marriage they had "Iſſue one Charles Bunting, and the Father "died. Now the Queſtion is whether Charles "is Son and Heir to John Bunting: If he is, "then the Verdict was to go againſt the De"fendant, if not for him. The Point there"fore to be decided in the King's Bench was "this; Whether the Marriage between Bun"ting and Agnes was Lawful, without a pre"ceding Divorce between Twine and Agnes, "and without ſummoning Twine to declare, "if he had any thing to alledge why Bunting "and Agnes ſhould not be Married. And "here the Judges deſired the Civilians to give "their Opinion upon the Caſe. Upon this "one Dr. Goldingham argued in Court, and "endeavor'd to prove Charles Legitimate, and "Heir to John Bunting, without making Twine "a Party to the Suite againſt Agnes, and not"withſtanding there was no Divorce between "Agnes and Twine. Firſt, becauſe Agnes was "firſt firſt contracted to Bunting, which made her his lawful Wiſe by the Civil Law. For in caſe they had cohabited after the Contract, they ſhould neither have been Puniſh'd for Adultery, or Fornication, but only for Contempt of an Order of the Church, which prohibits Cohabitation before the Marriage is Solemniz'd in Facie Eccleſiæ. Thus if a Legacy be given to a Woman cum Uxor fuerit, when ſhe is ſuch a Man's Wife, and afterwards ſhe Contracts her ſelf to him, ſhe may lawfully demand the Legacy in the Spiritual Court, in caſe the Man Dies before the Marriage is Solemniz'd: From hence it may be inferr'd, that in the Conſtruction of the Civil Law, the Woman is reckon'd a Wife before the Wedding: And tho' ſhe is Married to a Stranger after the Contract, yet that Marriage is void. This learned Civilian argued farther, that the Solemnization of Marriages, was not generally practiſ'd in the Church before Pope Innocent the Third, who was the firſt that made a Conſtitution for this purpoſe. Before this Regulation Marriages were celebrated with this Ceremony: The Bridegroom came to the Place where the Bride Liv'd, and Convey'd her to his own Houſe, and this was the whole Form: And from hence came the Phraſe of ducere Uxorem, becauſe the Man us'd to lead his Wife to his Houſe, and the Woman is ſaid to be nupta Viro, becauſe ſhe is as it were Cooperta Nube, i. e. Viro, that is Veil'd or under Covert-baron, in regard ſhe makes herſelf Subject to him by the Covenant of Marriage. And for this reaſon the Civil Law makes them Baron and Feme in Virtue of the Contract, before the Solemnity of the Wedding; and in Conſequence of this, their Iſſue born after the Contract, and before the Eſpouſals or Marriage, is counted Legitimate, provided the Marriage follows: For in caſe they are never Married, the Iſſue after the Contract is a Baſtard. But when Marriage follows, it ſhall relate to the Time of the Contract, and void all other Marriages which come between, and make them no better than Adultery: And therefore there's no need of any Divorce from Twine, becauſe by the firſt Contract to Bunting, the Woman was diſabled from making a Contract, or Marriage with any other Man. And thus the Marriage between her and Twine being Null, there was no occaſion for a Divorce: For a Divorce ſuppoſes the lawfulneſs of the Marriage, it being a Maxime in the Law, ubi nullus Habitus, ibi nulla Privatio.

“This Doctor argued in the Second Place, that Bunting who Claim'd after the Contract, and in Virtue of it, was not oblig'd to take notice of the Marriage, between Twine and Agnes, but only to convent Agnes before the Eccleſiaſtical Judge, to know the reaſon why ſhe refus'd to Marry him purſuant to the Contract; all which has been done by him accordingly: And ſince Bunting has follow'd the Directions, and anſwer'd the demands of the Law, 'tis reaſonable he ſhould receive the Benefit of the Law, and have the Sentence or Authority of the Spiritual Court to carry on his Contract to a lawful Marriage.

“Thirdly, This Civilian urg'd, that foraſmuch as Bunting has had a Sentence in his Favor pronounc'd by the Judge of the Court of Audience, 'tis to be preſum'd the Judge has convented or ſummon'd all thoſe 'twas neceſſary to Summon.

“And therefore by this Sentence, the Intereſt of all other Perſons ſhall be barr'd and defeated: And therefore Twine ſhall not be allow'd to except againſt the Sentence, by alledging he had no notice of it, nor was any Party to the Proceſs. Thus far Dr. Goldingham.

“But then 'twas argued on the other ſide, that by the Common Law, Marriage in the Church is ſo ſtrong an Engagement, that it can't be undone or defeated without Divorce, and without giving the Parties notice to appear in the Spiritual Court. And in caſe they die before they are thus convented, their Iſſue ſhall not be accounted Illegitimate; in regard their Marriage was only voidable and not actually void. And in all Caſes where the Marriage is only voidable, the Parties ought to be brought into the Spiritual Court * before Separation, for otherwiſe the Marriage will hold good, and the Iſſue be reckon'd Legitimate. And thus this Council agreed the Precontract, was a ground to make a Marriage with a Third Perſon voidable, but that it did not make any ſuch Marriage void ipſo facto. And therefore he is of Opinion, that to make a Marriage void, upon the Score of a Precontract to another Perſon, both the Parties Married ought to be convented, to ſhew what they have to ſay againſt ſuch a Precontract, in defence of their Marriage; and that unleſs they are thus convented, their Marriage muſt continue lawful. And to apply this reaſoning to the Caſe in Hand; in regard Twine was not convented before the Sentence pronounc'd in Favor of the Precontract, between Bunting and Agnes, he thinks the Marriage between Twine and Agnes remains undiſſolv'd, and by conſequence the Second Marriage between Bunting and Agnes is void: From whence 'twill follow their Iſſue Charles muſt be a Baſtard. But notwithſtanding this Plea, the Court adjudg'd Bunting's Iſſue Legitimate.

This Caſe being not foreign to the Hiſtory, learnedly argued, and more than commonly Inſtructive, may, I hope, excuſe the reporting it at length. But before I take leave, the Reader may pleaſe to obſerve, that Goldingham the Civilian was altogether miſtaken, in affirming that Marriages were not Solemniz'd in the Church 'till the Time of Pope Innocent the Third. For the Practiſe was quite otherwiſe from the firſt Centuries, and ſo onward: For when the Parties were agreed, their Marriage was publickly celebrated in the Church. They receiv'd the Biſhops or the Prieſts Bleſſing, and the Holy Euchariſt, as part of the Solemnity. (d)

Married Prieſts ſet upon the ſame foot of Advantage with other Subjects.

To proceed, The next thing I ſhall mention Paſs'd this Seſſions, with relation to the Church, is an Act for the Declaration of a Statute, made for the Marriage of Prieſts, and the Legitimation of their Children. The Act referr'd to, has been already taken notice of in the Second and Third Year of this Reign. The Purport of it, as hath been already obſerv'd, was to void all Conſtitutions and Laws whatſoever, againſt the Marriage of Prieſts. Notwithſtanding this Proviſion, the Preamble before us ſets forth, that divers ill diſpos'd Perſons had miſconſtrued the Statute made in the Second and Third Year of this Reign, (e) “thrown a ſcandalous Imputation upon the Matrimony of Prieſts, as if the Statute abovemention'd implied no

“ more than a bare Permiſſion; as Uſury and other unlawful things, are now ſuffer'd for the avoiding greater Inconvenience. From hence many People proceed to draw a Blemiſh upon the Birth of Prieſts Children, Born in Matrimony. That this Calumny is highly diſhonourable to Almighty God, to the King's Majeſty, to the Parliament, and the learned Clergy of this Realm, who have determin'd the ſame to be moſt lawful, by the Law of God in their Convocation, as well by their common Aſſent, as by the Subſcription of their Hands. And that moſt of all is to be lamented thro' ſuch uncomely railings of Matrimony, and ſlanderous reproaches of the Clergy, the Word of God is not heard with Reverence, followed with diligence, the godly Proceedings of the King's Majeſty not receiv'd with due Obedience, and thereby the Wealthy Men of this Realm diſcourag'd, to nouriſh and bring up their Children in Learning, ſo as it is to be fear'd, leaſt in Place of good Learning and Knowledge, ſhall crepe in Ignorance, and for learned Men, unlearned Ambitious Men, and Flatterers, to the great diſpleaſure of Almighty God, and to the Peril of the whole State of God's true Religion within this Realm, if ſpeedy Remedy be not provided herein. The Statute therefore in the enacting Part, ſets the Clergy, their Wives, and Iſſue, upon the ſame Foot of Privilege with the reſt of the King's Subjects. For Inſtance, the Children are declared Legitimate, and Inheritable to Lands and Tenements. The Married Prieſt is enabled to be Tenant by Courteſy, after the Death of his Wife, and his Widow impower'd to claim her Dower, &c. (f)

Thus the Clergy have the liberty of Marrying upon the general Advantage. When the Tythes were taken away in many Places, and the Pariſh Duties leſſen'd, they had the freedom of engaging in a more expenſive way of Living. When the Revenues were cut ſhort, 'twas at their Choice to encreaſe their Charge. They had an opportunity of wanting more things, when the means of procuring them were more ſlender than ever. Thus they had Liberty without much Property: They might, if they pleas'd, be legally undone, and ſtarve by Act of Parliament. But then this Inconvenience is partly to be reckn'd to the Indiſcretions of ſome of the Clergy in diſpoſing of themſelves; and partly to ſome Hardſhips put upon the Church in this, and the laſt Reign. For as to the Statute, 'tis a commendable Proviſion: It takes off an unjuſtifiable Reſtraint: It returns the Clergy to the common liberty of Mankind, and leaves them in the condition allow'd by the Scriptures and the Antient Church.

An Act concerning Uſury.

To proceed, by an Act made againſt taking Intereſt for Mony this Parliament, 'tis declar'd in the Preamble that Uſury by the Word of God, is utterly prohibited as a vice moſt odious and deteſtable, as in divers Places of the holy Scripture is evident to be ſeen. And that the terrible Threatnings of God's Wrath and Vengeance, juſtly hangs over this Realm, for the great and open Uſury therein practis'd. (g) I ſhall make no Remarks upon the Divinity Part of this Bill, whether 'twill hold good or not; becauſe I have elſewhere thoroughly examin'd the Subject, and ſhew'd how the Conſtitution ſtands at preſent; and to this Tract I ſhall refer the Reader. (h)

The Biſhoprick of Weſtminſter diſſolved.

This Parliament diſſolv'd the Biſhoprick of Weſtminſter, and united it to the See of London. (i) But the Collegiate Church, with the exempted Juriſdiction, was ſtill continued. The Diſſolution of this Biſhoprick by Act of Parliament was to Corroborate the late Proceedings of the Crown. For, as the learned Heylin Obſerves, from the Convocation Records, the Biſhoprick of Weſtminſter was diſſolv'd by the King's Letters Patents, upon the Twenty Ninth of January laſt paſt. And thus the County of Middleſex which had been laid to it, was reſtored to the See of London. The Lands of Weſtminſter had been ſo much alienated by Thirlby, that there was ſcarcely any thing left to maintain the Port of a Biſhop. However, the conveying away thoſe Eſtates, for which they were at the moſt but Tenants for Life, was ſometimes reckon'd a Merit in Churchmen: And for this reaſon as the Hiſtorian relates, Thirlby was preferr'd to the See of Norwich. (k) As for the Lands belonging to the Biſhoprick of Weſtminſter, the beſt Part of them was ſnatch'd by the great Courtiers. The remainder was laid out in the repairing St. Paul's Cathedral, miſerably harras'd by ſome of the Goſpellers of thoſe Times: And from hence came the common ſaying, of robbing Peter to pay Paul.

A Bill concerning Simony miſcarries.

And to draw towards a Concluſion, of the Eccleſiaſtical Buſineſs of this Seſſions, a Bill paſs'd both Houſes againſt Simoniacal Contracts, reſerving Penſions out of Benefices, and granting Advowſons living the Incumbent: But as it happen'd this Bill miſs'd the Royal Aſſent. One of our learned Church Hiſtorians very juſtly obſerves, (l) theſe Abuſes have been often complain'd of, and that new contrivances have been ſtill found out to fence againſt the Law, and cover Simony: That either Bargains have been made by Friends, without the expreſs knowledge of the Party concern'd, or Bonds of Reſignation given, to lay the Incumbent at the Patrons Mercy; and thus the Prevarication of ſome of the Clergy, is made a Preſident for impoſing hard Terms upon others: And the Church often robb'd by ſuch ſcandalous Compliance.

A Bill brought in againſt the Biſhop of Durham but miſcarries.

Laſtly, The Duke of Northumberland having the Aſcendant both at Court, and in the Houſe of Lords, a Bill was brought in for depriving the Biſhop of Durham: This Biſhop was charg'd by one Ninian Menvil, to have conſented to a Plot in the North for raiſing a Rebellion, as by the Charge of the Deponent, the Biſhop's Anſwer, and Menvill's Replication, was largely ſet forth. But Menvill not producing a Letter Writen to him by Tunſtal, as he depoſed, upon which the Proof of the Charge principally depended; this Evidence, I ſay, not being produc'd, Tonſtall was only commanded to keep his Houſe, 'till he ſhould be called to a farther Anſwer. But the Letter being afterwards found in a Caſket of the Duke of Somerſet's, the Biſhop was ordered to appear before the Lords of the Council: Where he was charg'd with abetting an intended Inſurrection, and the Letter laid before him, which he did not deny to be his Hand. Notwithſtanding this, he offer'd to purge himſelf, but in what manner, or upon what Arguments the Record does not mention. 'Tis only ſaid his Anſwer was judg'd Inſufficient by the Council, who ſent him to the Tower. (m) And the ſame Day Sir John Maſon was order'd by the Board to take an Inventory of his Goods. Upon this Information a Bill was brought into the Houſe of Lords for attainting him of Miſpriſion of Treaſon: But his Accuſers not being brought Face to Face, the Parliament refuſ'd to Attaint him upon the bare Evidence of Depoſitions. One of our Hiſtorians (n) reports the Bill came down to the Houſe of Commons, and was thrown out for the reaſon laſt mention'd; but let this be as it will, it certainly miſcarried. The proceeding by way of Attainder againſt the Biſhop, is a ſign his Enemies could not come at him any other way; which makes it probable the Letter written by him had no ſuch Treaſonable Contents as was pretended. Beſides, the Journal of the Houſe of Lords, mentions the Bill for depriving the Biſhop of Durham was Twice Read and Ingroſs'd, but did not Paſs. This was believ'd a great diſappointment to the Duke of Northumberland, who promiſ'd himſelf the Lands and Juriſdiction of that wealthy Biſhoprick. This Parliament therefore not complying with the Dukes Expectation, he procur'd a Diſſolution, in hopes of a better Intereſt with the next.

The King having lately been Sick of the Small-pox, and not perfectly recover'd, he Sign'd a Bill, in which the Acts he intended to Paſs were mention'd: This Bill was Read in the Houſe of Lords, and amounted to an Equivalent of giving the Royal Aſſent the cuſtomary way. The Articles Paſs'd in the Convocation.

This Year the Book of Articles, lately drawn up by Cranmer and his Aſſiſtants was laid before the Convocation and agreed there. That they came before this Repreſentation of the Clergy, appears by the Latin Title, which runs thus: Articuli de quibus in Synodo Londinenſi Anno 1552. inter Epiſcopos & alios Eruditos Viros convenerat ad tollendam Opinionum Diſſentionem, & Conſenſum veræ Religionis firmandum, Regiâ Autoritate in lucem Editi. From whence it appears they ſtood upon the bottom of a Convocation Authority. And further, by this Title it may be inferr'd, the Two Houſes had transferr'd their Power upon a Select Number: And that this Committee was fully Authoriz'd to debate and reſolve finally for the reſt. For here the Title is not worded in ſuch Terms of Extent and Comprehenſion as we find in the Articles Publiſh'd in 1562. where 'tis ſaid they were agreed unto by the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of both Provinces, and the whole Clergy in the Convocation holden at London. Inſtead of this, they are ſaid to be agreed upon in the Synod of London, by the Biſhops, and certain other learned Men, inter Epiſcopos & alios Eruditos Viros. From whence it ſeems pretty plain, that theſe Articles were Paſs'd by ſome Members only, delegated by both Houſes for that purpoſe. And thus the Acts and Reſolutions of this Committee, are in all Conſtruction of Equity and Law, of the ſame Force, as if they had Paſs'd the Votes of the whole Body. Beſides, 'tis poſſible theſe Articles, after having been ſettled by the Committee, might be reported in both Houſes, and agreed there. This the learned Heylin thinks not altogether Improbable, tho' the Acts of the Convocation are loſt: And to fortify this Conjecture, he obſerves, that theſe Articles were receiv'd as the Doctrine of the Church of England, for the firſt Five Years of Queen Elizabeth's Reign. (o) And tho' 'tis no hard matter, to meet with theſe Articles, yet ſince they make ſo conſiderable a Part of the Engliſh Reformation, I ſhall Tranſcribe them for the Reader. (p)

A Satyr upon the Diſſolution of Manners.

Notwithſtanding this Progreſs for retrieving the Antient Belief, the People were little mended in their Manners. The Reader may find the Immorality of the Times loudly complain'd of by Beacon one of Cranmer's Chaplains. (g) To mention ſomething of his Remonſtrance: "What ſtaring Contradiction ſays he, "is there between the Life, and Practiſe of "Chriſtians! They profeſs that they know God, but in Works they deny him, being Abominable and Diſobedient, and unto every good Work —— Reprobate. "How lamentably are we over-run "with Hypocritical and Senſual Goſpellers? "Men who have their Tongues tip'd with "Scripture Expreſſions, can diſpute very copiouſly for Juſtification by Faith, talk with "great Aſſurance of Forgiveneſs by the Blood "of Chriſt, and boaſt of their being entred "upon the Liſt of the predeſtinated to Glory; "but then how wretchedly wide do they live "of the Rule they pretend to? How are they "bloated, and almoſt poiſon'd with Pride? "Envy, Malice, and Revenge, are puſh'd to "the utmoſt Exceſſes in theſe People: They "are licentious to the laſt degree, and deny "their Appetites in no inſtance of ſcandalous "Pleaſure: Their Avarice is without Meaſure "or Shame: They never think they have "multiplied their Lordſhips far enough, mounted their Revenues to the pitch of their Merit, or ſwell'd their Fortunes to a ſufficient "Bulk. Indeed, if you will read them by "their Actions, you would almoſt think they "had an Ambition to ſhew themſelves Heathens, and made it their Buſineſs to live counter to their Duty. As for diſtributions of "Charity, Prayers, Faſting, and other Exerciſes of true Religion, theſe counterfeit "Goſpellers won't trouble themſelves with any "thing of this kind. All their Religion lies "in Language and Diſpute; but as for virtue, "and real Effects, they are altogether barren "and unfurniſhed. (r)

The New Common-Prayer-Book Executed.

On All-Saints day, purſuant to the Act of Parliament, the New Common-Prayer-Book was Read in the Churches. Ridley Biſhop of London officiated in the Forenoon at St. Paul's Cathedral. His Habit was diſtinguiſh'd only by a Rochet, without Cope, or other Cuſtomary Veſtment: For by the Rubrick of this review'd Book, no more than the Surplice was required. Thus the Biſhops thought themſelves oblig'd to forbear appearing with their Croſſes; and the Prebends in all Cathedrals left of their Hoods. In the Afternoon of this Feſtival, Biſhop Ridley preach'd at St. Pauls Croſs: The Deſign of the Sermon was to reconcile the Audience to the new Service, and juſtify the Alterations.

Sternhold and Hopkins Tranſlation of the Pſalms.

About this Time Davids Pſalms were turn'd into Metre by Sternhold one of the Grooms of the Privy Chamber. He tranſlated but Thirty Seven, the reſt of them being ſoon after done by Hopkins and others. Clement Marot Groom of the Bed Chamber to King Francis the Firſt, had led the way to an Eſſay of this kind. This Marot being encourag'd by Vatablus,

And thus they began to be ſung in private Houſes, and afterwards were brought into the Churches of the French, and other Countries, which reform'd upon the Model of Geneva. (t)

Hopkins and Sternholds Performance was afterwards, as Fuller obſerves, diſcountenanc'd by ſome great Clergy-men. (u) The Reaſon of their Diſapprobation was becauſe they believ'd this Metre was ſet up in Oppoſition to the reading Pſalms ſung in Cathedrals. The Learned Heylin thinks theſe great Church Men were well founded in their Suſpicion: They foreſaw, 'tis likely the bringing this rhiming Performance into the Church, might engage the Fancy of the Ignorant People too far, and make them leſſen their Regard for the other Parts of the Service. Theſe Preſages were afterwards made good to a remarkable Misfortune: For when the Puritan Faction grew up to Strength and Aſſurance, this Metre made the Antient Hymns diſreliſh'd, and threw the Te Deum, the Magnificat, &c. out of the Church in many Places. They are rather permitted than allowed. Id.

Thus ſometimes Things which are only conniv'd at at firſt, govern at laſt. For this Tranſlation of Sternhold and Hopkins was rather Permiſſion than Allowance. For notwithſtanding 'tis ſaid in the Title of theſe ſinging Pſalms that they were ſet forth, and allow'd to be ſung in all Churches, before and after Morning and Evening Prayer, and alſo before and after Sermon; yet this Allowance ſeems rather to import Connivance than Approbation: For thoſe who have ſearch'd into this matter, with the utmoſt Care and Curioſity, could never diſcover any Authority, either from the Crown, or the Convocation.

A brief Account of the Book drawn up for a Body of Eccleſiaſtical Laws; and intituled Reformatio Legum Eccleſiaſticarum.

It has been already obſerv'd, the King was impower'd by Act of Parliament, to appoint Two and Thirty of the Spiritualty, and Temporalty, to review the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and draw a Body out of them. That this Performance being afterwards approved by the King, and Publiſh'd under the Broad-Seal, ſhould have the force of a Statute within the Engliſh Dominions. The Two and Thirty Commiſſioners were to be divided into Four Subcommittees; each of which was to conſiſt of Two Biſhops, and Two Divines, Two Canon and Civil, and Two common Lawyers: And what was concluded by each Claſs, was to be tranſmitted to the reſt, and examin'd by them. The Subcommittee, who by the King's Letters Patents, had the firſt digeſtion of the Work, has been already mention'd: Archbiſhop Cranmer had a principal ſhare in furniſhing the matter. 'Twas put into Method and Form by Dr. Haddon Orator to the Univerſity of Cambridge. Sir John Cheek is likewiſe ſaid to have contributed to the poliſhing Part. 'Tis written in a correct and beautiful Style, and comes up to the force and propriety of the Civil Law. (x) 'Tis digeſted into one and Fifty Titles, beſides an Appendix de Regulis Juris. 'Tis not ſaid whether this Draught had paſs'd the Approbation of all the Four Claſſes, or not. The Affirmative is moſt probable, conſidering it appears in ſo finiſh'd a Condition. But the King's Death happening unexpectedly, the Book had no Royal Confirmation, and by conſequence miſcarried in its Authority. However, ſince it appears to have been drawn up with no ſmall ſhare of Judgment and Learning, it may not be amiſs to give the Reader an Account of ſome of the moſt remarkable Contents.

(x) Reformat. Leg. Eccleſ. in Præfat.

The Two firſt Titles, ſettle the Catholick Faith, and point out ſeveral Hereſies. But theſe Heads and Deciſions, being much the ſame with thoſe of the Church Articles in this Reign, I ſhall paſs them over.

Hereſy.

The Third Title treats of the Proceſs againſt Hereſy. Thoſe who lived in Places exempt, were to be tryed before the Biſhops or Archbiſhops of the Dioceſe. Here the Party accuſed had the liberty of appealing from the Biſhop to the Archbiſhop, and from the Archbiſhop to the King's Perſon. If any one charg'd with Hereſy, refus'd to give Security to ſtand to the Award of the Court, the Biſhop was authoriz'd to commit him, and detain him in Priſon 'till the Proceſs was over. And if any ſuch Perſon was lawfully cited, and refus'd to appear, he was firſt to be Excommunicated, and afterwards committed, 'till he had given Sureties to ſubmit to the Sentence of the Eccleſiaſtical Judge. Thoſe who would not be reclaim'd from their Misbelief by any Admonitions or Inſtructions, were to be pronounc'd Hereticks, and Excommunicated. And provided they renounc'd their Heterodoxy within Sixteen Days, they were firſt to give publick Proof of their Repentance. Then they were Solemnly to Swear againſt a Relapſe, and Thirdly to declare their Belief of the contrary Doctrine; upon which Satisfaction they were to be Abſolved. But in Caſe Excommunication was deſpis'd, and the Diſcipline of the Church made no Impreſſion, they were then to be deliver'd into the Hands of the Secular Magiſtrate, and then they were to ſuffer Death by the Law: From hence it appears that all Capital proceedings for Hereſy were not laid down, as our learned Hiſtorian ſuppoſes. (y) Neither is this more than might be expected, conſidering that by the firſt Article of the Book, thoſe who declar'd againſt the Chriſtian Religion, were to Forfeit their Lives and Eſtates. Farther, if while the Proceſs was depending, the Perſon proſecuted for Hereſy, removed out of the Juriſdiction of the Court, the Eccleſiaſtical Judge was to apply to the Sheriff, or Mayor of the Town, whether the Criminal was retired, to deſire he might be remanded to the Court. And provided the Sheriff or Mayor ſhould refuſe to apprehend, and return the Criminal, they were to be excommunicated for the neglect. Thoſe who were convicted of Hereſy, neglected their Appeal, or refuſed to give Satisfaction in due Time, were to be accounted Infamous, not ſuffer'd to bear any publick Office, to be of Council, or Witneſs in any Court, or to have the priviledge of making their Will. If Hereſy was proved upon any Clergyman, his abjuring it afterwards, was no ſufficient Amends to take off his Puniſhment, and recover his Preferment. For a Churchman's Reputation ought to be unblemiſhed: And when he has once tarniſh'd his Character, he is diſabled for his Function: However, there is an exception thrown in for extraordinary Caſes.

(y) Bp. Burnet pt. 2. p. 198.

Blaſphemy.

The Fourth Title is about Blaſphemy, ſets forth the Hideouſneſs of the Sin, orders the Biſhop to proceed to ſpeedy Juſtice, and purſue this Crime with the ſame Puniſhment levelled againſt Hereſy. And here the Article takes notice that the Blaſphemer was to be ſtoned by the Law of Moſes, and that God had ſometimes reveng'd the Connivance at ſuch Wickedneſs by a publick Calamity.

The Sacraments.

The Fifth defines the Nature and Number of the Sacraments, and ranges none ſtrictly and properly ſpeaking under that Denomination, excepting Baptiſm and the Lord's Supper. Impoſition of Hands is made neceſſary at the Conſecration, and ordaining of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons. Marriages were to be publickly ſolemniz'd in the Face of the Congregation; Children were to be confirm'd by the Biſhop, when they could give an Account of their Baptiſmal Engagement. The Pariſh Prieſts were to viſit the ſick, and govern themſelves in their Applications by the Rubrick of the Common Prayer.

Idolatry, Witchcraft, &c.

The Sixth Title goes upon Idolatry, Witchcraft, conſulting Conjurers, and divining by Lots. Theſe Crimes, provided the Party ſubmitted, were to be puniſh'd at the Diſcretion of the Eccleſiaſtical Judge, but in caſe of Obſtinacy, Excommunication was to follow. And if any Perſon had done his Neighbour any Damage by ſuch dark Practices, he was bound to make Reſtitution.

Qualifications of Preachers.

The Seventh provides for the due Qualification of Preachers: That no body ſhould be permitted this Function without an Authority from the Biſhop: That all Novelty of Doctrine or Expreſſion, all unneceſſary Queſtions, all ſuperſtitious Fancies, ſhould be avoided in the Pulpit: That thoſe who have a general Licence to preach thro' the whole Dioceſe ſhould be called before the Biſhop once a Year, that by this means the Dioceſan might be inform'd what Places were moſt remarkable for Diſorder. And being thus acquainted with the Nature of the Diſeaſe, the Remedy might be the better proportion'd: People of Quality, and Magiſtrates are particularly injoin'd to be conſtant at the hearing of Sermons, both for their own Benefit, and the Advantage of their Example: And if any Perſons diſturb'd the Preacher, they were to be ſuſpended from the Sacrament, and barr'd coming into the Church till they had given Satisfaction.

Marriage.

The Eighth relates to Marriage. And here the Banns are order'd to be firſt publiſh'd by the Prieſt Three Sundays or Holidays; Afterwards the Bride and Bridegroom were to appear in the Church, and paſs thro' the Ceremonies appointed by the Common-Prayer: And that unleſs theſe Forms are punctually obſerv'd, the Marriage is incomplete, and the Perſons at liberty as before. Thoſe who debauch'd young Women were to be excommunicated, and not to be reſtor'd unleſs they married the Perſons they had formerly abuſed: And if this could not be done, the Eccleſiaſtical Judge was to aſſign the Perſon they had injured a third Part of their Eſtate. And in caſe ſuch a Satisfaction happen'd to be impracticable, they were then to oblige him to maintain the illegitimate Iſſue, beſides farther arbitrary Puniſhment. The Marriage of Minors, who engag'd themſelves without the Conſent of their Parents and Guardians, was to ſtand for nothing: But if thoſe who had thus the Charge of them prov'd too dilatory in making, or accepting Propoſals, the young People might apply to the Eccleſiaſtical Judge for their Relief. The Impediments of Marriage are reckon'd up, and this State left at liberty to Men and Women of all Ages and Conditions; with Advice however, not to do any thing contrary to Decency, nor engage at too great a Diſparity of Years. Polygamy is condemn'd as a Contradiction to the firſt Inſtitution of Matrimony in Geneſis. And therefore whoſoever has thus unhappily entangled himſelf, was to keep cloſe to his firſt Marriage, to diſengage from the reſt, return the Women their Fortunes, and over and above make the Church Satisfaction for the Scandal. Marriages made upon Force and Compulſion, provided the Violence was ſtrong, and the Proofs evident, were not to ſtand good. At the cloſe of this Head, the Niceneſs and Delicacy of thoſe Women who refuſ'd to ſuckle their Children is deeply cenſur'd. And the Preachers are order'd to declaim againſt this Miſbehavior.

The prohibited Degrees of Marriage.

The Ninth dilates upon the prohibited Degrees of Marriage, ſettles the Levitical Law for a Rule, and orders People to govern themſelves by Inference and Proportion in the Caſes unmention'd. As for ſpiritual Relations founded upon Godfathers and Godmothers, they were to be no Bar, their being neither Scripture, nor good Reaſon for ſuch a Reſtraint.

The Puniſhment of Adultery.

The Tenth begins with the Heinouſneſs of Adultery; takes notice that this Crime was capitally puniſhed both by the Moſaick, and the Civil Law. To diſcountenance this Licence effectually, 'tis provided, that if any Clergy-man was convicted of Fornication, Inceſt, or Adultery, he was to forfeit all his Eſtate to his Wife and Children. And if no ſuch Relations were in Being, his Fortune was to be diſtributed amongſt the Poor, or to ſuch other pious Uſes as the Eccleſiaſtical Judge ſhould think fit. He was likewiſe to loſe his ſpiritual Preferment, and either to be baniſh'd or impriſon'd during Life. If a Lay-man was prov'd guilty of this Crime, he was to return his Wife her Fortune, and part with half his own to her over and above: The Remainder of his Puniſhment was either Baniſhment or perpetual Impriſonment. Women when convicted, were to forfeit their Dowry, Joynture, Thirds, and all other Profits and Advantages, which would otherwiſe accrue to them by their Matrimony; and beſides, they were either to be confin'd for Life, or baniſh'd. When either Husband or Wife was convicted of proving falſe to the Engagements of Marriage, the innocent and injured Perſon had the liberty of marrying elſewhere: There being no Reaſon to confine one Perſon to ſingle Life for the Fault of another. And thus we ſee the Caſe of Adultery plainly excepted by our Saviour. However, conſidering the Nearneſs of the Relation, paſſing over the Injury, and living together again, is recommended in caſe there is any hopes of regular Behavior: But if this Favour will not be allow'd, the Criminal is barr'd any other Marriage. But not to leave a matter of this moment to private Suſpicion and Diſguſt, no body was to part either from Wife or Husband till the Cauſe was heard, and the Divorce pronounc'd by the Eccleſiaſtical Judge. If either of the Parties deſert, and can't be prevail'd with to live together, the rambling and obſtinate Perſon ſhall ſuffer perpetual Impriſonment, and the Party deſerted allow'd the Liberty of marrying at Diſcretion. But then the Perſon complain'd of, provided provided he was abſent, was to have two or three Years allow'd him, to make his Appearance, and juſtify his Abſence. If a Man happens to be a great while in a foreign Country, upon the ſcore either of Merchandize, or ſerving in the Field, and no Tidings could be heard of him, his Wife, if ſhe pleaſed, might apply to the Eccleſiaſtical Judge, who was to give her two or three Years to expect the Return of her Husband: And if after ſhe had laid out for the beſt Intelligence, and could hear nothing of him within this Term, ſhe had the Liberty of marrying another Man: But with this Condition, that in caſe her Husband ſhould come home, ſhe muſt be oblig'd to live with him again, and break off her ſecond Marriage: She was oblig'd to do this, provided her Husband could prove his Return was thus long delay'd by Accident and Neceſſity.

Divorce allow'd in ſeveral Caſes.

When Breach of Friendſhip between Man and Wife came to ſuch a heighth, that they attempted to poiſon, or deſtroy each other, the Judge is order'd to pronounce a Divorce: For where People are ſo flamingly provok'd and envenom'd, 'tis beſt to part them. Here the Ground of the Engagement ceaſes, and there is no reaſon People ſhould be tyed together to murder each other. And to go ſomewhat lower; if a Man mal-treats his Wife to a ſavage Degree, and proves incorrigible in Cruelty and rough Temper, inſomuch that he is not to be reclaim'd, neither by the Judge's Admonition, nor by Sureties for good Behavior, nor by the Diſcipline of a Priſon, he ought to be look'd on as no better than an implacable Enemy, and a perpetual Plague. In ſuch a Caſe therefore, the Wife ought to be reliev'd by a Divorce, no leſs than if her Life was plainly in danger. But conſtant Sickneſs is no juſt Cauſe for Separation: The ſupporting People under ſuch Misfortunes, being one of the principal Ends and Conveniencies of Marriage. While a Sute was depending for the breaking ſome of the capital Articles of Marriage, the Man was to allow his Wife a Maintenance ſuitable to her Quality and Condition. If a Man proſecuted his Wife for Adultery, or attempting his Life, and was caſt in the Court, he was to forfeit half his Eſtate to her, neither ſhould he have the Liberty of alienating that Moiety without her Conſent. And in caſe the Wife brought in a Charge of the ſame nature againſt her Husband, and fail'd in the Proof, ſhe was neither to have her Fortune return'd, nor receive any Advantage which might otherwiſe accrue to her by her Husband: And laſtly, the Marriage was to remain undiſſolv'd.

The Penalty of prompting to Licentiouſneſs

If a Man prompted his Wife to turn Strumpet, and led her to Debauchery, ſhe was to fall under the Penalty of Adultery, the Husband pronounc'd a Procurer, and the Marriage to continue. If either Husband or Wife, convict of Adultery, can prove the ſame Crime upon the Party impeaching, they were both to ſuffer the ſame Puniſhment, and neither of them allow'd the Benefit of a Divorce. All Confidents and Aſſiſtants in ſcandalous Amours, who either carry Letters or Meſſages, or furniſh Libertines with their Houſes for ſuch purpoſes, are to be puniſh'd at the Diſcretion of the Eccleſiaſtical Judge. The cuſtomary Separation from Bed and Board, the Marriage remaining firm in other Reſpects, is declar'd an unreaſonable Conſtitution, repugnant to the Holy Scripture, introductive of great Diſorders, and therefore not to be endured.

An Admonition to Patrons.

The Eleventh Title treats of the Admiſſion of the Clergy to Benefices: And here a ſtrict Examination was to be premiſ'd, that the Biſhop might lay his hands ſuddenly on no man, nor be partaker of other mens ſins.

1 Tim. 5.

Patrons are injoin'd to ſet aſide all Regards of Relation, and mercenary Motives, and to preſent purely upon the ſcore of proper Qualifications: For the right of Patronage was never given for Depredation and Abuſe, but to protect the Intereſt of the Church. Thoſe Patrons therefore who diſpoſe of Livings upon Conditions of Avarice and Scandal, either to withdraw part of the Tythes, reſerve ſome of the Buildings, or charge the Incumbent with a Penſion, were to forfeit their Preſentation for that Turn; and the Clerk who comply'd with ſuch unworthy Terms, was to loſe that Living, and be diſabled of taking any other.

The Penalty of preſenting upon a Simoniacal Contract.

Patrons were not allow'd to contract for the granting any Preſentation before the Church was void. If a Living happen to lapſe from the Patron as far as the Crown, and the King did not preſent in Six Months, the Right was to revert to the Patron, and run the ſame Circle, in caſe of Neglect, as before. The Clergy, before their Admiſſion to Benefices, were to be examin'd by the Archdeacon, who was to call in the Aſſiſtance of ſuch Friers as the Biſhop had aſſign'd for that purpoſe: The Biſhop himſelf is likewiſe exhorted to take Cognizance of ſo weighty a matter. An Oath is likewiſe requir'd of the Clerk to anſwer clearly to the Queſtions propoſed, with reſpect to the Subject in hand.

The Examination of thoſe admitted to Benefices.

After this preliminary Caution, he was to be examin'd upon his Belief in the Holy Trinity, the Canon and Authority of the Scriptures, and the Controverſies then on Foot: And in ſhort, he was to be tryed upon each Part of the Catechiſm. This Syſtem being an Abſtract of the principal Parts of Religion. And to prevent any Heterodox Clergy paſſing the Teſt, the Friers were to ſound their Belief by putting Queſtions upon all the Articles of Hereſy mention'd in the Second Title: And here thoſe who gave unſatisfactory Anſwers, or diſcover'd their Ignorance in the Holy Scriptures, were to be ſet aſide. Pluralities were altogether diſallow'd for the future, but thoſe who were already poſſeſs'd of more than one Living were not to be diſturb'd. Non-reſidence was not to be ſuffer'd in any Perſon, unleſs Age, Sickneſs, or ſome other ſufficient Excuſe could be alledg'd: And here the Biſhop was to be Judge of the Weight of the Allegation: And to make the Regulation more preciſe and particular, the benefic'd Perſon was to go to his Living Two Months after Inſtitution. Prebendaries who had no Cures annex'd, were to preach in the Neighbouring Churches: However, they had Five Years allow'd to improve themſelves in the Univerſity: Upon condition they gave the Biſhop and Chapter a yearly Account of their Proficiency. Baſtards are barr'd the Eccleſiaſtical Function, unleſs they appear particularly remarkable for Parts, Learning, and good Behavior.

Natural Children barr'd ſpiritual Promotions.

But no Recommendations of this kind was a ſufficient Diſpenſation for the Natural Children of Patrons, who ſometimes had the Confidence to make Proviſion for their unhappy Iſſue this way; but ſince the treating Natural Children with ſo much regard is the way to encourage Licentiouſneſs, therefore all ſuch Inſtitutions are declar'd void, and the Patron was to loſe his Preſentation pro hâc vice. As for natural Infirmities, and Diſadvantage of Perſon, no body was to be refus'd upon that ſcore, unleſs they diſabled the Perſon from executing his Office. And therefore if a Man was blind, ſtammer'd to Unintelligibleneſs, or had ſo rank a Breath that no Company could well bear him, 'twas not thought proper to admit him to the Prieſthood. The Clerks after Admiſſion to a Benefice were to ſwear their Reſolution of adhering to the receiv'd Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church, to renounce the Pope, and to own the King ſupreme Head of the Church of England under Chriſt. They were likewiſe to ſwear Canonical Obedience to their Biſhop: That they ſtood clear of Simoniacal Contracts: Would ſatisfy nothing of that kind made by any other Perſon: And that they would never charge their Benefice with any new Penſions: And laſtly, thoſe who intruded into any ſpiritual Promotion without Authority from their Dioceſan, were to loſe the Benefice, and be made for ever uncapable of any other: And for farther Diſcouragement of ſuch Preſumption, they were to be ſuſpended from their Function, and Excommunicated.

What Diſadvantages of Perſon are Incapacities for the Prieſthood.

The Twelfth and Thirteenth relate to Ceſſions, Reſignations, and Exchanges of Benefices, which containing nothing extraordinary, I ſhall paſs over.

The manner of Purgation.

The Fourteenth ſtates the meaſures of Purgation. Clearing ones Reputation this way was requiſite either when a Man ſuffer'd in his Character by common Fame, or being proſecuted in a Court, the Proofs fell ſomewhat ſhort of the Law, and yet were ſupported by ſtrong Preſumptions: For when there was either ſufficient Evidence of the Crimes, or they wanted ſo much as a probable Colour, in both theſe Caſes there was no room for Purgation. Clerks who were convicted of any capital Crime in the Temporal Courts, were not to be admitted to their Purgation in the Spiritual. If a Man had the Misfortune to be reported to Diſadvantage, if the Story held on, and gain'd Ground, and the Perſon concern'd, took no Care to Silence the Clamour, the Biſhop was to endeavor to clear the Suſpicion, and enjoin People to come in and declare their Knowledge: And if no body appear'd, he was to ſend for the Perſon ſuſpected, and in caſe he refus'd to purge himſelf, he might ſuſpend him ab Officio, or exclude him the Congregation. By the Form of Purgation the Perſon was to ſwear himſelf not guilty of the Crime laid to his Charge, and to fortify his Juſtification, his Compurgators were to take an Oath they believ'd he had ſworn nothing but what was true. Theſe Compurgators ought to be Perſons of a clear and unqueſtion'd Integrity, and to be thoroughly acquainted with the Behaviour of the Perſon they vouch'd for. Their Number was to be determin'd at the Judge's Pleaſure, with reſpect to this General Rule notwithſtanding, that Perſons of Diſtinction ſhould bring more Compurgators than others of private Condition. And to be more particular, a Biſhop was to produce ſome Biſhops, a Prieſt ſome Prieſts, and every body ſome of his own Rank and Quality, to vindicate his Innocence. No body ought to be forc'd upon the Office of a Compurgator. If the Biſhop happen'd to inſiſt upon a greater Number of theſe Vouchers than the Equity of the Caſe required, the Perſon ſuſpected might appeal to the Archbiſhop: He that had reſcued his Credit from any coarſe Imputation by a legal Purgation, was to be publickly declar'd innocent by the Judge, and have an Inſtrument from the Court to ſhew upon occaſion. And becauſe Wickedneſs riſes by degrees, and takes ſome time in moving to the laſt Exceſs; the Judge was to break the Opportunities, and cut off the Occaſions of Miſcarriage. For inſtance, he that is ſuſpected for an infamous Commerce with a Woman, ought to be forbidden the Houſe where ſhe lives, and all Correſpondence with her: And in caſe the Judge's Order is contemn'd, Diſcipline was to follow. He that fails in any Circumſtance of his Purgation, ought to be preſum'd guilty: But this Rule was not without Limitation, for if a Perſon was accuſed of Hereſy, and fell ſhort in his Defence, he was not immediately to be thrown up to the Civil Magiſtrate, becauſe ſuch a Failure is rather a Preſumption, than clear Evidence. And to conclude this Head, all ſuperſtitious Purgations, tho' ſupported by antient Cuſtom, were to be foreborn: Such as Duels, heated Plowſhears, or ſcalding Water.

Preventions of Licentiouſneſs.

Dilapidations.

The Fifteenth ſettles the Buſineſs of Dilapidations, preſcribes the Meaſures for Reparation of Parſonage Houſes, appoints the Penalties for deſtroying Timber upon the Eſtates of the Church, and mentions the Perſons who were to repair the Houſes belonging to Cathedrals, Colleges, and Hoſpitals.

Alienations.

The Sixteenth touches upon Alienations of Church Lands, and that nothing of this kind ought to be done by way of Sale, Gift, or Exchange, without the Biſhop's and Patron's Conſent. No Leaſes of Farms made by Eccleſiaſticks, was either to exceed the Term of Ten Years, or bind the Succeſſor.

Elections.

The Seventeenth concerns Elections in Cathedrals and Colleges: And here the Proceedings are to be govern'd by the Statutes of the reſpective Places, provided there is nothing in them repugnant either to the Reform'd Religion of the Realm, or to the Conſtitutions compriz'd in this Book.

The corrupt Practices of Lay-Patrons.

The Eighteenth fences againſt mercenary Diſpoſitions of Livings. And here the indirect Practices of Lay-Patrons are reckon'd up. For the purpoſe, ſome were ſo rapacious as to reſerve the whole Profits and Perquiſites of the Benefice to themſelves, allowing only ſome ſmall Penſion to the Incumbent: Others were ſomewhat better natured in their Diſhoneſty, and bargain'd with the Parſon to quit nothing but the Glebe. Others were contented with keeping the Parſonage Houſes, for themſelves. And almoſt all the reſt bring the Clergy under Articles for the Payment of an annual Penſion or Rent, or procure a Diſcharge from paying their Tythes, or maim the Living in ſome Circumſtance or other: Inſomuch that there are very few who part with a Preſentation without ſome fraudulent and ſacrilegious Reſerve. To meet with this ſcandalous Practice, all ſuch Contracts and Covenants are declar'd void: And when the Ordinary had Ground to ſuſpect ſuch foul Dealing, and could not make out the Proof, the Clerk was not to have Inſtitution till he had paſs'd thro' a Canonical Purgation, and when a Clerk was convicted of any Simoniacal Contract, he was not only to forfeit his Benefice, but remain uncapable of any ſpiritual Promotion for the future.

Regulations of Divine Service

Rules for Pſalmody.

Sacraments not to be adminiſtred in private Chappels.

The Nineteenth regulates Divine Service. In Cathedrals and Colleges the Common Prayer was to be ſaid every Morning with the Litany on Wedneſdays and Fridays, and the Communion Office on Holidays. All the Prebendaries and Clerks who were maintain'd upon the Revenues of the Church, were to be preſent at Morning and Evening Prayer, unleſs they could fairly excuſe their Abſence. There was to be a Communion on Sundays and Holidays, where the Biſhop, the Dean, the Archdeacon, the Prebends with the reſt of the Clerks were to receive. There was to be no Preaching at Cathedrals in the Morning, for fear of drawing the People from their own Pariſhes: But in the Afternoon there was to be a Sermon before Evening Prayer. In ſinging of Pſalms, the Clergy were to manage in ſuch a manner as was moſt likely to recommend the Service, and raiſe the Devotion of the Audience. To this end they were to confine themſelves to plain Song, and keep within the compaſs of a few Notes; and therefore all bending them with too much Art, all Strains and Delicacies of Muſick were to be avoided: And eſpecially they were not to ſhake ſo far as to make the Words unintelligible. And in this Pſalmody the People were to bear a Part with the Choir. In Pariſh Churches there was to be a Sermon or Homily in the Morning, and an Hour ſpent in explaining the Catechiſm in the Afternoon; where after Evening Prayer, the Parſon with ſome of the moſt conſiderable of the Pariſh, was to direct the Diſpoſition of the Mony given to pious Uſes. And at this time publick Penance was to be undergone, and the Diſcipline of the Church exercis'd. When there appear'd a Neceſſity of proceeding to Excommunication, the Biſhop was to be applied to: And after his Conſent authentickly granted, the Cenſure was to be publickly pronounc'd in the Church. The Sacraments were not to be adminiſtred, nor Common Prayer read in Chappels without great Neceſſity, it being moſt fit the People ſhould frequent their Pariſh Church, and the Flock keep cloſe to their Paſtor. 'Twas likewiſe forbidden to give the Sacrament in private Houſes: For by this means there might be an Opportunity for the ſpreading of Heterodoxy. Beſides, ſuch ſeparate Meetings weak'ned that Union and Charity which the Holy Euchariſt was deſign'd to promote. However, there was an Exception for ſick People, and Perſons of Quality, who had numerous Families: Under this condition, that the Pariſh Prieſt might be no Loſer by ſuch a Privilege. And over and above, all Chappels and private Adminiſtrations were to be govern'd by the Rubrick in the Common Prayer.

The Buſineſs of Rural Deans and Archdeacons.

The Biſhop's Office.

Regulations for the Biſhop's Family, and the reſt of the Clergy.

The Twentieth dilates upon the Maintenance and Office of Pariſh Clerks, and from thence proceeds to the Buſineſs and Management of Church-Wardens, Deacons, and Prieſts: Theſe latter, provided they liv'd ſingle, were not to entertain any Woman in their Houſes, under Threeſcore Years of Age, excepting their Mothers, Siſters, or Aunts. Rural Deans were to be choſen by the Biſhop for every Deanery; they were to continue only a Year. Their Buſineſs was to make a Report to the Biſhop of the Behavior of the Prieſts, Deacons, Church-Wardens, &c. within their Precincts. They were likewiſe to delate the Names of Hereticks, Procurers, Strumpets, Libertines, and Polygamiſts: And in ſhort to inform the Ordinary of all People who were remarkably ſcandalous, theſe Rural Deans were empower'd to call ſuſpected Perſons before them, to examine their Miſbehavior, and tranſmit their Proceedings in Writing to the Biſhops within Ten Days. They were likewiſe to certify the Ordinary every Six Months, how many Sermons had been preach'd within their Deanery. The Archdeacon's Poſt was to be next the Biſhop in the Government of the Dioceſe, with a Reſervation for the Privilege of the Dean, with reſpect to the Cathedral. The Archdeacon was always to be a Prieſt, his Buſineſs was to reſide upon his Juriſdiction, to preach, to viſit, to ſuperintend the Rural Deans: To viſit his Archdeaconry twice in the Year at leaſt, and tranſmit an Account to the Biſhop of the State of the Dioceſe within Three Weeks after every Viſitation. The Dean's Office was to take care, that every thing was regularly manag'd within the Juriſdiction of the Cathedral. And therefore he was not to be non-reſident without Leave from the Biſhop. In Cathedrals the Prebendaries were to read upon ſome Part of Scripture thrice a Week, or at leaſt to procure ſome Divine for that purpoſe. The whole Dioceſe, both Clergy and Laity, were to be under the Biſhop, and to be govern'd by his Diſcipline and Direction. He was to preach in his Cathedral, not to ordain either at random or for Reward, to receive Complaints againſt Diſorderly Curates, and deprive them: To take up Quarrels amongſt the Clergy: To preſcribe Orders for Reformation of Manners: To viſit his Dioceſe every Third Year: To exert the Cenſures of the Church in Places exempt as well as the reſt: And in caſe he viſited oft'ner, he was to receive no Procurations, but ſupport the Charge himſelf. He was to be very careful in the Choice and Management of his Family: He was not to entertain any fantaſtical extravagant People: No body that was ſcandalous for Wine, Women, or Play. His Houſe was, as it were, to be a Seminary for the Inſtruction of the Dioceſe, like that of St. Auſtin and other Primitive Prelates. The Biſhops Wives were not to be airy, idle, or over-dreſs'd. The ſame Rule for Sobriety and Diſcretion was to be ſet for their Children: And all this Expectation to reach the reſt of the Clergy however dignified or diſtinguiſh'd: In ſhort, the whole Compaſs of the Order were to avoid every thing that might bring an Imputation of Levity, Luxury, or Pride. Thoſe Biſhops who were Viſitors of Colleges were to ſee the Statutes obſerv'd, the Divinity Lectures kept up, worthy Men encourag'd, and others remov'd. Farther; Biſhops were to reſide upon their Dioceſe, unleſs urgent Buſineſs of Church or State call'd them elſewhere: And when they grew diſabled for their Function either by Age or Sickneſs, they were to be repreſented by Coadjutors. The Archbiſhop was once to viſit his whole Province, if practicable: He was to inſpect the Management of his Suffragans, to collate to Benefices, and perform the other Functions of the Dioceſan, during a Vacancy: To deprive incorrigible Biſhops, and put others in their Places: To receive and judge Appeals: To take up Diſputes and Differences between the Provincial Biſhops. And if the Archbiſhop and his Suffragans happen'd to diſagree, the King was to decide the Controverſy.

verſe. 'Twas likewiſe Part of the Archbiſhops Buſineſs to convene Provincial Synods at the Kings Order. When ſuch Aſſemblies were intimated, every Biſhop was bound either to appear, or ſend his Excuſe by a Proxy.

The Method and Buſineſs of Synods.

Dioceſan Synods are preſcrib'd as the beſt Expedient to preſerve Orthodoxy and Diſcipline, and to maintain a good Correſpondence between the Biſhop and his Clergy. Theſe Synods were to be held once a Year, in the Beginning of Lent, that the Clergy might have Time to return to their Pariſhes before Palm Sunday. And if it happen'd ſo, that the Biſhop could not be preſent, the Archdeacon was to ſupply his Place. The Synod was to open with ſinging the Litany: The Archdeacon or the Biſhop was to make a Sermon in Engliſh, unleſs ſome extraordinary Occaſion requir'd another Language. When Sermon was done they were to receive the Communion. After this, the Biſhop and all the Clergy were to withdraw to ſome private Apartment: And here they were to debate thoſe matters which were judg'd moſt neceſſary. For inſtance all late Heterodoxies were to be cenſured, and Miſtakes in the Expoſition of Scriptures rectified: Differences amongſt the Clergy examin'd and decided, and Enquiries made concerning Conformity. And here every Prieſt was to be ask'd his Opinion upon the Points in Queſtion: The Biſhop was to report the Senſe of the moſt Learned, and decide the Controverſy himſelf. And becauſe 'twas not convenient to keep the Clergy many Days together, the hearing of thoſe Cauſes which required more Time were either referr'd to the Biſhops Court, or to the Archdeacon at his Viſitation in September following. The Decrees and Judgments pronounc'd either by the Biſhop or the Archdeacon, were to bind the Inferior Clergy. However, in Caſe they thought themſelves under a Grievance, they had the Liberty of appealing to the Archbiſhop, who was impower'd either to confirm or rectifie the Decree: But then that Part of the Sentence which was left unrevers'd by the Metropolitan, was to remain in full Force.

The Twenty Firſt, Twenty Second, Twenty Third, and Twenty Fourth Titles relate to Church Wardens, Univerſities, Tythes, and Viſitations, which having been either touch'd already, or affording nothing but what may be commonly met with, I ſhall wave the Abſtract.

Certain Perſons diſabled from making Wills.

The Twenty Fifth is ſpent in laying down Rules concerning Wills, and other Dependencies of that Head. Several Perſons are barr'd the Privilege of making a Will. For the purpoſe, married Women, Slaves, and Children under Fourteen Years of Age. Thoſe who are not Compos Mentis, unleſs in their Lucid Intervals: People that are deaf and dumb, unleſs 'tis prov'd by ſufficient Witneſs that they can expreſs their Minds intelligibly by Signs. Hereticks are bar'd the Liberty of making their Will, and ſo were thoſe who had either Sentence of Death, perpetual Baniſhment, or perpetual Impriſonment, paſs'd upon them. Thoſe likewiſe were denied this Privilege, who refus'd to diſengage from their Wenches 'till they had a near Proſpect of Death. Thoſe who wrote Libels to deſtroy their Neighbours Credit, who were Strumpets or Pandars, unleſs they had done publick Penance, were not allow'd to diſpoſe of any thing by Will. And laſtly, Uſurers were rang'd under the ſame Diſability. However, ſeveral of theſe Perſons tho' they could not make a Will to the cuſtomary Compaſs and Extent, had notwithſtanding the Liberty of leaving Legacies for pious Uſes: that is to diſcharge Priſoners for Debt, to relieve Orphans and Widows, and all People under Indigence and Diſtreſs: To furniſh Poor Maids with a Portion to marry them, to maintain Scholars in the Univerſity, and to repair Highways.

Diſobedience to Parents how puniſh'd.

No Man's Son ought to be diſinherited, or overlook'd in his Fathers Will without the following Provocations: That is unleſs he has aſſaulted his Father, done him any remarkable Injury on purpoſe, proſecuted him in any Court of Juſtice, out of Diſaffection or Malice, and not to do Service to the Government: If he has been concerned in any dangerous Practice againſt his Father or Mother: if he has debauch'd his Mother in Law: If he has rais'd a Calumny againſt his Father, or ruin'd his Fortune in a great meaſure: If he has refus'd to be his Bail, or hindred him from making his Will: In any of theſe Caſes his Father has the Liberty of leaving him nothing.

Commutation ſeldom allow'd.

The next Title treats concerning Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. And here 'tis laid down for a General Rule that where the Puniſhment is not ſtated in this Collection, the Judge was to correct at Diſcretion. Commutation of Penance was not allow'd unleſs in extraordinary Caſes: And when the Emergency came up, the Mony was to be put into the Poors Cheſt in the Pariſh where the Offender liv'd, or where the Crime was committed: But in Caſe of a Relapſe, the Penance was to be done in kind, and no Mony taken to cover the Diſgrace.

The Twenty Seventh, Twenty Eighth, and Twenty Ninth touch upon Suſpenſion, Sequeſtration, and Deprivation. When a Biſhop was to be deprived, the Archbiſhop and Two other Biſhops of the King's Nomination, were to try the Cauſe, and pronounce the Sentence.

The Power of binding and loſing granted by our Saviour to the Church.

The Thirty Title which is the laſt I ſhall mention, relates to Excommunication. This Power of the Keys, as the Book affirms, was granted by our Saviour to the Church: 'Tis lodg'd with the Eccleſiaſtical Governors: The End of it is to maintain the Authority of the Society, to throw Terror into the Criminals, and drive them to Recollection. This Cenſure was not to be exerted but in Caſes of Extremity: None but great Crimes ſuch as ſtrike at the Root of Religion, or make a Breach in Morality, were to fall under this Diſcipline; of this kind are thoſe mention'd by St. Paul in his Epiſtles to the Corinthians, Galatians, and Epheſians. (z) In ſhort this rigorous Expedient ought never to be made Uſe of, excepting when People are hardned in their Wickedneſs, and that is, when they either make a Jeſt of Reproof, take no notice of a Citation, or refuſe to ſtand to the Judgment of the Court. A whole Society, or Corporation, was not to be excommunicated: Becauſe in ſuch collective Bodies there was great Variety of Manners: And there's no Reaſon Innocent Perſons ſhould ſuffer for the Faults which did not belong to them. This Cenſure was not to be exerted without mature Deliberation. 'Twas wiſh'd that the Conſent of the whole Church or Precinct, might intervene for the Solemnity of the Diſcipline: But ſince that Circumſtance was impracticable, the Archbiſhop, the Biſhop, or ſome ſubaltern Ordinary was to ſend for the Curate where the Criminal lived; for Two or Three Prieſts of Character together with a Juſtice of Peace of the Neighborhood; and after the Point had been thoroughly debated by this Company, the Sentence was to be pronounc'd, entred in Writing, and a Copy of it given upon Demand to the excommunicated Perſon. The Sentence was to be certified to the Pariſh and Neighborhood, that they might avoid the Company of the Offender. The Curate of the Pariſh was to read the Excommunication the next Sunday before the Congregation. And to make the greater Impreſſion, he was to dilate upon the Circumſtances: For the purpoſe, that the Perſon being ſtruck, with the Diſcipline of the Church, was to be thrown out of the Society like a dead Member, excluded the Participation of the Lord's Supper, the Benefit of Divine Service and Chriſtian Converſation, cut off from the Expectation of Happineſs, and the Protection of Providence; and conſign'd over to Eternal Puniſhment and the Tyranny of the Devil: That this was to be the wretched Condition of the Perſon excommunicated, unleſs he came to Recollection, reform'd his Manners, and gave the Church Satisfaction; but as long as he continued unrelenting, no body was to pray, to eat, or drink with him, to ſalute him, or invite him to their Houſes. However, the Intercourſe of Commerce as to buying and ſelling, was not barr'd. And if any Perſon made him a charitable Viſit in Order to his Recovery, 'twas not within the Prohibition. Thoſe who after Admonition did not decline converſing with excommunicated Perſons, were to be excommunicated themſelves. If a Man continued Forty Days obſtinate under the Cenſure, the Excommunication was to be certified into the Chancery, and a Writ directed to the Sheriff or Bailiffs to take him into Cuſtody: And in Caſe they ſhould be byaſs'd either by Favour or Mony, and not commit him within a Fortnight, they were to pay treble Damages of all the Charge expended in the Proceſs. This Amerciament was to be put in the Poors Cheſt, where the Ordinary ſhould direct. And if the Sheriff or Bailiff trifled another Fortnight, the Fine was to be doubled: And if the Perſon impriſon'd was enlarg'd, or ſuffer'd to make an Eſcape before he had made Satisfaction to the Ordinary, the Sheriff or Keeper were to be fined to the Sum abovemention'd, with the additional Penalty of Ten Pounds more to the Poors Cheſt. And in Caſe they refus'd, or were dilatory in paying the Mony, the Juſtices of Peace were order'd to diſtrain their Goods, or enter upon their Lands, and ſequeſter the Profits 'till they had made Satisfaction. When the excommunicated Perſon made his Submiſſion, he was to be reſtor'd to Communion, and the Cenſure taken off. When any Criminal was condemn'd in a Temporal Court for a Capital Offence, and afterwards pardon'd by the Crown, his Pardon was to be no Protection from the Diſcipline of the Church. Unleſs therefore he ſubmitted to Penance, and made Reparation for the Scandal given, he was to be excommunicated.

The Book having thus maintain'd the Power of the Keys lodg'd in the Church by our Saviours Commiſſion, 'tis ſomewhat ſurprizing to find the King's Supremacy aſſerted to a ſeeming Inconſiſtency with this Doctrine. For under the Title of the Office and Juriſdiction of Eccleſiaſtical Judges, 'tis affirm'd, "that "the King has the ſame extended and full "Juriſdiction, both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical, "upon the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and the reſt "of the Clergy within his Dominions, as he "has over his Lay Subjects: The Reaſon of this Aſſertion is, becauſe all Juriſdiction both Eccleſiaſtical and Secular is deriv'd from the Crown as from one and the ſame Fountain.

To return, the Form of abſolving excommunicated Perſons was this. The Penitent was to come to the Church Door in a Habit aſſign'd him by the Ordinary; the Parſon was to meet him, and demand of him before the Congregation, whether he was deſirous to confeſs his Faults before God and the Audience, and to be reſtored to the Communion of the Church? When he anſwer'd yes, the Prieſt was to bring him into the Church, to ſet forth his Submiſſion, how ready he was to acknowledge his Miſcarriage: That upon ſuch Signs of Repentance and Humiliation he was not to be rejected. That in ſuch Caſes they ought to conſider their own Infirmities, and compaſſionate the Frailties of human Nature: That there was more Joy in Heaven over one Sinner that repents than for Ninety Nine juſt Perſons, which need no Repentance. After this the Prieſt was to addreſs the excommunicated Perſon to exhort him to examine his Conſcience, to be well aſſured of his Sincerity, and not trifle with God and the Church. Upon this the Penitent was either to kneel or lie proſtrate, make his Confeſſion to God, lament his Condition, abhor his Miſcarriage, and beg the Divine Aſſiſtance to preſerve him from Relapſe. After this he was to riſe, and being carried to an Eminence where he might be better ſeen and heard, he was to apply himſelf to the Congregation, to declare his Unworthineſs in the ſtrongeſt Terms of Remorſe and Compunction, to make particular Mention of the Crime, for which he was excommunicated, to pray God his Example might prove hurtful to no Body, but that rather the Deplorableneſs of his condition, and the Shame he had undergone, might reſtrain them from the like Miſcarriage. And laſtly, he was to beg the Congregations Pardon, and intreat them to admit him to Communion. Then the Prieſt was to ask the People, whether they were willing to grant his Requeſt, who anſwering they were, the Parſon was to lay his Hand upon his Head, and abſolve him in this Form,

The Form of Abſolution.

Ego te coràm hâc Eccleſiâ, cujus mihi Adminiſtratio commiſſa eſt, te tuorum Pæna Delictorum, & Excommunicationis exolvo vinculis, per Authoritatem Dei, Poteſtatem Jeſu Chriſti, & Spiritus, ſancti, conſentientibus hujus Eccleſiæ præſentibus Membris, & etiam Ordinario ſuffragante, tibique rurſùs priſtinum in Eccleſia tuum locum, & plenum Jus, reſtituo.

After this the Paſtor was to embrace the Penitent, to ſalute him on the Cheek, to raiſe him from his Knees, and lead him to the Communion Table, where a Hymn was to be ſung, and a Thankſgiving Prayer made for his Recovery.

The reſt of the Titles are ſpent in Regulations for the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, in general Definitions, directing the Proceſs, and reciting the Grounds and Maxims of the Civil and Canon Law. Under the Title of Appeals there is one thing very remarkable which I ſhall mention. The Order was fix'd thus; The Perſon who thought himſelf aggriev'd had the Liberty of appealing from the Archdeacon or Dean, or any other ſubaltern Juriſdiction, to the Biſhop of the Dioceſe: From the Biſhop to the Archbiſhop, and from the Archbiſhop to the King. And when the Cauſe came as high as the Crown, 'twas either to be determin'd by a Provincial Council, or by Three or Four Biſhops of the King's Nomination. And thus the Delegates in the laſt Reſort were all Church Men.

The Law runs all in the King's Name, and he ſpeaks in Perſon thro' the whole Book. The Supremacy lately acknowledg'd in his Father might probably occaſion this manner. Beſides, the Parliament of this Reign had transfer'd the whole Legiſlature, as to this Affair, upon a Committee nominated by the King and Council. But the King falling into a Conſumption, which prov'd mortal the next Year, the Book miſcarried by not paſſing thro' the Forms required by the Act.

June 26. Ann. Dom. 1552.

Holbeck Biſhop of Lincoln died in Auguſt the laſt Year, but by the Intereſt of ſome Courtiers the Biſhoprick was kept in the King's Hands, 'till this Summer, when John Taylour was promoted thither. During this Vacancy, the See was horribly rifled, and all the Mannours, excepting that of Bugden, wreſted from it. (a)

Depredations upon vacant Biſhopricks.

'Twas the Cuſtom of this Reign, as one of our Learned Hiſtorians obſerves, to ſeize theſe Opportunities: To give the Reader his own Words: In all the Vacancies of Sees, ſays he, " there were a great many of the beſt Lands " taken from them, and their Revenues brought " to ſo low a Condition, that 'twas ſcarce poſ" ſible for the Biſhops to ſubſiſt: And yet if " what was ſo taken from them, had been " converted to good Uſes, to the bettering the " Condition of the Poor Clergy, it had been " ſome Mitigation of ſo heinous a Robbery; " but theſe Lands were ſnatch'd up by every " hungry Courtier, who found this the eaſieſt " way to be ſatisfied in their Pretenſions. (b)

(b) Biſhop Burnet pt. 2d. page 203.

Theſe Depredations occaſion'd the publiſhing a Tract this Year, for retrieving the Credit of the Clergy, and ſupporting them with a decent Proviſion: 'Twas dedicated to Gooderick Lord Chancellor, and Biſhop of Ely. The Author complains the Patrimony of the Church was ſeiz'd to ſuch a ſcandalous Degree, that many of the Clergy were forc'd to ſubſiſt themſelves upon mean and mechanick Employments, and apply to Buſineſs diſhonourable to their Function: That ſuch deep Poverty had brought on Ignorance on courſe, and made a great Part of the Curates remarkably underqualified: That this was a Reproach to the Kingdom, and gave an ill Complexion to the Reformation.

Id. page 202. The King threatens to ſeize the Charter of the City of London.

About this Time the Lords of the Council ſate at Guild-Hall, and reprimanded the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen for their negligent Government, and particularly for ſuffering Proviſions to be ſold at unreaſonable rates: The reſt of the Burghers are likewiſe cenſur'd for Irregularities in Trade: In ſhort, they were told that unleſs this Miſmanagement was ſpeedily reform'd, the King would ſeize their Charter, and govern the City by Officers of his own Nomination. Biſhop Ridleys Diſcourſe with the Princeſs Mary.

The Princeſs Mary, as hath been obſerv'd, was not to be remov'd from her Perſwaſion. However, Biſhop Ridley being in the Neighbourhood of her Houſe at Hunſden in Herfordſhire, reſolv'd to wait on her. She ſaluted him at firſt in a very friendly manner, entertain'd him in Diſcourſe, and gave Order for his dining with her Officers; but afterwards offering to preach before her, ſhe was ſhock'd at the Motion, and deſir'd him to anſwer that Queſtion himſelf: but when the Biſhop preſs'd on, and told the Princeſs he thought it his Duty to offer her Grace a Sermon, ſhe replied, with an Air of Diſturbance, that ſince he went ſo far in the Requeſt, and refus'd to collect her Inclination, the Pariſh Church ſhould be open for him, but neither her ſelf, nor any of her Family would make Part of the Audience. The Biſhop ſaid, he hop'd ſhe would not refuſe God's Word, ſhe anſwer'd, that what was call'd God's Word now, was not God's Word in her Fathers Reign, and that the Biſhop would not have had the Reſolution to have talk'd then at ſuch a rate of Liberty. After this ſhe fell into an Invective againſt the Adminiſtration, declar'd ſhe was not bound by the Laws made in the Kings Minority. But if when he came of Age, he approv'd what was done, ſhe was ready to acquieſce. She diſmiſs'd Ridley with Thanks for his Viſit, but by no means for his offering a Sermon. The Biſhop having taken Leave of the Princeſs, drank with Sir Thomas Wharton in the Dining Room, but immediately upon it blam'd himſelf for complying with the Invitation. He ought not, he ſaid, to have drunk in the Place where God's Word was refus'd. 'Twas his Duty, to have retired, and ſhaken off the Duſt of his Feet for a Teſtimony againſt the Houſe. Theſe Words were ſpoken with unuſual Emotion and Vehemence, for which Fox ſeems to commend him: But ſince the Princeſs was under no Excommunication, whether the Biſhop diſcover'd his Reſentment too far or not, may be ſomewhat of a Queſtion. (d) Fox, Vol. 2. page 788.

To look over the Affairs of Scotland in a Word or Two. This Year the Queen Mother made an Intereſt with the Nobility, and wreſted the Government out of the Hands of the Earl of Arran. The Earls of Angus, Huntley, Argyle, Athol, and Caſſilles, were the leading Quality in this Turn. This Princeſs made a Halt in the Execution of her Project for ſome Months, becauſe the Young Queen her Daughter was too far in her Minority. For ſhe was aſſur'd the Governor would not quit his Poſt till the Queen was Twelve Years of Age. By the Laws of Scotland the King is ſo far a Major at Fourteen, and the Queen at Twelve, as not to be tied to the Government of any Perſon formerly put upon them; for at this Age they are at Liberty to chuſe their Governors or Protectors for the managing the Adminiſtration till they come to a full Majority. Upon the Strength of this Privilege, the Young Queen at her Mothers Suggeſtion made choice of the French King, the Cardinal of Lorrain, and the Duke of Guiſe his Brother for her Protectors, who transferr'd that Truſt upon the Queen Mother. The Queen Mother convenes the Nobility, acquaints them with her Right, and demands the Adminiſtration. And when the Governor alledg'd, the Young Queen was no more than Eleven Years of Age, the Queen Mother, to diſappoint all Objections inſiſted that by the Cuſtom of the Kingdom, the Young King or Queen might if they pleaſed reckon the Time from their Conception to their Birth for one Year. The Governor allow'd this Cuſtom as to a King, but denied there was any Preſident for a Queen. The Point was referr'd to the Nobility at Striveling, where the Queen having a great Majority, entred upon the Government. *

* Leſley de Reb. geſt. Scot. p. 477. & deinceps.

This Year ſome little time before the Earl of Arran was remov'd, there was a Provincial Synod held at Linthingo, where all the Decrees, which had paſs'd in the Council of Trent, under Paul the Third were receiv'd. There was likewiſe ſeveral Canons made for regulating the Behaviour of the Clergy, and ſtopping the Progreſs of Hereſy.

To return to England. The Reformation was ſomewhat intemperately carried on at Oxford. The Viſitors were ſo fond of novelty, that they ridicul'd the Univerſity Degrees, and diſcourag'd the Exerciſes. They called the Univerſities a Seat for Blockheads, and the Stews of the Whore of Babylon; and the Schools had commonly no better Name than the Devils Chappel. And after having mark'd this Society in ſuch an Opprobrious manner, 'tis no wonder they left them nothing to Abuſe. We need not be ſurpriz'd at the Viſitors breaking open the publick Treaſury, and making Seizure of the Mony, Plate, and Jewels. In ſhort, many Records relating to the Privileges of the Univerſity were deſtroy'd, and little with reſpect to Diſcipline or Improvement, to Ornament or Treaſure left remaining. †

In the beginning of Winter, the Biſhop of Durham who had got over the Bill of Attainder in the laſt Parliament, was now depriv'd by a Commiſſion. (e)

The Biſhop of Durham depriv'd.

About this Time the famous Antiquary John Leland departed this Life. He was bred in Chriſt College in Cambridge. He had a great capacity for Learning, and improv'd his Genius with extraordinary Induſtry. And thus being a Perſon of Character, he was employ'd by the late King to Examine the Libraries, the Leiger Books, and Records of Religious Houſes, and make an Extract of the remarkable Antiquities. This was done, as is ſuppos'd, when the project of Diſſolution was upon the Anvil: This Commiſſion being a work of Time and Fatigue, King Henry allow'd him an handſom Penſion. But upon this Princes's Death, the Incouragement expir'd with him. And thus Leland being thrown up to hardſhip, languiſh'd away the reſt of his Life. The publick diſcountenance, 'tis probable, went deep into his Mind, for at laſt he was ſo unhappy, as to Die diſtracted. His Collections preſented to the late King, came into the Hands of Sir John Cheek. Burton who wrote the Antiquities of Leiceſterſhire, had afterwards Four Volumes of them, which are now in the Bodleian Library.

The Death of the Antiquary Leland.

This Year Bale the Centuriſt was ſent into Ireland. He was an Author not without Learning, but puſh'd his Satyr to ſuch a degree of Indecency, that 'twas not thought proper to prefer him in England. but the Sees of Armagh, and Oſſory, in Ireland, falling void, the King nominated Dr. Goodacre to the firſt, and Bale to the other.

About this Time there was a Change made in the Order of the Garter. It ſeems the Credibility of the Hiſtory of St. George was queſtion'd, and the Ceremonies of the Solemnity Charg'd with Superſtition. 'Twas therefore reſolv'd to ſtrike out the Name of the Patron, and call it only the Order of the Garter. The Feſtival was not to be held on St. Georges Day, but at Whitſuntide. There were likewiſe ſome other Reformations not neceſſary to be mention'd. But the Diſſolution of the Free Chappel of St. George in Windſor Caſtle, is thought to have been the main deſign of this New Scheme: And thus ſome of the Courtiers would have had an opportunity of ſharing the Lands, under a pretence of laying them to the Crown. But the King's Death happening not long after, the Project miſcarried, the new Regulation was ſet aſide, and the Solemnity reſtor'd to its firſt Inſtitution. That the Story of St. George, as to the main, is no legendary Fiction; at leaſt that 'tis not without a fair Appearance of Truth, the Reader may ſee, by conſulting the Authorities on the Margin.

In January this Winter, the King fell Ill of a Conſumptive Cough: The Phyſicians found it difficult to deal with, and the Symptoms grew worſe and worſe, inſomuch, that when the Parliament met on the firſt of March following, the King was in no condition to go to Weſtminſter, but ordered both Houſes to attend him at White-Hall, where a Sermon was Preach'd by Ridley Biſhop of London. At this Seſſions a Bill Paſs'd in the Houſe of Lords, that none ſhould be capable of any Spiritual Preferment, unleſs they were Prieſts, or Deacons. The reaſon of this Bill, was becauſe many Young Perſons of Quality, and Gentlemens Sons, had Prebends given them upon their Promiſe, that they deſign'd to Study Divinity, and qualify themſelves for the Function of an Eccleſiaſtick: But it ſeems they commonly kept their Promotions, without minding to make good the Engagement. To prevent this Practiſe the Biſhops prevail'd with the Temporal Lords, to Concur in a Remedy; but after all, the Bill miſcarried in the Houſe of Commons.

This Parliament which was Diſſolv'd, on the laſt of March Paſs'd an Act for ſuppreſſing the Biſhoprick of Durham. The Preamble ſets forth, "that " that See being then void, the diſpoſal of it
" was in the King, that the Extent of it was " too large, and reach'd to ſo many diſtant
" Shires, that it could not be well Govern'd
" by one Biſhop; and ſince the King out of " his godly Diſpoſition was deſirous to have
" God's holy Word Preach'd in theſe Parts,
" which for lack of good Preaching and Lear" ning, were grown Wild and Barbarous, his
" Majeſty therefore intended to have Two
" Biſhopricks for that Dioceſe: One at Durham,
" which ſhould be Endow'd with Two Thou-

" Newcaſtle, which ſhould have a Thouſand
" Marks Revenue: And alſo to found a
" Cathedral Church at Newcaſtle with a Dean-

" Biſhoprick: The Biſhoprick therefore of Dur-
" ham is utterly extinguiſh'd and diſſolv'd, and " Authority is given for Letters Patents, to Erect
" the New Biſhopricks, together with a Dean-

" that the Deanery, Chapter, and Cathedral of " Durham, ſhould ſuffer nothing by this Act. (f)

Theſe New Erections were mention'd in all likelyhood for a Colour, to ſmooth the way for the Diſſolution Bill, and cover the Duke of Northumberland's Deſigns. Had there not been a different Deſign at the bottom, the New Erections would have been purſued, and the Act taken its Effect. This had been no more than a juſt deference to the Legiſlature; but this Proviſion was in a great meaſure overlook'd, and the Mask pull'd off in a ſhort Time: For in May following, ſays our Hiſtorian, the Temporalities of the Biſhoprick were Seculariz'd, turn'd wholly to a County Palatine, and granted to the Duke of Northumberland.

Id.

That this Duke had a proſpect, and a promiſe too, of the Temporalties of this See is very likely: But that the Grant was executed in Form of Law, is more, than appears.

Ibid.

As for Ridley, he was not only Nam'd without Effect, as our Hiſtorian reports, but actually tranſlated from London to Durham. For in the Inſtrument, by which Bonner was reſtor'd to the See of London, in the next Reign, 'tis ſet forth, that the Biſhoprick of London was then void by the Tranſlation of Ridley to Durham, upon the deprivation of Tunſtal, by King Edward the Sixth: And thus Bonner was reinveſted, without pronouncing Ridley depriv'd of the See of London. But on the contrary, it appears by the Regiſter, that Ridley was depriv'd of the Biſhoprick of London, for Hereſy, and Sedition. *

Crown Lands diminiſh'd, and the King in Debt.

Stow Annal.

The Crown in this Reign had great Acceſſions of Wealth: The Chauntry Lands, Colleges, Free Chappels, &c. amounted to a great Revenue; to which we may add the ſeizing a great many Mannors belonging to Cathedrals and Biſhopricks. Beſides this, the Lands of ſeveral of the Halls and Companies in London, were charg'd with reſerv'd Rents, for furniſhing Lights and Obits, and maintaining Chauntry Prieſts. To take off this Incumbrance, the City paid the King Twenty Thouſand Pounds. And not long ſince he receiv'd Four Hundred Thouſand Crowns of the French King, for the ſurrender of Boulogne. But notwithſtanding all theſe extraordinary Proviſions for the Exchequer, the Royal Revenues were conſiderably leſſen'd, and the Government was in Debt, to the value of Two Hundred and Fifty Thouſand Pounds. From hence 'tis plain, how untowardly the Treaſury was manag'd, and how far the Courtiers ſerv'd themſelves of the King's Minority.

The King's Fortune thriving thus Ill, under ſuch opportunities of Improvement, 'twas thought fit to retrench the Expences of the Court, and put down ſome of the Tables. Some of the Officers likewiſe of leſs Intereſt, had their management inſpected, and were call'd to Account. For inſtance, the Lord Paget was Fin'd Six Thouſand Pounds: Beaumont Maſter of the Rolls, ſurrendred his Land and Goods to the King, for his Miſbehavior in his Office. This Man, it ſeems, had purchas'd Land with the King's Mony, and fraudulently exceeded his Commiſſion in other Reſpects. Whaley one of the King's Receivers for the County of York, had miſconduct of a reſembling Nature proved upon him: His Sentence was to loſe his Employment, and be Fin'd at the Pleaſure of the King and Council. But all this, tho' it carried a popular Face, gave little relief, and fell much ſhort of the preſent Exigences.

There was therefore a more ſerviceable Expedient ſuggeſted. The Council had been Inform'd, that a great deal of the Plate and Furniture in Churches, had been lately carried off without Warrant: That ſecular Mens Houſes were furniſh'd with Altar Pieces and Copes, that they drank in Chalices at their Entertainments, turn'd the conſecrated Plate to common uſe, and made a Figure out of the plunder of Churches. (g) Now to ſtop this Invaſion, and throw the remainder into the publick Channel, Commiſſions were iſſued out to Perſons of Condition in every County, with the following Inſtructions. And here I ſhall only Tranſcribe the moſt material Part of the Inſtrument.

A Commiſſion to Seize Church Plate, and Ornaments, throughout the Kingdom.

The ſaid Commiſſioners ſhall upon their View, and and Survey taken, cauſe due Inventories to be made by Bills or Books indented, of all manner of Goods, Plate, Jewels, Bells, and Ornaments, as yet remaining, or any wiſe forth coming, and belonging to any Churches, Chappels, Fraternities, or Gilds, and the one Part of the ſame Inventories to ſend and return to our Privy Council, and the other to deliver to them, in whoſe Hands the ſaid Goods, Plate, Jewels, Bells, and Ornaments, ſhall remain to be kept preſerv'd: And they ſhall alſo give good Charge and Order, that the ſame Goods, and every part thereof, be at all Times forth coming to be anſwer'd, leaving nevertheleſs in every Pariſh, Church, or Chappel, of common Reſort, one, two, or more, Chalices or Cups, according to the Multitude of the People, in every ſuch Church or Chappel, and alſo ſuch other Ornaments, as by their Diſcretion ſhall ſeem requiſite for the divine Service, in every ſuch Place for the Time.

And, becauſe we be inform'd, that in many Places, great Quantities of the ſaid Plate, Jewels, Bells, and Ornaments, be Imbezzell'd by certain Private Men contrary to our expreſs Commandments in that Behalf; the ſaid Commiſſioners ſhall ſubſtantially and juſtly enquire, and attain the knowledge thereof, by whoſe default the ſame is, and hath been, and in whoſe Hands any part of the ſame is come. And in that Point the ſaid Commiſſioners ſhall have good regard, that they attain to certain Names, and dwelling Places of every Perſon and Perſons, that hath Sold, Alienated, Imbezzell'd, taken or carried away, and of ſuch alſo as have Councell'd, Adviſ'd, and Commanded, any Part of the ſaid Goods, Plate, Jewels, Bells, Veſtments, and Ornaments, to be taken or carried away or otherwiſe Imbezzell'd. And theſe things they ſhall as certainly, and duly as they can, cauſe to be ſearch'd and underſtand.

Upon a full ſearch and enquiry whereof, the ſaid Commiſſioners, Four or Three of them, ſhall cauſe to be called before them, all ſuch Perſons by whom any of the ſaid Goods, Plate, Jewels, Bells, Ornaments, or any other the Premiſes, have been Alienated, Imbezzelled, or taken away, or by whoſe means or procurement the ſame, or any Part thereof hath been attempted, or to whoſe Hands or uſe, any of the ſame, or any Profit for the ſame, hath grown. And by ſuch means, as to their Diſcretion ſhall ſeem beſt, cauſe them to bring into their the ſaid Commiſſioners Hands to our uſe, the ſaid Plate, Jewels, Bells, and other the Premiſes ſo Alienated, or the true and juſt value thereof, certifying unto our Privy Council, the Names of all ſuch as refuſe to ſtand to, or obey their Order, touching the Re-delivery, and Reſtitution of the ſame, or the juſt value thereof. To the intent, that as Cauſe and Reaſon ſhall require, every Man may Anſwer to his doings in this Behalf.

Finally our Pleaſure is, that the ſaid Commiſſioners in all their doings, ſhall uſe ſuch ſober and diſcreet manner of Proceeding, as the Effect of this Commiſſion may go forward, with as much quiet, and as little occaſion of Trouble or Diſquiet of the Multitude as may be; uſing to that End, ſuch wiſe Perſwaſions in all Places of their Seſſions, as in reſpect of the Place, and diſpoſition of the People, may ſeem to their Wiſdoms moſt Expedient, giving alſo good and ſubſtantial Order for the ſtay of the inordinate and greedy Covetouſneſs, of ſuch diſordered People, as have, or ſhall go about, the alienating of any the Premiſes, ſo as according to Reaſon, and order, ſuch as have, or ſhall Contemptuouſly Offend in this behalf, may receive Reformation, as for the Quality of their Doings ſhall be requiſite. That theſe Commiſſions were executed to the length of their Inſtructions there is no reaſon to queſtion. The learned Heylin obſerves, that on the Ninth of May this Year, Sir Roger Cholmely Lord Chief Juſtice, and Sir Robert Bowes Maſter of the Rolles, the King's Commiſſioners for gathering Eccleſiaſtical Goods, held their Seſſion at Weſtminſter, (i) call'd the Dean and Chapter before them, and order'd them to bring in a true Inventory of all the Plate, Cups, Veſtments, and other Eccleſiaſtical Goods which belong'd to their Church. The Piety of former Ages, the Solemnities of Coronations, the Funerals of Princes and Noblemen, had ornamented this Church with Plate, and religious Decorations, and furniſh'd it with officiating Habits, to an immence Value: But there was no Body ſo hardy as to Lock the Church Doors, to Conceal the Treaſure, and addreſs the Council. No, the Order was Obey'd, the Holy Furniture deliver'd, and a very ſlender ſhare of it return'd back for Divine Service. This Weſtminſter Preſident was follow'd at St. Paul's, and through out the Kingdom. The Commiſſioners Buſineſs was to make Seizure of all Goods in Cathedral or Pariſh Churches. And thus all Jewels and Gold, all Silver Croſſes, Candleſticks, Chalices, and ready Mony, were within their Inſtructions. They were likewiſe Impower'd to carry off all Copes of Gold or Silver Tiſſue, and all other officiating Habits and Ornamental Furniture of Value. They were bound to leave no more than one Chalice for the Communion Service. And as for other Conveniencies and Embelliſhments, they were intirely left at the Commiſſioners Diſcretion.

The Plate, &c. brought in from St. Peter's Weſtminſter, and St. Paul's.

Dugdale Monaſt vol. 3. p. 357.

This Order for undreſſing the Churches was, it ſeems, repreſented to the King "as an Inoffenſive Expedient, and only calling for "the ſuperfluous Plate, and other Goods that "lay in Churches, more for Pomp than uſe. (k)

But thoſe who called theſe things Superfluous, and ſhew'd ſo ſlender a regard for the honour of Religion, were none of the beſt Reformers. Had theſe People govern'd in the Minority of Joſiah, as they did in this of Edward the Sixth, they would in all likelyhood have retrench'd the expence of the Moſaick Inſtitution, and ſerved God at a more Frugal Rate. They would have diſfurniſh'd the Temple of moſt of the Gold Plate, carried off the unneceſſary Magnificence, and left but little Plunder for Nebuchadnezzar.

Our learned Church Hiſtorian ſeems to be ſomewhat of this Opinion; For notwithſtanding, he taxes Heylin for laying too much load upon the Young Princes Memory, yet he excuſes ſigning the Commiſſion upon the ſcore of Sickneſs, and that 'tis likely the King being ſo far ſpent in a Conſumption, did not much mind Affairs of that kind, but ſet his Hand eaſily to ſuch Papers as the Council prepar'd for him. And as for the Hiſtorian he makes no ſcruple to affirm, that the applying conſecrated things to common uſes, cannot be juſtified, without the Plea of extream neceſſity.

About this Time a Catechiſm was Publiſh'd by the King's Authority: "It was intitled Catechiſmus brevis Chriſtianæ Diſciplinæ Summam continens. The King's Letters Patents ſet forth, "that 'twas made by a certain pious and learned Man, and preſented to him, and that "he committed the Examination of it to certain Biſhops, and other learned Men, whoſe "judgment he much regarded. This Catechiſm was order'd to be taught in Schools; the Author of it is not certainly known; ſome think 'twas Poinet Biſhop of Wincheſter, and others Alexander Noel then Schoolmaſter of Weſtminſter, and afterwards Dean of St. Paul's. Whether the Convocation gave any Direction or Authority for the drawing this Catechiſm, is not certain: For in the next Reign, the Prolocutor Weſton excepted againſt the Catechiſm publiſh'd in this King's Time, and urg'd that 'twas not ſet forth by the Agreement of that Houſe. To this Philpot Archdeacon of Wincheſter Anſwer'd, that the ſaid Houſe had granted the Authority to make Eccleſiaſtical Laws to certain Perſons, to be appointed by the King's Majeſty, and therefore whatſoever Eccleſiaſtical Laws they or the moſt part of them ſet forth, might well be ſaid to be done in the Synod of London. (l)

A Catechiſm Publiſh'd.

This Year Harley was made Biſhop of Hereford upon the Death of Skip.

And here to mention a Word or Two relating to the State. Sebaſtian Cabot had formerly offer'd his Service to King Henry the Seventh, for ſettling a Plantation in America; this Venetian was lately made grand Pilate of England. He had met with ſome diſappointments from the Spaniard, which made him renew his Application to the Engliſh Court. Here he ſuggeſted the Attempt of the North Eaſt Paſſage to China: The Enterpriſe being thought practicable, Sir Hugh Willoughby undertook the Voyage: But himſelf and his Crew were all loſt by the Exceſſive Froſt of the Artick Climates: However, this Year the Adventure was reaſſum'd, and Three large Ships fitted out for that purpoſe; which though they fell ſhort of their Voyage to China, yet by putting into the Bay of St. Nicholas, they open'd a conſiderable Trade between Ruſſia, (m) and England.

Trade Settled with the Czar of Muſcovy.

The King not being likely to laſt long, the Duke of Northumberland quickn'd his Motions, and executed his Scheme with all the diligence the Juncture required. In the firſt Place he brought on a Match between his Fourth Son, the Lord Guilford, and the Lady Jane Grey, Eldeſt Daughter to the Duke of Suffolk. The Solemnity of the Wedding was kept at Durham Houſe in the Strand, which Northumberland had already taken Poſſeſſion of, in hopes of being quickly owner of the reſt of the Biſhoprick.

The King being now far gone in a Conſumption, and brought to a languiſhing Condition, was more eaſily work'd to Northumberlands purpoſe. In ſhort, this Duke applied ſo dexterouſly to his Paſſions, that at laſt he prevail'd with him to make a Settlement of the Crown upon the Lady Jane Grey. To bring about this Contrivance, he ſuggeſted how happy the Nation had been under his Government, and what a glorious Reformation had been carried on by him: That when ſuch a Bleſſing was ſo far Advanc'd, the next Point was to ſecure its Continuance: That Religion being convey'd to Poſterity in this condition of Purity, the publick Happineſs would be perpetuated, and the beſt Proviſion made for the Honour of his Memory. That if the Crown ſhould deſcend to the Lady Mary, both the Civil and Religious Intereſt of the Kingdom, would be in great danger: For 'tis well known how ſtrongly this Princeſs is Inclin'd to the Doctrine and Pretenſions of the Court of Rome: And in Caſe ſhe ſhould Marry with ſome powerful Prince of that Communion, the Engliſh Conſtitution might probably be overborn, and the Country made a Province to a Forreign Nation: That both his Siſters were the Iſſue of Marriages cenſur'd and diſallow'd in Parliament. And beſides, the late King having them by ſeveral Venters, they were only of the half Blood, and by conſequence, could neither be Heirs to his Highneſs, nor to each other. As for the Young Queen of Scots, ſhe had rejected an Alliance with his Majeſty, engag'd with the French and therefore was no farther to be thought on. That the Lady Jane, who ſtood next upon the Royal Line, was a Perſon of extraordinary Qualities, that her Zeal for the Reformation was unqueſtion'd, that nothing could be more acceptable to the Nation, than the proſpect of ſuch a Princeſs, that in this Caſe he was bound to ſet aſide all Partialities of Blood, and nearneſs of Relation. Theſe were inferior Conſiderations, and ought to be over-rul'd by the publick Good.

Over and above this Diſcourſe, the Duke of Northumberland took Care, to plant thoſe about the King, who would make it their Buſineſs to touch frequently upon this Subject; to enlarge upon the Accompliſhments of the Lady Jane, and deſcribe her with all imaginable Advantage. The King's Affections ſtanding for this diſpoſition of the Crown, he was gain'd at laſt to overlook his Siſters, and break through his Fathers Will. The next thing was to draw an Inſtrument, and put the Settlement in Form of Law. To this purpoſe Sir Edward Mountague Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, receiv'd an Order from the Privy Council at Greenwich, to come thither the next Day, and bring Sir John Baker Chancellor of the firſt Fruits, and Tenths, Juſtice Bromley, the Attorney, and Solicitor General, along with him. This Order was Sign'd by the Lord Treaſurer, the Duke of Northumberland, the Earls of Bedford, Shrewsbury, and Pembroke, the Lords Clinton, and Darcy, Sir John Gate, Sir William Petres, Sir William Cecil, and Sir John Cheek.

June 11 An. Dom. 1553.

When Sir Edward Mountague and the reſt came to the Court, the King told them that his Sickneſs had given him occaſion to conſider the State of the Realm, the Courſe of the Succeſſion, and the Conſequences likely to enſue. And here he repreſented the danger to Religion and the Laws, in Caſe the Lady Mary ſhould ſucceed him. And therefore to prevent a misfortune of this Bulk, his Pleaſure was, the Crown ſhould paſs to ſuch Perſons, and under ſuch Circumſtances as were ſpecified in certain Articles then laid before them: Theſe Articles they were to digeſt into Method, and draw up an Inſtrument to the beſt of their Skill. The Chief Juſtice and the reſt excepted againſt the Order, and deſir'd to be excus'd: And when farther preſs'd, mov'd for Time to Conſult the Statutes and Conſtitution; and being afterwards requir'd by a Meſſage from the Lords, to go on with Expedition, they made their Report at the Council Board, that having compar'd the Articles with the Statutes of Succeſſion, they found his Majeſty's Command Impracticable: That in Caſe they ſhould draw up an Inſtrument purſuant to their Inſtructions, not only themſelves, but all their Lordſhips would be in danger of Treaſon: That they thought it their Duty to inform their Lordſhips how the Laws ſtood: That they had not done any thing already, neither had they Reſolution enough to run ſuch a Riſque, and croſs ſo directly upon the Conſtitution. (n)

Edw. VI. K.

July 14.
The Archbiſhop over-rul'd by the Judges Signs the Inſtrument.

The Duke of Northumberland was not in the Council Chamber when this Anſwer was return'd, but being Inform'd of their Incompliance, came immediately in: He was highly inrag'd at the diſappointment, call'd Sir Edward Mountague Traitor, ſaid he would Fight in his Shirt, with any Man in that Quarrel, and bluſter'd and menac'd to that degree, that Mountague and Bromley were afraid he would have ſtruck them.

When they appear'd next at the Board, the King reprimanded them for not diſpatching the Inſtrument. The Chief Juſtice told him 'twould ſignify nothing in Law after the King's Deceaſe, becauſe the Succeſſion being ſettled by Act of Parliament, it could not be alter'd but by the ſame Authority. In ſhort, the Chief Juſtice Mountague, and the reſt, were at laſt overaw'd, and drew a Settlement of the Crown upon the Lady Jane. However, they took the beſt Precautions the Caſe would admit to Indemnify themſelves: For they ingag'd upon the Conditions of being Authoriz'd under the Broad Seal, and having a general Pardon when the Inſtrument was Finiſh'd. And to give the Conveyance a ſtronger Colour of Law, all the Judges were ſent for, and being required to Subſcribe the Inſtrument, they all put their Hands to it, excepting Sir James Hales one of the Juſtices of the Common Pleas. None of the Lord's of the Council, as far as it appears ſcrupled the ſigning this Inſtrument, excepting the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. This Prelate, tho' he liked the Perſon, was not ſatisfied with the right, and therefore endeavor'd to break the Project at its firſt Propoſal. He took the Freedom to argue againſt it with the King; the Marqueſs of Northampton, and the Lord Chamberlain Darcy being preſent. He deſired to ſpeak with the King alone, but that would not be granted. The Duke of Northumberland told him that he had misbehav'd himſelf already, in remonſtrating againſt the King's Will. The Archbiſhop was not diſcourag'd by this rebuke, but bore up againſt Northumberland at the Council Board: He inſiſted on his being Sworn, to perform the late King's Will, and urg'd the entail of the Crown upon the Two Princeſſes Mary and Elizabeth. To this the Council oppos'd the Reſolution of the Judges, and the Opinions of others learned in the Law, who affirm'd that notwithſtanding this Entail, the King being in Poſſeſſion might diſpoſe of the Crown as he thought fit. This was more than the Archbiſhop could underſtand, but being little ſkill'd in the Common Law, he was ſhock'd with the Authority, and reſign'd too far to the long Robe; he refus'd to ſign notwithſtanding, 'till he was overcome by the Importunities of the Young Prince. The King told him he hop'd he would not be the only Inſtance of Incompliance, nor go farther in his Singularities than any of the Board. Thus the Archbiſhop being preſs'd on the weak ſide, yeilded at laſt, and his reaſon 'tis poſſible might give way to his Tenderneſs in ſome Meaſure; However the main Ground of his Compliance was the Opinion of the Judges, and the Attorney General; for theſe he conſulted before he Subſcrib'd the Inſtrument.

Another Inſtrument Sign'd by the Council to adhere to the Settlement.

Beſides this Settlement Sign'd by Three and Thirty of the Privy Council, there was another Inſtrument Subſcrib'd by Twenty Four of them by the King's Order. In this Writing they engage upon their Oaths and Honour to adhere to, and perform every Article and Branch contain'd

The King's Death.

In the beginning of the next Month the King died. Some thought his Conſumption was the Effect of foul Practice: That a ſlow Poiſon was convey'd into his Veins, and his Death ſecur'd by the Duke of Northumberland. But this was Conjecture without Proof: Northumberland was unbelov'd, and therefore a Story to his Diſadvantage was more eaſily believ'd.

This young Prince had a very promiſing Genius, and ſpent his Time to the beſt purpoſes of Improvement. He had made an unuſual Progreſs in Knowledge conſidering his Age. The Famous Italian Cardan, who came into England the laſt year, was ſurpriz'd to a Wonder at his Converſation.

His Character.

" This Philoſopher reports him Maſter of a great many Languages. That beſides his Mother Tongue, he talk'd Latin, French, Greek, Italian and Spaniſh. (o) That he ſpoke the Three Firſt to an Exactneſs. He had a comprehenſive Mind, and ſeem'd form'd for all Sorts of Accompliſhments. He had made ſome Proficiency in Logick, natural Philoſophy, and Muſick. He appear'd with a Majeſtick Air, temper'd with Condeſcenſion and good Humour. In ſhort, he look'd like an Original of his Kind, both for Parts and Management; perform'd much, and promis'd a great deal more.

" He was but in the Fifteenth Year of his Age, continues Cardan, when I waited on him: He ſpoke Latin both as to Readineſs and Phraſeology as well as my ſelf: He asked me what was the Subject of my Book de Rerum Varietate, which I had dedicated to his Majeſty. I told him that in the firſt Chapter I had explain'd the Nature of Comets which had ſo long puzled the Learned World. He ask'd me what the Cauſe of them might be; I told him that when the Light of the Planets happen'd to meet and concentre, they produc'd this Appearance. The King objected, that theſe Stars had different Motions; and therefore thought it would follow that the Comets muſt vary in their Figure and Motion according to the Revolution of the Planets, and their different Situation from each other. To this I replied, that the Comets are govern'd by the planetary Motions in ſome Meaſure, but move much quicker, by reaſon of the different Aſpect, as we ſee in a Chryſtal, or in the Sun, when 'tis reflected from the Rainbow to a Wall. * For here a little Change or Shifting makes a great Difference as to Place. The King enquir'd farther how that could be, ſince there was no ſolid Body in the Air to ſtop the Light, and make a Reflection, whereas in the Inſtance I brought, the Wall was a Subject or impenetrable Body to return the Light of the Rainbow. To this I rejoin'd that this Phænomenon might be explain'd by a Reſemblance of that Streak of Light which we ſee in the Milky Way: And that it might be farther illuſtrated by obſerving, that when a great many Candles are lighted up in a Room, the intermediate Space is bright and lucid. And thus according to the Proverbial Saying ex Ungue Leonem; from this little Specimen we may collect the Force of Nature and Improvement in this young Prince. His unuſual Ingenuity and the Sweetneſs of his Temper, gave a mighty Expectation, and endear'd him extremely to all Perſons of Senſe and Virtue. He countenanc'd the creditable Sciences before he was acquainted with them, and had the Book Part of them before he was of Age to reduce them to Practice. He gave ſuch early Diſcoveries of carrying Human Nature to the Heighth, that not only England but the reſt of the World have Reaſon to lament he liv'd no longer. Where the Solemnity and Strength of a Royal Character was requir'd, he manag'd like a Perſon advanc'd in years; but when 'twas proper to relax and condeſcend, repreſented his Stature and his Age: He played upon the Lute, and applied himſelf to State Affairs. He had a large Mind to oblige, and affected Magnificence no leſs than his Father. What I have ſaid of this Prince are no Streins of Panegyrick, no Rhetorical Flouriſhes: My Deſcription rather falls ſhort of matter of Fact, than exceeds it. Thus far Cardan: How well this King's Talent was ſuited to his Birth, and how much he was form'd for Empire, may partly be collected from his Journal written in his own Hand. It begins with his Birth, proceeds to his Acceſſion to the Throne, and is carried on to November, 1552. And here moſt of the remarkable Tranſactions, which happen'd through the Courſe of his Government, are ſet down. The Creations of Noblemen, the Diſpoſal of Biſhopricks and Offices of State, the repairing old Forts, and erecting new ones, the bringing in of Bullion, and Remittances of Mony into foreign Countries, diſpatching or entertaining Ambaſſadors, Alliances with neighbouring Princes, Sieges and Battles in Germany, and elſewhere; Tryals of great Men, and Debates in Parliament; in ſhort all material Occurrences relating either to Peace or War, to Buſineſs or Solemnity, are entred according as they happen'd; and that with the niceſt Diſtinctions and Subdiviſions of Time: For not only the Years, but the Months and the Days are mark'd.

Chriſt Church St. Bartholomews, St. Thomas's Hoſpital and Bridewell ſettled for the Relief of the Poor, &c.

Nov. Anno 1552.

The Poor in London had a very conſiderable Proviſion ſettled in this Reign: To give a brief Account of the matter: The late King Henry before his Death granted Grey Friers near Newgate, together with little St. Bartholomews Priory to the City of London. This laſt Houſe at the Diſſolution was endow'd with Three Hundred and Five Pounds Annual Revenue. The Deſign of this Benefaction was to furniſh Relief for the Poor, and to ſettle a Maintenance for a Pariſh Church: The Church of Grey Friers was to be turn'd to this Uſe, called Chriſt Church, and King Henry was to paſs for the Founder. The City being thus far encourag'd began to work upon the Proviſion, fitted up Grey Friers now called Chriſt's Hoſpital, and brought in about Four Hundred Children. But

* Movetur quidèm ſed longè celerius illis ob Diverſitatem Aſpectus velut. in Chryſtallo & ſole cum Iris in Pariete relucet.

But it ſeems what was already done fell ſhort of the Neceſſities of the Poor, under all Denominations.

In the beginning of this Year, during the Kings Sickneſs, Biſhop Ridley preach'd before him at Weſtminiſter. He inſiſted upon the Duties of Charity, and recommended the projecting a Maintenance for the Poor. And in diſcourſing upon this Argument, he obſerv'd that the wealthy and thoſe who were in high Stations, were particularly oblig'd to furniſh a Subſiſtence, and make ſomething of this kind practicable. This Sermon making an Impreſſion upon the Young King, he order'd the Biſhop to attend him in the great Gallery at Weſtminſter. When the Biſhop came, he told him how ſenſible he was of the Seaſonableneſs of the Diſcourſe, that he conceiv'd himſelf principally concern'd in the Exhortation, and that he reſolv'd to practice accordingly: And ſince Ridley had probably ſpent ſome Thoughts upon a Scheme, and adviſ'd with Perſons of Capacity, he deſir'd he would ſuggeſt his Opinion, and lay the beſt Expedient before him.

The Biſhop was unexpectedly pleaſ'd to find the Kings Inclination ſo forward: He told his Highneſs he thought the Poor in London, being ſo very numerous, call'd moſt for his Aſſiſtance. And that 'twas proper to conſult the Mayor and Aldermen about the manner of the Relief. The King at the Biſhops Requeſt ſent a Letter to the Lord Mayor with Orders to call ſome of the Magiſtracy of the City together, to debate this matter with them, and ſend him their Thoughts what would be the beſt Eſtabliſhment for this purpoſe. The Biſhop carried the Letter to Sir Richard Dobbs, then Lord Mayor, who purſued the Contents; and in ſhort, after ſeveral Conſultations with ſome of the Aldermen and Common Council, they came to a Reſolution, form'd a Scheme, and rang'd the Poor under Three Diviſions: Thoſe who were Poor by Impotency, by Caſualty, or Extravagance. The Poor by Impotency were ſubdivided into Three Diſtinctions. Firſt, Orphans who were left unſupported by their Parents. Secondly, Thoſe who were worn out with Age, had loſt their Sight, or were diſabled in their Limbs. Thirdly, Thoſe who were afflicted with noiſome or contagious Diſtempers, ſuch as Leproſy, &c.

Secondly, the Poor by Caſualty were likewiſe diſtinguiſh'd into Three Sorts, viz. wounded Soldiers, decay'd Houſe-keepers, and thirdly thoſe viſited with any ſevere or diſabling Diſtemper. And laſtly, the unmangeable and extravagant Poor are likewiſe put under Three Claſſes. I. The Prodigal that has ſquander'd away all his Fortune upon his Vices. II. The Strowler who ſettles no where. III. The lazy and licentious, ſuch as Strumpets and others who chuſe to live upon Debauchery or begging. As to theſe Three Ranks of Poor, the Orphans were lodg'd in Chriſt's Hoſpital, where they are furniſh'd with Neceſſaries, and bred to Sobriety and Buſineſs. The Second general Subdiviſion were provided for in the Hoſpitals of St. Thomas Southwark, and St. Bartholomews in Weſtſmithfield. And in theſe Two Houſes when Stow wrote, above Two Hundred diſeaſed Perſons were well entertain'd with Diet and Phyſick. Bridewell a Houſe belonging to the Crown was given for the Entertainment and Correction of Ramblers, Strumpets, and ſturdy Beggars. (p)

(p) Grafton Stow Survey of London.

To make the Deſign bear, and furniſh theſe Houſes with a competent Maintenance, the King diſſolv'd the Hoſpital in the Savoy founded by King Henry the Seventh. The young King was inform'd, that this Hoſpital endow'd for a comfortable Support to Pilgrims and Travellers, was diverted to ſcandalous Uſes, and ſerv'd moſtly for a Shelter and Encouragement to lewd and lazy People. The Maſter therefore and Brethren of the Houſe were order'd to attend the King, and either perſwaded, or menac'd to a Reſignation. Their Lands amounting to Six Hundred Pounds per Annum, were granted to the City of London for the maintenance of Bridewell, and the Hoſpital of St. Thomas. And for a farther Enlargement of their Revenue, they had a Royal Licence for purchaſing Lands in Mortmain to the Value of Four Thouſand Marks yearly Revenue. The King lived but Two Days after the perfecting theſe Foundations.

But not to omit any thing of this kind, about Two Months ſince he founded Chriſt's Hoſpital at Abingdon near Oxford. One Sir John Gollafrie had founded a Guild or Brotherhood in that Town for building Bridges, repairing High-ways, and maintaining Thirteen Poor People, and Two Prieſts for officiating in this Society. This was ſettled in the Reign of King Henry the Sixth. But by the late Act of Parliament for veſting Chauntries, Colleges, &c. in the Crown, the Lands of this Brother-hood were ſeiz'd for the King's Uſe, the repairing of the Ways, and Bridges turn'd upon the Town, and the Poor left to ſhift for themſelves. And thus the Founders Deſign miſcarried for ſome Time. But in the laſt Year of this Reign Sir John Maſon born in the Town, and one of the Maſters of Requeſt, mov'd the King to found an Hoſpital there, to ſettle the Lands belonging to the former Foundation; and charge the Settlement with ſuch Services and pious Uſes, as were requir'd from the old Fraternity. The King granted Sir John Maſon his Suit, built convenient Lodgings for the Poor, endow'd the Hoſpital with the former Revenues, and committed the Government of the Houſe to Twelve Perſons incorporated by the Name of the Maſter and Governors of the Hoſpital of Chriſt in Abingdon. *

* Heylin Hiſt. Ref. page 141.

Notwithſtanding theſe good Qualities in the King, his Reign was far from being unblemiſh'd. “Cambden complains, that Avarice and Sacrilege had ſtrangely the Aſcendant. That Eſtates formerly ſettled for the Support of Religion and the Poor, were ridicul'd as ſuperſtitious Endowments, firſt miſcall'd, and then plunder'd. That Ambition and Faction amongſt the Nobility, Inſolence and Inſurrection amongſt the Commons, was never more flagrant and diſturbing. In ſhort, conſidering the Animoſities and Tumults amongſt great Men, the debaſing the Coin, the Diſorders in the Adminiſtration, and the Revolt of the Peaſantry, the Kingdom made a miſerable Appearance, and look'd as it were, languiſhing in one Part, and diſtracted in another. (q)

A Complaint of the Rapacities and Diſorders of this Reign.

Cambden Apparat. ad Elizabeth.

As to the Charge of Sacrilege, and the Miſmanagement of the Revenues of Religious Houſes granted to the Laity, one Roderick Morſe, alias Henry Brincklow makes a Tragical Complaint.

I doubt not (ſays he) but that every good Man wiſhes, that at our Diſſolution of Mona-naſteries, both the Lands and impropriated Tythes and Churches poſſeſs'd by them, (that is, Things ſacred to the Service of God, altho' abus'd by ſuch as had them) had been beſtow'd rather for the Advancement of the Church, to a better Maintenance of the labouring and deſerving Miniſtry, to the foſtering of good Arts, Relief of the Poor, and other ſuch good Uſes, as might retain in them, for the Benefit of the Church, or Commonwealth, a Character of the Wiſhes of thoſe who firſt with Devotion dedicated them (as in ſome other Countries was religiouſly done upon the Reformation) then conferr'd with ſuch a prodigal Diſpenſation, as it happen'd on thoſe who ſtood ready to devour what was ſanctified: And we have in no ſmall Number ſince found ſuch Inheritances thence deriv'd to them, but as Sejanus his Horſe, or the Gold of Tholouſe. But I abſtain from Cenſure, and add here by the way a Complaint made to the Parliament not long after the Diſſolution, touching the Abuſe that follow'd in the Church, through Lay Mens poſſeſſing of appropriated Churches and Tythes: It deſerves to be ſeriouſly thought on by every Layman that now enjoys any of them, eſpecially where the Divine Service is not carefully provided for.

Roderick Morſe or Brinklows Satyr upon Avarice and Sacrilege.

Ye that be Lords and Burgeſſes of Parliament. (ſo are the Words of it) I require of you in the Name of my Poor Brethren that are Engliſh Men, and Members of Chriſt's Body, that ye conſider well (as ye will anſwer before the Face of Almighty God, in the Day of Judgment) this Abuſe and ſee it amended. When as Antichriſt (as he calls the Pope) of Rome durſt openly, without any Viſer, walk up and down throughout England, he had ſo great Favour there, and his Children * had ſuch crafty Wits (for the Children of this World are wiſer in their Generation than the Children of Light) that they had not only almoſt gotten all the beſt Lands of England into their Hands, but alſo the moſt Part of all the beſt Benefices, both of Parſonages and Vicarages which were for the moſt Part all impropred to them.

* He means the Monks.

And when they had the Gift of any not impropred, they gave them unto their Friends, of the which always ſome were Learned: For the Monks found of their Friends Children at School, and though they were not learn'd, yet they kept Hoſpitality, and help'd their Poor Friends. And if the Parſonages were impropred, the Monks were bound to deal Almeſſe to the Poor, and to keep Hoſpitality, as the Writings of the Gifts of ſuch Parſonages and Lands do plainly declare in theſe Words, in puram Elemoſynam. And as touching the Almeſſe that they delt, and the Hoſpitality that they kept, every Man knoweth that many Thouſands were well receiv'd of them, and might have been better, if they had not ſo many great Mens Horſes to feed, and had not been overcharged with ſuch idle Gentlemen as were never out of the Abbayes. And if they had any Vicarage in their Hands, they ſet in ſometimes ſome ſufficient Vicar (though it were but ſeldom) to preach and to teach. But now that all, the Abbayes with their Lands, Goods, and impropred Parſonages be in Temporal Mens Hands: I do not here tell that One Halfpenny Worth of Almes, or any other Profit cometh to the People of thoſe Pariſhes. Your Pretence of putting down Abbayes was to amend that which was amiſs in them, it was far amiſs that a great Part of the Lands of the Abbayes, which were given to bring up Learned Men, that might be Preachers to keep Hoſpitality, and to give Almes to the Poor, ſhould be ſpent upon a few ſuperſtitious Monkes, which gave not Forty Pounds in Almeſſe, when they ſhould have given Two Hundred. It was amiſſe that Monkes ſhould have Parſonages in their Hands, and deal but the Twentieth Part thereof to the Poor, and preached but once in the Year to them that payed the Tythes of the Parſonages. It was amiſſe that they ſcarcely among the Twenty, ſet not one ſufficient Vicar to preach for the Tythes that they received.

But ſee now how that was amiſſe is amended, for all the Godly Pretenſe. It is amended even as the Devil amended his Dames Legge, (as it is in the Proverb) when he ſhould have ſet it right, he brake it quite in pieces. The Monkes gave too little Almes, and ſet unable Perſons many times in their Benefices: But now where Twenty Pounds was given yearly to the Poor, in more than an Hundred Places in England, is not one Meals Meat given: This is a fair Amendment! Where they had always one or other Vicar, that either preach'd or hired ſome to preach, now there is no Vicar at all, but the Farmer is Vicar and Parſon altogether; and only an old caſt away Monk or Frier, which can ſcarcely ſay his Mattins, is hired for Twenty or Thirty Shillings, Meat and Drink, yea in ſome Places for Meat and Drink alone, without any Wages, I know and not I alone, but Twenty Thouſand more know more than Five Hundred Vicarages and Parſonages thus well and goſpelly ſerv'd after the new Goſpel of England.

And ſo (ſays Sir William Dugdale) the Author goes on with ſharp Admonitions to the Lay-men, that feed themſelves fat with the Tythes of the Churches, whiles the Souls of the Pariſhioners ſuffred great Famine for want of a fit Paſtor, that is for Want of fit Maintenance for him, for without that, he is ſcarce to be hoped for. (r)

This Brinklow, who made theſe Remarks, was a London Merchant, and is put in the Liſt of Learned Writers by Holinſhead.

As to King Edward, notwithſtanding his Advantages by Nature and Education, 'tis pretty plain his Conſcience was not always under a ſerviceable Direction. He was tinctured with Eraſtian Principles, and under wrong Prepoſſeſſions as to Church Government: He gives a hard Character of the Biſhops, and makes Age and Ignorance a Ground to ſeize their Juriſdiction. He would have no Authority given in general to Biſhops: But that the beſt of them ſhould have Commiſſions to execute their Function in their Dioceſe; and the reſt as it were layed by, and diſabled. And thus he was educated to an Opinion of his being the Fountain of all Spiritual, as well as Temporal Power. (s) Some Politicians about him form'd his Mind to their Intereſt, flatter'd his Childhood, and miſlead his Underſtanding: That he was not always under an happy Management may be farther collected from ſome arbitrary Commiſſions, and Streins of Law in the Deprivation of Biſhops. He ſeems to have had no Notion of Sacrilege. Had he been bred to the ſame Averſion to this Crime which he expreſs'd againſt Image Worſhip, and the Maſs, he would never have taken ſuch Freedoms with the conſecrated Revenues, nor impoveriſh'd the Church to ſo lamentable a Degree: And which is ſomewhat remarkable, moſt of theſe Hardſhips were put upon Eccleſiaſticks in the latter End of his Reign, when his Judgment was in the beſt Condition. And upon this Occaſion I ſhall refer the Reader to the Records, where he may ſee a farther Account of ſome of the Alienations of Church Lands in this, and the late Reign. (t) To conclude the Story of this Prince, he died at Greenwich July the Sixth 1553.

The King ſeems bred under ſome Prejudices.

PART II. BOOK V.

Queen Mary in Danger of being ſurprized retires into Norfolk.

THE Duke of Northumberlands Ambition had been hitherto ſucceſsful: He had prevail'd with the King to overlook the Lady Mary's Right, to break thro' an Act of Parliament, and transfer the Crown upon the Lady Jane of the Houſe of Suffolk. His next Buſineſs was to draw the Lady Mary within his Reach. To this Purpoſe a Letter was ſent ſign'd by the King and Council, to bring her to Court. The Pretence was that ſhe might entertain the King, and make him paſs his Time the better in his Sickneſs. The Princeſs being glad to find her Intereſt revive, and her Perſon grow acceptable at Court, ſet forward towards London: When ſhe was come within half a Days Journey, ſhe receiv'd private Intelligence from the Earl of Arundel of the King's Death, and that an Ambuſh was laid for her: Upon this Notice ſhe retir'd into Norfolk. The King's Death was kept ſecret Two Days on purpoſe to draw her into the Snare, and make London for the Lady Jane.

She writes to the Council and claims their Allegiance.

Queen Mary having withdrawn herſelf to a ſafe Diſtance, ſent a Letter to the Lords of the Council, in which ſhe expreſſes her Regret for the King's Death, and puts up her Claim to the Crown; ſhe founds her Title partly upon an Act of Parliament, and her Fathers laſt Will, giving a Hint of her prior Right by Deſcent and Proximity of Blood; from hence ſhe proceeds to acquaint them ſhe was not ignorant of the Preparations they were making to overbear the Conſtitution, and defeat her Right. However, ſhe was willing to pardon what was done, and forget this Uſage, provided they recollected themſelves, and went no farther from their Duty. In the Cloſe, ſhe charges them upon their Allegiance to proclaim her in the City of London and elſewhere. This Letter is dated from Kenning-Hall in Norfolk July the Ninth 1553. (u)

They deny her Title, and adviſe her to acquieſce.

The Lords of the Council in their Anſwer, which was immediately return'd, gave her to underſtand they could not ſubmit to her Pretenſions: That the Crown was now veſted in their Soveraign Lady Queen Jane, not only as they ſpeak by good Order of old antient Laws of this Realm, but likewiſe by the Diſpoſition of the late King in his Letters Patents ſign'd by himſelf, and under the Broad Seal: That the moſt Part of the Nobility, the Privy Council, the Judges, and ſeveral other Perſons of Diſtinction had agreed to this Conveyance, and ſubſcrib'd the Inſtrument. They put her in mind of the Defects in her Mothers Marriage, of the Divorce which happen'd, and of her own Illegitimacy by Act of Parliament: They make the Lady Janes Title ſtand upon a Bottom of Deſcent, and the Plea of the right Line. They take their Leaves by adviſing the Queen to drop her Claim, and behave herſelf like a good Subject. This Letter is dated from the Tower of London, July the Ninth, which is the ſame Date with the former. 'Tis ſign'd thus, as it ſtands in Fox.

All theſe as Fox obſerves, excepting the Duke of Northumberland, and Sir John Gates, were afterwards Pardon'd. As to the Councils Letter, there are ſome things in it remarkably ſingular. They found the Lady Jane's Title upon the Antient Laws of the Realm; when 'tis very well known the diſpoſing the Crown by Letters Patents, was altogether new and unpreſidented. They ſeem ſenſible this Colour was too Faint, and therefore ſet forth afterwards, that the Lady Jane Claim'd by juſt Inheritance, and lineal Succeſſion. But this was another plain Miſtake; for not to mention the Title of the Princeſs Elizabeth, 'tis evident the Queen of Scots, as being deſcended from the Eldeſt Daughter of King Henry the Seventh, ſtood next upon the Royal Line. Thus we ſee to what diſtreſs great Men are driven by a bad Cauſe. How they Embarraſs themſelves with Contradiction, and fall foul upon their own Arguments!

July the 10th.

To proceed, the Council went on with the Lady Jane's Title, brought the Mayor and Aldermen into their Intereſt, and Proclaim'd their pretended Sovereign with the uſual Solemnity. This Lady was convey'd from Durham Houſe to the Tower by Water, and attended with a ſplendid Train; and tho' ſhe ſuſpected the meaning of this pompous Appearance, was to put a new Character upon her; yet not being certain of the King's Death, ſhe hop'd he might either recover, or at leaſt alter his Reſolution, and leave her to a private Condition. But when ſhe perceiv'd the Dukes of Suffolk and Northumberland, her Father and Father in Law, Saluted her with a new Air of Ceremony and Submiſſion, ſhe ſeem'd much ſurpriz'd. And now the Duke of Northumberland acquainted her that the King was Dead, had declar'd her his Succeſſor, and that her Title was recogniz'd in the manner abovemention'd. This was no acceptable Speech to the Lady Jane: She appear'd diſturb'd, and at a loſs, and by no means reconcil'd to her Advancement. But ſince an Anſwer was to be given, after ſome Pauſe for Recollection, ſhe told the Duke of Northumberland, that as far as ſhe underſtood, natural Right and the Conſtitution of the Kingdom, caſt the Government upon the Princeſs Mary: That ſhe was unwilling to incumber her Life and her Conſcience, with a Character which did not belong to her: That thoſe who broke through Right to graſp a Scepter, were infamous in Story: That to ſcruple the Stealling a Shilling, and digeſt the Uſurpation of a Crown, was mere bantering of Juſtice, and mocking God Almighty. To this ſhe added the inſtability of Human Affairs, and the danger of a publick Eminence; and therefore deſir'd the liberty of a private Station: But being ſolicited to accept the Crown, by the Two Dukes, her Mother, and her Husband, ſhe forc'd her Inclination, reſign'd to their Importunities; and was drag'd as it were into Treaſon; and ſince a Young Lady had ſo much Authority to miſlead her, ſince ſhe was ſo earneſtly preſs'd by ſuch near Relations, 'tis no wonder to find her Underſtanding ſurpriz'd, and that ſhe ſhould ſurrender to their Diſpoſal.

Several Perſons of Condition declare for Queen Mary.

On the other ſide, the Queen having a fair intelligible Title gain'd upon the Country, ſeveral Perſons of Condition immediately declar'd for her, and went to her Court. Amongſt theſe were the Earl of Bath, Sir Thomas Wharton Son to the Lord Wharton, Sir John Mordaunt Son to the Lord Mordaunt, Sir William Drury, Sir John Shelton, Sir Henry Benningfield, Henry Jerningham, John Sulierd, Richard Higham, &c. The Lady Jane's Council were likewiſe inform'd, that the Earl of Suſſex, and his Son Henry Ratcliff, Eſq; were marching into the ſame Intereſt with their Forces. Theſe things preſag'd a Conteſt, and made a formidable Appearance: 'Twas therefore thought adviſeable to levy an Army with all Expedition, to ſeize the Lady Mary, as they called her, and bring her to London. The Duke of Suffolk was pitch'd upon for the General: His being the Lady Jane's Father, 'tis likely recommended him to this Poſt; But thoſe of the Council who wiſh'd well to Queen Mary, found their Endeavors would be clog'd, unleſs the Duke of Northumberland was ſent off: They perſwaded therefore the pretended Queen to keep her Father at Court, and give the Duke of Northumberland the Command of the Army; That no Man was better qualified for this Employment than that Duke: That an Inſurrection in Norfolk having been lately ſuppreſs'd by him, his Name would diſhearten the Mutineers, and bring them to Submiſſion: And in caſe they prov'd obſtinate, a Nobleman ſo remarkable for Conduct and Courage, was moſt likely to reduce them. The Lady Jane being ſolicitous for her Father, clos'd with this wrong Advice, and deſired the Duke of Northumberland to undertake the Expedition. The Duke who was apprehenſive of the conſequence, would gladly have declin'd the Charge. But this being not within his Choice, he immediately ſet forward with a Body of Six Thouſand, Newmarket being appointed for the General Rendezvouz. As he march'd thro' London he was not ſaluted with any Acclamations, or Signs of Countenance. The People gaz'd at him, but gave no Mark of their Affection. He took notice of their Coldneſs to the Lord Grey: The People, ſays he, crowd after us, but I don't find any of them cries God ſpeed.

Northumberland commands the Army for the Lady Jane.

The Queen had a ſtrong Intereſt in London, notwithſtanding the Lady Jane was in Poſſeſſion, and manag'd the Adminiſtration in the Regal Style: But no Shew of the Nobility, no Compliance of the Judges, no Sovereign Figure, or Pretence of Religion, were thought a Counterpoiſe to a Legal Title. The Duke of Northumberland who was a Man of Reach, had taken all the Precaution imaginable, and made uſe of the beſt Diſguiſes. He knew Queen Mary's Religion was a very unacceptable Circumſtance: To harangue ſtrongly upon this Topick, and awaken the People's Fears, muſt therefore be ſerviceable Buſineſs: This was the moſt likely way to perplex the Cauſe, to ſteal on the blind ſide of the Subject, and debauch them from their Duty. To this purpoſe, he had engag'd a great many of the London Clergy to declaim againſt the Queen, and frighten the Audience with Fears of Perſecution. Biſhop Ridley was ſo unhappy as to engage in this Service. He was order'd by the Council to preach at Paul's Croſs upon this occaſion:

Biſhop Ridley preaches for the Lady Jane's Intereſt occaſion. And here he employ'd his Rhetorick againſt Queen Mary; He dilated upon the Miſfortunes of living under her Government: That they muſt expect a foreign Power would be brought in upon them; and more than that, the Eſtabliſh'd Religion would be deſtroy'd: And here he acquainted them with the Converſation already mention'd, which paſs'd between the Queen and himſelf, in the late Reign: That ſhe was unalterably fix'd in her Miſbelief; and that nothing could be look'd for from her Reign, but an utter Subverſion of the true Faith, and overthrowing all that had been brought about, with ſo much Difficulty, by the King her Brother. (w)

Now it muſt be ſaid that this Biſhop, tho' in other reſpects a worthy Perſon, miſtook his Point lamentably, and began at the wrong end of the Buſineſs: He ought firſt to have diſprov'd the Queen's Title, before he had prepoſſeſs'd the People againſt her Government: If ſhe had a Right by deſcent or Act of Parliament, a different Religion could be no bar to her Claim: There was not ſo much as any Law pretended for that purpoſe. To Preach againſt the Queen from Arguments of Intereſt and Convenience, was altogether Foreign and Indefenſible: To recommend injuſtice from the Pulpit, was no good expedient to ſerve the Reformation. But as it happen'd the Biſhops unfortunate Harangue ſignified not much. The Audience was not to be impoſ'd on: They knew that unleſs they betrayed their Faith, and threw their Religion up, no Power on Earth could take it from them; that Chriſtianity oblig'd them to be juſt, and render Cæſar the Things that are Cæſars.

The Fleet comes into the Queen's Service.

She promiſes the Suffolk Men not to make any Change in Religion.

To go on; the Peoples Inclination lay on the right ſide, and the Queen was now reinforc'd with Four Thouſand Foot, commanded by Sir Edward Haſtings, Brother to the Earl of Huntington. Theſe Men were raiſ'd for the Lady Jane, at the Inſtance of the Duke of Northumberland; and that which gave a farther Advance, and ſeem'd to turn the Scale, was the coming in of Six Men of War into Yarmouth Haven, and declaring for the Queen. Theſe Ships were order'd by Northumberland, to cruiſe upon the Coaſt of Suffolk, and Norfolk, and to Intercept the Queen, in Caſe ſhe endeavor'd an Eſcape beyond Sea. But being driven by Storm into Yarmouth, Jerningham prevail'd with them to take Service under Queen Mary. This was a lucky Accident: And now the Queen being furniſh'd with Artillery and Ammunition, reſolv'd to March againſt Northumberland. Another Circumſtance which increaſ'd her Forces, was a Promiſe ſhe had given the Suffolk Men, not to make any alteration in Religion. If this Promiſe came free and undemanded, 'twas an Incouragement to their Duty: But if they engag'd upon Condition, and Articl'd with their Sovereign, their Caution went too far. For either ſhe had a Right, or ſhe had none: If ſhe had none, their Correſpondence was Criminal; If they believ'd ſhe had a Right, they ought to have run the Riſque of her Government, ſerv'd her without Terms, and reſted the Event with Providence. The Queen was now at Framingham Caſtle near the Sea in Suffolk, ſhe March'd hither for the better Security of her Perſon: For from hence ſhe might have tranſported her ſelf, in Caſe her Affairs had miſcarried.

July the 15th.

To take a View of the Courſe of Matters on the other ſide. The Duke of Northumberland March'd from London to Cambridge, where he came in on Saturday the Fifteenth, his being Chancellor of the Univerſity, and high Steward of the Town, gave him fair Expectations here. In the Evening he ſends for Dr. Edwyn Sandys, Maſter of Catherine Hall, and Vice-Chancellor, and deſir'd him to Preach before him the next Day: This was a touchy Motion, conſidering the Juncture: For the Doctor could neither decline nor comply, without apparent Hazzard. Beſides, the warning was ſhort upon ſo Critical an Occaſion. However, the Vice-chancellor concluding it his beſt way to appear in the Pulpit, took a Text, which look'd on the Dukes Side, and ſeem'd to Favor the Enterprize. * But he hover'd ſo much in Generals, manag'd with ſuch Caution, and left ſo much Room for a Neutral Conſtruction, that he ſatisfied the Audience, and yet kept a reſerve for Defence with the other Party. On Monday the Duke of Northumberland March'd with his Troops to St. Edmondſbury: But here inſtead of receiving Intelligence of the Reinforcement and Rendezvouz at Newmarket, Letters of very unacceptable Contents were brought him, from ſome of the Lords of the Council. And being diſappointed in his Succors, and finding matters perplex'd and going backward, he Countermarch'd to Cambridge the next Day. From hence he wrote preſſing Letters to the Lords of the Council to ſend him more Forces. Thoſe Lords who were in the Queens Intereſt, taking a handle from this Meſſage, moved for the levying Men with all Expedition: But then they were of Opinion, that ſome of the Board ought to be employ'd in this Commiſſion: To truſt any Body elſe might prove of ill Conſequence, and carry the Forces to the Enemy, of which they had an Inſtance already in the revolt of Sir Edward Haſtings. Upon this pretence they prevail'd with the Duke of Suffolk to open the Tower Gates, and give them their Liberty. And now the Marqueſs of Wincheſter Lord Treaſurer, the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Arundel, the Lord Paget, and Sir Thomas Cheyney Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, began to diſcover themſelves, and make a Party for the Queen. To this purpoſe they engag'd as many of the Council as they could find, to meet at Baynard's-caſtle: They pretended diſpatching ſome matters of State, with Lavall the French Ambaſſador: But their Buſineſs was to ſet aſide the Lady Jane, and bring on a Revolution. And here the Earl of Arundel, who had been ſent to the Tower by Northumberland's contrivance, open'd the Deſign, and fell upon the Male-adminiſtration in the late Reign. "He told the Lords that all the Inſtances of Injuſtice, Cruelty, and Miſcarriage, were to be Charg'd upon Northumberland: That this Nobleman, contrary to all Law and Conſcience, had put by King Henry's Iſſue from ſucceeding to the Crown: That he was ſtrangely ſurpriz'd, Men of ſuch Quality and Character, as their Lordſhips, ſhould ſuffer themſelves to be Govern'd by that Duke, and aſſiſt him in his wicked Practiſe: That 'twas by their Countenance, a Daughter of the Houſe of Suffolk had taken the State of a Queen, and appear'd a Royal Pageant: But tho' this Lady had the Title, the Power would be lodg'd with her Father in Law Northumberland; and by this means he would have an opportunity of gratifyng his Ambition, of playing his Humour at the full ſtretch, and “ diſpoſing of their Lives and Fortunes at Pleaſure. 'Tis true, Religion, ſays he, is made the great Motive of theſe extraordinary Proceedings; but this is nothing but pretence, and holy Grimace. For as to Religion if we are in Earneſt, that will not allow us ſuch unwarrantable Latitude. I am ſo much a Divine, as to remember the Apoſtle, forbids us doing ill, that good may come of it: And that we ought to be Subject even to ill Princes, not only for Wrath, but for Conſcience Sake. (x) Beſides; how is it certainly known that the Princeſs Mary intends a Change in Religion. I am aſſured her Anſwer to the Suffolk Men implies a kinder Reſolution. Now what Diſtraction is it to run upon inevitable Ruin, only to avoid what may never happen? I heartily wiſh this had been conſider'd at firſt, and no falſe Steps made in the matter: But ſince Miſbehavior can only be retriev'd by Counter-practice, I conceive the beſt thing we can do, is to quit the Uſurpation, and proclaim Queen Mary. The Council declare for the Queen.

The Earl of Arundel's Speech was ſeconded by the Earl of Pembroke, who clapping his Hand to his Sword, declar'd boldly that he was ready to fight any Man of a contrary Sentiment. The reſt concurring in the ſame Opinion, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen were ſent for, who joyning with the Lords, went in a Body to Cheapſide, and proclaim'd Queen Mary with Sound of Trumpet. From hence they made a Cavalcade to St. Paul's, where Te Deum was ſung upon the occaſion. The next Buſineſs was to ſecure the Tower, which ſome would have thought they ſhould have done in the firſt place; but 'tis likely they concluded the City's declaring for the Queen would ſtrike a Terror into the Duke of Suffolk, and fright him to a Surrender. This happen'd accordingly, for when the Duke receiv'd a Summons to join himſelf with the reſt of the Council, he went to the Lady Jane's Apartment, order'd her to lay aſide the State of a Queen, and content herſelf with the Fortune of a Subject. The Lady not at all diſcompos'd, told her Father ſhe was much better pleas'd with this News, than when ſhe mounted the Throne purely in Obedience to himſelf, and her Mother. She was ſenſible her reſigning to their Authority, tho' againſt her Inclination, was a great Fault, but now ſhe did that which perfectly pleas'd her. The Duke of Suffolk went immediately to the Council, and ſubſcrib'd a Recognition of the Queen with the reſt. When her Majeſty was proclaim'd in the City, the People were extremely pleas'd with the Turn: Inſomuch that at the pronouncing the Name of Mary, they ſhouted ſo loud, that the reſt of the Proclamation could not be heard.

She is proclaim'd in London.

Id. Stow Holinſhead.

July the 19*th*.

The Lords Arundel and Paget being thus ſucceſsful in their Attempt, went immediately to the Queen with Thirty Horſe, and gave her an Account of what had paſs'd. The reſt of the Board ſent the Duke of Northumberland Intelligence how things ſtood, with Orders to ſubſcribe the Recognition, and diſband his Army. The Duke was not ignorant of the Poſture of Affairs: And therefore before he receiv'd their Letter, he proclaim'd Queen Mary at the Market Place in Cambridge, and threw up his Cap as a Sign of Satisfaction. The Army was immediately diſbanded, and the Men of Quality waited upon the Queen; and laying all the Blame of the Uſurpation upon Northumberland, prevail'd for their Pardon. The Lady Jane was taken into Cuſtody, and the Duke of Northumberland arreſted by the Earl of Arundel, and brought up to London: The Earl of Huntington, and the Lord Haſtings, the Earl of Warwick, Ambroſe and Henry Two other Sons of the Duke of Northumberland, Sir Andrew Dudley his Brother, Sir Thomas Palmer, Sir John Gates, Henry Gates, and Dr. Edwin Sandys, were likewiſe ſeiz'd, brought up, and committed to the Tower. The Earl of Huntington and his Son were quickly diſcharg'd. Gates and Palmer were executed, the Earl of Warwick the Duke of Northumberland's Eldeſt Son fell ſick, and died in Priſon. Ambroſe and Henry Dudley were pardon'd, and ſo was Sir Andrew their Uncle after he had been tried for Treaſon, and found guilty. Dr. Sandys got Friends to intercede for him, and after about a Year's Impriſonment, being ſet at Liberty, went off into Germany. The Duke of Suffolk after Four Days Confinement, was by an unuſual Clemency pardon'd. Sir John Cheek the late King's Preceptor, the Chief Juſtices Sir Roger Cholmely, and Sir Edward Mountague, who with the reſt of the Judges had given their Opinion for defeating the Queen's Title, were likewiſe diſcharg'd; tho' Mountague did not come off without a Fine. The Princeſs Elizabeth with a Thouſand Perſons of Quality of both Sexes in her Train, rode from the Strand to Wanſtead * to congratulate her Siſter. And now the Queen having got over the Conteſt, diſbanded her Forces, conſiſting of about Thirteen Thouſand Men: And being met by a numerous Appearance of Noblemen and Ladies, made a ſolemn Entrance into the City. When ſhe came to the Tower, Thomas Duke of Norfolk, Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, Courtney Son and Heir, to Henry late Marqueſs of Exeter, and the Dutcheſs of Somerſet, who were all confin'd in the Tower, preſented themſelves, and kneeled to Her on the Parade; ſhe ſaluted them, and called them her Priſoners. The next Day Courtney was created Marqueſs of Exeter, and the other Priſoners laſt mentioned pardon'd, and diſcharg'd. Two Days after, as Stow reports, Bonner and Tonſtal were ſet at Liberty, and reſtor'd to their Sees. (z) Day of Chicheſter and Heath of Worceſter lately depriv'd, had the ſame good Fortune. As to the Time of Bonner's Reſtitution, Stow was ſomewhat miſtaken, as appears by the Date of a Commiſſion iſſued by the Queen for this purpoſe. By this Inſtrument bearing Date September the 5th, 1553. (a) John Tregonnel and William Roper, Eſquires, Geoffery Glyn, William Cooke and Henry Cole, Doctors of Law, &c. are conſtituted Delegates, to which the Marqueſs of Wincheſter, the Earl of Arundel, the Earl of Derby, the Earl of Shrewsbury, Sir Richard Southwell, Sir Robert Southwell, Sir Edward Carne, and Sir Richard Read are joyned for more Solemnity. The purport of this Commiſſion was to authorize the Perſons above-mention'd to enquire into the Proceſs againſt Biſhop Bonner. Theſe Delegates having examin'd the Proceedings, pronounc'd his Deprivation void, and reſtore him to the Dignity, Juriſdiction and Profits of his Biſhoprick. By the way; theſe Commiſſioners were moſt of them Laymen, and any Two empower'd to give Sentence. Thus Biſhop Ridley was ſet aſide of courſe. On the Ninth of Auguſt a Funeral Office was perform'd for King Edward. The Dirige was ſung in Latin. A Maſs of Requiem was celebrated the next Day, at which the Queen and the Court Ladies offer'd. Sanders thinks the Queen was too much govern'd by her Affection upon this Occaſion: He blames her for recommending her Brothers Soul to the Mercy of God, and having any Share in the Funeral Solemnity: His Reaſon is, becauſe the King died out of the Communion of the Church; he means the Church of Rome. He tells us ſhe was better inſtructed afterwards, and conſented, tho' with great Regret, that her Father ſhould not be publickly pray'd for. *

A Diſorder at Paul's Croſs.

About this time Bourne a Canon of St. Pauls preach'd at Pauls Croſs. He was of a warm Temper, and very averſe to the Reformation: He not only reviv'd the old Cuſtom for praying for the Dead, but likewiſe declar'd that Bonner Biſhop of London had been impriſon'd, and barbarouſly treated for preaching a Sermon there about Four Years ſince. Some of the Audience being exaſperated with this Paſſage, told him the Biſhop had preach'd abominable Doctrine. Upon this others of the Mob grew more mutinous, and were climbing the Pulpit to pull him down. Bourne ſtep'd back, and one Bradford a Preacher of Note in King Edwards Reign, coming into his Place, endeavour'd to compoſe the People, and recover them to good Behaviour. To this purpoſe, amongſt other Diſcourſe, he cited the Text in the Epiſtle to the Romans, where St. Paul commands every Soul to be Subject to the higher Powers. But it ſeems Paſſion was too ſtrong for Conſcience at this time; for one of the Audience launch'd a Dagger at Bourne. 'Tis true it miſs'd him, but 'twas thrown with great Force as appear'd by the Rebound. Upon this, Bradford gave over his Addreſs, and with the Aſſiſtance, of one Rogers, another Preacher, convey'd Bourne through the Crowd with great Difficulty, and lodg'd him in Pauls School.

Stow & Fox.

Upon this Tumult an Order of Council paſs'd, that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen ſhould call a Common Council the next Day, and charge every Houſholder within the Liberties to take care their Children, Apprentices, and Servants, ſhould keep their Pariſh Churches on Sundays and Holy Days, and do nothing in Diſturbance of the publick Peace: And that every Houſekeeper ſhould be oblig'd to anſwer for the Behaviour of his Family. The Mayor and Recorder were likewiſe commanded to ſet forth at the Meeting, that on the Twelfth inſtant the Queen herſelf had declar'd to them, that notwithſtanding her Graces Perſwaſion as to Religion, continues, as formerly, yet out of her Royal Clemency, her Intention is not to force the Conſciences of her Subjects, but leave them freely to their own Recollection, the Inſtructions of godly Preachers, which through the Divine Aſſiſtance ſhe hopes may have a good Effect. The Mayor and Aldermen were farther order'd to give notice to the Curates within their reſpective Wards, to forbear preaching or publick reading the Scriptures in their Churches, without a Licence from the Queen. Mary Queen.

A Letter of the ſame Import was directed to the Biſhop of Norwich; by which he was commanded not to ſuffer any Perſon in his Dioceſe, either Prieſt, Deacon, or otherwiſe diſtinguiſh'd, to preach or expound the Scriptures openly in any Church, Chappel, or other Place, without ſpecial Licence from the Queens Highneſs. The ſame Directions were probably ſent to the reſt of the Biſhops. Thus the Pulpits were ſilenc'd, and the Reformation in a manner ſtifled by the Regal Supremacy. And to make the Expedient operate more effectually, a Proclamation was ſet forth prohibiting all preaching or expounding of Scripture in any Churches or elſewhere, excepting in the Univerſity Schools without the Queens Licence in Writing: And becauſe the Proclamation ſeems nicely drawn, and great Care taken in the manner of Expreſſion, I ſhall tranſcribe it for the Reader, together with the Form of the Queens Licence to preach. (d)

The Legality of the Proclamation examin'd.

That the Queen puſh'd her Prerogative in this Proclamation, and carried the Regale even beyond the Stretch of the Statutes in the Two laſt Reigns, is pretty apparent. For the Clergy being legally impower'd to preach in their reſpective Pariſhes, 'tis difficult to conceive how the ſilencing them could be warrantable, unleſs thay had been convicted of ſome diſabling Offence, or ſuſpended ab Officio by their Ordinary. To ſay the Queen was Head of the Church, and the Fountain of all Spiritual Juriſdiction, is not ſufficient to diſentangle the Caſe: For the Crown is acknowledg'd the Fountain of all Temporal Juriſdiction, and yet 'tis not within the Power of the King or Queen to ſhut up the Courts of Juſtice, to ſtop the Courſe of Law, or ſo much as to hinder any qualified Perſon from pleading at the Bar. And therefore if the Clergy had continued to preach, and taken no notice of the Proclamation, they could not have been legally puniſh'd. For when a Man is ſettled in an Office for Life, he can't be legally diſcharg'd the Exerciſe of that Office without Proof of ſuch Miſbehaviour as reaches to a Forfeiture. And ſince there was no Breach of Duty in Preaching, Prior to this Proclamation, 'twill follow there could be none after it. For in the Reign of King James the Firſt, 'tis reſolv'd by the Two Chief Juſtices, the Chief Baron, and another Judge of the Exchecquer, "that the King by his Proclamation cannot create "any Offence which was not an Offence before; for "then he may alter the Law of the Land by his "Proclamation in a high Point. For if he may create an Offence where none is, upon that enſues Fine and Impriſonment: They reſolve farther, that the King has no Prerogative but what the Law allows him: That the Law of England is divided into Three Parts, Common Law, Statute Law, and Cuſtom; but the King's Proclamation is none of them. (e) By this Reſolution Queen Mary's ſilencing the Pulpits was altogether illegal.

(e) Cokes Reports pt. 12. fol. 76.

This Proclamation diſcover'd the Strength of the Queens Inclination, and gave a gloomy Proſpect to the Reform'd: However ſome of the Parochial Clergy thinking themſelves either oblig'd in Conſcience, or at Liberty by Law, broke through the Order, and continued their Preaching: As for the reſt they acquieſc'd in the Juncture, and went no farther than reading the Common-Prayer, which was not prohibited. The other Party who ſtood affected to the Roman Catholick Religion, concluding cluding upon the Countenance of the Court, ſet up the Altars, and officiated in the Latin Service formerly received. This Forwardneſs pleas'd the Queen: Whereas thoſe who kept to the Worſhip eſtabliſh'd, and declin'd over-running the Laws, had a Mark of Diſlike ſet upon them. Sanders blames the Roman Catholick Clergy for officiating too haſtily upon the Queens Favour. He complains that many of them who were involv'd in the late Schiſm, never conſider'd what Cenſure and Diſabilities they lay under from the Canons, and what Objections there lay againſt the Biſhops that ordain'd them; but ruſh'd through the Diſcipline of the Church, and preſs'd up to the Holy Altars without Thought or Reverence. And for a Puniſhment of this Criminal Negligence, he ſeems to believe the Bleſſing of the Queens Reign was ſhortned, and the Face of Religion chang'd. (f)

(f) Sanders de Schiſm. Anglican.

The Queen being reſolv'd to ſet up her own Way of Worſhip, model'd the Miniſtry accordingly: For this purpoſe the Broad Seal was taken from Gooderick Biſhop of Ely, and Gardiner of Wincheſter was made Lord Chancellor: And to ſtrike a Terror into the other Party, and make them more paſſive to the Court Meaſures, ſome of the moſt eminent Prelates and Clergy were committed: For inſtance Ridley was ſent to the Tower, and Cox Dean of Chriſt Church to the Marſhalſea: Hooper Biſhop of Glouceſter, and Coverdale Biſhop of Exeter, were brought before the Council and committed to the Fleet; and Latimer late Biſhop of Worceſter appearing before the Lords of the Board, was for his ſeditious Demeanour, as the Council Book words it, committed cloſe Priſoner to the Tower.

Council Book. Several of the Reform'd Biſhops committed.

The next remarkable Occurrence is the Death of the Duke of Northumberland, who on the Eighteenth of Auguſt together with William Parr Marqueſs of Northampton, and John Earl of Warwick the Dukes Eldeſt Son, were arraign'd at Weſtminſter-Hall before Thomas Duke of Norfolk then Lord High Steward. When the Duke was brought to the Bar he acknowledg'd himſelf the Queens Subject, and made ſtrong Profeſſions of his Allegiance, own'd he had miſbehav'd himſelf, and that he did not intend to make any Defence as to matter of Fact. But being bred to the Law he deſir'd the Judgment of the Court in Two Points; "Firſt, whether a Man acting by Authority of the Princes Council, and by Warrant of the great Seal of England, and doing nothing without the ſame, might be charg'd with Treaſon for any Thing which he might do by Warrant thereof.

The Duke of Northumberlands Tryal.

"Secondly, Whether any ſuch Perſons which were equally culpable in that Crime, and thoſe by whoſe Letters and Commandments he was directed in all his Doings, might be his Judges, or paſs upon his Tryal as his Peers.

"To the firſt Queſtion, the Court by Advice of the Judges anſwer'd, that the Broad Seal pleaded by the Duke, was not the Seal of the lawful Queen of the Realm, nor paſs'd by Authority, but the Seal of an Uſurper, and therefore could be no Warrant to him. The Anſwer to his Second Queſtion was, that if any Perſons were as deeply concern'd in the Revolt as himſelf, yet in Regard there was no Attainder upon Record againſt them, they were quallified by Law to paſs upon any Trial, and not to be challeng'd but at the Prince's Pleaſure. (g) To this the Duke made little Reply, but confeſs'd the Indictment, and ſo likewiſe did the other Priſoners.

(g) Stow Annal.

When Judgment was given, the Duke intreated the Lords to move the Queens Clemency for his Sons: They were capable he ſaid, of doing good Service to the publick: That their taking the Field againſt her Majeſty was purely an Act of Obedience to their Father, and not any voluntary Motion of their own. He likewiſe deſired he might have ſome Learned Divine aſſign'd him to ſettle his Conſcience, and aſſiſt him in his Devotions. And that Two of the Privy Council might be ſent to him, to whom he had ſome Things to communicate, which might be very ſerviceable to her Majeſty.

Heath lately reſtor'd to the See of Worceſter, was order'd by the Queen to viſit the Duke of Northumberland, and prepare him for Death. And here the Duke either for Want of Arguments, or in Hopes of a Pardon, was gain'd over to the Roman Catholick Perſwaſion. That his Belief was different from his former Profeſſion, appears by his Speech upon the Scaffold. "Where he cautions the People againſt Novelties in Religion: And charges his Death upon his being miſled by falſe Teachers: That theſe ſeditious Preachers had open'd the Book, but did not know how to ſhut it: He exhorts them therefore to return to the old Catholick Faith: That ſince this new Teaching was entertain'd, God had withdrawn his Grace, given up the Nation, and puniſh'd them with Tumults and Rebellion, with Plague and Famine, not to mention other Calamities: He therefore continues to exhort them to pay their Duty to the Government, and recover themſelves to the Antient Belief. That the Confuſions in Germany were a diſmal Inſtance of the Danger in quitting the true Religion: That the Catholick Faith was an Article of our Creed: That this Declaration was voluntary and unſuggeſted, and that 'twas formerly his inward Belief, he appeals to the Biſhop of Worceſter. (h)

This Duke was Eldeſt Son to Sir Edmund Sutton aliàs Dudley. This Dudley was a Judge in the Reign of King Henry the Seventh. 'Twas he and Emſon another Judge, who ſuggeſted the Project of putting old Penal Laws in Execution, by which the Subject was very much harraſs'd: For which Oppreſſion they were afterwards both called to an Account, and executed. His Son of whom I am now ſpeaking, after ſome Proficiency in the Common Law, applied himſelf to the Profeſſion of Arms. And notwithſtanding his Fathers Msibehaviour, was well receiv'd by King Henry the Eighth. It muſt be ſaid, he recommended himſelf to his Prince with Advantage enough: He appear'd enterprizing and brave, and diſtinguiſh'd himſelf in the Field upon all Occaſions. Thus he was rais'd for his Merit by King Henry who made him Vicount Liſle, Knight of the Garter, and Admiral of England: He had Reach and Capacity no leſs than Courage, and wanted no Qualification for a good General. He was likewiſe fortunate in his Expeditions, and came off generally with Succeſs. But after all, his Principles were weak, and his Conſcience ſlenderly guarded. Thus his Deſigns being nothing but but Intereſt, he over-graſp'd his Project, and his Ambition undid him.

About this time, a Report was raiſ'd, that Cranmer, to make his Court to the Queen, had promiſ'd to officiate in the Latin Service. To wipe off this Aſperſion, the Archbiſhop drew up a Manifeſto in Defence of the Reformation. It runs to this Effect.

Fox. Vol. 3. page 94. Archbiſhop Cranmers Manifeſto.

" As the Devil is a Liar, and the Father of " lying, ſo he has now ſtirr'd up his Servants " to perſecute Chriſt, and his true Religion. " That whereas the great Abuſes of the Latin " Maſſes had been reformed in the Two late " Reigns, and the Service in the Holy Supper " perform'd agreeably to the Inſtitution of our " Saviour, and the Practice of the Apoſtles; " ſo now the Devil endeavours to reſtore the " Latin ſatisfactory Maſſes, a Thing of his own " Invention and Device. To bring this more " eaſily about, ſome People have abus'd my " Name, and ſpread a Story, as if I had ſet up " the Maſs at Canterbury, and that I had offer'd " to ſay Maſs before the Queen at St. Pauls, " and elſewhere.

" The Archbiſhop denies the Fact, proteſts " againſt every Part of the Story, as a downright Calumny: And with the Queens " Leave offers to juſtiſie the Engliſh Communion Service both from the Authority of the " Scriptures, and the Practice of the Primitive " Church. And on the other ſide, that the " Maſs is not only without Foundation in both " theſe Reſpects, but likewiſe diſcovers a plain " Contradiction to Antiquity, and the inſpired Writings; and is ſtuff'd over and above, " with many horrid Blaſphemies. And whereas Peter Martyr had been maliciouſly charg'd " with Ignorance by ſome People, the Archbiſhop with the Queens Leave, undertakes " that this Divine, himſelf, and Four or Five " more of his chuſing, will maintain the Reformation made in the late Reign, with Reſpect to Doctrine, Diſcipline, and Worſhip, " to be more orthodox and defenſible, more " agreeable to the true Standard, and Primitive " Plan, than the Belief and Practice of the " Church of Rome. The Conditions requir'd by the Archbiſhop in the Diſpute, are theſe. " That God's Word may be the Judge, and " that the Arguments urg'd on both ſides may " be put in Writing; that the World may " examine the Force of what is alledg'd, and " that neither Party may have an Opportunity of denying their Aſſertions.

Acts 19.

This Declaration of the Archbiſhop was penn'd with great Vehemence and Ruggedneſs of Expreſſion. Indeed his Zeal ſeems to have tranſported him too far. St. Paul when at Athens makes uſe of no provoking Language, but diſputes very gently even againſt the Heathen Idolatry. And afterwards when Demetrius had rais'd the Mob of Epheſus againſt him, Gallio one of the Magiſtrates told the People, that the Chriſtians they had brought before him, had neither rob'd their Churches, nor blaſphem'd their Goddeſs. Now if Perſons who had Infallibility and Apoſtolick Commiſſion, declin'd opprobrious Terms, and were ſmooth in their Application: If the Caſe is thus; thoſe of lower Qualifications ſhould, one would think be temperate in their manner, and not indulge themſelves in greater lengths of Invective; eſpecially when they argue againſt a Communion of Chriſtians, and where both Sides are agreed in the Fundamentals of Belief. But Paſſions are ſometimes ſtrong, and Allowance muſt be made for human Infirmities. Beſides, this Paper of the Archbiſhops lying in his Window was tranſcrib'd by Biſhop Scory before 'twas finiſh'd, and ſhewn to ſeveral others. That the Archbiſhop might have ſoftned ſome of the Expreſſions upon a Review, is not impoſſible: But the Manifeſto being handed from one to another, 'twas not long before the Council had notice of it. The Archbiſhop being order'd to appear was queſtion'd about it, and prompted to make an Acknowledgment of his Fault. Cranmers Anſwer was, that he did not deny his being the Author of thoſe Papers, and that he was ſorry they ſlip'd through his Hands in ſo imperfect a Condition. For ſays he, I intended to publiſh this Declaration in a more ample manner, to have put my Seal to it, and ſet it up at St. Paul's Cathedral, and at all the other Church Doors in London. (i) There could be no Intereſt in this Anſwer: This was braving Danger with a Witneſs, and could proceed from nothing but Conſcience and extraordinary Courage. However, the Council were highly diſoblig'd, look'd upon the Paper as a quarrelſome Challenge, and that the Archbiſhop endeavour'd to prepoſſeſs the People, and create an Averſion to their Religion. And therefore, after a long and ſerious debating his Offence by the whole Board, " 'twas thought convenient, " that as well for the Treaſon committed " by him againſt the Queens Majeſty, as " for the aggravating the ſame his Offence " by ſpreading ſeditious Bills, and moving " Tumults to the Diſquiet of the State, he " ſhould be committed to the Tower, there to " remain, or be referr'd to Juſtice, or further order'd, as ſhall ſtand with the Queens " Pleaſure. (k) The Storm gathering againſt the Reformation was by this time eaſily foreſeen: And therefore Cranmer while at Liberty, was adviſ'd to be govern'd by the Caution and Example of his Friends, and conſult his Safety by retiring beyond Sea: To which he very generouſly anſwer'd, that if it were to avoid his being proſecuted for any Crime againſt the State, he ſhould more willingly have reſign'd to their Advice; but now ſince his Religion, in Oppoſition to the Errors of Popery, was his greateſt Fault, he was reſolv'd to run the Riſque, and rather loſe his Life than quit the Kingdom. This Rigour againſt the Engliſh, made the Foreigners take the Alarm, and provide for their going off. Peter Martyrs appearing ſo vigorouſly againſt the Doctrines of the Church of Rome in the late Reign, had now brought him under a Character of Diſadvantage: And being publickly mal-treated at Oxford, he retired to Lambeth ſome little time before the Archbiſhops Impriſonment. Some of the bigotted Papiſts mov'd for his Commitment. But others of more Juſtice and Temper, alledg'd, that ſince he came into England by the Encouragement of the Government, and under the Protection of a ſafe Conduct, 'twould be diſhonourable not to allow him the Benefit of ſo ſolemn a Security. This Opinion carried it: And thus being diſcharg'd of his Profeſſorſhip at Oxford, he had a Paſs to go beyond Sea, and was handſomely furniſh'd with Conveniencies for his Voyage by the Lord Chancellor Gardiner. About the ſame time John Alaſco had Orders to forbear preaching, to break up his Congregation, and quit the Country. He proteſts he receiv'd but one of theſe, which was given him on the Road as he was coming up to clear himſelf: And that now being apprehenſive of harſh Uſage, he made his Eſcape. In this Apology he undertakes the Defence of the Preachers in the late Reign. Againſt whom 'twas now objected that they neglected Faſting and Prayer, and indulg'd the People in all manner of Liberty: This he ſaid was altogether Calumny: That on the other Hand the great Men in King Edwards Time were ſo much diſguſted at the Freedom taken by the Preachers, that many of them would hear no Sermons. The Seſſions was open'd with a ſolemn Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt according to the old Cuſtom. Taylor Biſhop of Lincoln, and Harley Biſhop of Hereford came thither, as 'tis ſaid, with a Reſolution to juſtify their Doctrine. Fox reports that when the Service began, theſe Two Biſhops withdrew out of ſcruple of Conſcience. The Biſhop of Lincoln was afterwards queſtion'd for his Non-compliance, and commanded to attend the Lords, but died before the Matter came to an Iſſue. And as for Harley he was excluded the Houſe upon the ſcore of his being married. * But Beal Clerk of the Council in Queen Elizabeths Time relates this matter ſomewhat differently: He ſays, Biſhop Taylor took his Place in his Robes, but refuſing to give any Reverence to the Maſs was violently thruſt out of the Houſe: But as to Harley he ſays nothing.

This Parliament is cenſur'd for unfree Elections, falſe Returns, and illegal diſcharging of ſome of the Members. * But 'tis not probable the Government would venture upon ſtraining the Conſtitution to this Degree, nor be ſo early in Violence. Beſides, all this black Imputation ſtands upon the Credit of Beales Teſtimony. Now this Beal was not only a bigotted Nonconformiſt, but which is much worſe, a Perſon of a furious tempeſtuous Spirit. He misbehav'd himſelf, as will be ſeen afterwards, to a ſcandalous Degree, and fail'd both in Temper and Probity.

* Bp. Burnet pt. 2. p. 252.

The Firſt Act of this Parliament was the Repeal of certain Statutes made in the Two laſt Reigns, concerning Treaſon, Felony, and Præmunire. More particularly, all Treaſons are reduced to the Statute of 25 Edward 3. Cap. 2. And all Offences made Præmunire ſince 1ſt. H. 8. are diſcharg'd that Penalty. (r) This Firſt Seſſion continued but to the One and Twentieth of this Month, after which 'twas prorogued to the Twenty Fourth. By repealing the Acts of Treaſon and Præmunire in the Two late Reigns, the Papiſts were more at Liberty, and the Terror of the Regale was in a great Meaſure taken off. Before I proceed to the Second Seſſion, I ſhall give the Reader a ſhort Account of the Poſture of Affairs in the Univerſities. To begin with Oxford; upon the Queens Acceſſion to the Throne, the Roman Catholicks not waiting for any Directions from the Court, brought the old Service into the Churches with all the Train of Ceremonies formerly uſed. The Reform'd on the other ſide went on with the Engliſh Common-Prayer, tho' they almoſt deſpair'd having that Liberty continued, and dreaded the approaching Parliament. In ſhort, both Parties endeavor'd to maintain their Credit, and ſupport themſelves in their reſpective Perſwaſion. The Roman Catholicks laid themſelves out in regulating the Manners, and procuring the Improvement of the Young Students: They made it their Buſineſs to ſtrike the Imagination of the People, and appear Solemn and Pompous in their Devotions: The Reform'd, beſides the uſe of the Engliſh Liturgy, Harangued the Audience, argued for their Doctrine, and exerted themſelves in the Pulpit. Thus Religion was Particolour'd for ſome time in the Univerſity. But when the Queens Reſolution was farther known, the Heads of the Colleges thought it proper to ſend up an Addreſs, and Mr. Jewell Fellow of Corpus Chriſti, was order'd to draw it. This was a nice Task, and put upon him without Queſtion by thoſe who meant no kindneſs: For it was taken for granted, he muſt either provoke the Roman Catholicks, or loſe the good Opinion of his own Party. But Jewell was ſo dexterous in his Compoſition, as to eſcape the Ambuſh. The Addreſs being both reſpectful, and guarded, Paſs'd the Approbation of Treſham the Vicechancellor, and ſome other Heads, and was well receiv'd by the Queen. The Subſtance of it was to this Effect.

The Poſture of Affairs in the Univerſities.

The Oxford Addreſs Penn'd by Jewel.

“The Melancholy the Univerſity lay under for the Death of King Edward, was all diſpell'd, by the Expectation of a glorious Reign in her Majeſty: That they were indeed extremely afflicted at the loſs of ſo promiſing a Prince as the late King; but now that Trouble was turn'd into Joy, by her Majeſty's Succeſs, and making her way to the Throne thro' ſo much danger: And that they were ſenſible the publick Proſperity depended on her Highneſſes Preſervation. Then the Addreſs dilates upon “the Plots and Rebellions concerted and rais'd againſt her. What making of Intereſt, what levying of Mony, what Warlike Preparations were on Foot upon this Occaſion? Then there is mention made with what demonſtrations “of Loyalty, and Regard, the Queen was receiv'd in other Places: That tho' the Univerſity of Oxford, were not furniſh'd with the Ornaments of Wealth, to expreſs their Satisfaction: However, what remain'd, which was little more than their Learning, was intirely at her Majeſty's Service. And tho' 'twas not in their Power, to ſhew their Joy, and perform their Duty, in ſo pompous a manner, yet they ſhould not fail doing it, with the ſame Heartineſs and Affection with the reſt of her Subjects: And that they ſhould not ceaſe to beg of God Almighty, that as the beginning of her Majeſty's Reign has been proſperous and without Bloodſhed, ſo the ſame Courſe of Happineſs may be all along continued. (s)

Several ejected in both Univerſities.

When Jewel Penn'd this Addreſs, he had great Hopes the Queen would not have gone ſo far as ſhe did in the Alterations of Religion: For when ſhe was Proclaim'd at Oxford, ſeveral Noblemen gave the Univerſity ſuch an Expectation. After Peter Martyr's leaving the Chair at Oxford, the Divinity Schools had a very thin Audience. The greateſt number of the Reform'd belong'd to Chriſt Church, Magdalen, and Corpus Chriſti: The Two latter with New College, were under the Juriſdiction of Gardiner, Biſhop of Wincheſter. This Prelate delegated Sir Richard Read, and Dr. Wryght Archdeacon of Oxford, to Viſit theſe Societies, and Model them to his Fancy. Theſe Viſitors ſet up the Maſs, puniſh'd Non-compliers, and turn'd out ſeveral Fellows. John Fox the Martyrologiſt, and Lawrence Humphrey, were Two of thoſe ejected.

At Cambridge, where Gardiner was Chancellor, moſt of the Heads were turn'd out. None but Bacon Maſter of Gunville-hall, and Evans Maſter of Magdalen-College, continued unremoved. (t)

37 H. 8. c. 16.

About this time Holgate, Archbiſhop of York, was committed to the Tower for Heinous Offences, without naming what the Crimes were. It muſt be confeſs'd this Prelate was not of the moſt unblemiſh'd Reputation. He had ſcandalouſly betrayed his See, and parted with almoſt all the Mannors to King Henry the Eighth, as hath been already obſerved. Beſides this, he lay under a coarſe Imputation, with reſpect to his Marriage. For by an Order of Council in the late Reign, a Letter was directed to him, * to ſtop his coming up to Town 'till the Parliament Sate. There was likewiſe a Letter ſent by the Council, to Sir Thomas Gargrave, Mr. Chaloner, and Dr. Rookesby, to Search and Examine the very Truth of the Matter, between the Archbiſhop, and one Norman who Claims the Archbiſhops Wife to be his Wife. And for their further Inſtructions, the Supplication of the ſaid Norman, is ſent to them incloſed. 'Tis not Improbable therefore, this might be one of the Heinous Offences for which he was Impriſon'd. For in the Inſtrument of his Deprivation 'tis ſaid, he was for his Marriage committed to the Tower and deprived. †

The Marriage between King Henry and Catherine of Spain declar'd Lawful by the Parliament.

Upon the Twenty Fourth of October, the Parliament Sate again, after Two Days Prorogation. I ſhall mention what paſs'd, with relation to the Church. Firſt, the Queen is declar'd Born in Lawful Matrimony, and all Sentences of Divorce between King Henry the Eighth, and Queen Catherine of Spain, made void.

“The Statute ſets forth, that ſome very few Malicious and Perverſe Perſons, envying the happineſs of the King and Kingdom, injected Scruples into his Highneſſes Conſcience, and brought him to a perſwaſion of the unlawfulneſs of his Marriage. And to this intent, by Bribery, Menacing, and corrupt Practiſes, prevail'd with ſeveral Univerſities, both Abroad and at Home, to declare againſt the Marriage, in her Majeſty's Father and Mother. And that Thomas Cranmer, then newly made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, moſt ungodly, and againſt all Laws of Equity and Conſcience, proſecuting the ſame wicked device of Divorce, and Separation of the ſaid King your Father, and the ſaid Queen your Mother, call'd before him ex Officio, the hearing of the ſaid matter of Marriage, and taking his Foundation partly from his own unadviſed Judgment of the Scripture, joyning therewith the pretended Teſtimonies of the ſaid Univerſities, and partly from bare and moſt untrue Conjectures, gather'd and admitted by him, upon matters of no Strength or Effect, but only by Suppoſal, and without admitting or hearing any thing that could be ſaid by the Queen your Mother, or by any on her behalf, in the Abſence of the ſaid late Queen your Mother, proceeded, pronounc'd, decern'd, declar'd, and gave Sentence, the ſame moſt Lawful, and undoubted Matrimony, to be naught, and to be contracted againſt Gods Law, and to be of no value, value, &c. From hence the Act proceeds, to Repeal ſo much of the Statutes, of 25 H. 8. Cap. 22. and 28 H. 8. Cap. 7. as confirm the Sentence of Divorce. And in the laſt Clauſe 'tis Enacted, That the Marriage had, and Solemniz'd, between your ſaid moſt Noble Father King Henry, and your ſaid moſt Noble Mother, Queen Katherine, ſhall be Deſinitively, Clearly, and Abſolutely declar'd, deem'd, and adjudged to be, and ſtand with God's Law, and his Holy Word, and to be accepted, reputed, and taken of good Effect and Validity, to all Intents and Purpoſes. (u)

From hence it appears, this Parliament under Queen Mary, made themſelves Judges of the meaning of the Scripture, and pronounc'd upon a Cauſe within the Verge of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction.

This Act is ſuppos'd to acknowledge the Papal Supremacy by Implication. The Ground of this Suppoſition is, that the lawfulneſs of the Marriage ſtood upon the Diſpenſation of Pope Julius the Second, and therefore the Act which declares the Marriage good, muſt by Conſequence acknowledge the Popes Authority. And therefore Father Paul, * thinks it a great Singularity in the Engliſh Nobility, to oppoſe the Reſtitution of the Papal Supremacy, which it ſeems they did afterwards, upon the Queens Motion for its Revival: The Hiſtorian repreſents this as an odd Scruple, ſince their declaring for the Marriage had Involv'd their Recognition of the Popes Juriſdiction. But the reaſoning of this Author ſeems not Concluſive. For the Parliament might found their Declaration upon 25 Deuteronomy Verſe 5. and believe that King Henry the Eighths Marriage, with Catherine of Spain, ſtood upon the Reaſon and Equity of that Law.

Novemb. 22. 1553.

Notwithſtanding the Queen's Clemency in pardoning moſt of thoſe, who Endeavor'd to ſet up the Lady Jane, there ſeems to have been ſtill ſome ſecret Practiſes againſt her: For about this Time, Robert Taylor, Edmund Coat, and Thomas Wood, were brought before the Lords of the Council, for their lewd Reports, that King Edward was Alive. They were Order'd to find Sureties for their forth-coming. One Robert Robertham belonging to the Wardrobe, was ſoon after committed to the Fleet for the ſame Miſdemeanor, not to mention ſeveral others. To return, Several Statutes touching Religion repealed.

The Act which ſtands next upon the Print, Repeals certain Statutes concerning Religion, made in the late Reign. The Preamble ſets forth, that forasmuch as by divers and ſeveral Acts, as well the Divine Service, and good Adminiſtration of the Sacrament, and divers other Matters of Religion (which we and our Forefathers found in this Church of England, to us left, by the Authority of the Catholick Church,) be partly alter'd, and in ſome Part taken from us, and in Place thereof, new things Imagin'd and ſet forth by the ſaid Act, ſuch as a few of Singularity have Devis'd. Whereof hath enſued amongſt us in very ſmall Time, Numbers of divers and ſtrange Opinions, and diverſity's of Sects, and thereby grown great Unquietneſs and much Diſcord, to the great diſturbance of the Commonwealth of this Realm, &c. (w)

This Act Repeal'd the Statutes in the late Reign, for giving the Communion in both kinds: For eſtabliſhing the firſt and ſecond Liturgy: For confirming the new Ordinal, for ſetting aſide certain Faſts and Feſtivals formerly obſerv'd: And farther by this Act, the Statute which allow'd the Marriage of Prieſts, and legitimated their Children, was Repeal'd: And ſo likewiſe was the Statute for making Biſhops, by the King's Letters Patent, and exerciſing their Epiſcopal Juriſdiction. By the way, the taking away this laſt Act, was undoubtedly a good thing. As to the reſt the Reformation was Maim'd by them, made Illegal, and the Biſhops and Prieſts brought under Incapacities for their Function.

'Tis further Enacted by this Statute of Repeal, that all ſuch Divine Service, and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, which were moſt commonly us'd in England, in the laſt Year of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, ſhall be reviv'd and madis'd after the Twentieth of December next following: After which Term the officiating in any other Service is forbidden. And laſtly, 'tis provided that all Perſons of the Clergy ſhall be at Liberty in the mean time, to uſe either the Old, or New Service.

An Act againſt diſturbing Preachers.

" The next Act makes it Penal to diſturb any " Preacher in his Sermon, or any Prieſt in ad- " miniſtring any Part of Divine Service: And " if any Perſon abus'd the Hoſt, broke down " an Altar, Crucifix, or any Image in Churches, " Chappels, or Church-yards, they were to be " Seiz'd by the Conſtables, Churchwardens, " or any Perſon preſent, brought before a " Juſtice of Peace, and ſuffer Three Months " Impriſonment. If the Congregation con- " niv'd at the Diſorder, and refus'd to appre- " hend the Offender, the Pariſh was to Forfeit " Five Pounds; and ſo were thoſe who reſ- " cued them after an Arreſt. There's a Proviſo " in this Statute, for ſaving the Juriſdiction of " the Eccleſiaſtical Courts; and thus he that " had been Puniſh'd by the Ordinary, ſtood " clear of Proſecution from the Juſtices of " Peace, for any of the Crimes abovemention'd: " And ſo on the other ſide, if the Offender " had been Puniſh'd by Secular Juſtice, the " Ordinaries could not meddle with him. The " Divine Service and Sacraments protected by " this Act, are only ſuch Offices as were prior " to the Reformation, and uſed in the laſt Year " of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, or which ſhould be allow'd or ſet forth by the Queen's Majeſty. (x)

'Tis probably ſuppos'd, the late Diſorders at St. Paul's Croſs, and throwing the Dagger at Bourn the Preacher, occaſion'd the making this Act.

And to prevent Mutinies and Commotions of this kind, 'tis Enacted by this Parliament, that if any Perſons to the Number of Twelve or above, being Aſſembled together at any Time, after the Twentieth Day of December next comming, ſhall intend, go about, Practiſe, or put in Ure, with Force of Armes unlawfully, and of their own Authority, to alter, or chaunge any Laws, made or eſtabliſhed for Religion by Authority of Parliament, which ſhall ſtand in Force after the ſayd Twentieth Day of December, or any other Laws or Eſtatates of this Realm, or any of them: The ſame Number of Twelve, or above, beyng commanded or required by the Sheriffe of the Shier, or by any Juſtice of Peace of the ſame Shier, or by the Mayer, Shiriffe, Juſtices of Peace, or Bayliffes of any Citie, Borough, or Town Corporate, where any ſuch Aſſemblies ſhall be unlawfully had, or made, by Proclamation in the Queen's Name, to retire and repayre to their own Houſes, Habitations, or Places, from whence they came, and they or any of them, notwithſtanding ſuch Proclamation, ſhall remaine,

This Seſſions, the Attainder againſt the Duke of Norfolk was Repeal'd. Thoſe who had purchas'd part of this Nobleman's Eſtate of the Crown, pleaded againſt the Paſſing the Bill. The Caſe being ſomewhat remarkable, I ſhall Tranſlate it from Dyer's Reports. When this Bill of Attainder was paſs'd by both Houſes, in the laſt Year of King Henry the Eighth; The King by his Letters Patents, * mentioning the Bill, gave the Royal Aſſent to it, impowering Three or Four of the Lords to conſent to it in his Name. Theſe Letters Patents, as the Purchaſers ſets forth, were Sign'd Henry Rex, under the King's Hand. The Broad Seal was likewiſe put to them, and the Commiſſion annex'd to the Bill. The Bill was likewiſe Endors'd in theſe Words, ſoit fait come eſt deſire.

* Dated 27 Jan. An. 38. Regni ſui.

The Duke of Norfolk's Attainder Repeal'd.

Now 'twas ſtrongly debated by the Judges, whether this Act was good or not. Thoſe who had purchas'd ſome of the Dukes Eſtate, procur'd a Certiorari, directed to Two Clerks of the Parliament, to Certify the Tenor of an Act of Parliament, by which the Duke of Norfolk was attainted. And here one of the Clerks only made a Certificate of the naked Bill, without the Circumſtances abovementioned. Upon this a Queſtion was moved, whether the Certificate was good, becauſe one Clerk alone had no Authority to Certify. And in regard the Purchaſers had procured a Certiorari, and produced a Copy of the Act, without taking notice of the Commiſſion, exemplified in Chancery; the Duke got the Original Act laid before the Judges at Serjeants Inn, by Spilman Clerk of the Parliament. And here as a ſtrong Proof and Preſumption, that the King had not Sign'd the Commiſſion, 'twas obſerv'd firſt, that the King's Name was Written under the Teſte of the Patent, whereas the Cuſtom was to Sign above. Further, 'twas obſerv'd, that the Hand was too perfect, and the Letters too well cut for a Perſon in ſo weak a Condition; For the King Died that very Night, in which this was pretended to be done. And ſome ſaid 'twas not Written, but Stamp'd. This Allegation was fortify'd by the Lord Paget, who in this Parliament, “under Queen Mary, came into the Houſe of Commons, to teſtify his Knowledge, touching King Henry the Eighths Aſſent by Letters Patent, to the pretended Act of the attainder of the ſaid Duke; who upon his Honour depoſed, that the ſame was not Subſcrib'd with the Hand of the King, but the Stamp only put to the Letters Patent, by one William Clerk. From hence 'twas argued, the whole was void, and out of the Proviſion by 23 H. 8. Cap. 21. Upon theſe Grounds Queen Mary's Parliament declar'd the Act of the Dukes Attainder Void, and of none Effect. (z)

December 6. The Parliament Diſſolv'd.

This Parliament notwithſtanding, they had Oblig'd the Queen in the Point of her Mothers Marriage, and complied ſo far in other Reſpects, was quickly Diſſolv'd. The Motives to this Diſſolution were probably the diſinclination of the Members, for reſtoring the Papal Supremacy. This Parliament would in all likelyhood, have gone back no farther than King Henry the Eighths Reformation. The Lord Chancellor Gardiner, may be ſuppos'd of this Sentiment. For this Prelate had comply'd with King Henry's Meaſures, and juſtified that King's Proceedings in his Book de verâ Obedientiâ. Beſides, the Houſe of Commons, as we ſhall ſee afterwards, diſlik'd the Queen's Marrying a Foreigner, which might be another reaſon of her being willing to part with them.

Commendone ſent to the Queen by Car*dinal* Pool.

As to the Buſineſs of Religion, the Queen was reſolv'd at firſt, to revive the Popes Authority: To this, beſides the Impreſſion of her Education, ſhe thought her ſelf Oblig'd in Point of Intereſt. This was look'd on as the beſt Expedient, to make her Birth unqueſtionable, and ſilence all Objections, touching her Mothers Marriage. To carry on this Deſign, 'twas thought requiſite to call Home Cardinal Pool. The Pope hearing the Death of King Edward the Sixth, was not backward in ſoliciting his Buſineſs, and ſounding the Queen's Temper. To this purpoſe, Cardinal Dandino, his Holineſſes Legate, at the Emperors Court, ſent over Franciſco Commendone, to inform him, how the Queen ſtood affected. Father Paul reports that Pope Julius the Third, upon the News of the Queens Acceſſion to the Throne, declar'd Cardinal Pool his Legate for England. He concluded Pool's Quality, Learning, and exemplary Life, made him the moſt proper Perſon for the management of that Affair. The Hiſtorian adds, that Pool lying under an Attainder of high Treaſon, and ſuſpecting the Engliſh Court and Parliament might be unfriendly to his Purpoſe, thought it not prudent to hazard his Perſon, 'till farther Information. 'Twas therefore by Pool's Order, that Commendone was ſent hither by Dandino. Commendone had Inſtructions to conceal his Character and Buſineſs, and ſpeak privately with the Queen: Thus he came over in a Diſguiſe, and got a ſecret Audience. The Queen acquainted him with her Reſolution of reconciling the Kingdom to the See of Rome: But that this Buſineſs was to be manag'd with great Caution and Secrecy: That otherwiſe her Government might be Embroil'd, and the whole Deſign Miſcarry.

Hiſt. Counc. Trent.

Biſhop Burnet pt. 2.

Commendone had a Letter from her to the Pope, in which ſhe gave him an Aſſurance of her Obedience to the Apoſtolick See. She wrote likewiſe to Cardinal Pool upon the ſame Head, and adviſ'd Commendone to move the Pope that Pool might be ſent over.

Godwin. Annal.

The Queen ſolicited to Marry.

Before I proceed farther, it may not be improper to obſerve, that during the Seſſion of the Parliament, the Queen had been ſolicited to Marry: Three Perſons were propoſed. Courtney Earl of Devonſhire, Cardinal Pool, and Philip Eldeſt Son to the Emperor Charles the Fifth. 'Twas thought her Inclinations ſtood fair for the Young Earl of Devonſhire: He was a fine Perſon, and of Royal Extraction; his Grandmother being one of King Edward the Fourths Daughters; but 'tis ſaid this Nobleman's Fancy did not direct him to the Queen; that he had declin'd taking notice of an intelligible Invitation, that he deſir'd leave to Addreſs the Lady Elizabeth, and that the Queen was highly diſpleas'd with this Preference of her Younger Siſter. As to Pool, 'twas objected, he was pretty far Advanc'd in Years: That being wholly given up to Study and Retirement, 'twas thought the Royal Function would be Foreign to his Genius: That the Queens Affairs requir'd a Perſon of Intereſt, of an enterprizing Temper, and one that could recommend himſelf to Regard. That Philip of Spain was preferable in theſe Reſpects: That he had been bred to the Buſineſs of a Crown: That he was Heir to the greateſt Monarch in Europe: And that by ſuch an Alliance the Trade of the Kingdom would be Improv'd, and the publick Intereſt conſiderably advanc'd.

Reaſons of State, and the Luſtre of the Perſon, determined the Queen for Philip. The Emperor, who muſt be ſuppoſed to make the Propoſal, expected a conſiderable return from this Marriage: That by this Union with England, he ſhould be in a Condition to diſembarraſs his Affairs, to be an Over-ballance againſt France, and recover his Ground in Germany.

She makes Choice of Philip of Spain.

To proceed, Commendone arriving at Rome, reported his Negotiation, and acquainted the Pope with the Queen's Diſpoſition to cloſe with that Court: This Welcome News, was communicated to the Conclave, tho' not in the whole Detail. The Pope related only the Queens good Inclination in general, without mentioning her Letters: 'Tis probable he might be afraid the Deſign might ſuffer by being made Publick. However, 'twas thought fit to purſue the Invitation, and not loſe any time. Cardinal Pool, therefore being charg'd with Inſtructions, ſet forward for England.

She reſolves to Cloſe with the Court of Rome.

Gardiner having notice of the Cardinals Journey, and being Apprehenſive either, that the Match with Spain might be diſturbed, or that his own greatneſs might be Ecclips'd, by Pool's Quality and Character, ſent to the Emperor to ſtop the Cardinal: He acquainted this Prince that if Matters were thus precipitated, they would certainly Miſcarry: That neither the Marriage, nor the revival of the Papal Authority were agreeable to the Bulk of the Engliſh Nation. That in Caſe they were both brought on together the People would take Check, and the Government loſe its Intereſt: That the Cardinal at his coming, would not fail to preſs the Point of Religion. 'Twas therefore adviſeable to conclude the Marriage before the other Buſineſs came upon the Board: And that when the Queen was ſtrengthen'd with ſo great an Alliance, the Papal Authority would be eaſier digeſted. The Emperor being altogether of Gardiner's Opinion, prevail'd with Dandino to write to Pool, to make a halt in his Voyage. But Pool keeping on notwithſtanding this Letter, the Emperor ſent Diego Mendoza with expreſs Orders, to forbid him going farther. Pool being thus arreſted in his Motion, complain'd of the Uſage: He remonſtrated that the Popes Authority ſuffer'd, that the Intereſts of Chriſtianity were check'd, and England diſappointed of the Bleſſing of returning to the Catholick Communion. The Emperor to prevent a Clamor, gave the Cardinal Leave to Travel from the Palatinate to Bruſſels. And here Pool was Entertain'd, 'till the Marriage was adjuſted: And to make him the more eaſy, the Emperor gave him an honourable Amuſement, and employed him to Treat a Peace, between himſelf and the French King. (a)

Cardinal Pool ſtop'd by the Emperor, in his Journey to England.

While the Cardinal lay under this Embargo, he receiv'd Two Letters from the Queen. In the firſt, which was probably Written at the Emperors Inſtance, ſhe acquainted him with the difficulties in giving up the Regale, as 'twas ſettled in her Fathers Reign. That the preſent Parliament was averſe to her relinquiſhing the Title of Head of the Church; They concluded the parting with this Branch of the Prerogative, was in Order to a Revival of the Popes Juriſdiction; to which they were diſenclin'd; and therefore the News of a Legates coming over, was by no means acceptable to them: For theſe reaſons ſhe entreated him to halt a little: She likewiſe requeſted his Advice, how ſhe was to manage, provided the Parliament could not be gain'd to Repeal the late Acts of Supremacy. In the Cloſe, ſhe deſir'd to know how it came to paſs, that the ſecret Inſtructions, with which ſhe entruſted Commendone, were Publiſh'd in the Conſiſtory at Rome. And that this was matter of Fact, her Ambaſſador at Venice had aſſured her.

The Queen Writes to the Cardinal. January 28. 155$\frac{3}{4}$.

In her Second Letter, dated Three Months after the firſt, ſhe acquaints the Cardinal with her Intention of filling the Vacant Sees: And here ſhe deſires to be Inform'd how this may be done, without any Omiſſions of Regard to the Apoſtolick See: That ſhe reſolv'd not to carry the Regale beyond the Antient Prerogative prior to the Schiſm. With this Letter ſhe ſent him Two Acts of Parliament, which ſhe believ'd would be entertaining. For by one of them, her Mothers Marriage was declared good; and by the other the Sacraments and Church Service, were brought back to the condition in which they ſtood in the laſt Year of her Fathers Reign.

Pool's Inſtructions to Goldwell.

The Cardinal gave Inſtructions to Thomas Goldwell, (afterwards Biſhop of St. Aſaph) to report his Opinion to the Queen, upon the Heads abovemention'd. As to the Method for recovering the Nation to their Obedience to his Holineſs, he conceiv'd the acceptableneſs of the Perſon who firſt recommended the Buſineſs might be a ſerviceable Step. And ſince there was ſcarce any, either of the Spirituality, or Temporality, who had not ſome way or other, declar'd againſt the Popes Supremacy, he thought no Perſon ſo proper to propoſe this Matter as her Majeſty: That this had been the Emperors Method in maintaining the Juſtice of his Quarrel againſt the French King. Upon this Occaſion, he Choſe to be his own Orator, and harangued upon the Cauſe before the Pope and Cardinals. From hence Pool proceeded to hint, that ſince the Pope had given him the Character of a Legate, the Parliament ought to be reconcil'd to his Buſineſs, and entertain him without Scruple or Diſguſt. And to this purpoſe it might be reaſonably expected, the Attainder paſs'd againſt him ſhould be Repeal'd. As to the Charge of Commendones having fail'd in Point of Secrecy, Pool endeavor'd to ſatisfy the Queen, that this Agent had anſwer'd the Confidence put in him, and let go nothing which ought not to be divulg'd: And that he had reported the Meſſage he receiv'd from the Queen to none but the Pope. The Cardinal goes on to ſhew his Regret, at his being ſtop'd in his Journey. The News of this unexpected Uſage, he was afraid, might be ſo ill reſented by the Conclave, as to make them ſuggeſt his being recalled. That this Motion from her Majeſty for his not coming forward, was different from her firſt Commiſſion: That ſince her Highneſs ſeem'd to abate in her Zeal, he was afraid his Holineſs might be diſcourag'd, and countermand him to Rome. (b)

(a) Father Paul Hiſt. Counc. Trent. October 28. An. Dom. 1553.

To prevent this he diſpatch'd a Gentleman to the Pope to excuſe the Delays in his Journey: He acquainted his Holineſs with ſome Advices he had receiv'd from the Queen; the Purport was, that ſhe hoped the Difficulties would be got over, and the Parliament gain'd by Degrees to the Cardinals Satiſfaction. He acquainted the Pope farther, that this Stand upon their Affairs was recommended by the Emperor: That this Prince adviſ'd the Queen to proceed by gentle Motions, and poſtpone the Buſineſs of Religion, till her Intereſt was farther improv'd, and her Government better ſettled.

The Cardinal likewiſe ſollicited the Emperor to give him Leave to proceed in his Voyage to England.

As to the Two Acts of Parliament the Cardinal receiv'd from the Queen, they came ſhort of his Wiſhes, and gave him but a faint Satiſfaction, he ſent the Queen Word, that the Act which affirm'd her Mothers Marriage was defectively pen'd: That it mention'd the Wiſdom of the Kings of England and Spain in making the Match, but forgot the main Circumſtance in the Commendation; that is, the Act takes no notice of their procuring the Popes Diſpenſation, without which the Obſtructions could not have been removed, nor the Relation made defenſible.

As to the other Act touching the Sacraments the Cardinal approves the Motive, ſet forth in the Preamble for making the Law: The Ground was, to put a Stop to the Raſhneſs of ſome Noveliſts, who had either retrench'd the Number, or chang'd the antient Cuſtom of adminiſtring the Sacraments. Thus far the Cardinal is ſatisfied; but then he charges the Statute with breaking in upon the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, permitting the Uſe of the Sacraments to Perſons unreconcil'd to the Church, and making the Practice of a Schiſmatical Prince † a Preſident to govern this matter.

In ſhort, he exhorts the Queen not to be diſhearten'd, or ſway'd by Temporal Conſiderations: That Conſcience ought to have the Aſcendant: That ſhe is oblig'd in the Firſt Place to addreſs God Almighty for Direction, and to pray for the Spirit of Council and Strength: That Providence has hitherto remarkably appear'd for her, and made her Way to the Throne: That ſhe has no Reaſon to deſpond of the ſame Protection, and that Fears and Obſtructions are no Diſcharges from Duty. That beſides this, the Lawfulneſs of her Mothers Marriage, and by Conſequence her Title to the Crown, ſtands upon the Baſis of the Popes Diſpenſation, and cannot be defended without owning the Juriſdiction of the Apoſtolick See: And therefore for theſe Reaſons her Majeſty will find herſelf oblig'd to run the laſt Hazard rather than drop the Cauſe. However, to remove Objections, and ſmooth the Paſſage, if the Parliament ſhould ſtart at the Popes Juriſdiction, as if the Term of Obedience to the See of Rome imported Servitude and Diminution of civil Rights. To this her Highneſs may anſwer, that his Holyneſs's Terms are not ſo unreaſonable, neither will ſhe ever conſent to ſuch an Encroachment. And that for the Cardinal he would never charge himſelf with a Commiſſion to enſlave his Country: On the contrary, he ſeems not to queſtion, but that the Popes Authority would be manag'd with that Temper and Reſerve, that not only England, but other Places in Chriſtendom would find their Account in the Preſident, and be much better for its being reſtor'd. (c)

Notwithſtanding the Queens good Opinion of the Cardinal, ſhe did not govern her Affairs wholly by his Advice: She was convinc'd by Gardiner, the reconciling the Kingdom to the See of Rome was puſh'd too faſt by the Cardinal, and that the Marriage with Spain ought to be firſt diſpatch'd: The Emperor concurr'd with theſe meaſures, and thus Pool was ſtill detain'd in Flanders.

However, this Expedient did not wholly diſencumber the Buſineſs of the Match: The Houſe of Commons were ſomewhat alarm'd at this Alliance with the Emperor: They were apprehenſive the Queens marrying with Philip might put the Adminiſtration into foreign Hands, and ſit hard upon the Liberties of the Subject. In fine, they ſent their Speaker with Twenty of their Members to addreſs the Queen againſt marrying a Stranger. The Court perceiv'd the lower Houſe was likely to prove unmanageable unleſs they were anſwer'd in their Requeſt; and therefore on the Sixth of December the Parliament was diſſolv'd. And now Gardiner ſent to the Emperor to acquaint him, that unleſs extraordinary Conditions were offer'd by his Majeſty, the Marriage would be impracticable. He likewiſe ſuggeſted that without great Remittances of Mony to gain the Principal Nobility, and other leading Men, the next Parliament would prove no leſs troubleſome than the laſt: And that the Queen muſt lay aſide all Thoughts of engaging with his Son. The Emperor and Philip reſolv'd to give Satiſfaction, and come up to the Terms of the Engliſh Court. And in the Firſt Place the Emperor borrow'd Four Hundred Thouſand Pounds Sterling, and promiſ'd to ſend it over to be be diſpoſ'd of as Gardiner and his Ambaſſador ſhould think fit. The Emperor did not part with this Sum 'till Philip had entred into Security for the repaying the Mony upon his Marriage with the Queen. It ſeems the ſending this Mony into England was made no Secret by the Emperor, but declared to ſome Towns in Germany to ſtop their Importunities in demanding what they had lent. (d) The Credit of this Story depends upon the Information of the Engliſh at Straſburg: Some of theſe Refugees printed a Narrative of this matter, and ſent it into England. The Book is couch'd in the Form of an Addreſs to the Queen, Nobility, and Commons. It mentions the Commons Addreſs againſt the Marriage, and the Emperors owning his lending his Son Four Hundred Thouſand Pounds for the purpoſe already related. The Deſign of this Mony was, as 'tis ſaid, to ſway the Elections, and bribe the Members of Parliament. This Straſburg Narrative likewiſe complains of great Partialities in the Court of Chancery, and that none could have common Juſtice but thoſe who came into the Spaniſh Meaſures. This Book, tho' commended for Gravity and Simplicity of Style, was none of

of the happieſt Performances: To ſpeak plainly, 'tis little better than a Libel upon the Adminiſtration, diſcovers a Diſaffection to the Government, and does not altogether become the Character of thoſe who retir'd from Perſecution, and ſuffer'd upon the Score of Conſcience. But 'tis to be hoped not many of the Engliſh Exiles were concern'd in this matter.

To go back a little, it has been already obſerv'd, Sir James Hales one of the Judges of the Common Pleas bore up againſt the Menaces of the Duke of Northumberland, and very bravely refus'd ſubſcribing the late King's Will for diſinheriting his Siſters. But this Service was not well conſider'd in the preſent Reign. His acting againſt the Queens Inclination in matters of Religion, wiped out his Merit, and brought him under her Diſpleaſure. He was continued in his Commiſſion at firſt, but being ſo hardy as to give the Reformation Statutes of Henry the Eighth, and Edward the Sixth, in Charge upon the Bench, he was committed to the King's Bench, from whence he was afterwards remov'd to the Counter, and thence to the Fleet. This was a great Hardſhip conſidering thoſe Statutes were then unrepeal'd. He was ſeiz'd with a deep Melancholly in Priſon, and endeavour'd to deſtroy himſelf with a Penknife. This Accident was prevented by People coming into the Room, and the Judge had his Diſcharge: But afterwards his Diſcontent returning, he threw himſelf into a River, and was drowned. (e)

While the Parliament ſate, Archbiſhop Cranmer, the Lady Jane Grey, the Lord Guilford her Husband, and Lord Ambroſe Dudley, were arraign'd at Guildhall, and brought in guilty of Treaſon. (f) They were tryed for levying War againſt the Queen, and conſpiring to ſet up an Uſurper. Cranmer before Judgment was given, pleaded he had not conſented to exclude the Queen, till the Judges and other common Lawyers led the way. And thus he ſubmitted with the reſt to the Queens Mercy.

Archbiſhop Cranmer the Lady Jane, &c. tried for Treaſon.

The Archbiſhop lying under this Sentence, his See is ſuppos'd to have been void in Law: For how can he that has no Right to his Life, have any to a ſpiritual Juriſdiction? However, 'tis ſaid the Court reſolv'd he ſhould ſtill be eſteem'd Archbiſhop, till he was ſolemnly degraded according to the Canon Law. So all that follow'd on this Attainder was a Sequeſtration of the Fruits of the Archbiſhoprick. (g)

(g) Biſhop Burnet pt. 2*d. page* 257.

But here our Learned Hiſtorian writes wide of matter of Fact. For immediately after Cranmers Attainder, his See was declar'd void, and the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury manag'd the Spiritual Juriſdiction as in other Caſes of Vacancy. He was attainted about the middle of November, and on the Tenth of December following the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury gave out Commiſſions to ſeveral Perſons to exerciſe Archiepiſcopal Juriſdiction in their Names, and by their Authority. The Chapter continued poſſeſs'd of this Juriſdiction till the Publication of Cardinal Pools Bulls of Proviſion to the Archbiſhoprick; that is to the beginning of the year 1556. During this time the Chapter gave Commiſſions to the reſpective Officers and Judges of the Courts belonging to the Archbiſhoprick: They had likewiſe the Spiritual Juriſdiction of all vacant Biſhopricks, gave Inſtitution to Benefices, and Commiſſions for the Conſecration of Biſhops. All theſe Acts of Metropolitical Juriſdiction are entred upon a particular Regiſter, which runs thus in the Title.

The Archbiſhoprick vacant upon his Attainder.

The Queen at laſt pardon'd him the Treaſon, but reſolv'd to take away his Life another way, as will appear afterwards.

I ſhall now proceed to the Hiſtory of the Convocation, which had a Royal Summons to meet on the Sixth of October. They met at St. Pauls London. The Sermon was preach'd by Harpsfield Bonners Chaplain: His Text was, take heed therefore unto your ſelves, and to all the Flock over which the Holy Ghoſt has made you Overſeers. * From the Words he took occaſion to ſpeak to Three Propoſitions. His firſt Head was, how well St. Paul practis'd his own Doctrine. Secondly, how much the late Clergy manag'd wide of the Apoſtles Exhortation, and Thirdly, he pointed out the Methods for the Diſcharge of what was commanded in the Text. Under the Second Head he run out into a violent Invective againſt the Management of the Clergy in the late Reign. That they miſbehav'd themſelves to a remarkable Degree, both with Reſpect to Government and private Life. He charg'd them with Inſobriety and Epicuriſm, with flattering great Men, and ſervile Applications to the Court: With Omiſſions in Hoſpitality and Regard to the Poor, with boaſting their great Knowledge in the Scriptures, and preſuming to compare themſelves with the moſt eminent Fathers; whereas ſome of them mounted the Pulpit from the Shop, and were ſcarcely Grammar high. Then as to the Care of their Flocks he ſaid, they had miſerably miſmanag'd: They had made a Breach in the Unity of the Church, poiſon'd the Kingdom with Heterodoxy, and miſled great Numbers to endleſs Perdition. In ſhort, he omitted nothing which might diſcover a paſſionate and unfriendly Temper, and carried his Satyr to the laſt Degree of Roughneſs and Reproach. (i)

To go on with the Convocation, Dr. Weſton Dean of Weſtminſter being choſen Prolocutor, acquainted the lower Houſe, that 'twas the Queens Pleaſure they ſhould enter upon the Debate of ſome Controverſial Points; and form their Reſolutions into Canons, which ſhould afterwards be ratified by the Royal Aſſent. From hence he proceeded to touch upon the Catechiſm publiſh'd in the late Reign under the Name of the Convocation. He denied the Authority in the Title, and charg'd the Book with falſe Doctrine and Hereſy. How this Imputation was taken off has been already related. The Prolocutor gave the Houſe to underſtand that after Two Days Adjournment 'twould be proper to diſcourſe upon Two Points, and come to a Catholick Deciſion: The Queſtions to be diſcuſs'd were the Sacrament of the Altar, and Tranſubſtantiation. The Members expecting a Diſputation prepar'd themſelves accordingly. But at their next Meeting the Prolocutor exhibited Two Bills or Propoſitions for the Houſe to ſubſcribe: One of them aſſerted the natural Preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar: The other denied the late Catechiſms being ſet forth by the Aſſent of the Convocation. Both theſe Articles were ſubſcrib'd by the whole Houſe excepting Five. Thoſe who refus'd, were Philips Dean of Rocheſter, Haddon Dean of Exeter, Philpot Archdeacon of Wincheſter, Cheyney Archdeacon of Hereford, and Ailmer Archdeacon of Stow; what the Opinion of Four of them was may be ſeen in the Records. †

Archdeacon Philpot having offer'd ſomething already mention'd in Defence of the Authority of the Catechiſm, added, that to urge a Subſcription before the Matter was debated, and the Point clear'd, was contrary to Cuſtom and Reaſon: And that ſince there was ſo learned, and numerous an Appearance on one ſide of the Diſpute, and ſo few on the other; he deſir'd the upper Houſe might be mov'd to bring the Parties ſomething nearer to a Ballance, and that Biſhop Ridley and ſome other Divines who had a Share in drawing up the Catechiſm might be brought into the Houſe, and aſſiſt at the Conference. This Requeſt being propos'd to the Biſhops, they anſwer'd, 'twas not within their Power to grant that Liberty, in Regard the Perſons mention'd were ſome of them Priſoners. However, a Diſputation was order'd upon Monday following. When the Day came, there was a great Appearance of the Nobility, and other ſecular Men of Condition. The Prolocutor ask'd Haddon and Ailmer, whether they were willing to enter upon the Controverſy. Both of them refus'd to engage, unleſs thoſe Perſons they deſir'd to be brought in, were allow'd to aſſiſt. After this the Queſtion being put to Cheyney whether he was inclin'd to propoſe his Doubts concerning the Myſtery of Tranſubſtantiation, he anſwer'd yes, and urg'd his Objections againſt this Article. His Firſt Argument was drawn from St. Pauls, calling the Holy Euchariſt, Bread after Conſecration. (m) He cited a Teſtimony out of Origen, and another from Heſychius to the ſame purpoſe. He likewiſe argued from a famous Paſſage in Theodoret, where the conſecrated Elements are ſaid to continue in their former Nature and Subſtance. (n) I have had occaſion to ſpeak to this Teſtimony in the former Part of this Work, to which I refer the Reader.

(o) To proceed, the Prolocutor aſſign'd Dr. Moreman to anſwer Cheyneys Objections. To the Citation from the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, Moreman reply'd, that the Apoſtle call'd one of the Sacramental Elements Bread, becauſe it was Bread before Conſecration. This Reaſoning was foreign and faint. As to the Teſtimony of Theodoret, his Anſwer was ſtill worſe; he ſaid this Father meant nothing by Subſtance and Nature, but Shape and accidental Subſtance as this Divine calls it. Ailmer defended Cheyneys Citation, and argued from critical Learning, and the Force of Language, that Οὐσία could not be conſtrued to an Accident. Ailmer was ſupported by Philpot, who prov'd that unleſs the Word Subſtance was taken in the common Senſe, the Heretick in Theodoret would have the better of the Catholick, and that Fathers Argument conclude directly againſt himſelf. For by this Reaſoning the Heretick Eraniſtes might turn Theodorets Similitude upon him. Had Tranſubſtantiation been the Doctrine of that Age, Eraniſtes might have replied, that as after Conſecration the Subſtance of Bread is tranſubſtantiated into the natural Body of Chriſt, and nothing but the accidental Form of it remains; ſo after our Saviours Aſcenſion, his Humanity was abſorb'd in the Divine Nature, and turn'd into the Subſtance of the Deity. In ſhort Moreman was ſilenc'd with this Argument.

Philips Dean of Rocheſter came on next, and urg'd a remarkable Teſtimony from St. Auſtin. (p) This Father diſcourſing upon thoſe Words of our Saviour, but me you have not always, "obſerves that our Saviour ſpoke of his Bodily Preſence, for by his Grace, his Providence, and Divine Attributes, he is always preſent, and 'twas in this Senſe, that he promis'd his Diſciples he would be with them to the End of the World. But the Fleſh which the Word took upon him which was born of the Bleſſed Virgin, which was nail'd to the Croſs, which was buried in the Sepulchre, and ſhewn after the Reſurrection; this ſays our Saviour, you ſhall not have always with you. Chriſt is always preſent in his Deity, but touching the Preſence of his Fleſh, 'tis truly ſaid, you ſhall not always have me with you: For the Church had his Bodily Preſence a few Days, but now he is out of the reach of Senſe, and only apprehended by Faith. Dr. Watſon endeavour'd to take off this Anſwer by alledging another Teſtimony of St. Auſtin. "(q) Where this Father affirms, we have not Chriſt upon Earth now in the ſame manner, and mortal Condition, he appear'd in before his Paſſion. To this Philpot replied, that Watſon had not anſwer'd the Argument by this Counter Teſtimony; becauſe both in the Place above-mention'd, and a little after, this Father mentions only Two Ways or Manners of our Saviours Preſence; the one by his Providence and Divinity, the other in his Fleſh, or natural Body, and denies his being preſent to the Church in this latter Senſe: Therefore to aſſert a Third Corporeal, but inviſible Preſence in the Sacrament of the Altar, is to advance a Doctrine which St. Auſtin ſeems never to have thought on. After ſome ſquabbling and unintelligible Diſtinctions thrown in by the Prolocutor, the Dean of Rocheſter proceeded to argue from the Words of the Inſtitution, do this in Remembrance of me: And from that Text of St. Paul, we ſhew the Lord's Death till he comes: Philpot argues from theſe Two Places that Remembrance implies the Abſence of what is remembred; and particularly theſe Words, till he comes, plainly import that Chriſt's Body is not preſent. The Prolocutor attempted to prove that theſe Words 'till he come, did not infer the Abſence of Chriſt upon Earth. This he endeavour'd to make out by ſome Places in Scripture, where until was taken in a Senſe conſiſtent with this Interpretation. After this Dean Philips ask'd Moreman, whether our Saviour eat the Sacrament with his Diſciples at the Inſtitution: Moreman anſwering yes; the other put the Queſtion, whether he eat his own natural Body in the Senſe of Tranſubſtantiation or not? Moreman anſwering in the Affirmative, the Dean look'd on the Conceſſion as too great an Abſurdity to be farther conſider'd, and ſo ſate down.

St. Luke 22. v. 19. 1. Cor. 11. 26.

Chriſt affirm'd to eat his own Body at the Inſtitution of the Holy Euchariſt.

Philpot thought the Advantage might be carried farther, and offer'd to prove from Scripture that Chriſt did not eat his natural Body at the Inſtitution of the Holy Euchariſt. He argued thus. The receiving of Chriſt's Body has the Promiſe of Remiſſion of Sins annex'd. But Chriſt's eating the Sacrament had no Promiſe of Remiſſion of Sins: Therefore Chriſt did not eat his own Body in the Sacrament. Moreman denying the Major or Firſt Propoſition, Philpot cited the Words of the Inſtitution, which is given for you, which is ſhed for you for the Remiſſion of Sins. Moreman refuſing to own this Expreſſion, amounted to a Promiſe; Philpot quoted theſe Words of our Saviour in the Sixth of St. John, The Bread that I will give is my Fleſh, which I will give for the Life of the World. Moreman appearing embaraſs'd, Harpsfield endeavoured to diſengage him: He affirm'd the Promiſe of Remiſſion of Sins by receiving of the Sacrament was not applicable to Chriſt, but only to his Diſciples: And that this was clear from the Inſtitution, this is my Body which was given for you; for you, but not for my ſelf. Philpot layed hold of the Argument, and turn'd it upon Harpsfield: And from hence infer'd, that the Promiſe annex'd did not reach our Saviour, therefore our Saviour did not eat his own Body. The Prolocutor tried to put by the Force of this Reaſoning, by objecting it concluded too much: For ſays he by this way of arguing, 'twill follow that our Saviour was not baptiz'd, becauſe Remiſſion of Sins annex'd to Baptiſm, did not operate upon him. To this Philpot replied, that our Saviour let the Sacrament of Baptiſm paſs upon him, not for any Neceſſity of his own, but only to recommend the Adminiſtration of it in the Church; and that 'twas for the ſame Reaſon and no other, that he participated with his Diſciples in the Holy Euchariſt. (r)

This diſprov'd by Philpot.

Octob. 25.

Philpot was appointed to begin the Conference at the next Meeting of the Houſe. He intended to have open'd the Diſputation with a Latin Speech, to have ſtated the Queſtion, deliver'd his Opinion at large, and ſupported it with Proofs. But Weſton the Prolocutor ſuſpecting ſome ill Conſequence from this Method, broke through his own Order, refus'd Philpot the Liberty of making a Speech, and enjoin'd him to diſpute in Engliſh. This was ſomewhat a Surprize upon Philpot, who had drawn up his Arguments in Latin. However, he complied with Weſton's Appointment. Before he came cloſe to the Conteſt, he explain'd himſelf upon the Queſtion. And here he does not deny the Preſence of Chriſt in the Holy Euchariſt: He only denies that groſs carnal Senſe ſubſcrib'd by the Houſe: For the purpoſe, he denied that by Virtue of the Words of Conſecration pronounc'd by the Prieſt, the Sacramental Elements of Bread and Wine were tranſubſtantiated into Chriſt's natural Body: And that nothing but the Appearances or Accidents of Bread and Wine remain'd. He deſign'd to dilate farther upon this Head, but being interrupted, and preſs'd to argue in Form, he cited a Text from St. Matthew, and another from St. Luke, where the Women at our Saviours Sepulchre are told by the Angel, he is not here but is riſen, and ask'd, why they look'd for the Living amongſt the Dead? To theſe he added another remarkable Paſſage in St. John, where our Saviour ſpeaks to his Diſciples in theſe Words, I came forth from the Father, and am come into the World: Again I leave the World, and go to the Father. This coming and going away continues Philpot, was meant of our Saviours natural Body; from whence it follows it is not now in the World. But foreſeeing he ſhould be encounter'd with their cuſtomary Diſtinction of a viſible, and inviſible human Preſence, he endeavour'd to diſable it beforehand, by the Anſwer the Diſciples made our Saviour to the Words laſt mention'd: Now ſay they, ſpeakeſt thou plainly, and ſpeakeſt no Proverb. St. Cyril expounding upon this Text, affirms that our Saviour deliver'd himſelf without any manner of Ambiguity or Darkneſs of Expreſſion. Now if our Saviour when he told his Diſciples, I leave the World and go to the Father, ſpoke plainly, without any obſcure Reſerve or parabolical Diſguiſe, than that inviſible imperceptible Preſence of Chriſt's natural Body in the Sacrament of the Altar, is a plain Contradiction to our Saviours Affirmation, and by Conſequence ought not to be admitted.

To this Dr. Chadey return'd that the Texts cited by Philpot from St. Matthew and St. Luke, were only ſpoken to inform the Women our Saviours Body was not in the Grave, but had no manner of Reference to his Body either abſent or preſent, in the Holy Euchariſt. And that by the other Text in St. John, where our Saviour affirms his leaving the World, we are to underſtand nothing more than his Aſcenſion. To fortify this Expoſition he produc'd a Paſſage from St. Chryſoſtome. (s) This Father drawing ſomething of a Paralel between Elijah and our Saviour, obſerves a Diſparity in one Circumſtance: Elijah, ſays he, when taken up in the fiery Charriot left his Mantle behind him to his Diſciple Eliſha. But Jeſus Chriſt carried his Fleſh with him, and likewiſe left it behind him: From whence Chadſey infer'd, that Chriſt's natural Body, tho' viſibly aſcending into Heaven, remains notwithſtanding inviſibly in the Sacrament of the Altar. Philpot rejoin'd that ſuppoſing ſuppoſing St. Chryſoſtome's Teſtimony came up to his purpoſe, yet his way of diſputing was by no means ſatisfactory: Becauſe he fail'd in the force of his direct Anſwer, ſhifted from the Point, and oppos'd one Objection to another. However he undertook to prove, that St. Chryſoſtome's Authority, tho' not without a Colour, was foreign to the matter in Hand. The Prolocutor citing the Teſtimony in Latin and Engliſh, replied 'twas full and unanſwerable. Philpot, after ſome claſhing, between him and the Prolocutor, undertakes to make the Teſtimony unſerviceable. In the firſt Place he obſerves, that St. Chryſoſtome's ſaying, our Saviour left his Fleſh behind him at his Aſcenſion, may mean nothing more than that, he left his Diſciples, and other Members of the Church on Earth, at his going to Heaven. To this Senſe St. Paul ſpeaks very plainly, where he calls us Fleſh of his Fleſh, and Bone of his Bone. But being Apprehenſive this Conſtruction might ſeem ſomewhat ſtrein'd, he offers a more natural Solution of the difficulty from St. Chryſoſtome himſelf. This Father, a few Lines before the Teſtimony, cited by Chadſey, has theſe Words. That our Saviour after his Aſcenſion, left us his Sacraments, that is, his Fleſh in a Sacramental and Myſterious Repreſentation. And that our Saviour has left his Church, his Myſtical Fleſh or Body, both in the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and that of the Lord's Supper. For as to the firſt, St. Paul aſſures us, that as many of us, as have been Baptiz'd into Chriſt, have put on Chriſt.

Epheſ. 5.

Gal. 3. v. 27.

The diſarming this Teſtimony of St. Chryſoſtome was a conſiderable Blow. The Prolocutor therefore to prevent Philpot's breaking them farther, order'd him to give over. Philpot thinking himſelf not well us'd, told him he had not yet gone thro' one Argument, and that he had Eleven more to urge. The Prolocutor commanded him to be ſilent at preſent, and threatned to ſend him to Priſon, upon which the other acquieſc'd. From hence it appears, the Convocation pretended to a Power of impriſoning their Members, no leſs than the Parliament.

After this Ailmer ſtood up, and reinforc'd the Argument he had formerly undertaken: And offer'd to prove that Ουσία in the Paſſage of Theodoret abovementioned, muſt of neceſſity be interpreted to Subſtance, in contradiſtinction to Accidents. Moreman, who appear'd againſt Ailmer, was, it ſeems, ſo much intangl'd with his Reaſons, that he deſir'd a Days time to conſider them, and return his Anſwer. Haddon, being call'd on to Diſpute next, went on with Ailmer's Argument, and reaſon'd ſo cloſely, that Dr. Watſon his Adverſary being hard preſs'd, queſtion'd the Latin Tranſlation, which Haddon juſtified, by reading the Original in Greek.

Perne argued next againſt Tranſubſtantiation, and offer'd ſeveral Things to corroborate what had been urg'd by Ailmer and Haddon. For this he was check'd by the Prolocutor, becauſe he had Subſcrib'd the contrary Opinion with the reſt of the Houſe. Upon this, Ailmer tax'd the Prolocutor with Breach of Promiſe. For Weſton, it ſeems had engag'd that every Member ſhould have the liberty of declaring his Mind, and not be ſilenc'd upon the Score of their Subſcriptions: Beſides, as Ailmer alledg'd, 'twas reaſonable every Man ſhould have the Freedom to recollect himſelf, to ſpeak his Conſcience, and alter his Opinion upon farther Diſcovery. And thus Night coming on the Houſe roſe. At parting Weſton commended them for their Learning and Abilities, but let them know withal, the Deciſions of Holy Church muſt be receiv'd, and over-rule all Diſputes of this Nature.

The Fifth Day of the Conference, Haddon having leave to go on with his Argument, endeavor'd to diſprove Tranſubſtantiation, from the Paſſage in Theodoret already related. Watſon and he, having diſputed ſometime about the meaning of the Word Ουσία or ſubſtance, Haddon ask'd him when the Bread and Wine became Symbols, before Conſecration or after? Watſon anſwer'd after; upon which Haddon form'd his Syllogiſm thus: Theodoret affirms that the Sacramental Elements remain in the ſame Nature and Subſtance after they were Symbols, which they were before they were Symbols, but they were Bread and Wine before, therefore they are ſo after. Watſon being overſet with the Argument, excepted againſt the Authority, and called Theodoret a Neſtorian.

Cheyney argues againſt the Corporal Preſence, from Irenæus and Heſychius.

Cheyney having Subſcrib'd the real Preſence, was expected a more inoffenſive manager, and appointed to argue next. But it ſeems the Prolocutor was miſtaken in him; for he urg'd a Text from Irenæus ſomething hard to deal with: The Paſſage ſtands thus. The Cup and the Bread broken, are made the Euchariſt of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, by which our Bodies are nouriſh'd and ſupported. His Inference was, that if the Euchariſt nouriſhes our Bodies, then there is ſome Subſtance remaining, beſides our Saviours Body. (t) To this Watſon and Morgan anſwer'd, that Ex quibus, or by which, in this Father, is to be refer'd to the immediate Antecedent, the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and not to the remoter one of the Cup and Bread. To this Cheyney replied, that thoſe who hold Tranſubſtantiation wont grant that the Body and Blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar, nouriſhes our Bodies in a Phyſical way, like other Diet, or for Inſtance, like unconſecrated Bread and Wine. After this, Cheyney urg'd a Teſtimony from Heſychius concerning the Cuſtom of burning the Symbols: Watſon anſwer'd he thought it a Queſtion not fit to be examin'd: However, Cheyney would puſh the Enquiry, and ask'd him from whence the Aſhes of the conſecrated Symbols were produc'd? No Man would be ſo hardy as to ſay, they were the remains of the Body of Chriſt. They muſt therefore anſwer from the Accidents of the Symbols, or the conſecrated Bread: But then the difficulty returns, for to ſpeak in the Terms of their own Philoſophy, which way can the ſubſtance of Aſhes emerge out of Accidents?

The Omnipotency of God no ſufficient Argument in this Caſe.

This difficulty ſeeming too big for Watſon and Morgan, Harpsfield endeavor'd to bring them off: He argued from God's Omnipotency, and the ſhortneſs of human Underſtandings, eſpecially with reſpect to religious Myſteries: That in ſuch Caſes 'twas our Duty to reſign, and not truſt our Senſes. To make this reaſoning bear, he reported a Paſſage in St. Cyprian, of a Woman that ſaw the Hoſt burning in her Cabinet. Now that which burnt there, ſays he, Burns in your Inſtance, and turns to Aſhes. But Cheyney preſs'd him with this Dilemma, that what was Burnt, muſt be either the ſubſtance of Bread, or the ſubſtance of our Saviour's Body: To grant the firſt, was to give up the Cauſe; And they were not ſo hardy as to affirm the latter. And therefore they anſwer'd no farther than that 'twas a Miracle: At which Cheyney ſmil'd, and ſaid, then he'd go no farther.

(t) Iræneus lib. v.

After this the Prolocutor Weſton appeal'd to the Company, whether Philpot and his Party had receiv'd a ſufficient Anſwer? Some few cried Yes, but the far greateſt Majority ſhouted No. Weſton was diſconcerted to find the Noiſe againſt him, and replied, 'twas not his Intention to aſk the judgment of the Illiterate Multitude, but only of the Houſe. Then turning to Haddon and the other Five, he aſk'd them whether they were contented to reſpond Three Days in their turn. Haddon, Cheyney, and Ailmer refus'd. But Philpot accepted the Conditions, and reſolv'd to venture the Conteſt, tho' he ſhould happen to ſtand ſingle againſt them all. The Prolocutor outrag'd him for his Reſolution, and told him he was fit to be ſent to Bedlam. Archdeacon Philpot return'd the Language, and complain'd of Partiality and coarſe Uſage. The Prolocutor told the Company that Haddon, and the reſt, had been allow'd to make their Oppoſition Three Days, upon a Promiſe to give the ſame Liberty to the other Party, and that now they declin'd to make good their Word. To this Ailmer replied, they had never engag'd to go thro' the Forms of a Diſputation, but only to give in their Reaſons why they could not Subſcribe with the other Members. That this had been partly done already, and that they were prepar'd to go on farther. But 'till their own Arguments were diſprov'd, 'twas not fair to oblige them to ſtand an Oppoſition. Beſides, 'twas plain the Houſe was come to a Deciſion againſt them, and therefore diſputing would be to no purpoſe.

October 30.

Philpot argues againſt Tranſubſtantiation from the property of Humane Bodies.

However, ſince Philpot had undertaken to go on with the Controverſy, there was another Day aſſign'd. And now Philpot complain'd of Interruption the laſt time he ſpoke, and deſir'd to go on with his former Argument. This being granted, he argued againſt Tranſubſtantiation from the property of human Bodies. He affirm'd 'twas Inconſiſtent with the nature of a Body to be as it were Uncircumſcrib'd and Omnipreſent, to be in Earth and in Heaven, to be abſent and preſent, at the ſame Time. In Proof of this, which one would think was plain enough of it ſelf, Philpot produc'd a Paſſage of Vigilius. Morgan replied this was no Scripture: Upon which Philpot alledg'd the Text, where our Saviour is ſaid to be like to us in all Things except Sin. This Teſtimony not giving Satiſfaction, he alledg'd another from St. Peter's Sermon, where the Apoſtle ſpeaking of our Saviour, affirms, the Heavens muſt receive him, until the Times of Reſtitution of all Things. Theſe Words being ſpoken of Chriſt's Humanity, 'twill follow continues Philpot, that if the Heavens are to receive him 'till the general Reſtitution, he can't be corporally preſent on Earth in the Sacrament. To defend himſelf from this Inference, Harpſfield retired again to God's Omnipotency. Philpot rejoin'd, this Attribute would not relieve us, unleſs we had an Authority from Scripture to apply it to the preſent Caſe: But the Scripture has no where told us that Chriſt's natural Body is preſent both in Heaven, and the Holy Euchariſt. Upon this, the Prolocutor aſk'd him, if he intended to confine the divine Attributes, and Impriſon our Saviour in Heaven. After ſome ſquabbling upon the meaning of the Word Oportet, or muſt in the Text laſt mention'd, and that this Term did not always imply a neceſſity; after this Morgan aſk'd Philpot, whether he would be concluded by the Univerſal Church, or not? Philpot anſwer'd Yes, provided 'twas the true Catholick Church. And here he deſir'd Morgan to explain his Notion of the true Church. Morgan told him 'twas diſpers'd thro' the whole World. Philpot anſwer'd, his Definition was too looſe and imperfect. And that for his part he own'd no Church, excepting that which ſtands upon a Baſis of holy Scripture, and is Built upon the Foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets.

Acts 3. v. 21.

Epheſ. 2. v. 20.

Whether the Church was before the Scriptures?

Moreman put the Queſtion, whether the Scripture was before the Church? Philpot anſwering in the Affirmative, Moreman prov'd the Chriſtian Church prior to the Scriptures of the New Teſtament. The Chriſtian Church, he ſaid, commenc'd with our Saviour, or at leaſt at his Reſurrection: But St. Matthew the firſt Evangeliſt, did not write his Goſpel, 'till about Twelve Years after our Saviour's Aſcenſion; from whence it muſt follow, the Church was before the Scripture. Philpot denied the Inference, and pretended a Fallacy in the Argument: He ſaid Moreman took the Scripture in too narrow a Senſe, and that it ought not to be confin'd to Paper and Ink, or Words form'd in Letters. For whatever was dictated by the Spirit of God, was to be accounted Scripture, tho' 'twas only recorded in the Minds, or deliver'd by the Mouths of holy Men. Thus he ſaid the Salutation of the Angel was Scripture before 'twas Written. Here Philpot ſeems ſhort, and embarraſs'd in his Anſwer, and therefore Moreman had reaſon not to be ſatisfied with it.

The Convocation Diſſolv'd.

At the riſing of the Houſe the Prolocutor, to give a colour of fair dealing, told Philpot, that provided he would appear in the Habit of the Houſe, and not ſpeak but upon his Order, he might have the Liberty of coming thither. Philpot ſaid he had rather be abſent than come upon thoſe Terms.

The Convocation continued to Sit, 'till the Thirteenth of December, which was a Week after the Diſſolution of the Parliament, at which Time the Queen directed a Writ to Bonner, to Diſſolve the Aſſembly. (u)

The Articles of the Marriage between the Queen and King Philip.

The beginning of the next Month the Emperors Ambaſſadors, Count Egmont, Count Horn, and ſome others, arriv'd at London for concluding the Match. This Treaty was ſettled upon the Articles following. Philip was to aſſume the Titles of the Engliſh Dominions, and be admitted into Partnerſhip of the Government, but with this Proviſo, that none of the Privileges or Cuſtoms of the Country ſhould be diſturb'd, and that the diſpoſal of all Offices of Truſt, Profit, or Honour, in Church and State, ſhould be lodg'd wholly in the Queen. That the Queen ſhould carry the Title of all the Countries where Philip was Sovereign, and thoſe which ſhould afterwards make part of his Dominions. And in Caſe her Majeſty ſurviv'd King Philip, a Joynture of Sixty Thouſand Pounds Sterling per Annum was ſettled, as had formerly been aſſign'd the Lady Margaret, Siſter to King Edward the Fourth, and Wife to Charles Duke of Burgundy. Farther; 'twas agreed that the Iſſue of this Marriage, ſhould Succeed to all the Queen's Dominions, and likewiſe to the Seventeen Provinces in the low Countries, and to all the Emperor's Dominions in Burgundy. And that Charles, Philip's Son, by his firſt Marriage, ſhould Succeed to all the other Kingdoms and Principalities in Italy, and Spain. That provided the Queen ſhould have none but Iſſue Female by Philip, that then the Eldeſt Daughter ſhould Succeed to all the Netherlands, upon upon Condition that by the Conſent of her Brother Charles, (Philip's Son by Mary of Portugal, his firſt Wife) ſhe made Choice of a Huſband out of England, or the low Countries. But in Caſe ſhe Married without her Brother's Conſent, her Right ſhould be barr'd to the Netherlands, which in that Caſe ſhould deſcend to Charles and his Heirs: However, both this Princeſs, and her Siſters, if ſhe had any, ſhould have a Dower aſſign'd them, proportionable to their Quality, and the Cuſtom of the reſpective Countries. And if it ſhould happen, that Charles ſhould Die without Heirs, or his Line fail afterwards, that then all the Dominions of the Netherlands, Spain, and Italy, ſhould deſcend upon the Heir of this Marriage, tho' Female only; with this Limitation, that no Laws, Privilege, or Uſage, of any of thoſe Countries, ſhould be ſet aſide, or alter'd. And laſtly, that there ſhould be a perpetual, and inviolable League, and Friendſhip, between the Emperor, Philip, and their Heirs, the Queen, and her Heirs, and each of their Countries and Dominions: And that the late Alliance concluded at Weſtminſter, in the Year 1542, and that Four Years afterwards at Utrecht, ſhould be Confirm'd. Pretences to draw the People into Rebellion.

This Treaty, as the Reader may perceive, was made with conſiderable Advantage to the Engliſh Crown. The Articles were drawn by Gardiner, who was a great Stateſman, and had been long practis'd in Buſineſs of this Nature. However, notwithſtanding the matter was dextrouſly manag'd, and every thing guarded beyond Exception, yet when the Alliance was Publiſh'd, a great many Mal-contents took Occaſion to Cenſure the Proceedings, and Arraign the Government. They gave out that now Foreigners were to be their Maſters: That the Spaniards were to diſpoſe of the Adminiſtration: That the old Conſtitution would be broken, the Nation made a Province, and treated like a Conquer'd Country.

Jan. 14. 155¾.

To check this dangerous Calumny, 'twas thought fit the Lord Chancellor ſhould make a report of the Articles in the Preſence Chamber, before the Lords, and other Perſons of Condition, belonging to the Court; and that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen ſhould be ſent for upon this Occaſion: All which was done accordingly. The Revolt headed by the Duke of Suffolk, and Wyat.

Notwithſtanding this Precaution, the Fears and Jealouſies kept on. The diſaffected Party was believ'd, and the People continued uneaſy. To ſurprize the unwary, and heat them to a Rebellion, 'twas ſuggeſted Religion was overturn'd, and that the Queen had not kept her Word with the Suffolk Gentlemen. That the Spaniſh Match would bring Slavery along with it, cruſh their Civil Liberties, and lay them under the Uſurpations of the Court of Rome. Some took the Freedom to Compaſſionate the Lady Jane's Misfortune, to lament her being Dethron'd, and Condemn'd to ſuffer as a Traitor. Thus Religion and Property, the uſual Cant to cheat the People, were made the Pretences by the chief Incendiaries. They had variety of Motives to practiſe on: Sir Thomas Wyat a Kentiſh Gentleman, was, as far as it appears, one of the firſt, and moſt forward, in concerting the Inſurrection. The Duke of Suffolk was engag'd upon a proſpect of recovering the Crown for his Daughter. The Carews, and other Devonſhire Gentlemen were drawn in, by an Expectation of the Lady Elizabeth's Marrying the Lord Courtney: And that this Princeſs, who was well affected to the Reformation, ſhould be Proclaim'd Queen. In ſhort, the Infection ſpread, and the Government had been in great danger, had not ſome of them diſcover'd themſelves too early, and gone off their Meaſures. For 'twas agreed by the Heads of the Revolt, that they ſhould not appear in the Field, 'till King Philip's Arrival: That their waiting this Opportunity, would give a good Complexion to the Enterprize: That their taking Arms would be interpreted only a Defence of their Country againſt Foreigners, and not look like ſuch a direct defiance of the Government. In the mean time, they were only to work as it were under Ground, to provide for the Field, and ſtrengthen their Party. But Sir Peter Carew, thinking delays might be dangerous, over-run theſe Orders, and began to Levy Men privately in Cornwall. This being diſcover'd, and having no ſtand to repair to, he Embark'd, and made his Eſcape into France. He was afterwards taken at Bruſſels, and brought over into England, but did not Suffer. Sir John Cheek was taken with him, put on Board, and Impriſon'd in the Tower, where it ſeems his Fears prevail'd over his Conſcience, and reconcil'd him to the Church of Rome. This Failure in Reſolution ſate heavy upon his Spirits, affected his Health, and brought him to his End not long after. To return;

Wyat finding the Deſign had taken Air, and that Courage and Reſiſtance was the beſt Security, prevail'd with the Kentiſh Men to Riſe. To bring them to his Purpoſe, he made uſe of the Arguments commonly inſiſted upon by Rebels: That the Queen was manag'd by evil Counſellors: That ſhe had done, and was ſtill doing, a great many things deſtructive to the Common-wealth. That 'twas the Buſineſs of true Engliſhmen, to remove this dangerous Miniſtry; and put Men of Integrity, and publick Spirit, in their room. But above all, they were to exert themſelves, to break the Marriage for the Reaſons above-mention'd. That by this Means the Intereſt of the Nation would be ſecur'd, and the Queen reſcued from Misfortune againſt her Will. This was the Colour, but the bottom of the deſign, was dethroning the Queen, and ſetting up the Lady Jane, as might be eaſily diſcover'd, by the Duke of Suffolk's raiſing Men in Warwickſhire. Wyat Encamps at Rocheſter.

The Queen being now inform'd, of their riſing in Kent, order'd the Duke of Norfolk to March againſt them, with a ſmall Body conſiſting moſtly of the Guards. The next Day Five Hundred Men were levyed in London, put on Board, and fell down to Graveſend, where they were to joyn the other Forces. The Duke thus reinforc'd, advanc'd to Rocheſter, where Wyat was Encamp'd: When his Troops came near the Bridge, they found it defended with ſeveral Pieces of Cannon. The Duke notwithſtanding mov'd, and order'd the Herald to Read the Queen's Proclamation: 'Twas to Command the Rebels to lay down their Arms, with Promiſe of Pardon. Wyats Men anſwer'd, they were not Conſcious of doing any thing againſt the Queen, which would make them ſtand in need of a Pardon. But Sir George Harper pretending himſelf touch'd with the Senſe of a Criminal Engagement, rode towards the Duke of Norfolk, as if he intended to quit the Party. But his Deſign was to tamper with Brett, who Commanded the Londoners. He ſucceeded in his Buſineſs, and manag'd ſo dexterouſly, Captain Brett, and the Londoners, deſert to him.

dexterouſly, that before they came up with the Enemy, Brett drew his Sword, and turning to his Men, told them, they would do well to conſider what they went about. Are we not going, ſays he, to Attack our Country Men, and Relations. “ Men that have taken the Field to preſerve the Kingdom, and protect our Liberties, againſt the Pride and Barbarity of the Spaniards? You that have a Mind to be Slaves, may keep with your General Norfolk. As for my ſelf, I had rather Die, then help to Conquer for Foreigners: I am therefore reſolv'd to venture my Life, for my Country, and follow Sir Thomas Wyat's Fortune, not queſtioning many of you are of the ſame Mind. His Regiment wanted no farther Encouragement to make them Deſert: They immediately cry'd a Wyat, and began to turn their Cannon upon the Queen's Troops in the Rear, the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Arundel, and Sir Henry Jerningham Captain of the Guards, were mightily Surpriz'd at this turn, and retir'd with Precipitation. But Wyat, as it had been concerted, coming up immediately with his Horſe, ſtop'd the reſt from retreating with their General, and Seiz'd the Train of Artillery, with all the Ammunition and Baggage. After this he made a Speech to the Queen's Forces, to take Service under him, with Liberty however to return to the Court. By thoſe who were thus diſpos'd, he deſir'd the Queen might be acquainted, that himſelf and his Adherents, had not taken Arms to diſtreſs their Sovereign, but only to protect the Conſtitution againſt the Invaſion of Foreigners. Theſe ſpecious Pretences were not without their Effect: And thus Wyat being reinforc'd by the deſertion of the greateſt Part of the Queen's Troops, made directly for London.

The Duke of Suffolk attempts to raiſe Warwickſhire, but miſcarries.

When Wyat's Inſurrection broke out in Kent, the Duke of Suffolk with his Two Brothers, Lord John, and Lord Leonard Grey, rode down into Warwickſhire, and tryed to raiſe the Country againſt the Spaniard: But theſe Pretences being too weak to bring on a Revolt, and the Earl of Huntington coming againſt him, with a Body of Horſe, the Duke thought it beſt to provide for his Eſcape. Upon this he diſtributed his Mony amongſt his Men, order'd them to diſperſe, and ſhift for themſelves, and going off alone, abſconded at one of his Keepers, who promis'd to Conceal him: But this Man, either for fear, or Mony, as 'tis moſt probable, diſcover'd him to the Earl of Huntington. Being thus Seiz'd he was guarded to London, with Three Hundred Horſe, and committed to the Tower.

February 11.

After the deſertion of Brett and his Men, the Inſurrection had a formidable Appearance.

The Queen's Speech at Guild-hall.

The Queen therefore being Solicitous to keep the City firm, went to Guild-hall, and made a Speech to the Lord Mayor, the Aldermen, and Common Council. And here ſhe endeavor'd to make them ſenſible, “ that Wyat's taking Arms upon pretence of hindring the Match with the Prince of Spain, was only a Colour for his Treaſon, and guilding the Pill to make the Poiſon go down the better. That now by the deſerting of ſome of her Troops, he was grown ſo extravagantly Inſolent, as not only to inſiſt upon breaking her Marriage, but to demand the appointing her Guards, diſplacing her Miniſtry, and puniſhing her Privy Council at Pleaſure. As to her Marriage, ſhe had made no Step in that Affair, without the Advice of the Nobility. She had lived Single the beſt Part of her Life, and was very willing to continue in that State, provided 'twas thought ſerviceable to the Publick. She hop'd therefore, that ſince they had all acknowledg'd her Title, they would ſhew themſelves Loyal Subjects, and aſſiſt her againſt Treaſon, and Rebellion.

The City giving Signs of Duty, the Queen rais'd Five Hundred Men, and poſted them at the Bridge. Two Days after, Wyat March'd into Southwark with Three, or as ſome ſay, with Four Thouſand Men. He had a ſtrong Expectation of being joyn'd by a great Party there, and carrying his Point without farther Conteſt. But when he came to the Bridge, he found it drawn up, and a Body of Men in Arms to oppoſe his Paſſage. He ſtayed notwithſtanding Two Days in Southwark, hoping his Friends in the City might exert themſelves, and overcome the difficulty: But finding himſelf diſappointed, he March'd to Kingſton, Ten Miles from London up the River. Here the Bridge was likewiſe broken, but ſo negligently, that in a few Hours he repair'd it, and paſs'd over his Men. And now concluding the Succeſs of the Attempt, would depend upon the ſpeed of his March, he reſolv'd to come for London, without making the leaſt Halt, to refreſh his Men. By this Expedition, he expected to reach the Town before Day, and ſurprize the Queen. Which had happen'd accordingly, for it ſeems the Court had ſent out no Scouts to give warning of the Approach of the Enemy.

February 3.

Wyat Marches to London.

But Providence, which commonly, (tho' not always) diſappoints rebellious Practiſes, threw an Obſtacle in the Way. It happen'd that the Carriage of one of the Cannon brake, about Six Miles from Town. Wyat was ſo far Infatuated, as to ſpend ſeveral Hours in mending it. Thus the main Opportunity was loſt, and the Time Concerted with his Friends in the City, not kept. Captain Vaughan, and other Officers, adviſ'd him to be punctual to his Appointment, to March on, and leave the Field-Piece behind him. Harper above-mention'd, finding him Obſtinate, quitted him, came to Court, and diſcover'd his Meaſures. Stow reports that Poinet, Biſhop of Wincheſter, was in Wyat's Army, and encourag'd the Enterprize: But that when he perceiv'd Wyat was likely to miſcarry, by trifling about mending the Carriage, that the Conſpiracy began to break, and the Men ſlip from their Colours; finding their Affairs go backward, he adviſ'd Brett, and ſome others to look to themſelves: And thus taking leave of his Friends, with Promiſe to Pray for their Succeſs, he Embark'd for Germany. (z)

Loſes Time.

The News of Wyat's being ſo near, alarm'd the Court extremely. The Queen order'd the raiſing what Forces could be gotten together on a ſudden, and gave the Command of them to the Earl of Pembroke. Wyat having notice of this Preparation, and that they were likely to come to Blows, came on by ſlow Marches, to keep his Men in the better Condition for Action. And thus 'twas almoſt Noon before he entred the Suburbs. The Earl of Pembroke Skirmiſh'd with him near St. James's, and Sir John Gage Lord Chamberlain, with a Body of the Guards at Charing-croſs: But being Apprehenſive the Earl of Pembroke had gone in to the Enemy, Gage's Men were Seiz'd with a Pannick, and retir'd to the Court in great Confuſion. Notwithſtanding this Suſpicion, the Earl of Pembroke broke acquitted himſelf honourably, hung upon the Rebels Rear, and cut off a great many. However, Wyat continuing his March through the Strand and Fleetſtreet, came up to Ludgate. As they mov'd, they cried God ſave the Queen, and told the People ſhe had granted them all their Demands. Ludgate being ſhut againſt them, Wyat call'd out he was there, and deſir'd Entrance. But thoſe within returning hard Language, and being in no Condition to force the Gate, he retreated with his Men towards Temple-bar, where perceiving himſelf almoſt inclos'd by the Earl of Pembroke, he ſurrendred to Sir Maurice Berkley, who carried him to the Council, from whence he was ſent to the Tower. Wyats Men when they ſaw their General ſurrender, threw down their Arms, and were many of them taken and impriſon'd. The Lady Jane and the Lord Guilford executed.

Fox.

Her Speech upon the Scaffold.

The Duke of Suffolk's concerting this Rebellion with Wyat, prov'd fatal to his Daughter the Lady Jane. She acquainted him in a Letter, ſhe was not inſenſible he had ſhorten'd her Life. Before this laſt Revolt, the Queen ſeem'd diſpos'd to deal gently with this Lady: For after ſhe was found guilty of High Treaſon, ſhe had the Liberty of the Parade in the Tower, and of walking in the Queens Garden. But now 'twas thought neceſſary to proceed to Extremities, and that the Queen could not be ſafe as long as the other was living. This being reſolv'd, Dr. Fecknam was ſent to her, to give her notice ſhe muſt die, and offer'd to reconcile her to the Roman Catholick Religion: She receiv'd the Firſt Part of this Meſſage with great Temper and Unconcernedneſs: But as to the other, ſhe ſaid ſhe had no Leiſure to enter upon Controverſy, but ſhould ſpend the little Time ſhe had, in preparing for Eternity. Fecknam believing ſhe was willing to get more Time, went to the Queen and procur'd a Reprieve for Three Days. When he acquainted her with it, he deſir'd ſhe would hear him upon the Subject of Religion. She told him he miſtook her Meaning, that ſhe was by no means fond of living longer, and never intended his moving the Queen to reſpite her Execution. After this, they engag'd in a Diſpute concerning Juſtification by Faith, the Number of the Sacraments, Tranſubſtantiation, Communion in one Kind, and the Authority of the Church: Upon all which Points ſhe argued much beyond what could be expected from her Age, and a Ladies Education. Her Huſband the Lord Guilford deſir'd tp take Leave of her, before he ſuffer'd: This Requeſt was granted: But the Lady Jane refus'd to ſee him. She was afraid ſuch an Interview might excite an unſeaſonable Tenderneſs, and make them leave the World with more Regret. Her Miſcarriage being much more owing to others than her ſelf, was apt to make an Impreſſion upon the People. How far this might work upon the Company, could not be known: 'Twas therefore thought adviſeable to execute her within the Tower. She mounted the Scaffold without the leaſt Appearance of Fear, or being diſturb'd. In her Speech ſhe own'd her ſelf guilty, not that ſhe had graſp'd at the Crown, but becauſe that ſhe had not refus'd the Offer: And thus her Miſfortune might be a Warning to Poſterity, that Innocent Meaning is not a ſufficient Excuſe for diſturbing the Publick: And that thoſe who reſign'd to other Peoples Ambition, help'd to fill up their Schemes, and are drawn into unlawful Practices, tho' againſt their Will, have a great deal to anſwer for. (b)

Her Character.

The Deſcent of this Lady has been mention'd already with ſome other particulars. As to the reſt of her Character, ſhe was a handſome Perſon, obliging in her Temper, and no ordinary Genius. Her Inclination lay unuſually for Learning. She was ſcarcely Seventeen Years Old when ſhe ſuffer'd: And yet in King Edward's Time ſhe had made ſuch a Proficiency in Greek, that Plato untranſlated was a Diverſion: She had likewiſe ſomething of a Talent for Poetry in Engliſh and Latin. There is a Letter of hers to one Harding, who had been Chaplain in her Fathers Family. This Divine had profeſs'd the reform'd Religion, but was now gone off to the Church of Rome. The Lady Jane writes in a very pathetical Strain to recover him. She endeavours to move him by the Terrors of the other World, tells him he ought to prefer his Conſcience to his Life: Cites ſeveral Paſſages from Scripture, and Church Hiſtory to work him to Repentance and Reſolution. The Diſcourſe is remarkably pious, and diſcovers no ordinary ſhare of Elocution. But after all, the Language is extremely harſh: She expoſtulates in the higheſt Terms of Reproach. If he had revolted to the Alcoran, or worſhip'd the Pagan Deities, ſhe could not have expreſs'd herſelf in ſtronger Averſion. (c)

By this Letter the Reader may perceive to what Diſtance this Lady had been bred from any thing which look'd like Popery: Now where the Idea ſeems too hideouſly drawn, and the Imputation overcharg'd, Vehemence and Paſſion is apt to exceed. Several of thoſe that ſuffer in Fox's Martyrology, ſeem to have gone too far in Declamations of this Kind. Indeed both Papiſts and Proteſtants, when they firſt parted eſpecially, treated each other with too much Severity of Language. Now ſuch Sallies tend only to exaſperate and do no manner of Service. People may ſtand clear of Error without Inſult and hoſtile Behaviour. There is a middle Way between Railing and Ceremony, between Careſſes and Outrage: And without Queſtion ſmooth Advances, and friendly Application, are the beſt Expedients to undeceive the miſled, and diſpoſe them to part with their Errors.

Feb. 23. The Duke of Suffolk beheaded.

About Fifty of the moſt forward in this Inſurrection were executed in ſeveral Places. Captain Brett who carried in the Londoners to Wyat, was put into the Hands of the Sheriff of Kent, and hang'd in Chains at Rocheſter. He own'd he had deſerv'd his Puniſhment, having thrice refus'd the Queens Pardon. The Duke of Suffolk was beheaded on Tower Hill. He confeſs'd he ſuffer'd juſtly for his Diſloyalty to the Queen, and deſir'd the People to take Warning by his Misfortune, and behave themſelves dutifully to the Government: He profeſs'd his Belief of the Chriſtian Religion, without any Diſtinction as to Communions, excepting his ſaying that he reſted his Salvation upon no other means than the Mercy of God, through the Paſſion of our Bleſſed Saviour. By this he may ſeem to exclude all Dependance upon the Saints Interceſſion. And without doubt Fox took him in this Senſe, for he gives him the Commendation of making a godly End. On the other Hand Dr. Weſton, it ſeems, did not look on him as an Heretick. For after this Speech, he aſſiſted him in his Devotions, and they repeated the Two Pſalms, miſerere mei Deus, & in te Domine ſperavi alternatively the Duke One Verſe, and the Doctor another. (d)

This Duke notwithſtanding he had concerted the diſinheriting the Queen with Northumberland, and appear'd at the Head of his Daughters Uſurpation, was graciouſly pardon'd, as hath been already obſerv'd. And therefore his engaging with Wyat, and breaking out in a Second Rebellion was horrible Ingratitude. He is ſaid to be a weak Man, which is the only Circumſtance that can be pleaded in Abatement of his Guilt.

Ibid. & p.624.

William Thomas Clerk of the Council in the late Reign, was one of Wyat's Adherents, and committed to the Tower for High Treaſon. During his Impriſonment he ſtab'd himſelf with a Knife, and the Wound was near being Mortal. At his Execution he juſtified his Treaſon, and ſaid he died for his Country. He adviſ'd aſſaſſinating the Queen, for which Wyat abhorr'd him, as he confeſs'd to the Attorney General at his Execution. *

* Hollinshead page 1104.

This Thomas was not without Learning and Parts. He writ a Book intitled Pelerin Ingleſe in Defence of the Proceeding of King Henry the Eighth. Sir Thomas Wyat was beheaded upon Tower Hill. He had beg'd his Life, and pretended he could have made the Queen Satisfaction: 'Tis probable he meant in ſome Diſcoveries. He own'd his Treaſon upon the Scaffold, and appear'd very Penitent. He ask'd the Queen Forgiveneſs, caution'd the People againſt Defiance of the Government, and making Inſurrections upon any Pretence. And whereas it had been reported he had charg'd the Lady Elizabeth, and Courtney Earl of Devonſhire with holding Correſpondence with him, and having a ſhare in the Revolt; he ſolemnly declar'd this was a downright Calumny upon them both, and that neither of them knew any thing of his Riſing. It ſeems he had given in ſome Depoſitions to the Council to their Diſadvantage; but his dying Words without Queſtion are moſt to be regarded. I have ſeen a Letter in the Paper Office under the Lady Elizabeths own Hand, in which ſhe purges herſelf from this Imputation with the ſtrongeſt Imprecations imaginable. Whether 'twas Wyat's Inconſiſtency in his Evidence, or Courtney's Refuſal of the Queens Favour, and making his Court to her Siſter, which rais'd a Jealouſy, is hard to determine: However, 'tis certain the Queen was apprehenſive of Diſturbance from this Quarter. And therefore the Earl of Devonſhire who had been committed to the Tower in this Commotion, was now convey'd to Foderingay Caſtle in Northamptonſhire. The Lady Elizabeth was ſent from the Tower to Woodſtock, and had a gentler Confinement.

Stow Annal.

As to the Inſurrection under Wyat, 'tis plain 'twas the Colour of Religion which miſled the People, and ſtrengthen'd the Revolt. Now for Chriſtians to endeavour a Relief by riſing upon the Government, is a deſperate Expedient. What can be more unaccountable than to rebel for that Belief which damns Rebellion? To honour God with the Breach of his Laws, and ſerve him with the higheſt Violation of Faith and Duty, is a blaſphemous Pretence. 'Tis to preſcribe Poiſon for Preſervative, and kill in the Remedy. Beſides, Religion is never in Danger of being loſt: A Mans Faith by God's Grace, is impregnable againſt all Aſſaults. Unleſs we throw it up, and betray it, all the Force of Men and Devils cannot wreſt it from us. The Primitive Chriſtians kept it upon the Rack: Neither Nakedneſs, nor Peril, nor Sword could ſeparate them from the Love of Chriſt. What can be more contrary to Religion, than to break through the Divine Eſtabliſhment, fly in the Face of Authority and Law, and lay Kingdoms in Blood and Aſhes? Thoſe who ſuggeſt ſuch flagitious Courſes, have generally ſome ſelfiſh Deſign at the Bottom. They would make the People Tools for their Ambition: Their Buſineſs is Intereſt and Power: And all this falſe Zeal is either to gratifie their Pride, or their Pocket. 'Tis granted a State of Perſecution is not to be wiſh'd; however, when Providence pleaſes to bring it upon us, they ought not to avoid it by applying to unlawful means: To take ſuch large Steps would be falling under the Imputation with which Job was unjuſtly tax'd: 'Twould be chuſing Iniquity rather than Affliction. To which it may be added, that Religion loſes no Ground by Perſecution. Integrity has never ſo fair a Tryal as under hard Uſage: Which Way can the Faith of a Chriſtian be ſaid to ſuffer, when Diſintereſſedneſs and Reſignation are moſt clearly diſcover'd; when all the moral and evangelical Virtues have the beſt Opportunities, and are ſet in the faireſt Light? Farther, when People live under a Prince of a different Religion, they ought to be particularly careful in their Behaviour: They ought not to ſhew the leaſt Sign of Diſaffection: They ought to ſerve him with all the Zeal and Chearfulneſs imaginable: This is the way to make their Honeſty ſhine out, to recommend their Belief, and gain Proſelytes to their Church. To abet a Princes Right of a different Communion, and acquieſce under the Diſadvantages which may happen, is a noble Inſtance of ſteady unmercenary Loyalty. Here Paſſive Obedience appears with all the Luſtre imaginable. Nothing but Regard to Juſtice and the other World, can keep People tight under ſuch Circumſtances: Suffering either preſent, or in Proſpect is a creditable Teſt for Integrity and Honour: 'Tis a glorious Opportunity to ſhew we are Chriſtians, and ought never to be loſt. 'Tis likewiſe the moſt probable Method to ſoften a Prince to good Humour, and abate the Rigour of his Government.

Rebelling upon the Score of Religion an unwarrantable Expedient.

'Tis to be wiſh'd Fox had declar'd his Abhorrence of this Rebellion, and ſpent ſome of his Vehemence upon the Occaſion. His Satyr could never have been better employ'd than againſt Wyat and his Party. 'Tis true, he calls it a Rebellion, but afterwards ſlides gently over it without farther Cenſure. I am ſorry to ſee his Paſſions ſo calm, and his Pen ſo ſmooth under ſuch Provocation. But inſtead of declaiming againſt the Wickedneſs of theſe Goſpellers, and laſhing the Inſurrection, he falls foul on the Duke of Suffolks Servant: He calls him a falſe Traytor, for diſcovering his Maſter, and putting him in the Hands of Juſtice. (e) 'Tis true this Man had promis'd the Duke to conceal him, but then this Engagement was ſomething like that of Herods, he could not keep it without failing againſt a Prior Obligation. For every Subject is bound by his natural Allegiance to diſcover the Enemies of the Government, eſpecially ſuch as break out in Rebellion, and point directly at dethroning the Prince. 'Tis true the Dukes Servant had ſomething of a hard Caſe upon him: His Maſter had, no doubt of it, been kind, and caſt himſelf upon his Secrecy: But ſince the Duke was ſo highly criminal; ſince the Keeper promis'd miſs'd more than was in his Power; 'tis plain he could not be true to his Maſter without Breach of Duty, and being falſe to the Queen and Government.

Id. page 37.

Fox is ſomewhat unhappy in another Remark upon Judge Morgan: He makes his paſſing Sentence upon the Lady Jane at Guildhall judicially puniſh'd with Madneſs: But this looks like a cenſorious and ill founded Inference. For what Crime could it be to diſcharge his Office, to maintain the Conſtitution, and give Judgment on a Perſon notoriouſly guilty of High Treaſon. The Indictment was confeſs'd, and the Judge was to govern himſelf by the Directions of Law. As to the Lady Jane's being overruled into the Uſurpation by her Parents, or miſled by the long Robe. Theſe Conſiderations were to be wholly referr'd to the Queens Mercy, and the Judge had nothing to do with them upon the Bench.

It has been already obſerv'd, that Stow reports Poinet Biſhop of Wincheſter in Wyat's Army, and abetting the Inſurrection. This one of our Learned Church Hiſtorians (f) affirms is certainly falſe. 'Tis generouſly done to attempt the throwing off ſo black an Imputation, but his Proof falls ſomething ſhort of his Affirmation. He ſays, had this Story been true upon Poinet, it would have been diſcover'd by the Priſoners. And how does it appear it was not ſo diſcover'd? Stow who lived at the ſame Time, is poſitive for the matter of Fact: And this Hiſtorian 'tis well known, is neither reckoned an over-credulous or Romantick Writer.

Goodmans Juſtification of Wyat's Rebellion.

That ſome of the Reform'd were well Wiſhers to Wyat's Revolt, is paſt all Doubt: For the purpoſe, there was a Book publiſh'd at Geneva about this Time by Chriſtopher Goodman: The Deſign of this Tract is to ſhew how far Superior Magiſtrates are to be obey'd. 'Tis ſtuff'd with a great deal of ſcandalous Invective againſt the Queen, and her Subjects are incited to Rebellion. He makes no ſcruple to embalm Wyat's Memory, and flouriſhes upon the Inſurrection in theſe Words. "Wyat, ſays he, did "but his Duty, and it was but the Duty of all "others that profeſs'd the Goſpel, to have "riſen with him for the Maintenance of the "ſame: His Cauſe was juſt, and they were "all Traytors that took not Part with him. O "noble Wyat! Thou art now with God, and "thoſe worthy Men that died in that happy "Enterprize. (g)

To give another Inſtance. There was a Book printed towards the latter end of this Reign, but neither the preciſe Year, nor Place are mention'd: 'Tis intitled, a ſhort Treatiſe of politick Power, &c. With an Exhortation to all true natural Engliſh Men. There are ſome initial Letters upon the Title Page deſign'd to point out the Author. (h) This Book was put into my Hands for Poinets, but I hope the Gentleman was miſinform'd. However, 'twas certainly written by ſome reform'd Engliſh Man, and by a Perſon that had loſt a conſiderable Poſt for Non-compliance; as plainly appears by ſeveral Paſſages. As to the Performance, 'tis a moſt peſtilent Diſcourſe. It makes all Government precarious, and lays it wholly in a manner at the Mercy of the People: The Author declaimes againſt abſolute Anthority as the Invention of the Devil. He cites the Ephori in Sparta, and the Roman Tribunes as a Preſident for calling the Prince to an Account for Maleadminiſtration: And that as he words it in all Chriſtian Realms and Dominions, God has ordain'd means that the Heads, the Princes, and Governors, ſhould not oppreſs the People after their Luſts: And therefore he charges the States, and inferior Magiſtracy with Negligence, and Breach of Truſt, for not riſing upon crown'd Heads, and reſcuing the People from Tyranny. And to apply his Reaſoning, and make it bear upon England, he runs a great length of Satyr againſt the Government; makes Popery as bad as Heatheniſm, and glances not unintelligibly upon the Queen. He preſſes the Expedient of depoſing Princes: And which is more, he wreſts the Scripture to juſtifie his Doctrine, recommends Aſſaſſination from ſeveral Places in the Old Teſtament, and miſapplies the Inſtances in an horrible manner. Beſides the Scandal of the matter, he is frequently groſs in his Railing, and ſometimes indecent in his Levities. In the cloſe, he addreſſes particularly to the Engliſh, and tells them, that all the Plagues of the preſent Reign, of which he had already given a Tragical Account, that all theſe Plagues had fallen upon them for cleaving to the Pope and his Traditions, and maintaining ſuch a ſort of Hypocrites and Enemies of God and the Realm; meaning Papiſts. And that the reſt of the Judgments threatn'd in Deuteronomy would overtake them, unleſs they behav'd themſelves better, that is, unleſs they took Arms againſt the Government, and threw out Popery by Force.

Mary Queen

Some of the Tenets of a Book intitl'd a ſhort Treatiſe of politick Power.

After a Recital of theſe wretched Principles, the Book ought not to be charg'd upon Poinet without plain Evidence: And therefore I am willing to acquieſce in our Hiſtorians next Reaſon for his Vindication. He concludes, that if Poinet had been concern'd in Wyat's Rebellion, Gardiner would have gotten him attainted in the next Parliament: And that this being not done, is a ſufficient Juſtification of that Prelate. (i)

To take leave of this Rebellion; after the Principal Conſpirators were executed, about Five Hundred of the Peaſants that follow'd Wyat, were brought before the Queen with Halters about their Necks, beg'd their Lives, and were pardon'd.

A Proclamation for Foreigners to quit the Kingdom.

About this Time the Queen ſet forth a Proclamation, commanding Foreigners to depart the Kingdom. To prevent the Imputation of Rigour, 'tis ſaid in the Proclamation, that a great many Foreigners guilty of Murther, Treaſon, Robbery, and other horrible Crimes, had fled from Juſtice, and taken ſhelter in her Majeſties Realm. That they had infected her Subjects with Hereſy, abetted the late Rebellion, and ſtill continued the ſame Practice, endeavouring to diſpoſe her Subjects to another Inſurrection. For this Diſaffection and Miſbehaviour they are order'd to depart the Kingdom within Twenty Four Days under the Penalty of Impriſonment, forfeiting their Effects, and being put into the Hands of their reſpective Princes. (k)

'Twas upon this Proclamation, as Fox reports, that not only Peter Martyr, and John Alaſco, but likewiſe the Engliſh Exiles already mention'd, tranſported themſelves into Germany, Geneva, and Switzerland.

The Government being now ſecur'd by cruſhing the Rebellion, the Court thought fit to make uſe of the opportunity, with Reference to the Church. For now they were in no Apprehenſion of Mutiny and Oppoſition. At this favorable Juncture, Articles were drawn up, and ſent into every Dioceſe, with Letters to the Biſhops, to ſee them carefully Executed. The Purport of the Articles is to the Senſe following. “That all Biſhops and others having Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, ſhall with all poſſible Expedition, put the Canons and Eccleſiaſtical Laws in Execution, which were formerly us'd in the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, provided they are not directly contrary to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm. That no Biſhop or Eccleſiaſtical Officer, ſhall in any Inſtrument or Proceſs, inſert the Clauſe, Regiâ Authoritate fulcitus. That the Oath of Primacy or Succeſſion, that is, the Oath of Supremacy, ſhould not be impos'd on the Clergy at Ordinations, or Admiſſions to Benefices. That Biſhops and their Officers ſhould be particularly careful, not to admit any Perſon to any Eccleſiaſtical Function or Benefice, who lay under the Imputation of Hereſy, or any other great Crime: And that the Biſhops ſhould put a ſtop, as far as in them lay, to the paſſing or confirming unreaſonable Leaſes. That all Biſhops and Eccleſiaſtical Officers, ſhould do their utmoſt, towards the ſuppreſſing of Hereſy, and other ſcandalous Crimes, eſpecially with reſpect to the Clergy. They were likewiſe to Diſcountenance and Cenſure ſcandalous Books and Ballads, and to inſpect the Conduct of Schoolmaſters and Preachers: That they might not misbehave themſelves, and miſlead their Charge. That all Biſhops and others, having Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, ſhould proceed Summarily, and with all poſſible diſpatch, deprive, and remove all ſuch Perſons from their Spiritual Promotion, who have Married, and Cohabited with their Wives, or given themſelves the Liberty of any other remarkable diſorder: And that hanging the Proceſs, the Profits of their Preferments ſhould be ſequeſter'd. And here thoſe Clergymen, whoſe Wives were Dead, were to be more gently uſed. Thoſe Prieſts likewiſe, who with the conſent of their Wives, declar'd againſt Cohabitation for the future, before the Biſhop, might after Penance, if the Biſhop thought fit, be reſtor'd to their Function upon another Cure, and have a Penſion aſſign'd them, out of their firſt Preferment, at the Ordinaries diſcretion. That thoſe who had formerly been profeſs'd in any Monaſtick Order, and afterwards Married, ſhould be formally Divorc'd, and puniſh'd over and above. That where Prieſts were wanting, the Pariſhioners ſhould be order'd to repair to another Pariſh, 'till farther Proviſion: And that in the mean time one Curate ſhould Officiate alternatively, in ſeveral Places. That all Proceſſions ſhould be Solemniz'd purſuant to Cuſtom, in the Latin Tongue. That all Feſtivals and Faſts ſhould be obſerv'd, as they were in the latter end of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth. That the old Ceremonies ſhould be reſtor'd, and the Children Chriſtned by the Prieſt, and Confirm'd by the Biſhop, according to Antient Uſage.

The next Article being of a nice Importance, I ſhall ſet it down in the Words 'twas drawn up, it ſtands thus.

March 3. 155$\frac{3}{4}$.

Touching ſuch Perſons, as were heretofore promoted to any Orders, after the new Sort and Faſhion of Orders; conſidering they were not order'd in very deed, the Biſhop of the Dioceſe finding otherwiſe, Sufficiency and Ability in thoſe Men, may ſupply that thing which wanted in them before, and then according to diſcretion admit them to Miniſter.

To proceed, the Biſhop of the Dioceſe is Injoin'd to ſet forth a Book of Homilies, “to inſtruct the People, and regulate their Belief. The Pariſhioners are likewiſe to be compell'd to come to Church, and hear Divine Service. The Biſhops are to give Orders to all Schoolmaſters, to Inſtruct their Children in the Liturgy, that they may be able to repeat the Reſponſes, and aſſiſt the Prieſt at Maſs, as formerly. (l)

Two Commiſſions Iſſued out for the depriving Seven Biſhops.

About Ten Days after the publiſhing theſe Articles, the Queen iſſued a Commiſſion to Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, Tonſtal Biſhop of Durham, Bonner of London, Parfew of St. Aſaph, Day of Chicheſter, and Kitchen of Landaff. The Inſtrument ſets forth, that the Queen to her great Grief had been fully Inform'd, that Robert Archbiſhop of York, Robert Biſhop of St. David's, John Biſhop of Cheſter, and Paul Biſhop of Briſtow, * had after a ſolemn Profeſſion of Chaſtity, (or ſingle Life) engag'd in Marriage, and cohabited with their Wives: That this was a very Criminal Liberty, and dangerous in the Example. To puniſh this Misbehavior, the Commiſſioners, or any Three of them, are Impower'd to convent the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhop of St. David's, and the reſt before them, and in Caſe the Charge is made good, to deprive them of their Sees, and enjoin ſuch Pennance, as they ſhould think proper. And here they are Authoriz'd to proceed ſummarily; Summariè & de plano, ſine ullo Strepitu & Figurâ Judicii. To explain theſe Terms a little; The Eccleſiaſtical Judge, is ſaid to proceed Summarily, when the Forms of the Court are not exactly obſerv'd. For Inſtance, when Evidence is admitted againſt thoſe who are not upon the ſpot to defend themſelves. But here nothing ought to be done to the prejudice of the Parties, nor to bar them from bringing the Cauſe to a farther Tryal. The Proceſs is ſaid to be manag'd, de plano & ſine Strepitu Judicii, when the Judge neither ſits on the Bench in the Cuſtomary Place, nor obſerves the ſtated Days for Hearing, but receives the Libel or Appeal, or any other thing, (not diſſerviceable to the Defendant) out of the Cuſtomary Method. And laſtly, the Proceſs is ſaid to go on, ſine Formâ & Figurâ Judicii, when the Supplemental Methods of the Civil, or Municipal Laws are omitted, and nothing made uſe of, but what reſults from the Law of Nature.

Rot. Pat. prim. Mar. pars Septim.

Reformat. Leg. Eccleſ. p. 90.

To return, there was another Commiſſion dated March the Fifteenth, iſſued to the Perſons above-mention'd, to call John Taylour Doctor of Divinity, naming himſelf Biſhop of Lincoln; John Hooper naming himſelf Biſhop of Worceſter, and Glouceſter; John Harley Biſhop of Hereford, who held their pretended Biſhopricks, as the Inſtrument goes on, by the Letters Patent of King Edward the Sixth, with the expreſs Clauſe of quàm diù ſe benè geſſerint: And that theſe Prelates, both by teaching erroneous Doctrine, and exceptionable Behavior, had made themſelves unworthy of that Dignity and Station in the Church. Theſe Commiſſions being both executed, Seven of the Reform'd Biſhops were remov'd from their Sees. Theſe Proceedings, as our learned Hiſtorian obſerves, were much Cenſur'd: (m) For tho' the Laws which allow'd the Marriage of Prieſts were repeal'd, yet the Repeal look'd only forward, and was not to be driven to a Retroſpection. And therefore tho' theſe Biſhops might have been legally Puniſh'd, if they had continued to Cohabit with their Wives, they ought not however to have been proceeded againſt for what was paſt. But to Charge the Queen with no more Rigor than the Caſe will bear: If the Buſineſs is further examin'd, 'twill be found there is a Material difference in theſe Two Commiſſions.

Id. pt. 2. Records Book 2. N°. 12.

Theſe Commiſſions differently drawn, and Why?

By the firſt, the Archbiſhop of York, &c. are not depriv'd purely for Marrying, but for breaking their Monaſtick Vow of Single Life, and upon this the ſtreſs of the Charge is particularly laid. The Words in the Commiſſion are theſe, quia comperimus Robertum Archiepiſcopum Ebor. Robertum Menev. Robertum Ceſtrienſ. & Paulum Briſtol. poſt expreſſam Profeſſionem Caſtitatis expreſsè ritè, & legitimè emiſſam, cum quibuſdam Mulieribus Nuptias de facto, cum de jure non deberent, contraxiſſe. Whereas in the Second Commiſſion for depriving Taylour, Hooper, and Harley, there's no mention of Breach of Vow, but only a Charge of Miſbehavior in general: And that they had taken their Sees upon a Clauſe of quam diu ſe benè geſſerint in their Patent. Now there could be no particular Aggravation in ſubmitting to this Clauſe, for in this they had done no more than the reſt of the Biſhops. On the other ſide, Hooper, and Harley were both Married, and yet are not expreſly loaded with Prevarication upon this Score. The reaſon of this different Cenſure was becauſe, the firſt Four were Regulars, and the other Three Seculars, that the latter, Taylour, Hooper, and Harley, were Seculars is well known; and as for the others, they were Men of diſtinction in the Monaſtick Claſs. For Inſtance, Holdgate Archbiſhop of York, had been Provincial of the Order of the Gilbertines of Sempringham: Ferrar of St. David's, was a Canon Regular of the Order of St. Auguſtine: Buſh of Briſtol, had been Provincial of the Bons'hommes, and Bird of Cheſter, was formerly Provincial of the Carmelites. Of the Three Secular Biſhops, Hooper, and Harley, as hath been obſerv'd, were Married; however, the Queen in her Commiſſion for their Deprivation, makes no expreſs mention of this Circumſtance. 'Tis True, the Eccleſiaſtical Judges alledg'd their Marriage, as one reaſon for ſetting them aſide: But then this was not done upon any Clauſe in the Queen's Commiſſion, but in Virtue of the Canon Law; of the Canon Law I ſay, which upon the Repeal of the Two Statutes in the late Reign, (n) recover'd it's Force upon the Married Clergy.

Our learned Hiſtorian takes notice, that on, or before, the Eighteenth of March this Year, the Sees of St. David's, Lincoln, Hereford, Cheſter, Glouceſter, and Briſtol, were declar'd Vacant. (o) But the Regiſter of Canterbury, upon which all theſe deprivations are entred, ſets them Two Days forward, that is on March the Twentieth, which is no Wonder, ſince the Commiſſions for removing them, were dated but Four or Five Days before. This Regiſter informs us, that the Biſhops of Wincheſter, London, Chicheſter, and Durham, by virtue of the Queen's Commiſſion, pronounc'd the Sentence of Deprivation upon John Taylour Biſhop of Lincoln, ob Nullitatem Conſecrationis ejus, & Defectum Tituli ſui quem habuit à Rege Edvardo Sexto, per Literas patentes, cum hâc Clauſula dum benè ſe geſſerit. Hooper, Biſhop of Worceſter, and Glouceſter, was depriv'd for defect of Title, Marrying, and other Inſtances of Miſbehavior. Harley Biſhop of Hereford, for Marriage and Hereſy, and for the other Reaſons alledg'd againſt Taylour: Ferrar Biſhop of St. David's, propter Cauſas ſuprà dictas, and Bird Biſhop of Cheſter, for his Marriage. Buſh Biſhop of Briſtol, had no Sentence of Deprivation paſs'd upon him: Whether he avoided the Blow by renouncing his Marriage, or by any other Submiſſion, is more than appears. However; it ſeems his Seat was uneaſy to him, for in June following he reſign'd his Biſhoprick: For this Month as may be ſeen in the Regiſter laſt mention'd, the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury entred upon the Spiritual Juriſdiction of the See of Briſtol, then void, by the voluntary Reſignation of Paul Buſh.

Thus the Reader may obſerve theſe Biſhops, excepting Buſh, were all turn'd out upon the ſtrength of the Regale: For tho' the Sentence of Deprivation was pronounced by Biſhops, and none but thoſe of that Order are named in the Commiſſion; yet they acted purely upon the Queen's Authority, as appears both by the Inſtrument, and the Canterbury Regiſter. Theſe Vacant Sees of St. David's, Lincoln, Hereford, Cheſter, Glouceſter, and Briſtol, were fill'd with Morgan, White, Parfew, Coates, Brooks, and Holman; and Gooderick Biſhop of Ely, Dying in May this Spring, Thirleby of Norwich, was tranſlated to that See, and Hopton made Biſhop of Norwich. Scory late Biſhop of Chicheſter, tho' remov'd upon Day's, being reſtor'd, went a full length in his Compliance. He made his appearance before Bonner, renounc'd his Matrimony, ſubmitted to Pennance, and had a formal Abſolution on the Fourteenth of July this Year. (p) Upon his giving this full Satiſfaction, Bonner was contented to reſtore him to the Exerciſe of his Paſtoral Function, tho' with ſome Abatement: * But whether he was allow'd to Act as a Suffragan within the Dioceſe of London, or confin'd to the Buſineſs of a Prieſt, is not ſaid. But after all, it ſeems there was more of Fear than Inclination, in Scory's Submiſſion. He made no uſe of Bonner's Abſolution, but retir'd beyond Sea, where he Liv'd 'till the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. And to mention another Vacancy, Barlow Biſhop of Bath and Wells reſign'd; upon which Bourn Archdeacon of London, (q) was promoted to that See: The Archbiſhoprick of York was likewiſe void, and Holdgate Impriſon'd in the Tower: And in September following, Sampſon Biſhop of Coventry, and Litchfield, departed this Life, and was ſucceeded by Bayn. (r) Barlow Biſhop of Bath and Wells, is ſaid never to have been Married; (s) but here the learned Hiſtorian was miſinform'd: For Barlow had Five Daughters, Married to Five Biſhops, as appears by a Monumental Inſcription, made for his Daughter Frances, buried in York Minſter. He had likewiſe a Son Prebendary of Wyveleſcombe in the Church of Wells. (t) About this time there was a Book Publiſh'd in Barlow's Name, in which he retracts his former Perſwaſion, ſpeaks diſhonorably of his Acquaintance Luther, Oecolampadius, and ſeveral others of the Reform'd in Germany, Charges the Engliſh Goſpellers with Pride and Intemperance, with Hypocriſy and ill Nature. 'Tis thought if Barlow had played his Satyr ſo ſtrong upon the Reformation, he would not have been quite thrown out, (u) eſpecially ſince he was never Married: But this is a miſtake as hath been obſerv'd, and which is more, his Wife was living ſometime within the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. As to the

The Inferior Clergy ejected upon the ſcore of Marriage. Ibid.

The Biſhops of the Queens Communion being much the greater Majority began to exert themſelves, and make the Reform'd Clergy ſenſible of their Diſcipline. For Inſtance, the Clergy being computed at about Sixteen Thouſand in England, Twelve Thouſand of them were turn'd out, as 'tis ſaid, upon the ſcore of being Married. For this Archbiſhop Parker is vouch'd. But upon enquiry this Prelates Teſtimony does not appear. Neither does the Book written by an Anonymous Lay-man in defence of Prieſts Marriage, and Publiſh'd by Parker come up to this Account. For this Writer only cites the Authority of another nameleſs Author. The Learned Wharton having examin'd the number of Clergy-men depriv'd in the Dioceſs and Peculiars of Canterbury, upon the ſcore of Marriage, finds the Proportion far ſhort of the Computation abovemention'd. He obſerves there are within the Juriſdiction of the Church of Canterbury about Three Hundred Benefices, and other Eccleſiaſtical Preferments. But within this Precinct, only Seventy Three Clergy-men were Depriv'd, either for Marriage or upon any other Account: Now this Number is far from holding the Proportion from Twelve to Sixteen. And yet as he obſerves, Thornden and Harpſfield two dignified Men in this Dioceſe were forward in proſecuting the Married Clergy as any other Roman Catholick Zealots elſewhere. (x) 'Tis affirm'd the Married Clergy were all Sumarily Depriv'd. (y) But this looks like mounting the Rigour beyond matter of Fact. For the Author above-mention'd publiſh'd by Archbiſhop Parker, affirms a Years time was allow'd the Clergy to abjure their Hereſy and put away their Wives. Beſides, in the Canterbury Regiſter made for the vacancy of that See, there are many Proceſſes and Deprivations of Married Clergy-men entred: From whence it follows the cuſtomary Forms were obſerv'd, and that they were not all Summarily Depriv'd. 'Tis further remark'd, that the Reform'd Clergy, beſides the Loſs of their Benefices, were forc'd to quit their Wives. This Severity is ſuppos'd to reach all thoſe that were Married: That the Reform'd Clergy were roughly us'd is beyond Queſtion: However, the Hardſhips put upon them ſeem ſwell'd a little beyond the Reality of the Caſe: For none of the Married Clergy were obliged to part with their Wives after Deprivation, unleſs they had been Regulars: And here their Vow of Chaſtity, as they call'd it, oblig'd them to Separation. But the Secular Clergy, who were under no ſuch Monaſtick Engagement (z) were gentlier us'd. That the Secular Clergy had made no Vow of Single Life at their Ordination for ſome time before the Reformation is highly probable. But in a Council at Wincheſter held under Landfrank, as hath been obſerv'd already, 'twas decreed that none ſhould be Ordain'd Prieſt or Deacon without making a Declaration againſt Matrimony. The Secular Clergy not oblig'd to part with their Wives, and why?

(z) Ibid. and Harmer pag. 139.

(a) Spelman Concil. Vol. 2. pag. 11.

That many of the Reform'd Clergy in Queen Mary's Reign had taken Monaſtick Vows is ſufficiently Evident. For thoſe regular Prieſts who had been ejected their Houſes at the Diſſolution of the Monaſteries, were qualified to hold Benefices: Neither did their politick Capacity lie Idle upon their Hands: For the King and other Lay-Patrons were willing to place them in Cures at the firſt Opportunity: For by this means they ſav'd their Penſions which muſt otherwiſe have been payed. That theſe Regulars who were very numerous were forc'd to part with their Wives is not to be Conteſted: But that the Seculars were thus us'd is more than appears: That the Engliſh Church had for ſome time at leaſt Ordained them without Vows of Cælibacy is pretty plain from the Articles of Enquiry drawn up this Year, in which theſe Interrogatories amongſt others were put to every Married Clergy-man. Whether he had been a Religious? Of what Order, and in what Monaſtery? (b)

To proceed, on the 2d of April a new Parliament met at Weſtminſter: The Commons are ſaid to have been Brib'd to the Court Meaſures, and largely Penſion'd by Gardiner the Lord Chancellor. * This is a hard Reflection upon that honourable Houſe. But the Hiſtorian is not pleas'd to tell us how this Secret came to his Knowledge. If Beale is the Reporter, and he ſeems to have no other, the Account looks very ſuſpicious. The 1ſt Act I ſhall mention confirms the Articles of Marriage between the Queen and Philip Prince of Spain. The Statute mentions two Treaties: The Articles of the firſt have been already related: By the 2d Philip was oblig'd to Entertain a certain Number of Engliſh Gentlemen and others, in his Court: He was not to convey the Queen out of England, unleſs at her own Inſtance. The Iſſue of the Marriage were to be bred in England, and not carried into foreign Countries without the conſent of the Engliſh Nobility. In caſe the Queen ſhould die without Iſſue, Philip was barr'd claiming any Right to the Kingdom, and the Crown was to deſcend according to Courſe of Law: King Philip was likewiſe oblig'd not to tranſport any Jewels or rich Furniture, or alienate any part of the Royal Revenues. No part of the Fleet, of the Artillery, of the Ammunition or Stores, were to be convey'd out of England, or any ways Embezzl'd. That upon the Score of this Marriage England ſhould not be drawn into the War between the Emperor and the French King, but that the late Alliance with France ſhall be Inviolably maintain'd; with a Liberty however to Philip to aſſiſt the Emperor his Father from any other Country of his Dominions: Laſtly, the Sovereignty of the Engliſh Realms were to reſt ſolely in the Queen, tho' in all Grants, publick Acts, and Inſtruments of Government both their Majeſties Names were to be Inſerted. (c) 1ſt Mar. Parl. 2d Cap. 2d

To proceed; This Parliament repeal'd two Statutes of the late Reign for the Diſſolution of the Biſhoprick of Durham. The Preamble ſets forth, that certain ambitious Perſons "taking Advantage of the late King's Minority, made an Intereſt by Siniſter Practice to procure the Diſſolution of the Biſhoprick; that 'twas done out of Mercenary Views to enrich themſelves and their Friends by ſeizing the Lands of that See, rather than upon juſt Occaſion, or Godly Zeal: That Tonſtal Biſhop of Durham was depriv'd upon untrue Surmiſes and falſe Accuſations: And that the Proceſs againſt him was Foul and Illegal: That upon a full Examination of the Matter by the Queens Commiſſioners, the Sentence of Deprivation was declar'd Void, as may be ſeen at large by an Authentick Inſtrument.

"That the Queen had new founded the Biſhopricks by her Letters Patent, and reſtor'd all the Lands in her Poſſeſſion: But that neither the Reverſal of the Sentence of Deprivation, nor the Queens Letters Patents were of ſufficient Force to recover the Honours, Lands, &c. to the See of Durham: To reſtore the Biſhoprick therefore to its former Intereſt, Privilege and Revenues, the two Diſſolution Statutes of the late Reign were repeal'd. (d)

As far as it appears by this Act the Biſhop of Durham recover'd all the Eſtate formerly belonging to his See, excepting a Capital Meſſage or Manſion Houſe called Colderborough in Thames-ſtreet London, in the Pariſh of All-hallows the Leſs, with ſome other Meſſages and Tenements in the Pariſhes of Berkin, and Grace-Church. Theſe having been granted by the late King to the Earl of Shrewsbury were to remain to him and his Heirs: However, in the cloſe of the Act the Biſhop Petitions the Queen for an Equivalent.

By another Act of this Parliament the Queen is impower'd to appoint Statutes for the Government of the Deaneries, Prebends, Schools, and their Revenues lately Erected, and ſettled by King Henry VIII. The Queen is likewiſe enabled to alter the Statutes from time to time at Pleaſure. Theſe Statutes were drawn by King Henry's Commiſſioners, and deliver'd to the Reſpective Churches, but not being Indented, they fell ſhort of the Condition requir'd in the Kings Grant, which defect gave Occaſion to the making this Act. (e)

(e) 1ſt Mar. Parl. 2d Cap. 9. April the 10*th* Anno Dom. 1554.

This Parliament was diſſolv'd on the 5*th* of May. During the Seſſion Archbiſhop Cranmer, Biſhop Ridley, and Biſhop Latimer were remov'd from the Tower to Windſor, and from thence to Oxford, to Diſpute with ſome Perſons ſelected from both Univerſities. This Diſputation was brought on, becauſe a Rumour was ſpread that the Roman Catholicks had been lately worſted in the Convocation-houſe. For this Purpoſe the Convocation and the two Univerſities were authoriz'd by the Queens Letters to conſtitute a Committee for the managing this Controverſy. Thoſe pitch'd upon in the Univerſity of Oxford were Dr. Weſton Prolocutor, Dr. Treſham, Dr. Cole, Dr. Oglethorpe, Dr. Chedſey, Mr. Pye, Mr. John Harpsfield, and Mr. Fecknam. Thoſe of Cambridge were Dr. Young the Vice Chancellor, Dr. Glyn, Dr. Seaton, Dr. Watſon, Dr. Sedgwick, and Dr. Atkinſon. The Committee who were to engage in the Diſputation, had an Authority from the Convocation and both the Univerſities.

Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer convey'd to Oxford to Diſpute.

The Convocation meets April 3*d* Journal Convoc. fol. 74.

The Queen ſent her Precept to the Mayor and Bayliffs of Oxford to bring the Priſoners Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer into the Publick Schools at the times appointed for Diſputation. At their Appearance there were theſe three Articles given Cranmer and the other two Biſhops to Subſcribe.

First, In the Sacrament of the Altar by Virtue of the Words of Conſecration pronounc'd by the Prieſt, the Natural Body of Chriſt conceiv'd of the Virgin Mary is preſent under the ſpecies of Bread and Wine. Part of the Latin runs thus, præſens eſt realiter ſub ſpeciebus Panis & vini naturale Corpus Chriſti conceptum de Virgine Mariâ, item naturalis ejuſdem ſanguis.

The Three Queſtions for the Diſputation.

Secondly, After Conſecration neither the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine, nor any other ſubſtance remains excepting that of Chriſt, God, and Man. In Latin poſt Conſecrationem non remanet ſubſtantia Panis & Vini, neque ulla alia ſubſtantia niſi ſubſtantia Chriſti, Dei, & Hominis.

Thirdly, The Maſs is a propitiatory Sacrifice for the Sins of the Living and Dead. It ſtands thus in Latin; In miſſa eſt vivificum Eccleſiæ Sacrificium pro peccatis tam vivorum quam mortuorum propitiabile. (f)

(f) MS. Penes me Fox Vol. 3.

Theſe Articles had been ſent down to Cambridge by the Convocation ſome little time before, where they were publickly Examin'd and Approv'd.

Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer at the firſt ſight of theſe Articles, declar'd frankly they were not true: However, they promis'd to return an Anſwer in Writing. And in caſe of their Diſſent from the Delegates they were to argue upon the Queſtions in the Schools. The Diſputation was to be manag'd in Latin, in the Forms of Logick: The Three Biſhops returning a negative Anſwer to all the Articles, they proceeded to Diſpute, and Notaries were appointed to take the Argument in Writing: Of theſe John Jewel and Gilbert Munſon Maſters of Arts were two, both of which were allow'd by Cranmer and Ridley. Weſton and the reſt of the Committee in their Procuratorial Letters from the Convocation, own the Epiſcopal Character of Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, tho' they mention them with ſome Abatement, and call them the late Biſhops of Canterbury, Rocheſter, and Worceſter.

Id. MS.

Id.

And the ſame Reſpect is given them in the Procuratorial Letter from Cambridge; 'tis true, in the Queens Precept to the Mayor of Oxford Ridley, and Latimer are only ſtyl'd Dr. and Clerk, but this Inſtrument is Singular in the Diſtinction, and no Counter-ballance to the reſt.

The three Biſhops were forc'd to enter the Liſts at great Diſadvantages: They had but two Days allow'd them for Preparation: They were kept in different and ill accommodated Priſons, not ſuffer'd to Converſe with each other; neither had they the convenience of their own Books and Papers. They were likewiſe oblig'd to appear Single in the Conteſt, each of them having a diſtinct Day aſſign'd, ſo that they had no opportunity of Supporting each other, if occaſion had requir'd.

The two firſt Queſtions having been Dilated on in the firſt Part of this Work, (g) and lately argued at length in the Convocation by Weſton, Philpot, and others; I ſhall paſs over the greateſt part of the Diſputation. And to prevent tiring the Reader with the Repetition of this Controverſy, I ſhall only refer Him to the Biſhops Anſwers deliver'd in Latin to the Committee. (h)

Upon the laſt Queſtion concerning the Propitiatory Sacrifice of the Maſs, Cranmer was fully of Opinion, that the holding it in the Affirmative was Derogatory to the Sacrifice upon the Croſs: That if the Paſſion of our Saviour was ſufficient for all the Purpoſes of Redemption, what occaſion could there be for any other? And that the neceſſity of any ſucceeding ſupplemental Oblations, ſuppos'd that at Jeruſalem Defective. To ſupport this reaſoning, he cited the 53 Chapter of Iſaiah and the ninth to the Hebrews; And laſtly, he ſeems to allow of no Sacrifice under the Chriſtian Diſpenſation, excepting that of Praiſe and Thankſgiving, of Repentance, and Works of Charity. Ridley and Latimer in their Anſwers deliver'd themſelves to the ſame Senſe.

April the 16*th* Cranmer's Opinion concerning the Sacrifice in the Maſs.

Chedſay, Treſham, Weſton and Young argued againſt Cranmer: Amongſt other things they charge him with Miſrepreſenting and Miſ-tranſlating Juſtin Martyr, Irenæus, and others of the Antients in his Book concerning the Sacraments; to which he makes his defence. His ſetting forth the Catechiſm in the Name of the the Synod of London is likewiſe Objected to him by Weſton; he told him there was Fifty of that Convocation who declared they never heard a Word of that Catechiſm. To this Cranmer Anſwers, the Title was ſettled without his Knowledge, and that he complain'd of it to the Council, who told him the Book was ſo entituled becauſe 'twas ſet forth ſitting the Convocation.

It has been obſerv'd already, that the Prolocutor Weſton at the Convocation of laſt October, complain'd in very ſtrong Language againſt this Catechiſm, calls it a very Peſtiferous Book and full of Hereſies. (i) What Philpot return'd to Weſton upon this Head hath been already related. Now that the Forty Two Articles of Religion publiſh'd in the late Reign were principally meant in this Charge, and not the Catechiſm, is endeavour'd to be prov'd by a late Author. (k) His Reaſons in ſhort are theſe: Firſt, becauſe the Prolocutor Weſton calls them the Articles of the Catechiſm, and propoſes the Twenty Ninth of Edward VI. Articles to Diſpute on; beſides, he obſerves theſe Forty Two Articles were firſt Printed at the end of this Catechiſm, which might make them paſs under that Title. Farther, the Catechiſm taken by it ſelf, has not the name of the Synod put upon it: The Title of it being only this, Catechiſmus brevis Chriſtianæ Diſciplinæ ſummam continens, omnibus Ludimagiſtris, Authoritate Regiâ Commendatus. Neither does Philpot's Defence already mention'd agree to the Catechiſm, but only to the Articles; for the Catechiſm is not ſaid to be drawn up by a Committee, upon whom the Convocation had transferr'd their Authority: For in the King's Preface 'tis ſaid to have been Written by a certain Pious and Learned Perſon: And that being offer'd to His Majeſty, he had refer'd it to the Peruſal of ſome Biſhops and other Men of Learning: And that being approv'd by them, he had order'd it to be Printed for School-maſters to inſtruct their Children: To which this Author adds, that the Catechiſm abſtracted from the Articles, ſcarcely borders upon any Controverſy, and therefore Weſton could have no Reaſon to call it a Peſtiferous Book and full of Hereſies; neither would he have been ſo Active in procuring the Subſcriptions of the Houſe againſt it.

To proceed; The next Day Ridley was brought into the Schools, and oppos'd by Dr. Smith formerly mention'd, by the Prolocutor Weſton, by Treſham, Oglethorpe, Glyn, Seaton, Cole, Ward, Harpsfield, Watſon, Pye, Harding, Curton, and Fecknam. He made a very learned Defence, and maintain'd his Ground to great Commendation againſt all his Antagoniſts. (l)

Latimers Belief concerning the real Preſence.

The Third Day being the 18th of April, Latimer was brought before the Committee. He deſired to be excus'd Diſputing upon the Score of his Age, and long diſuſe of the Latin Tongue. However, he gave in his Anſwer which is pen'd partly in Latin, and partly in Engliſh. And after they had perus'd his Opinion upon the Three Queſtions, he told them they might uſe him as they thought fit: Upon the firſt Article, tho' he denies a Corporal, he owns a real or ſpiritual Preſence. That ſuch a Preſence was ſufficient for our Union with Chriſt, comprehended all the Advantages, and anſwer'd all the ends of receiving the Sacrament: He was afterwards dragg'd into a Diſputation, which I ſhall paſs over.

The next Day John Harpsfield kept an Act for his Doctors Degree, and giving the two firſt Queſtions for his Exerciſe, Cranmer was permitted to Oppoſe him, and appear once more in his own Defence. Amongſt other Arguments, he asked Harpsfield how, or in what manner Chriſt's Body is preſent in the Sacraments? And whether this Preſence has Quantity, Qualities, Form, Figure, and ſuch like Properties, of a human Body? Harpsfield returning no Anſwer, but endeavouring to diſengage himſelf by another Queſtion, ſeveral of the Doctors ſtruck in, to reinforce him. Treſham confeſs'd our Saviour in the Sacrament of the Altar had not all the modes of Quantity, and Qualities, proper to a Body. Smith own'd the ſtating the manner of this Preſence was impoſſible. Weſton finding his Friends Embarraſs'd in their Anſwers, endeavour'd to unty the Knot, by ſaying, 'tis Corpus quantum, ſed non per modum quanti. That is, our Saviour's Body in the Euchariſt has Quantity, but not according to the manner of Quantity; that is, it has Quantity, but not thoſe Properties which are Eſſential to the Idea of Quantity: But to ſolve a Difficulty by ſuch a Diſtinction, is no better than Jargon, and downright Contradiction. Cranmer preſs'd the Queſtion, and argued, that ſince 'twas agreed our Saviour's Body in Heaven had the Quantity, and Figure of a Human Body, and that in the Holy Euchariſt it had none of theſe Properties, therefore our Saviour muſt have two Bodies perfectly diſtinct from each other, one in Heaven, and the other upon Earth. Here Harpsfield being ſomewhat at a loſs, Weſton came on to his Relief, but with little ſucceſs. After Cranmer had made uſe of ſome other Mediums, he was Diſmiſs'd by Weſton with Commendation. Afterwards Weſton being in the Chair oppoſ'd Harpsfield himſelf. Amongſt other Authorities, he urg'd that of Theodoret formerly mention'd. He likewiſe cited that remarkable Teſtimony of St. Chryſoſtome in his Epiſtle to Cæſarius, where this Father, as I have already obſerv'd, (m) plainly affirms that the Bread after Conſecration remains in it's former Nature and Condition. Harpsfield ask'd him how he prov'd this Paſſage belong'd to St. Chryſoſtome? Weſton vouch'd a Book of Peter Martyrs to make good the Citation. Harpsfield refuſing to be concluded by Peter Martyr's Authority, made no farther Anſwer: But ſince this Epiſtle to Cæſarius has been lately publiſh'd by Bigotius, the Authority of the Teſtimony is put beyond Diſpute. This plain Paſſage of St. Chryſoſtome may be us'd as a Key to Interpret him in other places upon this Argument. For the Purpoſe, when Ridley denyed the corporal Preſence in the Schools, he was urg'd by Smith and Harpsfield with ſome ſtrong Expreſſions out of St. Chryſoſtome; it muſt be confeſs'd the Words ſound high, at leaſt towards Conſubſtantiation: But theſe Expreſſions being either in his Homilies, or his Book of the Prieſthood, are not to be ſtrein'd up to the Letter. The deſign of the Father in theſe Diſcourſes being only to give a ſolemn Idea of the Dignity of the Sacrament, to awaken the Reverence, and heighten the Devotion of the Receivers. To this purpoſe he has made Cranmer oppoſes Harpsfield.

St. Chryſoſtome's Paſſages concerning the Holy Euchariſt to be Conſtrued by his Epiſtle to Cæſarius, and why?

made uſe of ſtrong affecting Metaphors. That his Phraſe is ſometimes figurative, muſt be owned, even by thoſe who maintain Tranſubſtantiation. For inſtance, in one Place he ſpeaks thus: The Mouths of thoſe who receive, are ting'd and impurpled with the Blood of our Saviour. Thus he makes the corporal Preſence an Object of Senſe, which is neither true, nor maintain'd by thoſe of the Roman Communion. 'Tis evident therefore theſe ſtrong Paſſages of St. Chryſoſtome are to be conſtrued with Allowance, and paſs for no more than Figures of Rhetorick. To make a right Judgment of this Fathers Opinion, we muſt conſult him in thoſe Diſcourſes where ſtrict Logick is his Buſineſs, and where he pretends more to argue than flouriſh. And of this kind we may reckon his Epiſtle to Cæſarius.

Lib. 3. de Sacerdot.

In this Tract he offers at cloſe Reaſoning, and diſcovers his Opinion without Heightnings, and ſwell'd Expreſſion: And therefore by all reaſonable Conſtruction, the Paſſages in his rhetorical Diſcourſes, ought to be interpreted by what he delivers here.

To proceed, Weſton offer'd a remarkable Teſtimony from Pope Gelaſius the Firſt, and another from Origen; to which the Reſpondent ſeems to have return'd but a ſlender Anſwer. However, Weſton declar'd himſelf fully ſatisfied, and commended Harpsfield for his Performance.

Thus the Diſputation ended, the Committee boaſted their Succeſs, and went off with a Shew of Triumph. It muſt be granted the Roman Catholicks, as Fox repreſents it, were no heavy Managers; they made a lively Oppoſition upon Cranmer and Ridley, and urg'd the Teſtimonies of the Fathers with Advantage enough. 'Tis no wonder to find them make the moſt of their Cauſe: They were pick'd Men out of both Univerſities, were ſufficiently furniſh'd with Leiſure and other Conveniencies, and 'tis likely had preconcerted what Arguments each of them ſhould uſe: However, Temper and Decency were not always kept, for Weſton miſbehav'd himſelf to a remarkable Degree, treated Cranmer with groſs Language, (n) made a rude and wretched Jingle upon Ridley, and run out into perſonal Reflections. Ridley complains the whole Diſputation was carried on in a very noiſy and diſorderly manner: That their Language and Geſtures were very indecent: That the Biſhops were browbeaten, diſparag'd, and coarſly handled in Engliſh, on purpoſe to leſſen their Eſteem with the Audience, and draw the Mob on the other Side: That the manner of the Diſputation was altogether irregular: For inſtance, he had not the Liberty of making a full Defence, nor urging his Reaſons at length: He was frequently attack'd by ſeveral Opponents at the ſame time: And thus the Diſpute was ſo over-run with Squabble and Clamour, that his Anſwers to what was objected could not be heard. He was likewiſe ſtop'd in reading his Paper by the Doctors crying out Blaſphemy. What the Contents of this Paper were, the Reader may ſee in the Record laſt mention'd.

The Biſhops ill us'd at the Diſputation.

Two Days after Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, were brought before the Delegates into St. Mary's Church, and call'd on to ſubſcribe the Three Articles. And here Weſton charg'd Cranmer particularly with failing in his late Performance, and ſinking under the Controverſy. The Archbiſhop replied he was overlayed with Numbers and Clamour, and was not ſuffer'd to proceed either in his Defence or Oppoſition. In ſhort, upon their refuſing to comply they were all Three pronounc'd Hereticks. Cranmer appeal'd from their Sentence to the Court Above, and hop'd to be preſent with our Saviour in Heaven, notwithſtanding his being condemn'd for disbelieving the corporal Preſence at the Altar.

Ridley told them, tho' he was thrown out of their Society, he doubted not but his Name was entred in a better Place, whether this Sentence would give them a ſpeedier Conveyance than Nature could have afforded. Latimer appear'd tranſported with the Sentence, and thank'd God for ſo honourable a Paſſage into the other World. And now the Three Biſhops were parted, and return'd to their ſeparate Priſons.

They are condemn'd for Hereticks.

Now to ſay nothing farther upon the Merits of the Cauſe, and the Reaſons of the Cenſure, there ſeems to be an apparent Defect in the Authority of the Judges: For none of the Delegates were more than Prieſts. 'Tis true, Gardiner the Lord Chancellor was nam'd in the Commiſſion, but he never appear'd at the Diſputation, nor made Part of the Court at pronouncing the Sentence. And if he had, for a ſingle Biſhop to cenſure Three of his own Order, and condemn his Metropolitan, was altogether unpreſidented. To alledge theſe Doctors of Oxford and Cambridge were impower'd by the Convocation to diſpute and proceed to Sentence, is ſhort of Satisfaction. For when was it known that all the Biſhops of a Province made their Proxies of none but Prieſts, for trying Cauſes of the higheſt Nature? For examining the Faith of Biſhops? Convicting them of Hereſy, and throwing them out of Church Communion? By the famous Council of Carthage held in the Year Four Hundred and Nineteen, if a Biſhop fell under any hard Imputation, he was to be tryed by Twelve of his own Order. (o) This Council, as the Learned Beverege obſerves, (p) confirm'd the Canons of all the preceding Councils in that City, which from this time were authentically mark'd, made binding to a large Extent, and called Codex Canonum Eccleſiæ Africanæ. The ſame Learned Perſon likewiſe takes notice, that the Canons of this Synod were afterwards confirm'd by the General Council in Trullo. However, I don't find either Cranmer, or the other Two Biſhops inſiſting upon the Privilege of their Character, and moving for Judges of their own Degree: Whether this Reſerve was overlook'd, or whether out of an exceſſive Regard to the Regale, they thought themſelves oblig'd to acquieſce in the Authority of the Queens Commiſſioners, is ſomewhat uncertain: But how much ſoever they might be ſatisfied touching the Authority of the Committee, 'tis plain they thought themſelves ill uſed in the Proceedings: This, beſides what has been already related, may be ſeen in Ridley's Letter to the Prolocutor, in which he puts him in mind he promis'd him the Peruſal of his Defence taken in Writing by the publick Notaries; and that he ſhould have the Liberty of making Additions, or Alterations, as he thought fit, and that a Copy of his Anſwer to the Three Queſtions ſhould be given him. He lets him know his Promiſe was not made good, and expoſtulates further for their precipitating the Sentence, and unreaſonably ſtreightning him in time. Cranmer in his Letter

The Archbiſhops Letter to the Privy Council.

ter to the Privy Council complains much in the ſame manner of the Unfairneſs of the Management: That the Diſputation was ſcandalouſly tumultuary and hurried: That the crowding the hearing into one Day maim'd his Defence, and that he had no Opportunity of offering the Twentieth Part of what he had to ſay. That the way for diſcuſſing the Queſtions fairly, and diſcovering the Truth, had been to have permitted both Parties to ſtrike out at length, to ſpend their whole Force, and ſhew how well they were furniſh'd. And therefore their cutting off the Diſpute before it could be brought to an Iſſue, he thought had no clear meaning, and look'd as if they were afraid to venture their Cauſe any farther. In the beginning and cloſe of this Addreſs, the Archbiſhop intreats the Lords of the Council to intercede for his Pardon with the Queen. The Crime with which he charges himſelf is his ſubſcribing the late King's Will in Prejudice of her Majeſties Title. This Letter was put into Weſton's Hands, who went to London to acquaint the Queen with the Proceedings at Oxford. He open'd the the Archbiſhops Letter upon the Road, and not liking the Contents ſent it back. (q)

A Declaration touching matters of Belief ſet forth by ſeveral of the Reform'd Clergy in Priſon.

The Beginning of this Summer ſome of the Proteſtant Clergy impriſon'd in the Fleet, the Kings Bench, the Marſhalſea, and Newgate, publiſh'd a Declaration of their Belief. The Reaſon of their ſetting forth this Paper was, becauſe of a Report that the Government intended to ſend them to Oxford or Cambridge, to diſpute as Cranmer and the reſt had lately done. They aſſign ſeveral Reaſons for declining this Way of Tryal: And here they lay very heavy Imputations upon the Univerſities. They charge them with Partiality and foul Dealing, that they had already declar'd themſelves of a contrary Sentiment: That they had remarkably diſcover'd their Diſaffection, and aim'd more at Victory than Truth: That by what had paſs'd already 'twas evident they were govern'd by ſecular Views and Motives of Ambition: And therefore both by the Precept and Practice of our Saviour, they had learn'd not to caſt Pearl before them. They complain farther that the Laws of Diſputation were broken at Oxford, and as for themſelves they had been kept Eight or Nine Months in Priſon, without being allow'd Books, Paper, Pen, and Ink, or convenient Apartments for Study. They likewiſe excepted againſt the Indifferency of the Notaries, and that Copies of what paſs'd in the Diſpute were not granted.

For theſe Reaſons theſe Preachers, as Fox calls them, decline entring upon a Conference with their Adverſaries, unleſs they may be allow'd to defend their Cauſe before the Queen and Council, or both Houſes of Parliament. Unleſs theſe Conditions are granted, they refuſe to argue the Points in Difference in the cuſtomary Methods of Diſputation. But if the other Party think fit to write, they are ready to anſwer their Objections, and confirm their own Doctrines by the Authority of the Church, and Fathers of the beſt Character and Antiquity. They declare their Reſolution to maintain their Faith to the laſt Extremities: And after a ſtrong Proteſtation of their Loyalty, exhorting the People to Paſſive Obedience, preſſing that Duty to the laſt Degree of Submiſſion, and praying for the Queen, they proceed to the Articles of their Belief.

They profeſs to receive all the Books of the Old and New Teſtament as written by the Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt: But they don't mention the Number of theſe Books, or the Extent of the Canon. They believe the Catholick Church, and that thoſe who refuſe to hear the Church, when ſhe commands from the inſpired Writings, ought to be eſteem'd no better than Heathens: They own the Apoſtles Creed, the Four General Councils of Epheſus, Nice, Conſtantinople, and Chalcedon: The Athanaſian Creed: The Summaries of Faith in the Writings of Irenæus, and Tertullian, and that profeſs'd by Pope Damaſus. They reſolve Juſtification wholly into the Mercy of God through Chriſt, and that 'tis only to be diſcover'd by Faith: This Faith, as they affirm, goes higher than Opinion, and imports a certain Perſwaſion wrought in the Mind by the Holy Ghoſt, together with a Submiſſion of the Will to the Commands of God. And under this Head they cenſure the Popiſh Doctrines of free Will, Works of Supererogation, Merit, Neceſſity of auricular Confeſſion, and making Satisfaction to God in Diſcipline and Penance.

They declare Divine Service ought to be perform'd in a Language underſtood by the People, and not in Latin. They condemn Invocation of Saints, and that we ought to addreſs none but God Almighty in our Devotions. That every Man's Condition is unalterably fix'd at his Death: And from that Moment he is either happy or miſerable for ever: And thus he either needs no Aſſiſtance, or the Remedy can't reach him. Upon theſe Grounds they condemn the Belief of Purgatory, Trentals, and the cuſtomary Suffrages for the Dead made neceſſary by the Papiſts, as the Doctrine of Antichriſt: They declare the Sacraments of Baptiſm and the Lord's Supper, ought to be adminiſtred purſuant to the Inſtitution of our Saviour as far as the Subſtance of the Command reaches: And that they are no longer Sacraments than they are us'd; and us'd for that End for which they were appointed: And here they condemn the maiming the Lord's Supper, and communicating the Laity only under one kind, as Antichriſtian. They paſs the ſame Cenſure upon Tranſubſtantiation, the Adoration of the Sacrament, reſerving and carrying it in Proceſſions, and maintaining the Maſs to be a propitiatory Sacrifice for the Quick and Dead; and under the ſame Claſs of Antichriſtian Doctrine, they put the prohibiting Marriage as unlawful, to any Perſons under whatever Diſtinctions or Employment.

Miles Coverdale late Biſhop of Exeter, tho' not in Priſon, ſubſcrib'd this Confeſſion. *

Some Irregularities of the Reform'd.

About this Time ſome of the Reform'd were remarkably ungovern'd in their Zeal. For inſtance: There was a Cat hung upon a Gallows in Cheapſide, and ſomething of the Habit of a Prieſt put upon her: This Figure was carried to the Biſhop of London, and ſhewn in the Pulpit at Paul's Croſs by Dr. Pendilton. Not long after after a Piſtol was diſcharg'd at this Pendilton in the ſame Place: The Bullet drove into the Church Wall, and miſs'd him very narrowly. (r) To theſe Diſorders I ſhall ſubjoin another which look'd like a deeper Contrivance. For the purpoſe, one Elizabeth Crofts had been practis'd with to ſet up an Impoſture; ſhe deliver'd very offenſive Diſcourſe through a Wall near Alderſgate in London. The Matter was ſo artificially manag'd that the Voice was heard, but no Perſon diſcover'd. This Spirit in the Wall as it was call'd, was cried up for a moſt miraculous Intelligence from the other World: Some ſaid 'twas an Angel, and others made it no leſs than the immediate Warning of the Holy Ghoſt. The Sound was convey'd by a Whiſtle given her for that purpoſe by one Drake, Servant to Sir Anthony Nevill. She had ſeveral Aſſiſtants to carry on the Cheat. Theſe Confederates mixing with the Crowd undertook to expound the Spirit, and deliver'd the Oracle in ſeditious Language againſt the Queen, and the Prince of Spain; and declaim'd ſtrongly againſt the Maſs, againſt Confeſſion, and ſuch other Doctrines of the Anti-reform'd. All this was confeſs'd by the Maid her ſelf upon a Scaffold at Pauls Croſs.

There were likewiſe ſome malicious Reports ſpread, that the Queen was with Child. The Government had reaſon to be concern'd at ſo infamous a Story: The Queen therefore wrote to the Juſtices of Peace in Norfolk to trace the Calumny, and find out thoſe who ſet it on foot. The Earl of Suſſex examin'd a great many, but could not fix it.

Theſe it muſt be own'd were very unjuſtifiable Sallies. What could be more provoking to the Court, than to ſee the Queens Honour aſperſed, their Religion inſulted, their Preachers ſhot at in the Pulpit, and a lewd Impoſture play'd againſt the Government? Had the Reform'd been more ſmooth and inoffenſive in their Behaviour, had the eminent Clergy of that Party publiſh'd an Abhorrence of ſuch unwarrantable Methods, 'tis poſſible ſome may ſay, they might have met with gentler Uſage, and prevented the Perſecution from flaming out. But fair Meaning does not always manage to the beſt Advantage. Beſides, many of theſe Men being ſhut up in Priſon, 'tis probable they might not be certainly inform'd of matter of Fact. To which I may add, that ſomething of this kind had been done already.

The Articles of the Queens Marriage being ſettled, as has been related, Philip Prince of Spain arriv'd at Southampton on the Nineteenth of July: From whence after ſome Days Repoſe he ſet forward for Wincheſter, where he was received by the Queen with a ſplendid Train of Quality of both Sexes. They were married in the Cathedral on St. James's Day by the Biſhop of Wincheſter. As ſoon as the Solemnity was over, Figuera the Emperors Ambaſſador preſented Philip with his Fathers Reſignation of the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily. Upon which they were both proclaimed by Sound of Trumpet with the following Titles. Philip and Mary by the Grace of God, King and Queen of England, France, Naples, Jeruſalem, Ireland, Defenders of the Faith; Princes of Spain and Sicily, Archdukes of Auſtria, Dukes of Milan, Burgundy, and Brabant, Counts of Hapsbourg, Flanders, and Tirol. At the proclaiming this Style, the King and Queen appear'd Hand in Hand, with Two Swords carried before them: This was done for a Circumſtance of Pomp, and to mark their diſtinct Capacity in the Government.

The Arrival of King Philip.

The Marriage ſolemniz'd.

Mary Queen.

From Wincheſter they remov'd to Baſing, and thence to Windſor, where Philip was inſtall'd Knight of the Garter. From hence the Court remov'd to Richmond, from Richmond to Suffolk Place in Southwark: From whence they made a magnificent Cavalcade through the Principal Streets in London.

August 12.

King Philip being entertain'd in ſo pompous a manner, endeavour'd to recommend himſelf to the Engliſh, and make them ſenſible they were like to be no Loſers by the Marriage. To this purpoſe he imported a vaſt Maſs of Treaſure. 'Twas carried to the Tower in Twenty Carts: Each of them laden with Seven and Twenty Cheſts of Silver Bullion, each Cheſt being a Yard and Four Inches long. This was done in the beginning of October; and ſome few Months after, another great Remittance of Gold and Silver arriv'd from Spain. There were Ninety Nine Horſes and Two Carriages employ'd in conveying it to the Tower. (s) Thoſe who were diſaffected to the Government, conſtrued this Appearance of Friendſhip to a harſh Meaning. 'Twas deſign'd they ſaid, to purchaſe the Conſtitution, and bribe the Parliament into the Court Meaſures. King Philip to ingratiate himſelf farther, prevail'd with the Queen for diſcharging the Priſoners in the Tower. This Favour comprehended thoſe who had concerted the Rebellion with Wyat, engag'd with the Duke of Northumberland, or were put up upon the Score of Religion. And thus Holdgate Archbiſhop of York, Ten Knights, and ſeveral others of Diſtinction were ſet at Liberty. But nothing look'd more particularly honourable in King Philip, than his procuring the Enlargement of the Princeſs Elizabeth, and Courtney Earl of Devonſhire.

(s) Stow Annal.

To return to the Church, September this Year Bonner Biſhop of London made a Viſitation. To bring every thing back to the Uſages of the Roman Communion, he ſet forth Thirty Seven Articles of Enquiry, upon which Six Men in every Pariſh were ſworn to preſent ſuch as they found faulty. The greateſt Part of rhem relate to the Management of the Archdeacons, Officials, and Pariſh Prieſts. (t) Not long after Bonner diſpatch'd an Order to all his Clergy, in which he complains ſome diſorderly People had taken the Images out of Churches, and painted ſeveral Texts of Scripture upon the Wall: That they had miſ-tranſlated theſe Texts for the countenancing Licentiouſneſs and Error: For bringing the Sacrament of the Altar, the Faſts and Feaſts into Diſeſteem, and to aboliſh the laudable Cuſtoms of the Church. In conſideration of this Misbehaviour (as he calls it) he injoins the Clergy to ſee theſe Texts defac'd by the Church wardens. (u)

About this time the Queen drew up a Scheme under her own Hand, for diſcharging the Reformation from Point to Point, and returning Religion to its former Condition. It ſtands in the Form of Directions to her Council, the Reader ſhall have it in the Queens Words.

"First, that ſuch as have Commiſſion to " talk with my Lord Cardinal at his firſt Co" ming, touching the Goods of the Church,
" ſhould have Recourſe to him, at the leaſt
" once in a Week, not only for putting thoſe
" Matters in Execution, as much as may be,
" before the Parliament, but alſo to underſtand of of him, which way might be beſt to bring to good Effect thoſe Matters, that have been begun concerning Religion. Both touching good Preaching, I wiſh that may ſupply, and overcome the evil Preaching in time paſt; and alſo to make a ſure Proviſion, that no evil Books ſhall either be Printed, Bought, or Sold, without juſt Puniſhment therefore.

“ I think it ſhould be well done, that the Univerſities and Churches of this Realm, ſhould be viſited by ſuch Perſons, as my Lord Cardinal, with the reſt of you, may be well aſſured, to be worthy and ſufficient Perſons, to make a true and juſt Account thereof, remitting the Choice of them to him and you.

The Queen's Direction to the Privy Council touching Religion.

“ Touching Puniſhment of Hereticks, we thinketh it ought to be done without Raſhneſs, not leaving in the mean while to do Juſtice to ſuch, as by Learning would ſeem to deceive the Simple: And the reſt ſo to be uſed, that the People might well perceive them not to be Condemn'd without juſt Occaſion, whereby they ſhall both underſtand the Truth, and beware to do the like: And eſpecially within London, I would wiſh none to be Burnt, without ſome of the Councils Preſence, and both there and every where good Sermons at the ſame.

“ I verily believe that many Benefices ſhould not be in one Man's Hands, but after ſuch ſort as every Prieſt might look to his own Charge, and remain Reſident there, whereby they ſhould have but one Band to diſcharge towards God, whereas now they have many, which I take to be the Cauſe, that in moſt Parts of this Realm, there is overmuch want of good Preachers, and ſuch as ſhould with their Doctrine overcome the evil diligence of the abuſed Preachers in the time of the Schiſm, not only by their Preaching, but by their good Example, without which in my Opinion, their Sermons ſhall not ſo much Profit, as I wiſh. And like as their good Example on their Behalf, ſhall undoubtedly do much good; ſo I Account my ſelf bound on my behalf alſo, to ſhew ſuch Example, in encouraging, and maintaining thoſe Perſons well, doing their Duty, not forgetting in the mean while, to Correct and Puniſh them which do contrary, that it may be evident to all this Realm, how I diſcharge my Conſcience therein, and Miniſter True Juſtice in ſo doing.

By theſe Directions, the Reader may ſee, the Queen was reſolv'd to proceed to Sanguinary Rigors, in Caſe gentler Applications came ſhort of her Purpoſe. By what is mention'd in the beginning of her Diſcourſe, it appears Cardinal Pool was ſhortly expected: That there were ſome difficulties to be got over, in order to the reſtoring the Papal Supremacy in the next Parliament. The main obſtacle was the Apprehenſions, the Temporalty lay under, of parting with their Abbey, and Chauntry Lands. Theſe Jealouſies hindred the Point from being carried in the laſt Seſſions. And therefore without relaxing upon this Head, there was no proſpect of admitting the Popes Claim, and coming to an Accommodation. The Parliament met on the Twelfth of November, and to bring them to a diſpoſition towards Compliance, the King and Queen had promis'd the Reſtitution of the Church Lands ſhould be drop'd; the Cardinal likewiſe is ſaid to have given ſome private Aſſurance of Satisfaction in this matter.

Cardinal Pool's Arrival.

The Arrival of this Prelate being now expected 'twas thought fit to repeal his Attainder before his coming. This was look'd on as a neceſſary regard to his Character. He came to London on the Twenty Fourth of November, and Four Days after came into the Parliament Houſe, which was then the great Chamber at White-hall, by reaſon of the Queen's Indiſpoſition. The King and Queen ſitting under a State, and the Lords and Commons being preſent, the Lord Chancellor Gardiner, acquainted both Houſes with the Cardinals Character and Buſineſs, and hop'd they would follow their Majeſty's Example, and receive him with a ſuitable regard.

After this recommendation, the Cardinal ſtood up, and addreſſing himſelf to the Lords and Commons, made a Speech to this Effect.

Cardinal Pool's Speech to both Houſes of Parliament.

“ In the firſt Place he return'd the Queen, and the Two Houſes Thanks, for repealing the Attainder, and reſtoring him to the privilege of appearing amongſt them with Safety and Honour. After this, he enters upon the Subject of his Commiſſion: And acquaints them that as they had been pleas'd to return him the Advantages of his Birthright, ſo his Principal Buſineſs was to reſtore the Nation to its antient Nobility: To this purpoſe, he had an Authority from his Holineſs, to make them Part of the Catholick Church. That the Apoſtolick See had a particular regard for this Iſland: And that to this, the Pope ſeem'd to be led by the directions of Providence, which has given a Preference to this Country, by making it one of the firſt Provinces that receiv'd the Chriſtian Faith: That the Brittains who were brought into the Church, by the Inſtructions of the Apoſtolick See, were not made Chriſtians by degrees, and diſtance of Time, but were all converted, as it were, at once: That after the miſ-behavior of this People had made them unworthy of this Bleſſing, and brought a Pagan Nation in upon them, yet the Country was ſo far the Care of Providence, that Heatheniſm was quickly diſcharg'd, and the Saxons brought over to the Chriſtian Belief. Thus, their being made Part of the Catholick Church, and rais'd to a Nobility of the beſt kind, tho' 'twas principally owing to the Divine Favour, yet God was pleas'd to make the Apoſtolick See, the Inſtrument of this Happineſs. That from this Time forward, the Engliſh, with the reſt of Chriſtendom, had all along continued in the Faith of the Roman Church, and treated the Apoſtolick See with the higheſt regard: And as an Inſtance of their Obſervance, ſeveral of their King's did not think it enough to pay a Submiſſion to the Popes Authority, without making a Voyage to Rome in Perſon. For theſe Princes thought they could not go too far in acknowledging the Benefits of their Countries Converſion. Neither were the Engliſh ſlender Proficients in Religion, and Letters: For when Charles the Great founded the Univerſity of Paris, he ſent for our Countryman Alcuinus, to make Regulations for that Society, and form them to Piety and Learning.

“ The Cardinal took notice that Adrian the Fourth an Engliſhman, converted Norway, and out of an Affection to his native Country, “gave Henry the Second the Sovereignty of Ireland. To recount with what diſtinction and peculiarity of reſpect, the Engliſh had been treated by the See of Rome, would be too tedious an undertaking, neither ſhould he mention the Misfortunes which have purſued them ſince their Defection. And that the ſame Meaſures have been attended with great Calamities in other Countries. Thus by breaking off their Correſpondence, and withdrawing their regard from the Roman See, the Chriſtians of Aſia, and the Greek Church, loſt their Empire, and their Freedom, and ſunk under the Conqueſt of the Turks. And to give a freſher Example of this unhappy Conduct, into how many Sects and Factions has Germany been divided, and how miſerably harraſs'd with Civil Wars, ſince their going off from the Centre of Unity, and the Head of the Chriſtian Communion?

“If we enquire into the Engliſh Revolt, we ſhall find, ſays his Eminence, Avarice and Senſuality the principal Motives: And that 'twas firſt ſtarted and carried on by the unbridled Appetite and Licentiouſneſs of a ſingle Perſon. And tho' 'twas given out there would be a vaſt Acceſſion of Wealth to the Publick, yet this expectation dwindled to nothing; the Crown was left in Debt, and the Subject generally ſpeaking, more impoveriſh'd than ever. And as to Religion, People were tied up to Forms, and hamper'd with Penalties; and to ſpeak plainly, there was more liberty of Conſcience in Turky, than in England.

“That the Church of Rome might have recover'd her Juriſdiction by Force, and had the offer of the greateſt Princes in Europe, to aſſiſt her in her Pretentions. However, ſhe was willing to wave this Advantage, and apply to none but friendly Expedients. That tho' the defection was general, and ſtrongly ſettled, yet the goodneſs of God interpos'd to our Relief, and that at a Time when 'twas leaſt ſolicited and deſerv'd. For when the true Religion ſeem'd wholy Extinguiſh'd, when the Churches were defac'd, the Altars thrown down, the Holy Ceremonies diſcharg'd, and things brought to the Point of Deſpair, there were ſome remainders of the true Faith: The Queen's Highneſs continued firm, to whom the ſaying of the Prophet may be applied without Flattery, Ecce quaſi Derelicta.

“'Tis well worth our Recollection to Conſider, how wonderfully God has preſerv'd her Majeſty. What contrivances were ſet on foot to defeat her Succeſſion? What Numbers Conſpir'd againſt her? What Preparations were furniſh'd to deſtroy her? Yet notwithſtanding the diſadvantage of her Sex, the ſurprize of the Juncture, the inequality of her Forces, ſhe ſucceeded againſt her Enemies, and made her way to the Throne. Now what can all this unexpected Succeſs be attributed to, but the great Goodneſs and Protection of Almighty God? For humanly ſpeaking, there was nothing appear'd in her Majeſty's Affairs, but only Deſpair: That the ſame Providence had Eſtabliſh'd the Queen in her Right, for recovering the True Religion, and exterminating Error. And to enable her Grace the better, for the bringing about this bleſſed Purpoſe, ſhe was now engag'd in Marriage with a Prince of the ſame Belief: That the Emperor, this King's Father, had remarkably concern'd himſelf for retrieving the Unity of the Church: That tho' the Wars breaking out on all ſides, had diſappointed his Purpoſe, yet 'twas to be hop'd, that what his Imperial Majeſty had begun, would be carried on to a happier Iſſue by his Son. To procure this Bleſſing, God had ordain'd Two diſtinct Independent Powers, the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical. That Princes were God's Repreſentatives in the firſt Inſtance, and the Pope in the latter. That the Management of the Temporal Sword was put into the Hands of the King and Queen, by immediate Commiſſion from God Almighty: And that they had no Superior, with reſpect to Secular Authority.

“As to the Power of the Keys, and the Government of the Church, 'twas delegated by our Saviour, to the Biſhops of Rome, and annex'd to the Apoſtolick See, by ſpecial Prerogative. And for Proof of this peculiarity of Juriſdiction, we have, continues the Cardinal, the Authority of the holy Scriptures, the Preſident of the Apoſtles, and the unanimous Conſent of the Fathers, from the beginning of Chriſtianity, to our own Times. From this See I am ſent hither, with the Character of Legate, and have full Powers in my Commiſſion: But notwithſtanding my being entruſted with the Keys, I am not in a Condition to uſe them, 'till ſome Obſtructions are removed on your Part. But before I proceed farther, I muſt ſolemnly declare I have no prejudicial Inſtructions to any Perſon. My Commiſſion is not to pull down, but to build, to reconcile, not to Cenſure, to invite, but without Compulſion. My Buſineſs is not to proceed by way of Retroſpection, or to queſtion things already ſettled. As for whats paſs'd, it ſhall be all over-look'd and forgotten.

“However, to qualify your ſelves for this Advantage, 'twill be neceſſary to repeal thoſe Laws, which have broken the Catholick Unity, and divided you from the Society of the Church. (w)

This Speech deliver'd with the Advantage of the Cardinals Quality and Character, was not without its Effect, tho' ſome of the Houſe of Commons took the Freedom to declare their diſlike of reviving the Popes Authority. But the Majority being ſatisfied for the reaſons above-mention'd, an Addreſs was preſented by both Houſes to the King and Queen. The Subſtance of it was to intreat their Majeſties to lay it before the Cardinal, adding with what regret they recollected their withdrawing their Obedience from the Apoſtolick See, and giving their conſent to any Statutes derogatory to his Holineſſes Juriſdiction; promiſing that with their Majeſties Concurrence, they would do their utmoſt to repeal all ſuch Laws. They conclude with an humble Requeſt to the King and Queen, to intercede for their Abſolution, and that they may be receiv'd as Penitent Children into the Communion of the Church.

Things being thus adjuſted, both Houſes attended the Court on St. Andrew's Day, where in the Preſence of the King and Queen, the Lord Chancellor ask'd them whether they were pleas'd to Addreſs the Cardinal for their Pardon, to acknowledge the Popes Supremacy, and return to the Unity of the Church? Some of them anſwer'd Yea, and the Silence of the reſt reſt being taken for conſent, a Petition was preſented to their Majeſties, in the Name of the Parliament. When this was Read, the Members ſtood up, with a deſign to move the Cardinal. But his Eminence being willing to ſpare them that Mortification, prevented their Requeſt, and acquainted them he was ready to give the ſatisfaction deſired; and after his Legantine Commiſſion was Read, (x) he declared how acceptable the return of a Sinner was to God Almighty, and that the Holy Angels rejoic'd at the recovery of this Kingdom. Upon this, they all Kneel'd, and receiv'd Abſolution for themſelves, and the whole Nation, in the following Form.

(x) See Records N°. 73.

The Abſolution pronounc'd by the Cardinal.

Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which with his moſt pretious Blood, hath redeem'd and waſh'd us from all our Sins and Iniquities, that he might purchaſe unto himſelf a glorious Spouſe, without Spot or Wrinkle; And whom the Father hath appointed Head over all his Church, He by his Mercy Abſolve you. And we by Apoſtolick Authority given unto us, (by the moſt holy Lord Pope Julius the Third, his Vicegerent here on Earth) do Abſolve, and Deliver you, and every of you, with the whole Realm, and the Dominions thereof, from all Hereſy, and Schiſm, and from all and every Judgment, Cenſures and Pains, for that Cauſe incurred. And alſo we do reſtore you again unto the Unity of our Mother, the holy Church, as in our Letters more plainly it ſhall appear; in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt.

After this Form was pronounc'd, they went in Solemn Proceſſion to the Chappel Royal, where Te Deum was Sung. And becauſe this return to the Communion of the Catholick Church (as they call'd it) fell on St. Andrew's Day, the Cardinal procur'd the paſſing an Order in the Convocation, for keeping that Feſtival with an Additional Office, and bringing it up to the Solemnity of the greater Holydays. On Sunday following, the Submiſſion of the Two Houſes to the Papal Authority, and the Abſolution given by the Cardinal was repeated by the Lord Chancellor in a Sermon at St. Paul's Croſs: His Text was Rom. 13. Knowing the Time, that it is now high Time, to awake out of Sleep, &c. From theſe Words, amongſt other things, he obſerves, that when King Henry the Eighth was preſs'd with a Rebellion in the North, "he reſolv'd to return the Pope his Supremacy. "But this reſolution came to nothing: The Hour was not yet come. For had the matter gone forward under ſuch Circumſtances of Difficulty, ſome would have ſaid the King had been over-aw'd into Juſtice. After this, Gardiner and Knevet, were ſent Ambaſſadors to the Emperor, to requeſt his Mediation for bringing the Pope and the King to a good underſtanding, and to ſmooth the way, for renewing the former Correſpondence between them: But the time was not yet come: For the Juncture might have made the King's Meaſures miſunderſtood, and interpreted his Compliance to reaſons of State. "In the beginning of King Edward's Reign, the Buſineſs of Reconciliation was moved, but neither was that a proper time: For the King being then a Child, he could not have had a ſhare in the Submiſſion. In ſhort; he told them this was the time which Providence ſeem'd to have reſerv'd for ſo great a Bleſſing. (y)

The next Day an Embaſſy was reſolv'd to Pope Julius the Third, to make him a tender of the Kingdom's Obedience. The Perſons Employ'd, were Anthony Brown Viſcount Montacute. Thirlby Biſhop of Ely, and Sir Edward Karne, When the News of this Negotiation came to Rome, there was ſolemn Proceſſions order'd for all Italy. The Pope Confirm'd the Proceedings of his Legate, and Publiſh'd a Jubilee, with a Clauſe in the Bull to Account for anticipating the Period. Like the Father of the Prodigal, 'twas highly reaſonable, he ſaid, to expreſs an unuſual Satisfaction for the recovery of his Son that was loſt. (z) But before the Embaſſy arriv'd, Julius died, and was ſucceeded by Marcellus the Second. This Pope was a Perſon of great Gravity and Virtue. And to ſhew his Acceſſion to the Chair, had not alter'd his Temper, nor made any unſerviceable Impreſſion, he intended a Reformation of his Court. His deſign was to retrench the Figure of the Prelates, to ſuppreſs unneceſſary Offices, and put a ſtop to exceſs in Expence. But he dying of an Apoplexy, within a Month after his Election, the Project miſcarry'd.

The Pope Dies.

An Embaſſy order'd to Rome.

Upon the Death of this Pope, the Queen endeavor'd to promote Cardinal Pool to the See of Rome. To this purpoſe ſhe Wrote to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the Earl of Arundel, and the Lord Paget, then at Calais, to Solicit the French Court in her Name, to diſpoſe the Conclave, to make Choice of Cardinal Pool. That they were to acquaint the French King ſhe was Govern'd by no private Regards. That the Cardinal was unacquainted with her concerning her ſelf in this matter: And that 'twas purely his Probity and Merit, which put her upon the undertaking. * But this Buſineſs miſcarried, and Marcellus was ſucceeded by Cardinal Caraffa, call'd Paul the Fourth, a Prelate of different Inclinations. This Pope was ſtrongly in the French Intereſt, and diſaffected both to the Emperor and Cardinal Pool.

To return to England; in the latter end of November, the Queen's being with Child was generally believ'd at Court: The Council ſent a Letter to Biſhop Bonner, to draw up a Form of Thankſgiving upon the Occaſion, and order Te Deum to be Sung in all Churches of his Dioceſe. This hopes of Iſſue prov'd a Mola, and had an ill Effect upon the Queen's Health. However, both her ſelf, and the Ladies of her Attendance believ'd otherwiſe at firſt. The Appearance, it ſeems, was ſo promiſing, that the Parliament did not queſtion the Truth on't: This is plain, by their making an Act to provide for the Education of the Queen's Iſſue, together with a Preamble of Thanks to God Almighty, for her being with Child. Upon this expectation, there were Prayers printed and diſpers'd about the Kingdom. The Purport of them was, that God would ſend the Queen a good Hour, ſupport her Government, and protect her from Rebellion. The Addreſs is made immediately to God, without any Application to Saints or Angels. This Prayer Fox takes the Freedom to ridicule, (b) which is ſomewhat extraordinary. Did this Martyrologiſt believe Dominion founded in Grace? Did he conceive the Queen's Title depended on her Orthodoxy? And that ſhe had forfeited her Crown by declaring for Popery? If this was not his Opinion, he muſt grant her Subjects were bound to pray for the Repoſe of her Government. There had been Two Rebellions in her Reign already, and therefore one would think 'twas highly ſeaſonable to Pray againſt a Third: However, Fox thought fit to rally their

(b) Fox Vol. 3. p. 116.

Fox exceeds in his Remark.

Devotion with this Sentence in the Margin, Cry up louder you Prieſts, peradventure your God is aſleep. As if their Devotions had been directed to Baal or Aſhteroth: As if the Papiſts had worſhip'd one God, and the Proteſtants another. I can't perceive the Martyrologiſt had any right to Elijah's Sarcaſm. His Zeal without doubt was too much imbitter'd: He was plainly ridden by his Paſſion, and puſh'd by Diſaffection, towards Profaneneſs.

Jan. the 1ſt.

It muſt be confeſs'd, eagerneſs of Temper, and injudicious Averſion carried ſome of the Reform'd to Practiſes by no means defenſible. For inſtance; one Roſe a Clergy-man, and about Thirty honeſt Citizens more, as Fox calls them, meeting in a Houſe in Bow-Church-Yard to receive the Communion, were apprehended and committed. But theſe Men were much to Blame in one Sentence of their Devotions, they pray'd, that God would turn Queen Mary's Heart from Idolatry, or elſe ſhorten her Days. Thus much is confeſs'd by Fox, tho' he forgets to cenſure the Diſloyalty. Biſhop Hooper then in the Fleet, wrote a conſolatory Letter to Roſe and the reſt, in which he does not give them any direct Reprimand for their Miſbehaviour, but puts them in mind in General, that God commands us to Pray for thoſe that Perſecute us: Not to revile any Magiſtrate, or apply to violent Remedies: In the cloſe, he prays God to ſend them Patience and Charity, and that they may ſtand firm in maintaining the Truth. By recommending this Reſignation and Paſſiveneſs, 'tis poſſible, he might be inform'd of their uncharitable Petition.

An Unchriſtian Prayer with relation to the Queen.

Id.

However, 'tis certain the report of this intemperate Zeal occaſion'd an Act of Parliament, by which 'tis made High Treaſon for any Perſon to Pray that God would ſhorten the Queens Days, or take her out of the way, or make any ſuch malicious Prayer importing the ſame Senſe. The Preamble cites the Petition abovemention'd as unqueſtionable matter of Fact: And then ſubjoins that ſuch Prayer was never heard or read to have been uſed by any good Chriſtians againſt any Prince tho' he were a Pagan and Infidel, and much leſs againſt any Chriſtian Prince.

An Act to prevent ſuch Miſbehaviour.

The Statute concludes with a Proviſo, that if any Perſons Indicted for any thing of this kind done during the preſent Seſſion, ſhall ſhew themſelves Penitent, and ſubmit to the Queens Mercy, that then no Judgment or Attainder of Treaſon ſhall paſs upon them, but they ſhall receive ſuch Corporal Puniſhment on this ſide Death as the Court ſhall appoint. (c)

The moſt remarkable Bill paſs'd this Parliament, was a Repeal of all Statutes made againſt the See of Rome in the two late Reigns. To diſpoſe the Temporalty to a Concurrence in ſo nice an Affair, and remove all Jealouſies of the Clergy's inſiſting on the Reſtitution of Church Lands, the Convocation was prevail'd with to addreſs the King and Queen to intercede with the Cardinal to drop this Article. The Addreſs is pen'd to this Effect.

The Convocations Addreſs that the Cardinal would not inſiſt on the Reſtitution of Church Lands.

“We the Biſhops and Clergy of the Province of Canterbury aſſembled in Convocation according to cuſtom, during the Seſſions of Parliament, with all due Humility and Regard acquaint your Majeſty's, that notwithſtanding by our reſpective Stations and Offices, the Care and Protection of the Rights and Privileges of the Church are intruſted with us; for which Reaſon we ought to have recourſe to the Remedies of Law, and endeavour the recovering whatever has been taken away in this Kingdom during the late Schiſm. However, we muſt freely confeſs that the reſtoring theſe Eſtates is a very difficult, and in a manner, an impracticable Underſtanding. And conſidering Titles have been ſo often transfer'd ſince the firſt Alienation, Property would be ſtrangely intangled by purſuing an attempt of this Nature: And over and above, the Union with the Catholick Church, ſo happily begun by your Majeſty's, might probably be check'd in it's Progreſs. We therefore who value the publick Tranquility more than our private Advantage, and the ſaving ſo many Souls above all ſecular Intereſt whatever, (not ſeeking our own but thoſe things which are Jeſus Chriſts) humbly beſeech your Majeſty's to intimate our Requeſt to the Lord Cardinal Pool, Legate to our Lord Pope Julius III. and to intercede with his Eminence, that purſuant to the Powers granted by his Holineſs, he would pleaſe to prefer the Benefit of the Community to all private regards, and give up the Claim of thoſe Eſtates which might otherways be inſiſted on by the Spiritualty or Religious: And that the Lord Cardinal Legate would relax upon theſe Points either wholly or in part, at his Diſcretion: Only we deſire his Eminence would ſhew himſelf eaſy and gentle upon this Occaſion; declaring withal, that whatever ſhall be done by him in the Premiſes ſhall be taken as confirm'd by our Conſent. And farther, we humbly intreat your Majeſty's that thoſe Branches of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, without which we are in no condition to execute our Functions, and aſſiſt our Charge, and which have been wreſted from us by the injuſtice of the late Times, may be reſtored: And that all thoſe Laws which diſable us in our Buſineſs, and check our ſpiritual Commiſſion, may be repeal'd to the Honour of God and your Majeſty's, and the common Benefit both Temporal and Eternal of the whole Realm. (d)

This Addreſs was put in the Cardinal's Hands by the Lord Chancellor, the Prolocutor and Six other Members of the lower Houſe. This ſet the Cardinal at Eaſe in ſome meaſure, and diſcharg'd him from preſſing ſo unacceptable a Condition as reſtoring the Church Lands. The Temporalty would certainly have broken with him upon this Article: For as Fox writes, the Parliament had lately diſpatch'd an Expreſs to the Pope, to deſire his Holineſs to Confirm the alienations of the Abby and Chantry-Lands: And that without Satisfaction in this particular, there would be no Conceſſions on their Part. (e)

After complying upon this Head, the Parliament in their Bill move by way of Addreſs to their Majeſty's, that the Cardinal by Virtue of his Legantine Commiſſion may Diſpenſe in the following Caſes.

A Repeal of the Statutes againſt the See of Rome.

Firſt, “That all Biſhopricks, Cathedral Churches, Hoſpitals, Colleges, Schools, and other ſuch Foundations made by Authority of Parliament, or otherwiſe legally Eſtabliſh'd ſince the Schiſm, may be confirm'd and continued.

the ſcore of any other Canonical Reſtraint, may be confirm'd, and the Iſſue declar'd Legitimate.

That Inſtitutions of Benefices, and other Promotions Eccleſiaſtical, and Diſpenſations made according to the form of the Act of Parliament may be likewiſe confirm'd.

That all judicial Proceſſes made before any Ordinaries of this Realm, or before any delegates upon any Appeals, according to the order of the Laws of the Realm, may be likewiſe ratified and confirm'd.

And finally, that all Lands, Goods, or Chattels belonging to Archbiſhopricks, Biſhopricks, Abbyes, Priories, Chauntry's and Colleges ſettled on the Crown by Act of Parliament, and from thence convey'd to the Subject, by Gift, Purchaſe, Exchange, &c. ſhould remain uncontested in their preſent Condition: And that no Proprietor ſhould be diſturb'd by the Revival of any Claim on the Churches behalf: And that no Suits might be commenc'd, or Cenſures inflicted upon this Score, either by Authority from the Pope, a General Council, or on Pretence of any Canon, or Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution whatſoever.

(f) 1 & 2 Phil. & Mar. Cap. 8.

The Cardinals Diſpenſation inſerted in the Body of the Act, gratified the Parliament in all theſe Particulars. But tho' the Church Lands are wholly given up without the leaſt Innuendo of any farther reckoning, yet in the cloſe of the Inſtrument the Cardinal puts them in mind of the danger of Sacrilege, and how much they are concern'd to reſtore the Goods of the Church, meaning the Plate and Ornaments: He Exhorts them likewiſe to ſee a competent Proviſion made for thoſe Cures which have been lately ſtrip'd of their Maintenance.

“ This Diſpenſation is confirm'd by the Act. There is likewiſe a Confirmation of all Abby, Chauntry, and Biſhops Lands convey'd to King Henry VIII. and King Edward VI. by Act of Parliament or any other legal Aſſurance: And 'tis made Premunire to form any Proceſs in any Eccleſiaſtical Court within the Realm or without, contrary to the Laws of England, or to moleſt any Perſon for any Lands, Mannours, &c. above mention'd: 'Tis farther Enacted, that Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other ſpiritual Perſons having Juriſdiction, and no Lay Perſon, ſhall execute ſpiritual Authority in Places exempt. After which follows a Clauſe for ſaving the cuſtomary Privileges of both the Univerſities, of the Churches of Weſtminſter, Windſor and the Tower. And that thoſe Lords of Mannors who formerly enjoy'd Probat of Teſtaments ſhould loſe nothing by this Statute. And laſtly, to make the Church ſome Recompence for what had been taken away in the two late Reigns, the Statute of Mortmain is ſuſpended or diſpenc'd with for Twenty Years. This Act declares the Title of Supreme Head never rightfully belong'd to the Crown: However, all Inſtruments in which that Stile had been uſed ſhould be of Force, and that all Writings ſince the Queens Acceſſion to the Crown, where that Addition had been omitted, ſhould likewiſe paſs for legal Forms. And as to the Juriſdiction of the Pope, Biſhops, and Ordinaries, it was to be enlarg'd to the ſame extent in which it might lawfully have been exercis'd in the Twentieth Year of King Henry VIII.

An Addreſs of the lower Houſe of Convocation for recovering the Privileges of the Church.

Before I take leave of this Act it may not be Improper to acquaint the Reader with an Addreſs which the Lower Houſe of Convocation made to the Upper. The Deſign of it was to move for ſomething towards an Equivalent for giving up the Church Lands. In ſhort, this Addreſs, tho' not fully anſwer'd, ſeems to have been conſider'd in ſeveral Statutes made this Reign. The ſubſtance of the Addreſs digeſted into Twenty Eight Articles is as follows. They intreat the Biſhops to take Care, that in giving their concurrence to the Settlement of the Church Lands upon the Laity, nothing might paſs to the Prejudice of any Biſhop, or any other Eccleſiaſtical Perſon, with reſpect to any legal Right, Title, or Intereſt. And whereas by a Statute made in the Firſt Year of King Edward VI. for ſuppreſſing of Chauntries, Colleges, &c. there was a Proviſo for the Erecting Schools and Hoſpitals in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, which had hitherto not been perform'd, they requeſt their Lordſhips to move the King, the Queen, and Cardinal, that this Clauſe may be made good, to the full meaning of the Statute. Further, the Addreſs ſolicits that Tythes and Oblations lately alienated, may be return'd to the Church, and all Impropriations, excepting ſuch as are ſettled for the maintenance of the Clergy, of Univerſities and Schools, may be diſſolv'd by Act of Parliament, and the Revenues reſtored to the Parochial Churches: They ſuggeſt farther, that the Lands and Endowments of Prebends have been lately alienated from Cathedrals, and Impropriated Benefices ſettled in Lieu of them, to the decay of Hoſpitality and great dammage of the Church; they deſire their Lordſhips therefore to exert themſelves for redreſſing this Grievance. They likewiſe move that the Statute of Mortmaine made in the Seventh Year of King Edward I. and another to the ſame purpoſe paſs'd in the Fifteenth Year of King Richard II. may be repeal'd.

After theſe Preliminary Requeſts, the Addreſs proceeds to the mention of Twenty Eight Articles for the Reformation of the Church in Doctrine, Diſcipline, and Worſhip: I ſhall juſt touch ſome of the moſt Remarkable.

Firſt, they declare their Intention of coming to a Reſolution, whether thoſe who have preach'd Heretical and Seditious Doctrine ſhall be called before their Ordinaries, and oblig'd to a publick Recantation? And whether any Proceſs ſhall be form'd againſt them purſuant to the Canons of the Church?

They move the Lords Spiritual, that the late Archbiſhop Cranmer's Book written againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, the Schiſmatical Common-prayer-book and Ordinal, the Tranſlations of the Bible recited in a Statute made in the Reign of King Henry VIII. and all other Books containing any Heretical Doctrine may be burnt: And all Perſons who have ſuch Books, requir'd to bring them in to the Ordinary, or otherwiſe to be reputed Abettors of ſuch Tenents. That no ſuch Books may be Printed or Sold within the Realm, or Imported from foreign Parts, under heavy Penalties. That the Statutes againſt Hereticks, Lollards, and Preachers of falſe Doctrine, may be reviv'd. And that all Biſhops and other Ordinaries may be reſtor'd to the ſame Juriſdiction they injoyn'd in the Firſt Year of King Henry VIII. that the Statutes allowing Pluralities and Non-reſidence may be Repeal'd. That Simoniacal Contracts may be ſtrictly enquir'd into and Puniſh'd, and that Pa-

Patrons may loſe the Preſentation during their Lives for ſuch indirect management. That the Church with reſpect to Liberty, Authority, and Juriſdiction, may be reſtor'd to the Benefit of Magna Charta: Or at leaſt that theſe Privileges may be recover'd to the Condition they were in the Firſt Year of King Henry VIII. and that the intollerable Burthen of firſt Fruits, Tenths, and Subſidies, may be diſcharg'd. That no attachment of Premunire may be awarded againſt any Eccleſiaſtical Ordinary before the bringing a Prohibition. And that the King and Queen would pleaſe to command the Temporal Judges to explain the Statutes of Premunire, to ſtate the Subject, and give a full Recital of the Caſes in which any Perſon is liable to that Penalty. That the Statutes of Proviſors may not be wreſted to Illegal Conſtructions, nor ſtretch'd beyond the proper Senſe and Meaning of the Words. That the Statute of the Submiſſion of the Clergy made in the Twenty Fifth of Henry VIII. and all others made ſince the Firſt Year of that Prince in Derogation of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, may be repeal'd. That all Places exempt may be put under the Juriſdiction of their Spiritual Ordinaries. That the Pleas concerning Tythes within the City and Liberties of London, may not be tryed before the Lord Mayor. But that the Cognizance of this matter may be return'd to the Biſhops Court purſuant to antient uſage. That Tythes may be payed according to the Canon Law: And that Abby Lands exempted from payment of Tythes may be aſſign'd to proper Pariſhes, and chargeable with the payment of Tythes like other Eſtates. That Proviſion may be made for the payment of perſonal Tythes in Cities and elſewhere, as was uſually done in the Twenty Firſt Year of King Henry VIII. that ſuch Prieſts as were lately Married, and refuſe to diſengage and qualify themſelves for their Functions may have ſome uncreditable Diſtinction put upon them, and that Women who Married after Monaſtick Vows may be Divorc'd. That all Eccleſiaſtical Perſons who of their own voluntary Motion had rifled or defac'd any Churches, might be oblig'd to refund, and make Reparation. (g)

The Commons paſs'd a Bill for voiding all Leaſes made by married Prieſts: But the Lords being aware ſeveral alienations of Church Lands might ſuffer by ſuch a Proviſion, threw out the Bill.

The other Acts relating wholly to the State I ſhall paſs over: This Parliament was Diſſolv'd, as 'tis ſaid, on the Sixteenth of January. And on the Twenty Fifth following there was a ſolemn Proceſſion in London to give God Thanks for the Kingdoms return to the Catholick Church. The Solemnity was ornamented with 90 Croſſes: There were Eight Biſhops, and a Hundred and Sixty Prieſts and Clerks richly Habited. The Lord Mayor, the Aldermen, and the Common Council made part of the Appearance. When the Proceſſion was over they return'd to Maſs at St. Pauls where the King and Cardinal were preſent.

The Printed Statutes reckon the Diſſolution of the Parliament to the Sixteenth of January, but 'tis poſſible the Firſt Figure might be miſtaken: For the Learned Heylin writes they were Diſſolv'd on the Twenty Sixth, Fox ſeems to have been of the ſame Opinion by ſaying that on the Twenty Third of January all the Biſhops with the reſt of the Convocation attended the Cardinal at Lambeth: Now if the Convocation was not Diſſolv'd on the Twenty Third we may reaſonably Conclude the Parliament was ſtill ſitting. However, Fox does not expreſs himſelf clearly, whether the Convocation was then actually ſitting or not. He only takes Notice that the Cardinal order'd them to repair to their Cures: That he adviſ'd them to manage with Lenity and Moderation: And that they ſhould endeavour to recover their People by Perſwaſion and kind uſage, rather than apply to any rugged expedient.

Vol. 3.

The Cardinal's Commiſſion for abſolving the Province of Canterbury. Harmer append. p. 182.

To reinforce the Diſpenſation in the Act of Repeal, and give it a due Compaſs and Effect, the Cardinal granted a Commiſſion to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury for reconciling the Clergy and Laity of that Province. Neither is there any reaſon to queſtion the ſame Favours being granted to the Archbiſhoprick of York, and the Sees within that Juriſdiction. The Inſtrument extends to the abſolving all Perſons who repent their Miſcarriages, and deſire to be reſtor'd, from all Hereſies, Schiſm, Apoſtacies, from all Excommunications, ſuſpenſions, and other Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. And more particularly the Clergy who have receiv'd Orders from any Schiſmatical or Heretical Biſhops, officiated in Virtue of that Character, and complyed with any unallow'd Ceremonies, and Forms of Prayer, are abſolv'd, provided the Form and Intention of the Church was not omitted in their Ordination. They are likewiſe abſolv'd from all Cenſures to which they have made themſelves liable by Swearing againſt the Pope's Supremacy. The Breach of Vows, and quitting a Religious Life is likewiſe remitted to all thoſe concern'd. The Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, with whom during the Vacancy of the See, all ſpiritual Juriſdiction is lodg'd, are farther impower'd to Authoriſe the Parochial Clergy to abſolve the Laity, and reſtore them to the Communion of the Church. The form to be pronounc'd by the Curates runs thus.

Our Lord Jeſu Chriſt abſolve you, and by the Apoſtolick Authority to me granted and committed, I abſolve you from the Sentences of Excommunication, and from all other Cenſures and Pains into the which you be fall'n by reaſon of Hereſy and Schiſm, or any otherwiſe, and I reſtore you to the Unity of our Holy Mother the Church, and to the Communion of all Sacraments, diſpenſing with you for all manner of Irregularity, and by the ſame Authority I abſolve you from all your Sins in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt. Amen. (i)

He recommends gentle methods with the Reform'd.

The Cardinal as hath been obſerv'd, recommended gentle methods: He declar'd a ſtrong averſion to Extremity and Rigour: That the Clergy ought to compaſſionate the misfortunes of thoſe miſled. That Biſhops were Fathers, and ought to anſwer the tenderneſs of that Relation: That nothing could be more foreign to their Character than deſtroying their Children. That from his own experience he had obſerved rough Applications rather heighten'd ſuch a Diſtemper than cur'd it. That there was a great difference to be made between a Country juſt ſiez'd and infected but in a few; and another where the Malignity had time to ſpread, and reach'd all Ranks and Orders. That it was not to be expected People would be dragg'd out of their Errors all at once: Such ſudden Violence would rather puſh them upon Obſtinacy, and fix their Miſtakes: And therefore the better way was to give them time for Recollection, to argue them out of their Heterodoxy, and lead them back by gentle Degrees. That the Three Statutes reviv'd againſt Hereſy ſhould ſleep in the Execution, and only be made uſe of in Terrorem. That a ſtrict Reformation in the manners of the Clergy, would be a good Step towards recovering the Laity: And to this purpoſe, he ſuggeſted the reſtoring the Primitive Diſcipline. To this he added, the Emperor had adviſ'd the Queen not to make any Perſon uneaſy upon the ſcore of Conſcience: And that himſelf had been unfortunate in the Trials of Extremity.

Gardiner moves for Extremities in ſome Caſes.

The Lord Chancellor Gardiner was of a different Sentiment: He thought no Arguments would operate ſo ſtrongly as Penalties, and that the Terror of Fire and Faggot in ſome Caſes were the beſt Methods of Conviction: That where People were incorrigible, they ought to be capitally puniſh'd. But then he would have them begin with Hereticks of Diſtinction, and who were moſt inſtrumental in miſleading the reſt. This Advice was pointed againſt the Reform'd Biſhops. He was likewiſe of Opinion, that thoſe Preachers who appear'd moſt hardy and enterprizing, ſhould be made Examples: As for the Groſs of the People, he believ'd when their Leaders were taken off, they would recover of themſelves, and might ſafely be overlook'd. As to the Reformation of the Clergy, he approv'd the Thing, but thought it an unſeaſonable Expedient. That the Practice of ſuch Regulations would juſtifie the Clamours of the Hereticks, and bring the Hierarchy under more Diſadvantage.

Gardiner, beſides his old Quarrel for being impriſon'd and depriv'd, thought himſelf lately affronted by the Tranſlation of his Book de verâ Obedientiâ. (k) This Book, as the Reader may remember, was a ſtrong Contradiction to his preſent Practice: For here he had renounc'd the Popes Supremacy, argued for the Regale, and approv'd the Divorce between the King and Catherine of Spain. Some of thoſe who ſuffer'd took the Freedom to charge him with this Inconſiſtency. His Anſwer was, that the ſwearing againſt the Pope's Juriſdiction, was an unlawful Oath, like Herods, and ought to be broken: The ſeeing himſelf expos'd in Engliſh Print, ruffl'd his Humour farther, and provok'd him againſt the Reform'd. Bonner's Preface was likewiſe tranſlated, which might probably ſtir his Pride. He concurr'd with Gardiners ſanguinary Suggeſtions. Bonner was ſomewhat harſhly us'd in the late Reign: And being of a warm vindictive Temper, he might not be unpleas'd with an Opportunity of Revenge. The Queen and Council gave in to theſe Meaſures, as appears by ſeveral Orders of the Board. (l) And thus the Cardinals good Nature was overrul'd, and the Perſecution broke out upon the Reform'd.

The Preachers in Priſon addreſs the King, Queen, and Parliament.

“While the Parliament was ſitting, the Preachers impriſon'd made an Addreſs to the King, the Queen, and the Two Houſes, in defence of the Reformation. In the firſt Place, they intreat them to recollect their Severities againſt the Religion eſtabliſh'd in the Two late Reigns. They put them in mind that the Points had been ſettled with great Deliberation: That the Two Univerſities, and the moſt conſiderable Perſons for Learning in other Parts of the Kingdom, had been conſulted. That to undo what was thus unanimouſly agreed, was unſerviceable to the Memories of the Two Princes King Henry and King Edward, and a Blemiſh upon the Honour of the whole Nation: That great Uneaſineſs of Conſcience, and Judgments from Heaven, muſt follow ſuch meaſures of courſe. That ſince the diſcharging the true Religion, throwing out the Reform'd Offices, and bringing Superſtition and Idolatry into their Place, all the Orthodox Preachers have been remov'd, have been harraſs'd and rob'd, with ſuch Cruelty and Injuſtice, as exceeds the Barbarity of Turks and Infidels.

“They conjure their Majeſties and the Parliament, by every thing ſacred and valuable; to conſider the lamentable State of Religion, and how much the Nation is likely to ſuffer in their Eternal Intereſt. They earneſtly deſire therefore the Church may be retriev'd from this deplorable Condition. As for themſelves, they requeſt they may be brought before the Council, or Parliament; and if they fail either in maintaining the Homilies and Service ſet forth in the late Reign, or in proving the Unlawfulneſs of the Liturgick Forms us'd at preſent, if they fail in making good either of theſe Points, and that by Catholick Principles and Authorities, they are willing to be burnt at the Stake, or ſubmit to any other Death of Ignominy and Torture, which their Majeſties ſhall pleaſe to appoint them. (m)

Not long after they made another Addreſs to their Majeſties and Parliament of a reſembling Contents: They complain they have been thrown out of their Eſtates, their Goods ſeiz'd, and their Books taken from them: “That they have been miſreported to their Majeſties, reproach'd for Hereticks, cloſely confin'd for Fifteen or Sixteen Months, and not allow'd the Liberty to juſtifie themſelves againſt the Calumnies thrown upon them. They deſire they may be brought publickly to their Anſwer either before the Parliament, or ſuch indifferent Judges as their Majeſties ſhall appoint.

“Under ſuch an Allowance they don't queſtion their being able to throw off the Imputation of Hereſy: To defend the Reformation from Point to Point, and ſhew the Excommunications publiſh'd againſt them of no Force: And that all the Names of Diſadvantage and Infamy belong rather to their Adverſaries: To their Adverſaries who with reſpect to their Majeſties, may rather be ſaid to ſtand in the Place of the Ægyptian Magicians to Pharaoh, of Zedekiah and his Party of Prophets, to Ahab King of Iſrael, and of Bar-jeſu to the Pro-Conſul Sergius Paulus. And laſtly, they offer to juſtifie the Doctrine and Worſhip eſtabliſh'd in the late Reign, by Scripture and Antiquity, under the higheſt Penalties. (n)

Whether the Freedom of theſe Addreſſes gave Diſguſt, or that the Government reſolv'd to proceed another Way, is more than can be known. However, 'tis certain the Preachers were refus'd in their Application.

Some Provocations given the Government.

The Miſbehaviour of ſome People about this time ſeems to have ſower'd the Humour of the Court, and brought the Reform'd under farther Diſfavour. For inſtance, one Edward Featherſtone alias Conſtable counterfeited himſelf King Edward the Sixth. He was ſeiz'd and carried before the Council, where he beg'd the Queens Pardon, and confeſs'd he had been importun'd by a great many People to undertake the Impoſture. This Youth had for ſome time been a Footman to Sir Peter Mewtaſs. *

The next Month the Lord North, Secretary Bourn, the Maſter of the Rolles, Sir Francis Ingleſfield, and ſome others receiv'd Order from the Council to proceed to a farther Examination of Bingar, Cary, Dye, and Field. Theſe Men, as appears by their Confeſſions, had been tampering with Aſtrology or Magick. They were proſecuted in all likelyhood, for calculating the Queens Nativity, and foretelling her Death. †

To this may be added a Letter ſent to the Lord Treaſurer, with another incloſ'd to the Queen, from Father Elſtan Warden of the Convent at Greenwich. He complains that himſelf and Father Peyto were ſton'd by ſeveral Perſons in their Paſſage from London to Greenwich. His Lordſhip is deſir'd by the Council to get the Offenders apprehended, and to require the Lord Mayor to make a Proclamation with a Reward for thoſe that ſhall diſcover them *

* Council Book.

To give another Inſtance of a lower kind. One Robert Mendrain of the Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, ſhav'd a Dog in Contempt of the Prieſts Tonſure: For this Miſbehaviour he was order'd by the Council to go to his Pariſh Church next Sunday, and there publickly confeſs his Folly in a Form preſcrib'd. †

Theſe Inſtances of Miſbehaviour might very probably ruffle the Court, and make the Government more rugged with the Reform'd. For though ſtretching the Puniſhment beyond the Crime, has nothing of Juſtice: Yet Princes ſometimes let looſe their Reſentments upon ſuch Occaſions. Their Jealouſy is apt to take the Alarm. They conclude that thoſe who profeſs the ſame Religion, have the ſame Averſions and Deſires; and ſtand ready to take the ſame Liberty of Practice. This is wrong judging, but Power and Paſſion don't always diſtinguiſh: And thus a whole Party ſometimes ſuffer for the Faults of a few.

As for a Martyrology the Reader may pleaſe not to expect it. 'Tis wide of the Deſign, and out of the Compaſs of this Work. I ſhall only mention ſome few of the more diſtinguiſh'd Perſons and Circumſtances. Thoſe who would be farther inform'd in Names and Particulars, may conſult Fox, who is full enough in the Detail: And though he is ſometimes miſtaken in private Stories, his Records and State Papers, may be ſafely relied on.

Jan. 29. Ann. 1554. Several burnt for Hereſy.

To proceed, the Proſecution of the Reform'd being now determin'd, the Biſhop of Wincheſter and ſome others of that Order, had a Commiſſion from the Cardinal to convent and examine thoſe delated for Hereſy. Purſuant to this Authority Rogers and Bradford, Biſhop Hooper and Dr. Taylour, were brought before Gardiner, excommunicated, and remanded to Priſon. Rogers was burnt in Smithfield, and ſuffer'd with great Fortitude, and Chriſtian Reſolution. He was an Acquaintance of Tindals and liv'd with him in Flanders: When Tindal was executed for Religion, Rogers being apprehenſive of hard Uſage in England under King Henry the Eighth, retir'd to Wittenberg in Germany, where learning the Language of the Country he had the Cure of a Pariſh; He continued in this Buſineſs till King Edwards Reign; when he was call'd home and prefer'd to a Prebend in St. Paul's Church by Biſhop Ridley: At the preſent Queens coming to the Crown, the Papiſts knowing him to be a Perſon of Warmth and Enterprize, and ſtrongly diſaffected to their Perſwaſion, endeavour'd to fright him beyond Sea. For this purpoſe they gave him almoſt a Year to tranſport himſelf, charging him at the ſame time not to ſtir out of his own Houſe. But when they found he deſpis'd the Opportunity, and refus'd to withdraw, they committed him, and then brought him to the Stake: He left a Wife and Ten Children wholly unſupported, and caſt upon Providence.

Soon after, Sanders Parſon of Allhallows Breadſtreet in London, was brought before Bonner. He was extracted from a Gentlemans Family. At his Examination he calls the Pope Antichriſt, and declares himſelf of Wickliffes, Thorps, and Oldcaſtles Church. (o) But notwithſtanding ſome Miſtakes, he ſhews a Zeal for Martyrdom, and deſires no Application may be made to ſave his Life: He was carried down to Coventry and burnt there.

Bradford another Prebendary of St. Pauls refuſing to get off, was brought before the Council. He was condemn'd to the Fire for denying the corporal Preſence and Tranſubſtantiation, which were the burning Articles through this whole Reign.

At a Conference between him and Harpsfield, he denies the Neceſſity of a Succeſſion of Biſhops; the Church, ſays he, is not tied to Succeſſion but to Doctrine. He affirms the Scriptures make no Difference between the Order of Biſhops and Prieſts. He proves the Authority of the Scriptures not from the Force of Tradition, and the Teſtimony of the Church, but from inward Light, and private Conviction ſuppoſ'd to come from the Holy Ghoſt. He ſeems to aſſert the Church ſometimes inviſible. As to auricular Confeſſion, he thinks it a Thing indifferent, and recommended at firſt only by way of Advice: That preſſing it as a neceſſary Duty, and reſting ſo much upon it as is done in the Church of Rome, not to mention other Circumſtances, is enough to make it unlawful. He calls the Pope Antichriſt, writes flamingly againſt the Maſs, but condemns Rebellion, and preſſes Paſſive Obedience to the utmoſt Extent. (p) They declar'd him a Heretick in January, but his Execution was reſpited till July following.

To proceed, Biſhop Hooper was pronounc'd guilty of Hereſy for denying the corporal Preſence. His Epiſcopal Character being not allow'd, he was degraded no higher than from Prieſts Orders. His being active for Bonners Deprivation in the late Reign, ſeems to have mark'd him for Deſtruction in this: For he was ſent for up, and impriſon'd in the Tower at the Queens firſt coming to the Crown. This Prelate had formerly liv'd a conſiderable Time in Germany, and made an intimate Acquaintance with Bullinger: After he was put into the Hands of the civil Magiſtrate, 'twas thought fit to convey him to Glouceſter. His ſuffering where he preach'd his Heterodoxy (as 'twas call'd) was done in Terrorem, to fright the People from hearkning to ſuch pretended Novelties.

Biſhop Hooper burnt at Glouceſter.

Feb. 9.

The Warrant for burning him calls him a vain glorious Perſon, and one that delighted in talking: And therefore having the Liberty of Speech, 'twas fear'd he might perſwade the People to perſiſt in their Errors. To prevent this, the Queens Pleaſure is, that he ſhould not be ſuffer'd to deliver himſelf to any length as he went to Execution. *

* Biblioth. Cotton. Cleop. F. V. fol. 380.

On the other Hand, Hooper was glad of the Opportunity of loſing his Life in his Dioceſe, and giving his People the laſt Proof of his Integrity. He reſign'd himſelf to the Stake, and went through the Torture with all the Firmneſs imaginable. During his Impriſonment, Biſhop Ridley wrote him a Letter to congratulate his Sufferings, to encourage his Conſtancy, and to acquaint him, that notwithſtanding ſome former Differences between them in leſſer matters, he had now a very affectionate Regard for him. The ſame Day Dr. Rowland Taylour Parſon of Haddly in Suffolk was burnt in his Pariſh. The Biſhop of Wincheſter pronounc'd his Doom, and put him in the Sheriffs Hands. He was a Learned Man, as appears by his Defence. And if Fox is exact in his Narrative, was us'd with particular Barbarity at his Execution. Farrar Biſhop of St. Davids was ſent out of the World the ſame Way. He was carried from London to Carmarthen to ſtand the Proceſs: He was brought before his Succeſſor Morgan, who pronounc'd him an Heretick for marrying after his being profeſs'd a Religious, for maintaining Juſtification by Faith only: For denying Tranſubſtantiation, and the propitiatory Sacrifice of the Maſs. In the Sentence he is ſtil'd a Prieſt, and degraded no farther. Biſhop Farrar appeal'd from Morgan to Cardinal Pool, but that Application was rejected. He ſuffer'd with extraordinary Courage, and put the Truth of his Doctrine upon a very bold Teſt. For he told a Gentleman of his Acquaintance, that if he ſaw him uneaſy under the Pain, or ſo much as once ſtir in the Fire, he ſhould not believe any of his Tenents. He acted with the ſame Greatneſs he talk'd, and though his Hands were both burnt off, he never ſo much as mov'd, till one that ſtood by knock'd him down. Biſhop Godwin deſcribes this Farrar as a Perſon ſomewhat ſtiff and unpoliſh'd. That the Ruggedneſs of his manner made him Enemies, and occaſion'd the exhibiting Articles againſt him in the late Reign. He ſunk under this Impeachment, and was committed: And thus continuing a Priſoner at King Edwards Death, he was brought before Biſhop Gardiner. And here 'tis thought, if he had manag'd with Dexterity, and been ſmooth in his Anſwers, he might have diſengag'd himſelf, and ſecur'd both his Conſcience, and his Life. For thus many of the Reform'd, who had neither outrag'd the Papiſts, nor appear'd for the Lady Jane, had either the Liberty to go beyond Sea; Or if they happen'd to be ſeiz'd, were diſmiſs'd without much Difficulty at their Friends Interceſſion: But Farrar continues Godwin, being uncourtly in his Behaviour, provok'd Wincheſter to go through with his Proceſs, and leave him to the Law. Biſhop Coverdale ſent to Denmark.

Coverdale Biſhop of Exeter had probably ſhar'd the ſame Fate, had it not been for the Mediation of the King of Denmark. This Biſhop had liv'd in that Country in the Reign of King Henry the Eighth. His Piety and Learning had recommended him ſo far to that Court, that his Daniſh Majeſty being inform'd of his Danger, wrote to the Queen to ſend him thither. The Queen ſeem'd not willing to part with him: She alledg'd he had not ſatiſfied ſome Debts owing to the Crown. However, upon being farther ſollicited, ſhe gratified the Requeſt, and ſent Coverdale over. (r)

The Queen reſolv'd to reſtore the Abbey Lands in her Poſſeſſion.

To ſhut up this melancholy Scene a little, and paſs on to ſmother Relation. The beginning of this Year the Queen diſcover'd her Intention of reſtoring the Abby Lands, then remaining in the Crown. To this purpoſe, ſhe ſent for William Marqueſs of Wincheſter, Lord Treaſurer, Sir Robert Rocheſter Comptroller, Sir William Petre Secretary, and Sir Francis Inglefield Maſter of the Wards. She told them ſhe was fully ſatiſfied thoſe Lands had been unjuſtly alienated during the Schiſm: That her Conſcience would not allow her to keep them: And therefore ſhe makes a ſolemn and free Surrender without any Reſerve or Condition. Leaving theſe Eſtates to be applied to ſuch religious Uſes, as either the Pope, or the Lord Cardinal his Legate, ſhould think fit. And if 'twas objected the Revenues of the Crown, and the Dignity of the Government, would ſuffer by ſuch a Reſignation; to this ſhe replied, that ſhe prefer'd the ſaving her Soul to all the Kingdoms of the World. This Declaration was intimated to the Cardinal by the Lord Chancellor, put in Form, and ſent to the Pope.

Pope Paul the Fourth pretends to give Ireland the Title of a Kingdom.

The Three Engliſh Ambaſſadors came to Rome, the Firſt Day of Paul the Fourths Acceſſion to the Chair. Upon their being brought into the Conſiſtory, they threw themſelves at his Holineſs's Feet, and in the Name of the Kingdom made a Recital of the late Miſbehaviour, own'd their Ingratitude, and intreated for Pardon. In this Confeſſion they were very particular: For the Pope would not paſs an Acknowledgment in general. After Satisfaction in this point, he took them up, and embrac'd them. And as a Mark of Eſteem to their Majeſties of England, he pretended to erect Ireland into a Kingdom. This Iſland, as hath been obſerv'd, was made a Kingdom by King Henry the Eighth; after his Rupture with the See of Rome: The ſame Title was continued in the late Reign, and now aſſum'd by the preſent King and Queen. But this Pope had reſolv'd immediately upon his Election, that the King and Queen ſhould not claim the Dominion of Ireland under ſo Soveraign a Stile. But on the other ſide, 'twas thought a Hardſhip to oblige the Crown of England to quit a Title, which had been carried by Three Princes ſucceſſively. The Pope therefore found a Temper to make his pretended Prerogative paſs the better. He ſeem'd not to know Henry the Eighth had rais'd Ireland to a Kingdom without his Leave, that ſo the World might believe the Queen uſed the Title as a Gift from his Holineſs, and not as a Right deſcended on her.

His Bull allow'd by the Queen.

The Queen gratified the Pope to the length of his Fancy: For at the Return of the Ambaſſadors the Biſhop of Ely exhibited the Bull for making Ireland a Kingdom in the Council Chamber. This Inſtrument was deliver'd by the Council to the Archbiſhop of Dublin, to be publiſh'd in that Iſland. (s) The Ambaſſadors had ſeveral private Audiences of the Pope: At which he blam'd the Kingdom for not making full Reſtitution of what had been taken from the Church. He told them the detaining any thing of this kind was not to be endur'd. That conſecrated Revenues can never be applied to ſecular uſes: And that thoſe who refuſe to return them to the laſt Farthing are in a State of Damnation. That if he had Power to indulge upon this Head, and confirm the

The Pope demands a full Reſtitution of what had been alienated from the Church.

Alienations, he would do it with all the Inclination imaginable: But his Authority did not reach ſo far, as to give him the Liberty to profane holy things, and transfer Property from God Almighty: That the Engliſh Nation might be aſſur'd, the keeping back theſe Eſtates, would prove a curſed Thing: That the divine Vengeance would purſue ſuch Injuſtice, and make the Kingdom perpetually unhappy: And therefore he charg'd the Ambaſſadors to Write immediately for Redreſs. He inſiſted likewiſe upon the Payment of the Peter-pence: And that he intended to ſend a Collector for that Cuſtomary Duty: That himſelf had formerly executed that Office in England for Three Years; and was extremely pleas'd with the forwardneſs of the People in their Contributions: And laſtly, he told them, they had no reaſon to hope St. Peter would open Heaven Gates to them, as long as they diſſeiz'd him of his Patrimony: This Demand being not only made to the Ambaſſadors, but repeated in ſeveral Negotiations at the Engliſh Court, the Queen made her utmoſt Effort, to give his Holineſs ſatisfaction: And how far ſhe ſucceeded in the Affair will be ſeen afterwards. (t)

(t) F. Paul Hiſt. Conc. Trent.

To proceed to a farther Account of the Proſecution upon the Score of Religion. One William Flower alias Branch, firſt a Monk, afterwards a Secular Prieſt, and at laſt brought over to the Reformation: This Man being of an Over-warm Enthuſiaſtick Temper, coming into St. Margaret's Church Weſtminſter, wounded a Prieſt upon the Head and Arm, as he was adminiſtring the Sacrament. For this Outrage he was committed to the Gate-houſe, and afterwards convented before Biſhop Bonner. Fox, in reporting this Fact, confeſſes Flower did not do well, or Evangelically, as he Phraſes it; as if ſuch Diſtraction was defenſible by any other Standard of Juſtice. This Martyrologiſt adds Flower owns this Aſſaulting the Prieſt a Fault, and that he was willing to ſuffer for his Miſbehavior: But whether this is not miſrepreſenting the Caſe, and palliating in ſome Meaſure, will appear by his own Narrative: For when Flower was asked by Bonner, whether he intended to Kill the Prieſt or not, or whether he did well or ill, in Aſſaulting him, he refus'd to make any Anſwer to either of thoſe Queſtions. (u) The reaſon of this Silence may be eaſily conjectur'd. Beſides, he explains himſelf clearly in his Diſcourſe with one Robert Smith, another Priſoner on the Account of Religion. This Smith ask'd him whether he had any Quarrel, or particular diſaffection to that Prieſt? He told him no: But that if any other of the ſame Order, and doing the ſame Buſineſs, had come in his way, he ſhould have treated him in the ſame manner. Smith deſir'd to know, whether he thought the Fact warrantable by the Precepts or Permiſſions of the Goſpel? To this Flower makes no direct Anſwer at firſt, but endeavors to juſtify the Outrage by the Examples of Moſes, Aaron, Phineas, Joſhuah, Zimri, Jehu, Judith, and Mattathias, with ſeveral other Preſidents in the Old Teſtament. Upon this, Smith puts a farther Queſtion, whether Flower would adviſe him, or any other Perſon to take the ſame Liberty? Flower tells him no; becauſe ſuch things are not to be ventur'd on without particular encouragement from the Spirit. But as for himſelf, he found his Conſcience much at eaſe, and did not repent that Sally. And if Smith had the ſame encouragement from the Spirit, he ought not to be Condemn'd for his Imitation. Thus Flower goes upon the Principle of the Jewiſh Zealots. He makes inward Impulſe, and ſupernatural Direction, his Warrant for wounding the Prieſt. Theſe are deſperate Grounds: Thus private Perſons invade the Magiſtrates Office, and puniſh without Commiſſion, or Forms of Law. Thus a Man may be hurried by the heat of his Temper, by the force of his Revenge, by the Suggeſtions of the Devil, into the moſt Savage Barbarities. And then to cover his Frenzy, and lay his Conſcience aſleep, he recurs to Inſpiration, and vouches a Divine Authority. 'Tis true at laſt, he owns his diſlike of his ſtriking the Prieſt, and to uſe his own Words he believes, his Act was Evil and Naught. But then, for the Matter and Cauſe wherefore he ſo ſtruck the ſaid Prieſt, he neither did, nor does miſlike himſelf therein. This looks like a myſterious Recantation: For if he believ'd he had a juſtifiable Cauſe or Reaſon for ſtriking the Prieſt, 'tis hard to imagine why he ſhould Condemn the Action. In ſhort, the expreſſing himſelf in this manner, looks ſomewhat like a Reſerve for the Zealots Principle. 'Tis to be hoped he explain'd himſelf better upon farther Recollection. He was declar'd an Heretick for denying Tranſubſtantiation, and ſuffer'd at the Stake in Smithfield with great Fortitude.

He calls the Oyl, Salt, &c. us'd in Baptiſm, Blaſphemies, and denies the neceſſity of Water Baptiſm to Children. Fox overlooks theſe failings and miſtakes, and gives him Commendation without abatement: Which undiſtinguiſhing regard, is by no means ſerviceable to every Reader. The Corporal Preſence was preſs'd cloſely upon him, according to the uſual manner in this Reign. Do you Believe, ſays Bonner, that it is the very Body of Chriſt, that was Born of the Virgin Mary, naturally, ſubſtantially, and really, after the Words of Conſecration? His disbelief of this Article was enough to bring him to Smithfield, where he Suffer'd this Summer in Auguſt.

A Remark upon the Perſecution.

To ſay ſomething in general concerning this matter: 'Tis granted thoſe that Suffer'd were not all of them without the common Infirmities. Sallies of Paſſion and Vehemence of Language broke out ſometimes. To be ſtrip'd of their Fortune, and ſee their Families undone: To be ruggedly us'd in Priſon, and then drag'd to the Stake: To be thus handled, is a great Tryal of Patience. 'Tis no wonder if People are thrown off their Temper a little under ſuch Provocation: Eſpecially when there was no private Injuſtice, no Crime againſt the State, no Charge of Immorality, to bring on the Rigor. To ſpeak clearly, their Judges ſeldom ſhew'd much Inclination to preſerve them. They were nice and particular in their Enquiries: They put the Teſt home, and preſs'd the Corporal Preſence and Tranſubſtantiation in the the moſt enſnaring Terms: Neither would they be ſatisfied with leſs than diſtinct and categorical Anſwers. And which way Men could ſafely avoid Burning under ſuch Interrogatories, is farther than I can diſcover. Now he that ſubmits to Torture, and parts with his Life, rather than deny his Disbelief of theſe very ſhocking and incredible things, may, I humbly conceive, deſerve the Title of a Martyr.

As to their general Behavior, nothing could be more to their Advantage. They Diſengag'd from Fleſh and Blood without Regret: They encourag'd their Friends to Conſtancy: They appear'd glad of the opportunity of going ſo honourably into the other World. And tho' ſome of them might be miſtaken in matters of leſſer Moment, they were right in the main. To ſtand Death under the moſt formidable Appearance, is a noble Proof of Integrity. Men who are contented to reſign their Intereſt, to ſhorten their Lives, and make themſelves literally a Burnt Offering, are moſt certainly in earneſt. Their Conſcience and their Piety in ſuch Caſes, are out of all Queſtion.

Gardiner refuſes to proceed in Sanguinary Methods.

Gardiner who thought a few Examples of Severity would have ſtruck a Terror into the reſt, was diſappointed in his Expectation. He perceiv'd the Courage of the Reform'd, encreas'd with their Sufferings, and that one Execution made way for another. And thus finding his Project of cruſhing the Hereſy, as he call'd it, Impracticable, he declin'd being farther concern'd. Thus he left the matter wholly to Bonner, who at preſent ſeem'd not diſpleas'd with the Employment, but went on without Mercy or Remorſe.

King Philip ſuſpected for theſe Rigors.

Theſe Severities, purely upon the Score of Conſcience, were generally Cenſur'd. For many of thoſe who Suffer'd, had acted nothing contrary to Law: They were firſt put up upon ſlender Pretences, and then kept in Priſon 'till the Statutes againſt Hereſy were revived. Thus the Proſecutions of this Reign far exceeded thoſe of the laſt. In King Edward's Time the Papiſts only loſt their Preferments, or at the hardeſt their Liberty: But now nothing would ſatisfy for the Crime of a different Belief, but Capital Puniſhment, and ſending People into the other World, in the moſt tormenting manner. And ſince the Queen had at firſt declar'd againſt forcing her Religion upon her Subjects, 'twas thought unreaſonable to charge the Perſecution upon her. 'Twas believ'd ſhe was overrul'd ſince her Marriage, and that theſe Fires were kindled by King Philip. The Inquiſition in his Country, his Bigottry, and the unacceptableneſs of his Temper, made this Preſumption not Improbable. However the King it ſeems had no Mind to lie under this Imputation, as may be collected by a Sermon Preach'd before him by his Confeſſor Alphonſus: For this Preacher who was a Franciſcan, declaim'd ſtrongly againſt taking away Peoples Lives for Religion: He ſpent ſome Satyrical Expreſſions upon the Biſhops for theſe Severities: He ſaid the Scriptures preſcrib'd them quite different Methods, taught them to Inſtruct thoſe in Meekneſs, that oppos'd them, and not hale them to Execution, and Burn them becauſe they could Believe no better. (w) The Biſhops were ſurpris'd to find their Proceedings Condemn'd by the Spaniards: And to do them Juſtice, they did not ſeem to like it themſelves: And that they might not be miſreported, they openly declar'd againſt theſe Sanguinary Methods: As for the Friars Sermon, (ſaid to be Preach'd on the Tenth of February) (x) it made no laſting Impreſſion on the Court: For on the Twenty Sixth of March following, the King and Queen ſent an Order to the Juſtices of Peace in Norfolk, to inquire after thoſe who refus'd to Conform and come to Church: To bind them to their good Behavior, or Commit them according as the Quality of the Perſon, or the Circumſtances of their Carriage ſhould require. And here they have particular Inſtructions to look ſtrictly after the Preachers of Hereſy, and the procurers of private Meetings. (y) About Two Months after, the King and Queen Wrote to Bonner to carry on the Proſecution with more Vigor. This Letter acquaints the Biſhop, that their Majeſties had ſent Directions to the Juſtices of Peace in all the Counties of England, to preſs Conformity in Religion: And that thoſe who continued unreclaim'd, ſhould be put into the Hands of the Ordinary for farther Inſtruction: And in Caſe they prov'd incorrigible, the Law was to paſs upon them: From hence the Letter proceeds to complain of the Remiſſneſs of the Ordinaries: That they ſometime refus'd to take Perſons when delated for Hereſy into their Cuſtody. Or if they did receive ſuch Misbelievers, they either declin'd taking Pains for their Recovery, or forbore proceeding to Conviction, and putting them in the Hands of Juſtice. This Lenity and Connivance is reprimanded, and Bonner is required to proceed to Extremities, where milder Methods prove unſucceſsful. (z)

A Proclamation againſt Heretical Books.

Some little time after a Proclamation was Publiſh'd againſt Importing, Printing, Reading, Selling, or Keeping Heretical Books. Amongſt the prohibited Liſt, Luther's, Calvin's, Zuinglius's, Alaſco's, Bucer's, Bullinger's, Melancton's, Eraſmus's, Latimer's, Hooper's, Bale's, Cranmer's Works, Hall's Chronicle, and ſeveral others are reckon'd. Barrengdeins Recognizance.

Tho' the Severities of the Government for matters of pure Belief are wholly Indefenſible, their Care for diſcouraging Licentiouſneſs deſerves Commendation. Of this we have a remarkable Inſtance in one Mr. Barrendein, who was brought before the Council, and oblig'd to enter into a Recognizance of Five Hundred Marks, to forbear the Converſation of another Man's Wife, it runs thus.

Franciſcus Barrengdein Armiger recognovit ſe debere Dominis Regi & Reginæ quingentas Marchas ſolvend. &c. & niſi, &c. concedit pro ſe & Hæredibus ſuis, quod dicta ſumma, &c.

The Condition of this Recognizance is ſuch, that if the above bound Francis Barrendein, do from henceforth refrain the Company of the Wife of Henry Tallowfield of London, and be of good abearing towards the ſaid Henry, and forth coming when he ſhall be call'd for, betwixt this and the Feaſt of St. Andrew the Apoſtle next coming, that then, &c. (b)

(b) Council Book Aug. 18. 1555.

This Summer Biſhop Bonner ſet forth ſeveral Homilies for the uſe of his Dioceſe: They were drawn up partly by John Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, one of Bonner's Chaplains, and partly by Henry Pendleton already mention'd. The Titles of them are as follows, Firſt, Of the Creation and Fall of Man. Second, Of the Miſery of all Mankind, and his Condemnation to Death. Third, Of the Redemption of Man. Fourth, How the Redemption in Chriſt is appliable to Man. Fifth, Of Chriſtian Love and Charity. Sixth, How dangerous a thing the break of Charity is. Seventh, Of the Church, what it is, and of the Commodity thereof. Eighth, Of the Authority of the Church. Ninth, Of the Supremacy. Tenth, Of the Supremacy. Eleventh, Of the true Preſence of Chriſt's Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar. Twelfth, Of Tranſubſtantiation. Thirteenth, Of certain Anſwers againſt ſome common Objections made againſt the Sacrament of the Altar.

Some little Time before the Printing theſe Homilies, a Book call'd a profitable and neceſſary Doctrine, &c. was Publiſh'd by Bonner for the Dioceſe of London. It begins with an Expoſition of Faith, and goes upon the Heads of the Inſtitution and neceſſary Erudition, ſet forth in the Reign of King Henry the Eighth. The manner of handling theſe Points is ſomewhat different from the Tracts abovemention'd. For Inſtance; this Book is more particular in ſome Caſes, and more Polemical in others. Under the Sacrament of Orders, the Ordinal made in the late Reign is deeply Cenſur'd, and the Conveyance of any Character ſeems denied. The reaſon aſſign'd is, becauſe in the Reform'd Ordinal, at the Ordination of Prieſts, there is no Authority given them to Offer the Body and Blood of our Saviour in the Maſs. But the Inſignificancy of this Objection has been already Conſider'd. *

A Petition againſt Proſecuting the Reform'd.

This Year a Petition was drawn up by ſome of the Exiles, Printed beyond Sea, and ſent to the Queen to ſtop the Perſecution. The Arguments are good, but the manner in ſome Parts of it not very courtly and recommending. They put her in mind of the danger of being Govern'd by a blind Zeal: And reſemble her Proceedings againſt the Reform'd, to St. Paul's perſecuting the Chriſtians before his Converſion. They acquaint her how Cranmer had preſerv'd her in her Father's Time: That therefore ſhe had no reaſon to queſtion his Affection or Sincerity: And that Truth was rather to be expected from him, then from any of the Popiſh Clergy, who are compar'd to Jezabel's Prophets. They collected ſeveral Paſſages out of Gardiner's, Bonner's, and Tonſtal's Writings, againſt the Pope's Supremacy, and her Mother's Marriage. From hence they inferr'd theſe Prelates were Men without Conſcience: That they were Govern'd by Secular Views, and chang'd their Opinions as Fear or Intereſt ſuggeſted. They urg'd that Chriſtianity was tolerated in Turkey, and that in moſt Places the Chriſtians allow'd the Jews the ſame Indulgence. That the Perſecution in England had the hardeſt Complexion imaginable, and look'd like that of the Scribes and Phariſees againſt the Apoſtles: For theſe Men of the Sanhedrim pretended the Apoſtles were formerly of their Religion, and had ſince gone off to Hereſy. They ſet forth that the firſt burning Statute was made by Henry the Fourth. That this Prince Paſs'd the Bill to gratify the Biſhops who aſſiſted him to Seize the Crown, and depoſe his Soveraign Richard the Second. And that as the Motive to the Law was unjuſt, ſo the matter of it was Inhuman: And that 'twas a flat Contradiction to the Clemency requir'd by the Goſpel.

They ſuggeſted that in the late Reign, none of the Roman Catholicks had been treated with this Rigor: They took the Freedom to ſay, the Sword was put into her Hand by God Almighty, for the Benefit and Protection of her Subjects: That they were not to be Puniſh'd without breach of Duty: And that her Majeſty muſt Anſwer in the other World for their Blood, if ſhe deliver'd them to the Mercy of ſuch Wolves.

The remainder of the Addreſs is directed to the Nobility and Commons. They endeavor to Alarm the Nobility, by preſenting a proſpect of loſing their Abbey Lands. And to make the danger more formidable, they preſage the loſs of their Liberties, and their being brought under Arbitrary Sway, and Spaniſh Government; Spaniſh Government which had ruin'd many of the beſt Countries in the World. They ſuggeſt farther, they muſt expect the Burthen of heavy Taxes, and that a general Exciſe levied in the Netherlands, would be put upon them. And laſtly, they did not ſpare to tell them, that all this hardſhip would be no better than they deſerv'd: That they had concurr'd with the Reformation for Intereſt, and unworthy Ends: And that now ſince they believ'd the Church Lands ſufficiently ſecur'd to them, they declar'd for the other Religion, for which they would be deeply Accountable to God Almighty. As to the common People they exhort them to Recollection and Repentance. The Petition concludes with begging the Queen to ſhew her Subjects the ſame Favor, at leaſt, ſhe had done to Strangers: And that they may be allow'd the liberty of tranſporting themſelves. (c)

(c) Bp. Burnet pt. 2. p. 305.

This Petition as hath been obſerv'd, not only fails in the Terms of Reſpect, and the decencies of Application, but that Part of it which endeavors to work upon the Nobility by prognoſticating loſs and hard uſage, looks extremely unaccountable: For ſuppoſing theſe Fears had been real and well grounded, which way could the Nobility have avoided the danger, unleſs by riſing upon the Government, and running into Rebellion?

To hinder this Diſcourſe from having an ill Effect upon the People, a little Book was Publiſh'd to make the Proſecutions look Plauſible, and juſtify Capital Puniſhments in Caſes of Hereſy. To mention ſomething upon this Argument.

A Defence of the Proceedings againſt Hereticks.

The Tract obſerves, the Moſaick Law Puniſh'd Blaſphemy with Death. That the Engliſh Hereticks were guilty of this Crime: And that by calling the Body of Chriſt, a piece of Bread, they Blaſphem'd the Sacrament of the Altar: That natural Light and common Regard for the Deity, had put the Heathens upon proſecuting the Chriſtians, tho' they miſtook in the Application of the Principle. The Expreſſion in our Saviours Parable, compel them to enter in; is urg'd in this Diſcourſe, and likewiſe the Text of St. Paul, I would they were cut off that trouble you. 'Tis argued farther, that St. Peter was miraculouſly enabled to ſtrike Ananias and Saphira Dead: And that this Inſtance ſeem'd a ſufficient Authority for the Magiſtrate to proceed Capitally againſt ſuch Perſons. And, which was much ſtronger, 'tis alledg'd that Hereticks themſelves did not ſcruple burning Diſſenters, when the Government was on their Side: And that ſome Arians and Anabaptiſts Condemn'd to the Fire by the Proteſtants, were no leſs remarkable for the regularity of their Lives, and their Courage at the Stake, then thoſe who were thus Executed in the preſent Reign. And to cite nothing farther, St. Auſtin's Opinion was produc'd, for proſecuting the Donatiſts: 'Tis True he had been formerly of a different Sentiment; but afterwards finding they recollected lected themſelves and quitted their Errors under Diſcipline, he chang'd his Mind, and recommended ſharp expedients as far as Fines and Baniſhment.

About this time Pope Paul IV. publiſh'd a plenary Indulgence. I ſhall give it the Reader as it ſtands tranſlated in Bonner's Regiſter.

Regiſt. Bonner Fol. 398.

“Paul the Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God, &c. To all faithful Perſons of Chriſt to whom theſe Letters ſhall come Greeting, and Apoſtolical Benediction. Whereas in the beginning of our Pontifical Office we weigh'd in our mind how great a burthen this was unto which our moſt Bleſſed God had choſen and appointed us, eſpecially in theſe ſharp and miſerable Times, in the which Chriſtian People Exerciſe inward, miſerable and woful War, we did remember Solomon who ſo ſoon as he was made a King, converting himſelf to God in his Prayers, ask'd nothing elſe but that God would give him ſo much of force and ſtrength, that in the ruling his People he ſhould not fall under the Burthen. And we, perſwaded by that Example and conſidering the Infinite Clemency of God Almighty, have not ceas'd to make Interceſſion by Prayers and Tears that God of his Benignity would ſo confirm and ſtrengthen us, that we might with the Health of you all ſuſtain this Burthen receiv'd at his moſt Holy Hands, and that we might be able to pacify and appeaſe theſe Diſſentions and Hatreds, by the which almoſt all the Chriſtian Congregations being miſerable do Periſh and take Ruin. And tho' we our ſelves moſt humble and proſtrate, calling upon his Mercy do not ceaſe to Pray for this thing; yet for as much as we truſt that many of you being in ſo great Favour and Grace with our Lord God, that by multiplied Prayers we may get the rather that which we do ask, ſeeing that the great Benignity of God is wont to ſuffer earneſtneſs or violence to be done unto it. Therefore by Authority Apoſtolical given unto us from above, we on the behalf of Almighty God, and in the Bowels of his Mercy, do exhort and in our Lord do require, and moniſh all and ſingular Men and Women the Faithful of Chriſt both Secular and Regular, reclus'd, and living alſo abroad, as well in our City, as alſo in the Cities, Lands, and Places throughout the whole World, that within three Days after the Publication of theſe Preſents, in any of the ſaid Places to them made, or after theſe Preſents ſhall come to their Notice, or Knowledge, they do ſtudy with diligent examination to diſcuſs and ſearch their Conſcience, and to make a pure Confeſſion of all their Sins: And that upon the Wedneſday, Friday and Saturday immediately following the ſame, all being of lawful Age do faſt (except they be letted with lawful impediment) and make Supplication and Prayer to Jeſus Chriſt our Lord God, and with Prayer and Mourning being Proſtrate before his Feet, do ask and deſire that he will not diſdain to be with us, to lift us up, and to rule and govern us. And finally that he will grant to Chriſtian Princes, and to all the Faithful both the end of Miſeries and Calamities, and alſo Concord and Peace. And that upon the Sunday following they do Godly and Devoutly receive the moſt Holy Communion and Sacrament of the Altar; and pitying the Poor People of Chriſt, they will every one to his Power relieve their Need, and to do other things alſo which appertain to Godlineſs, Charity, and Chaſtity, with all their Heart and Mind, that they may the more rather promote and ſet forth the Mercy of God our moſt merciful Lord. And to the intent they may the more purely and commodiouſly do it, we opening the Treaſures of the Church do grant unto the aforeſaid faithful Perſons of Chriſt, that for this time only, they may chuſe unto them a Prieſt Secular, or of any other order Regular, which having heard their Confeſſion, may them abſolve from any manner of Sins (how grievous and enormous ſoever) altho' reſerved to the aforeſaid See, and contain'd in the Bull of Cæna Domini; enjoyning them for the meaſure or Quantity of their Faults wholeſome Penance: And by the ſaid Authority we do give and grant that they may alſo change or alter all Vows whatſoever (the Vows of Jeruſalem, of Chaſtity, of Religion only excepted) into other works of Godlineſs. Nevertheleſs enjoyning ſpecially to all the aboveſaid faithful for the ſatisfaction of particular Penance, that they as well upon the Sunday of their Communion, as in the three Days of their ſaid Faſt do ſay devoutly five times the Pater noſter, and the Ave Maria. And we to all and ſingular the faithful Perſons of Chriſt, who ſhall accompliſh and fulfil the things before rehears'd, do (truſting in the Mercy of Almighty God, and the Authority of his Bleſſed Apoſtles Peter and Paul) grant moſt fully Remiſſion of their Sins, and that Remiſſion or Privilege which in the Year of the Jubilee is granted to the Faithful, viſiting the Churches either of our ſaid City, or elſewhere aſſign'd them for that purpoſe. And to the intent that all theſe things may come to the knowledge of all People, and our gracious Lord may be by many graciouſly entreated, we do ſtraightly, in the virtue of holy Obedience command all our Brethren the Patriarchs, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates of the Church, that they freely and without any deceit or gain every where throughout their Provinces, Cities and Dioceſes, do effectually publiſh and cauſe to be publiſh'd theſe Preſents or their Tranſumpt, being ſubſcrib'd with the hands of ſome Prelate or ſome Perſon being in Eccleſiaſtical Dignity: To which Tranſumpt we will all credence to be given. Any Conſtitutions and Ordinances Apoſtolick, or any thing elſe whatſoever to the contrary notwithſtanding. Theſe Preſents not to be Vailable or of Force, after the Sunday immediately following the aforeſaid Wedneſday, Friday, and Saturday; given at Rome at St. Marks in the Year of the Incarnation of our Lord 1555. In the Ides of July, and in the firſt Year of our Pontificate.

Ita eſt Edmundus Epiſcopus London.

I ſhall now go on to the Proceſs againſt Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer Priſoners at Oxford. To begin with the firſt: A Commiſſion was ſent from the Pope to James Brooks Biſhop of Glouceſter, authorizing him to proceed upon Cranmer's Tryal. Dr. Martin, and Dr. Story Two Civilians had Commiſſions from the King and Queen for the ſame purpoſe. When he was brought before them in St. Mary's Church, he made his Reverence to the two Doctors, as repreſenting their Majeſty's, but refus'd to ſalute Brooks the Popes Commiſſioner with any Poſtures of Reſpect. However, he let the Biſhop know 'twas his foreign Character, and not any diſregard to his Perſon, which put him upon

Sept. the 12*th* Cranmer brought before the Commiſſioners at Oxford on this ſeeming Singularity: He ſaid he had ſolemnly renounc'd the Popes Supremacy; and ſince his reaſons held good upon his Mind, he could not ſhew any ſigns of Submiſſion to the See of Rome. At this Examination Cranmer affirm'd the Power of the Keys, as well as that of the Sword, was lodg'd in the Crown. After ſome Tryal to remove him from this Sentiment, they charg'd him with ſeveral Articles: That he had been twice Married: That he had refus'd obedience to the Pope: That he had diſcover'd his Heterodoxy in the Doctrine of the bleſſed Sacrament: That he had been declar'd an Heretick by the late Prolocutor, and the reſt of the Doctors Commiſſionated by the Queen and the Univerſities: He confeſs'd the Charge, but offer'd to defend his Practiſe and Opinions. After he had paſs'd thro' the formalities of a Tryal, he was cited to appear at Rome within Fourſcore Days: The Archbiſhop replied he was willing to go thither, provided the King and Queen pleaſe to ſend him. But this was only matter of Form, for he was remanded to Priſon, and kept in cloſe Cuſtody, till he came to the Stake, of which more afterwards.

Fox. Vol. 3. pag. 663.

About a fortnight forward, another Commiſſion was Iſſued from the Cardinal Legate to White Bp. of Lincoln, Brooks Bp. of Glouceſter, and Holyman Bp. of Briſtol, or any two of them, to proceed to the degrading Bp. Ridley and Bp. Latimer, provided they could not prevail with them to recant. Theſe Commſſioners finding them firm to their former Perſwaſion, and refuſing to own any Authority from the Cardinal Legate, pronounced them guilty of Hereſy: And then declaring they were no longer Members of the Church, conſign'd them over to the ſecular Magiſtrate, to be puniſh'd as the Law directs. (d) They were only degraded from Prieſts Orders. This was ſomewhat Particular, ſince Cardinal Pool in his Commiſſion ſtiles them Biſhops, and in caſe of obſtinacy directs their Degradation from that Character: And farther, White Biſhop of Lincoln one of the Commiſſioners owns Ridley was made a Biſhop according to the Laws of the Church of Rome. * But Brooks Biſhop of Glouceſter, who ſeems to have been the moſt Bigotted Delegate, would allow neither of them to be any more than Prieſt. As for Latimer he reſign'd his See in the Reign of Henry VIII. threw off his Epiſcopal Habit, and pretended no farther to the Title. This it may be the Commiſſioners conceiv'd amounted to a Degradation; otherwiſe it will be difficult to account why his Character was not allow'd. The reaſon why Ridley paſs'd for no more than a Prieſt, may be ſomewhat better conjectur'd. For this Prelate being Conſecrated to his firſt See of Rocheſter, ſeveral Years after the Popes Supremacy was Diſcarded, the Kingdom was then ſuppos'd to be in a State of Schiſm, and by conſequence the Biſhops had no Authority to Conſecrate and Ordain. This was the Senſe of moſt of the governing Clergy of this Reign. Both Ridley and Latimer kept the ſame diſtance in their Behaviour, and renounc'd the Pope both in Language and Geſture, as Archbiſhop Cranmer had lately done: For Ridley eſpecially, refuſ'd to pay any Ceremony to the Biſhops delegated by the Cardinal. But then this was manag'd with a Salvo of Reſpect for Pool's Royal Birth, his Learning and other good Qualities. And Latimer, before his Anſwer to the Articles, proteſted againſt the Popes Authority.

And brought to the Stake.

They were both brought to the Stake October the 16th. The place was on the North ſide of the Town in the Ditch, over againſt Baliol College. And to prevent Tumults the Lord Williams, and the Burghers, were order'd by the Queen to aſſiſt at the Execution. As Ridley came near Bocardo, where Cranmer was Priſoner, he look'd up, in hopes to have ſeen the Archbiſhop, and taken his leave: But Cranmer being then engag'd in Diſpute with ſome Spaniſh Friars, forgot to appear at the Window: But ſoon after recollecting himſelf and ſeeing them at the place, he Pray'd for them. When Ridley ſaw Latimer come up, he Saluted him with an Air of Pleaſure, and told him that God would either abate the force of the Fire, or enable them to go thro' it. Before they prepar'd for the Stake, Dr. Smith who recanted Popery in the late Reign, was order'd to Preach. The deſign was to take off the Impreſſion which the Execution might otherwiſe have made upon the Company. His Text was, If I give my Body to be burnt, and have not Charity, it profiteth me nothing. From theſe words he obſerves, that 'twas the Cauſe, and not the Pain which made the Martyr: That throwing up Life without warrantable Reaſon, was no inſtance of true Fortitude: And that Judas his ſending himſelf into the other World, was far from an expiation of his Crime. To dye againſt Truth and Orthodoxy, had more of Deſperation than greatneſs in it: And this he was afraid would be the caſe of theſe Men. From hence he went on to downright Satyr, and coarſe Repreſentation. He caution'd the People to ſtand off from their Doctrine, ſaid they were Hereticks, and died out of the Church. And to deſcribe them to farther diſadvantage, he touch'd upon the diverſities of Opinions amongſt the Reform'd: That the Lutherans, Oecolampadians, and Zuinglians could come to no Agreement amongſt themſelves: And that Ridley and Latimer were of the laſt, and worſt Sect, of the three. In the cloſe, he exhorteth them both to retract their Errors: And that in caſe they return'd to the Church, they might ſave both their Lives, and their Souls. Upon this, Ridley and Latimer kneel'd to the Lord Williams and the Commiſſioners, for leave to ſpeak two or three Words in reply to the Sermon: But before the Lord Williams could give an Anſwer, Ridley's Mouth was ſtop'd by the Bailiffs and Dr. Marſhal the Vicechancellor; who aſſur'd him no Diſcourſe, excepting a Recantation, would be admitted. After this, they were order'd to undreſs themſelves for the Fire, which they did accordingly, and ſuffer'd with all the commendable appearances of the Primitive Martyrs. The Station they had formerly been in, the regularity of their Lives, and their Behaviour at the Stake, rais'd the Compaſſion of the Company, and made them much unpleas'd with the Spectacle. To add a word or two farther concerning each of them. Latimer was Born in Leiceſterſhire, and bred at Chriſt's College in Cambridge. He was always in earneſt in his Religion: And had a ſtrong opinion at firſt of a Monaſtick Life: He thought a Man could hardly miſcarry in the other World, after his being Profeſs'd. He was no Friend to the Reformers in Germany, and made a Speech againſt Philip Melancthon at the taking of his Batchelor of Divinity's Degree. It ſeems Bilney made the firſt impreſſion upon him as to his Belief. Being thus diſengag'd from ſome of the Prejudices of Education, and an implicite Defference to the Doctrine Receiv'd, he made farther Advances. He Preach'd with great plaineſs at King Edwards Court; and made no ſcruple to tax the Vices of the Age with a Freedom that became his Character. In the begiuning of Queen Mary's Reign he was ſent for to appear before the Council: He had notice of the Meſſenger's coming, but was ſo far from making his Eſcape, that he prepar'd for his Journey. The Purſuivant was ſurpriz'd to find him thus forward, and after having deliver'd a Letter from the Board, went away, letting him know he had no Orders to ſtay for him. From hence 'tis plain the Government had no inclination to ſeize him, but would have been better pleas'd with his retiring beyond Sea: But Latimer, it ſeems, when he heard the Miniſtry laid out for him, conceiv'd himſelf oblig'd to appear: And thus when he had put himſelf in the Hands of his Enemies, they might probably think they were oblig'd in Honour, not to part with him, without a Recantation. And thus much concerning Latimer.

Ridley was a Gentleman extracted from an antient Family in Northumberland: He was bred in Cambridge, where he commenc'd Dr. of Divinity, and was prefer'd to the Maſterſhip of Pembroke Hall. After ſome time he quitted the Univerſity, travell'd to France, and ſtudied at Paris. At his return he was made Chaplain to King Henry VIII. and by him promoted to the See of Rocheſter: How he was afterwards tranſlated to London and Durham, has already been related. His Parts and Improvement were uncommonly diſtinguiſhed: His Memory and Judgment were ſtrong: He was well acquainted with the Fathers and Eccleſiaſtical Antiquities. His Life was no leſs commendable then his Learning. He kept a guard upon himſelf, and ſpent a great part of his time in Prayer. His Temper was ſmooth and obliging, and apt to forget an ill turn. And tho' he was particularly inclin'd to ſerve his Relations, yet he would never put them in Poſts for which they were unqualified, or prefer them beyond their Merit.

Notwithſtanding his Zeal for the Reformation, he was far from approving extremities. In a Letter to his Steward Weſt, he ſhews his diſlike of ſudden Changes without apparent neceſſity. And that driving to remote Diſtances was never any part of his Inclination: As to auricular Confeſſion to a Prieſt he always look'd upon it as a very ſerviceable uſage: That by this expedient the Penitent might be Inſtructed, Reprov'd, or Comforted, to very ſignificant purpoſes, as the caſe ſhould require. (e) Here Fox, out of an over ſcrupulous Fear of Popery, throws in a condition in his Margin, and miſrepreſents the Text. He ſays, this Confeſſion is to be made by way of asking Counſel, which is more than is in Ridley's Letter. This Prelate in his Letter to Bradford who was burnt in Smithfield, deſires his Aſſiſtance after his Martyrdom: And that when he ſhould come into the other World, he would then Pray for thoſe who were left behind, and likely to ſuffer.

In another Letter to Grindal then in Germany, he complains of the Hypocriſy and Diſorders of the late Reign, and believes thoſe Provocations had brought the preſent Calamities upon them. And here he laments the inſincerity of King Edward's Magiſtracy: That they profeſs'd the Reformation, and countenanc'd the Clergy of that Perſwaſion for Mercenary ends, and to enrich themſelves with the Eſtates belonging to the Church. This Letter, tho' without Date, was written this Summer, as appears by his mentioning the Queen being near her Time, and Praying ſhe might be happily deliver'd.

This Year there was enquiry made for recovering Church Furniture, and other effects which had been carried off in the two late Reigns. Several who had been Viſitors in King Henry's and King Edward's time where queſtion'd concerning their Management. And after ſome of them had been ſued, others were willing to Compound, and make a Preſent to the Church to purchaſe their Indemnity. I find Commiſſions were awarded for this purpoſe: For the Council ſent a Letter of thanks to Sir. Thomas Denys, to the Dean of Exeter, and the reſt of the Commiſſioners for their diligence, praying them to require the Mayor and Aldermen of the ſaid City, to make delivery of the Eight Hundred Ninety One Ounces of Plate and other Ornaments and Church ſtuff, which they detain'd from the Pariſh Churches, and to rebuild the Towers of the Churches, which the Burghers had defac'd. On the 21 of October a new Parliament met at Weſtminſter. 'Twas open'd with a Speech of the Lord Chancellor Gardiners: He came to the Houſe two Days after, but the Sickneſs of which he died, hindred his coming any more.

Gardiner's Death and Character.

Fox tells a Story, which he pretends to have had from credible Intelligence, that the Biſhop of Wincheſter refus'd to go to Dinner that Day Ridley and Latimer were burnt, till his Servants who were poſted upon the Road for that purpoſe, had brought him word the Faggots were kindled about them: That this barbarous Fancy made the Dinner be kept back till Four of the Clock, and that the old Duke of Norfolk was uneaſy for ſtaying ſo long. That when Gardiner heard theſe two Biſhops were burning, he was tranſported at the News, went immediately to Dinner, but was ſuddenly ſeiz'd at Table, and carried to his Bed, where he continued till his Death, which happen'd about a fortnight after. (g) To diſprove this tragical Relation, it may be ſufficient to obſerve, that Gardiner appear'd twice in the Houſe of Lords after he is reported to have been ſeiz'd with this mortal Diſtemper. And beſides, the old Duke of Norfolk had been Dead above a Year when Fox makes him at Dinner at the Biſhop of Wincheſter's, for this Duke died at Framingham Caſtle September 1554; And was ſucceeded by his Grandſon who could now be no Old Duke, as the Story pretends.

As to Gardiner, Godwin relates he died of the Gout, and not of a Suppreſſion of Urine as Fox would have it. As to his Extraction, he is ſaid to be the natural Son of Lionel Woodvil Biſhop of Saliſbury, which Lionel was Brother to Richard Woodvil Brother to Queen Elizabeth, Wife of King Edward the IV. He was a Perſon of no mean Judgment and Acquirements. He wrote Latin commendably enough, was a good Grecian, and had made a conſiderable Proficiency in the Canon Law. As to his Divinity he ſeems not to have gone far in the Fathers and Councils. He was too much a Temporizer, as the Reader may have obſerv'd, by his Marches and Countermarches in the three Reigns. He complied a great way in the Reformation in King Edward's time: For to mention nothing more in his Sermon preach'd before that Prince, he approves the receiving the Communion in both kinds; he is reconcil'd to the ſuppreſſing the Chauntries, declares againſt ſome Abuſes in the Maſs, and confeſſeth himſelf ſatisfied with ſeveral other Alterations in the Church: And as to the Sacrifice of the Holy Euchariſt, he ſeems to explain it commodiouſly enough. He grants the Sacrifice of the Croſs is ſufficient for all the purpoſes of Redemption: That there's no need of farther Attonement for Sin; and that the Euchariſtick Sacrifice is only continued to keep up the Memory, and apply the Benefits of our Saviours Paſſion; to ſtrengthen our Faith, and refreſh our Thankfulneſs. Gardiners Conteſt with Smith and Cheek about the Pronunciation of Greek.

This Prelates Abilities for a Miniſter of State may eaſily be collected from his Management. As to his Skill in the Greek, it has been mention'd already: But then it may be added, he ſeems to have valued himſelf too much upon this Part of Learning. For when Sir Thomas Smith, and Sir John Cheek had attempted the retrieving the old Pronunciation of the Greek Language, given the Sounds their juſt Compaſs, and brought them up to their Primitive Diſtinction: Gardiner then Chancellor of the Univerſity of Cambridge, wrote to Cheek the Profeſſor, to deſiſt from Innovation; for ſo he miſcall'd the Antient Way of pronouncing: This Letter not being taken notice of ſo far as he expected, he diſpatches an Order in his own Name, and the Univerſities, in which all the Members of that Body are forbidden to make any Change upon the modern Pronunciation, either in Greek or Latin. That the Diphthongs in either Language ſhould not be drawn to different Sounds, unleſs where the Vowels were to be parted into diſtinct Syllables. Αι and ε, ει and ι were to be ſounded as if they had the ſame Powers, and only diſtinguiſh'd in Writing. In ſhort, no body muſt be allow'd to diſpute upon the Force and Properties of the Alphabet, but govern himſelf by the preſent Uſage. Thus the Controverſy was knock'd down, and Gardiners Fancy prevail'd, till the Reformation in Religion was farther ſettled. The Conteſt was manag'd with more Learning and Concern than was generally expected. Gardiner inſiſted upon Cuſtom, and the Authority of the modern Greeks. Cheek and his Party on the other ſide, pleaded Old Authors of the beſt Claſs for Criticiſm and Credit. But enough of this. And to conclude with Gardiner, his Corps having lain in State for ſome time in St. Mary Overeys in Southwark, were attended to Wincheſter by the Lord Mountague, the Biſhop of Ely, and a Body of Two Hundred Gentlemen and Yeomen in Mourning. (b) Nicholas Heath Archbiſhop of York had the Broad Seal with the Title of Lord Chancellor on New Years Day following: But the Profits of the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter were ſequeſter'd for ſome time for the Cardinals Uſe. 'Twas thought his Eminence had a Proſpect of holding that See in Commendam with the other of Canterbury. But John White Biſhop of Lincoln, born at Wincheſter, Maſter of the School, and Warden of the College, ſollicited a Tranſlation thither: And by his Intereſt at Court gain'd the Promotion upon Condition of paying the Cardinal a yearly Penſion of a Thouſand Pounds. About this time Voiſie or Veſie Biſhop of Exeter departed this Life. He was ſucceeded by Dr. James Turbervile a Gentleman of a conſiderable Family. Turbervile was a great Benefactor to his See, and recover'd ſeveral Eſtates which had been alienated; and amongſt others the rich Mannor of Crediton or Kirton: This was given back by the Queen, but afterwards ſurrendred to Queen Elizabeth by Biſhop Cotton. (i) Godwin de Præſul. Octob. 25.

This Winter the Emperor Charles the Fifth, tir'd with the Traverſes of Fortune, and the Trouble of Governing, reſign'd his Hereditary Dominions to his Son King Philip. The next year he reſign'd the Empire, and retir'd to a private Life. His Brother Ferdinand was choſen Emperor by the Diet. As for King Philip he left England in September laſt, and ſtay'd beyond Sea about a Year and a half.

At the opening of the Parliament, the Queen endeavour'd to diſpoſe the Houſes to a full Reſtitution of Church Lands: But this Motion being generally diſreliſh'd, 'twas thought proper to drop the Undertaking. However, the Queens Piety prompted her to do her own Part, and carry the matter as far as 'twas practicable: To this purpoſe, having order'd the Houſe of Commons to attend her, ſhe told them her Conſcience would not give her Leave to take the Tenths and Firſt Fruits of Livings and Spiritual Promotions: That her Father had laid this Tax upon the Clergy in Conſequence of his Title of Supreme Head: And that ſince ſhe had given up all Pretenſions to that Extent of the Regale, ſhe would diſcharge the Impoſition granted to ſupport it. Upon this the Cardinal made a Speech to ſhow that Tythes and Impropriations were Parcel of the Churches Patrimony, and ought to be reſtor'd. In ſhort, the Parliament were prevail'd with to paſs a Bill for this purpoſe, ſo far as the Crown was concern'd. By this Act the Payment of Firſt Fruits and Tenths was extinguiſh'd: “And all Rectories, Benefices impropriate, Glebe Lands, Tythes, Oblations, Penſions, &c. veſted in the Crown ſince the Twentieth Year of King Henry the Eighth, are given up to the Church for the Augmentation of the Livings to which they formerly belong'd, for the Advantage of other poor Cures, for the furniſhing Preachers; for the exhibiting Scholars: And the Diſpoſal of theſe Revenues thus reſtor'd, is left to the Diſcretion of the Lord Legate Cardinal Pool. But then there was a Proviſo for ſaving the Right of the Subject, who had any Intereſt in theſe Eſtates granted from the Crown. There is likewiſe a Clauſe for exonerating the King and Queen and their Succeſſors, from the Payment of Penſions and Annuities to the Monks: To which are added Corrodies, and Fees, which for the future were to be paid out of the Tenths Firſt Fruits, &c. without any Burthen upon the Crown. There is another Proviſo by which the Patronage of theſe Impropriations belonging to the Crown is ſtill reſerv'd. And becauſe ſome Temporal Eſtates had been intermix'd, and leas'd out by the Crown with theſe Tenths, Impropriations, &c. 'Tis enacted, that Commiſſions ſhall be awarded out of the Exchecquer to Six indifferent Perſons, Three of the Spiritualty, and Three of the Temporalty, to call Twelve Men of Credit and Subſtance, before them: Twelve Men inhabiting in the Neighbourhood where theſe Eſtates lie; and to oblige them upon Oath to diſtinguiſh and ſever the Glebe Lands and other Spiritual Poſſeſſions, from the Temporal Eſtates, and to rate and apportion how much Rent ſhall be payed for the one and the other. There was another Act paſs'd this Seſſions for reſtraining Purveyors from taking any Proviſion within Five Miles of Cambridge or Oxford. Thus the Markets of both Univerſities were better ſupplied, and Things were ſold at a lower rate.

There was likewiſe a Bill put in againſt the Dutcheſs of Suffolk, and others, who had tranſported themſelves, to oblige them to return under Penalties. This paſs'd the Lords Houſe, but upon a Diviſion, was thrown out by the Commons. (l)

The Convocation. Octob. 1555.

Having now done with the Parliament which was diſſolv'd on the Ninth of December, I ſhall go back a little to the Convocation. A Writ for the ſummoning this Body was iſſued to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury: The See not being fill'd ſince the Attainder of Archbiſhop Cranmer. Boxhall Warden of Wincheſter preach'd the Sermon, and Dr. John Chriſtopherſon Dean of Norwich, was choſen Prolocutor. Cardinal Pool preſided, and had the King and Queens Letters Patents to indemnify him in holding the Synod. The Reader may ſee ſome Part of the Inſtrument in the Records. (m) And here it may be obſerv'd, the Cardinal at his firſt coming over, had the ſame Authority from the Crown for exerciſing his legantine Juriſdiction; which he is allow'd to manage with the ſame Liberty, which any Legate might have done in the Twenty Fifth Year of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth. (n) This Convocation to make the Queen an Acknowledgment for returning the Firſt Fruits, Tenths, &c. to the Church, granted a Subſidy of Six Shillings in the Pound, to be paid in Three Years next enſuing.

Cardinal Pools Plan for the Reformation of the Church paſs'd by both Houſes in Convocation.

But before I part with the Convocation, I muſt obſerve, that Cardinal Pool finding the Diſcipline of the Church relax'd, and ſome Defects in the Conſtitution, conſulted the Biſhops about drawing up a ſupplemental Proviſion. And here 'twas agreed that the beſt Expedient was to convene a Synod: That thus the Cardinal might be fartheſt inform'd of the Abuſes, and directed to proper Remedies. Purſuant to this Reſolution, a Convocation was ſummon'd, the Reformation Plan laid before them, and paſs'd by both Houſes: 'Tis digeſted into Twelve Heads or Decrees.

By the Firſt, a Proceſſion is order'd on St. Andrews Day, in memory of the Nations Reconciliation to the Catholick Church: Upon this Feſtival, a Sermon was to be made, or a Homily read to ſet forth the occaſion of the Solemnity. And here the Reader may pleaſe to take notice, that to avoid unneceſſary Explainings, and Repetition, I ſhall uſe the Cardinals Language.

The Second Decree provides for the Inſtruction of Pariſh Prieſts. For the purpoſe, they are oblig'd to be furniſh'd with a Latin Bible, with other Books proper to their Function, and particularly with the Conſtitutions of Otho—Othobone and the Archbiſhops of Canterbury: And thoſe who read, or keep any Heretical Books without Licence from the Pope, are declar'd excommunicate, and order'd to be proſecuted. The Doctrines of the Church are all receiv'd with Submiſſion and Belief, and all diſagreeing Tenents condemn'd: The Canons againſt Hereſy are confirm'd. An Abſtract of the Catholick Faith publiſh'd by the Eight General Council of Florence, for the Instruction of the Armenians, is inſerted: It begins with a Deſcription of the Papal Supremacy. And here the Biſhop of Rome is affirm'd Primate of the Univerſe, Succeſſor to the Prince of the Apoſtles St. Peter, Chriſt's Vicar, and Head of the whole Church: That all Chriſtians are to be inſtructed by him, and that in the Perſon of St. Peter he receiv'd a full Commiſſion from our Saviour to teach and govern the univerſal Church: And that this Prerogative of the See of Rome is unqueſtionable from the Hiſtory of General Councils, and the Doctrine of the Canons.

From hence the Decree proceeds to treat the Seven Sacraments. And in the Firſt Place, the Things Eſſential to a Sacrament are defin'd to be the matter, a certain Form of Words, and a proper Perſon to adminiſter: As to this laſt Requiſite, the Miniſters Intention of doing what the Church does, is reckon'd neceſſary. Baptiſm, Confirmation, and Orders, make a peculiar Impreſſion, or give the Mind a particular Signature call'd an indelible Character, and therefore are not to be repeated.

As to Baptiſm, a Prieſt is ordinarily the proper Miniſter of that Sacrament. But in Caſes of Neceſſity a Deacon, or a Layman, a Woman, a Heathen or an Heretick may baptize, provided any of them makes uſe of the Sacramental Form, and acts as the Church does, with an Intention of baptizing.

In ſpeaking to the Holy Euchariſt, 'tis declar'd, that upon the Words of Conſecration, the Subſtance of the Bread is turn'd into the Body of Chriſt, and the Subſtance of the Wine into his Blood.

Extreme Unction is not to be given to any ſick Perſon, unleſs the Patient is more likely to die, than to recover.

The Hoſt is to be renew'd every Week, and a Taper always kept burning before it, according to Antient Cuſtom.

The Anniverſary Feſtivals for the Dedication of Churches are order'd to be kept on the Firſt Sunday in October: And all Shows, Revelling, and Intemperance, commonly us'd at Wakes, are forbidden under Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures: And in caſe of neceſſity, the Church is to apply to the Aſſiſtance of the ſecular Magiſtrate.

The Third Decree injoins Reſidence to the Biſhops, the Chapters and the reſt of the Clergy. There is likewiſe a Proviſion againſt Pluralities: And thoſe that had more than one incompatible Benefice, are oblig'd to reſign it within Two Months, after the Publication of theſe Decrees.

The Fourth complains of a cuſtomary Abuſe; that the Biſhops neglected preaching, and transfer'd that Part of their Function upon others: 'Tis therefore decreed by the Synod, that Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, ſhould be oblig'd to preach purſuant to our Saviour and his Apoſtles Commands: And that in caſe they are prevented by any lawful Impediment, they ſhould appoint ſome Perſons well qualified for this Buſineſs. All Parſons and Vicars are likewiſe injoin'd to preach every Sunday and Holy Day, or provide ſome other Perſon for the Pulpit. And that theſe Exerciſes may be perform'd to the better Advantage, the Biſhops are to inſtruct their Clergy in the matter and manner of their Sermons: Particularly, they are to put them in mind of exhorting their People to Repentance, and of guarding againſt thoſe Errors and Immoralities ſo remarkable in the late Schiſm.

No unlicenſed Perſon is allow'd to preach out of his own Pariſh. And becauſe all thoſe who had Cures might not be qualified for the Pulpit, ſome Homilies drawn up by the Appointment of the Synod, are promiſed to be ſhortly publiſh'd: And that theſe were to be read by the Curates inſtead of Sermons.

By the way, it does not appear that any more than the Lines of this Scheme were ſtruck out. The Cardinal's Deſign was Four Books of Homilies. The firſt was to ſettle the controverted Points for a Preſervative againſt Error. The Second explains the Creed, the Ten Commandments, the Sacraments, and the Salutation of the Bleſſed Virgin. The Third furniſh'd Diſcourſes upon the Epiſtles and Goſpels for all Sundays and Holy Days. And the Fourth was a Sort of a common Place upon Virtue and Vice, with a ſhort Rationale upon the Rights and Ceremonies of the Church. *

To return; The Fifth Decree of the Cardinals Reformation, relates to the management of the Clergy. And here the Biſhops are conjur'd to guard their Conduct, and ſet an inoffenſive and exemplary Preſident: Particularly, they are exhorted not to ſwell their Figure to any unneceſſary Bulk: Not to fall into any pompous or expenſive Affectation, with reſpect to Habit or Retinue: That they ſhould be frugal in their Eating and Entertainments, and not exceed Three or Four Diſhes, excepting Deſſerts, upon any Occaſion. And that the remainder of their Incomes ſhould be ſpent in relieving the Poor, in exhibiting Scholars, and other Works of Piety, and publick Service. The ſame Rules of Sobriety and Diſcretion, the ſame reſerves for Charity, are ſet the reſt of the Clergy in proportion to their Revenues. To proceed; Marriage as far as Subdeacons incluſively, is declar'd unlawful: That where any within the Orders prohibited were Married, Separation is injoin'd. And laſtly, the Clergy are forbidden concerning themſelves in ſecular, mean, or ſcandalous Employments.

The Sixth relates to the giving Orders: And here the Biſhops are put in mind, that they ought to examine the Qualifications of the Perſons to be Ordain'd themſelves, and not truſt to the report of others. However, ſince the number of Candidates may be to much for the Biſhops Inſpection, he is allow'd to take in the Aſſiſtance of the Archdeacons, and other Perſons of Character. Thoſe to be Ordain'd muſt be examin'd upon the Heads of Orthodoxy, Learning, Probity, Birth, and Age. They are likewiſe oblig'd to give the Biſhop convenient Notice, to enquire into theſe Particulars: And laſtly, they are to lay open their Conſcience beforehand, to ſome diſcreet Confeſſor, and receive the Holy Euchariſt at Ordination.

The Seventh provides againſt Neglects and Abuſes in Collations and Inſtitutions: For to the right diſcharge of this Branch of the Epiſcopal Office, the Apoſtles Caution of laying Hands ſuddenly on no Man, plainly refers: And here the ſame Enquiries concerning Learning, Manners, Orthodoxy, &c. requir'd at Ordination, are neceſſary to be premis'd. The Biſhop is to Examine whether the Perſon to be promoted is likely to reſide: He is likewiſe to demand the ſight of a Teſtimonial, from the Heads of ſome College in recommendation of the Perſon. Farther, the Biſhops are exhorted, that vacant Benefices may be furniſh'd with Incumbents, with all poſſible Expedition. And that during their being Void, neither the Livings, nor the People, may ſuffer.

The Eighth declares againſt the diſpoſing Benefices before they are Void.

The Ninth is pointed againſt Simony, and is very Strict, Comprehenſive and Commendable. Nothing can be better guarded than the Oath againſt Simony, which the Clerk preſented, is oblig'd to take, it runs thus:

Ego N. Præſentatus ad Beneficium de N. Juro ad hæc ſacroſancti Dei Evangelia, per me Corporalitèr tacta, quod propter prædictum Beneficium Obtinendum, aut Præſentationem ad idem habendum, aut acquirendum, neque ego, neque alia Perſona vice & Nomine meo, nec de Conſenſu, aut ſcientia mea, Patrono, ſeu alii cuicunque aliquid Præmiſſorum Nomine, aut Intuitu promiſimus, aut dedimus, nec quidquam ejus Rei gratia permutavimus, compenſavimus, aut prius datum Confirmavimus, apudve quemquam depoſuimus, ſeu quidquam mutuavimus, ſeu Elocavimus, priuſve mutuatum, Commodatum, Depoſitum, aut Elocatum, aut quocunque modo debitum remiſimus, ſeu relaxavimus, nec de Sanctuario, glebâ, Domibus, Terris, Prædiis, Tenementis, Reditibus predictæ Eccleſiæ, Fructibus vel decimis, aut Oblationibus ejuſdem præteritis, præſentibus, aut futuris, Donationem, Remiſſionem, Locationemve promiſimus, fecimus, aut inivimus, ſeu aliquis noſtrum de Mandato, ſcientia aut Conſenſu meo promiſit, fecit, aut Inivit. Ita me Deus Adjuvet, & hæc ſancta Dei Evangelia.

The Tenth is levelled againſt the Alienation of Lands or Goods belonging to the Church. And here all Incumbents are oblig'd to make a Survey, Terrier, and Inventory of the Real, and Perſonal Eſtates, belonging to their reſpective Churches and Promotions: That of theſe there ſhould be Two Authentick Copies, one of them laid up in the Pariſh Church: The other was to be depoſited with the Chapter, if the Church was Metropolitical: If 'twas a Cathedral of a Dioceſe only, then the Survey or Inventory was to be lodg'd with the Archbiſhop: But when it belong'd to Parochial Churches, 'twas to be tranſmitted to the Dioceſans Cuſtody. And at all Viſitations the Metropolitans, and other Ordinaries were to carry this Record along with them, and examine whether any thing ſpecified in the Evidences were wanting; and if ſo, to endeavor the recovery.

The Eleventh directs to a Proviſion for a Seminary in all Cathedrals. The deſign of it was to form the Education of thoſe intended for holy Functions. Children were not to be taken into this Nurſery under Eleven Years of Age, nor unleſs they could Write and Read: Their Genius and Inclination was to be examin'd before their Admiſſion. After they had learn'd Grammar, they were to be inſtructed in the learning and behavior, proper for an Eccleſiaſtick: They were to appear in a clerical Tonſure and Habit, to aſſiſt in the Service of the Choir, and oblig'd to the ſame way of Living with other Clerks. To raiſe a Fund towards their Maintenance, the Biſhops were to contribute the Fortieth Part of their Revenues, Tythes, Subſidies, and other incident Charges deducted: All Prebendaries likewiſe and Benefic'd Perſons, whoſe Promotions amounted to the clear Value of Twenty Pounds per Annum, the Tythes, &c. diſcounted, were to contribute in the ſame Proportion.

And laſtly; None were to teach School in any Place, unleſs allow'd by the Ordinary, who was to examine their Sufficiency, and preſcribe them what Books were to be uſed.

* Ex Mſs. C. C. C. Cantab.

The Twelfth lays down Rules for Viſitations. And here not only Churches, but Schools, Hoſpitals, and publick Libraries are to be viſited. The laſt Article was thrown in for examining whether any Heretical Books were lodg'd there.

In Metropolitical Viſitations, the Archbiſhop was to proceed upon the Conſtitution of Innocent the Fourth, which begins Romana Eccleſia. By this regulation, the Metropolitan was to enquire, whether the Biſhops were Reſident upon their Dioceſes: Whether they Preach'd and Liv'd ſuitably to their Character: Whether they diſcharg'd their Duty in Ordinations, and admitting to Benefices, in aſſigning Confeſſors, puniſhing Diſorders, and all other things, with reſpect, both to Spirituals and Temporals, belonging to their Function. And thoſe Irregularities which can't be Reform'd by Archiepiſcopal Juriſdiction, he is to report to a provincial Synod: And if the difficulty prove too big for ſuch an Aſſembly, Application is to be made to the Apoſtolick See.

Feb. 155$\frac{5}{6}$.

And laſtly, Archdeacons are to govern themſelves by the Canons in their Viſitations: And where any thing is out of their Verge, or too big for their Correction, they are to acquaint the Biſhop; and ſee that all his Mandates and Proviſions are executed and obſerv'd. And that they may Anſwer up to their Office the better, the Provincial Conſtitutions of Otho and Ottobon upon this Head, are Confirm'd by the preſent Synod. This Reformation, as 'tis call'd, of Cardinal Pool, was Publiſh'd by him at Lambeth in February following. *

Philpot Burnt in Smithfield.

Upon the Eighteenth of December this Year, John Philpot Archdeacon of Wincheſter, and Son to Sir Peter Philpot of Hamſhire, was Burnt for Religion in Smithfield. This Gentleman had been more than a Twelve Month Priſoner in the King's Bench. His Commitment was only for diſputing againſt the Corporal Preſence, the Maſs and Tranſubſtantiation, in the firſt Convocation of this Reign. This was a great hardſhip, conſidering the Queen promis'd liberty of Speech, as hath been already related. Indeed, This was no more than neceſſary Privilege: For unleſs the Members were allow'd to ſpeak their Mind, which way could the Controverſy be diſcuſs'd, and the Truth diſcover'd? Philpot was firſt brought before the Queen's Commiſſioners, Dr. Story, Mr. Cholmely, and Mr. Roper: He was afterwards put into Bonner's Hands, from whom he Appeal'd, as not being his Dioceſan: He argued that Succeſſion of Biſhops without Succeſſion of Doctrine, was no ſufficient Proof of Catholick Communion: He is ſometimes tranſported into vehemence of Expreſſion, but owns haſtineſs of Speech his natural Infirmity. Bonner treated him very coarſly, lodg'd him in his Coal-houſe, and ſet him in the Stocks. He is pronounc'd an Heretick for calling the Maſs Idolatry and Abomination; and for denying the Real, that is the Corporal Preſence of Chriſt's Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar. (o) His Performance in the Convocation, and his Defence at his Examination, are ſufficient Evidence of no ordinary Learning and Parts. He maintain'd his Conſcience to the laſt, and Suffer'd with great Chearfulneſs and Courage.

To proceed; Conſtable alias Featherſtone, who had been gently puniſhed for his treaſonable Practiſe, reviv'd his Impoſture, and counterfitted King Edward again, to raiſe a Rebellion. This lewd Practiſe, it ſeems, made an Impreſſion upon a great many. For when People are diſaffected to a Government, they are apt to give credit to the moſt abſurd and ridiculous Stories: But Conſtable receiv'd his Deſerts, was arraign'd at Guild-hall, and executed at Tyburn. (p)

The Final Proceſs againſt Cranmer.

I ſhall now give the Reader an Account of the remaining Proceſs againſt Archbiſhop Cranmer. He had been cited to appear at Rome within Eighty Days. This, as hath been obſerv'd, was mere Form, for they knew his coming thither was wholly Impracticable: However, after the Term was expir'd the Pope pronounc'd him Contumax. Purſuant to this Sentence a Commiſſion was directed to Bonner Biſhop of London, and Thirleby Biſhop of Ely, to degrade and excommunicate the Archbiſhop, and conſign him over to the Secular Magiſtrate. In this Inſtrument 'tis ſet forth, that the Proceedings againſt him had paſs'd through all the Legal Forms in the Court of Rome: That Articles had been exhibited, Evidence produc'd, and his Defence heard and examin'd: All which was notoriouſly untrue. (q) This being allow'd notwithſtanding for matter of Fact, Bonner and Thirleby executed their Commiſſion. Cranmer made a ſtand upon their Authority, and Appeal'd from the Pope to a general Council: This Expedient tho' manag'd to the beſt Advantage, and put in Form of Law, did no Service. The reaſon why Cranmer was not ſooner diſpatch'd, is ſaid to be owing to Gardiner. This Prelate was no Friend to Cardinal Pool: He is thought to have grudg'd him his Character and Sway in the Engliſh Church. He knew the Cardinal ſtood ill at the Court of Rome: This gave him ſome hopes that the Pope might be brought to recal Pool's Commiſſion, and that himſelf might be made both Cardinal and Legate; And when he had once puſh'd his Fortune thus far, he did not queſtion gaining the See of Canterbury. Upon this View he is ſuppos'd to ſtop the Proceſs againſt Ridley, Latimer, and Cranmer, from the revival of the Act againſt Hereſy, enacted the laſt Parliament, 'till the Twelfth of September this Year. During this Interval there was no Commiſſion ſent from the Pope to bring Cranmer to his Tryal. Now by Antient Privilege no final Sentence could be paſs'd upon a Metropolitan, without an Authority from the Pope.

Feb. 14. 155$\frac{5}{6}$.

He Appeals from the Pope to a general Council.

Cranmer, as I obſerv'd, Appeal'd from the Court of Rome to a general Council. I ſhall mention ſome of the Reaſons on which his Appeal was founded. Firſt, becauſe he was cited to Rome, and yet kept in Priſon, and under no poſſibility of making his Appearance: And that no Man was oblig'd to defend himſelf there by Proxy: And beſides ſince all his Eſtate was Seiz'd, he was in no condition to furniſh the Charge. Secondly, becauſe being cited by Brooks Biſhop of Glouceſter, delegated by Cardinal Pool, to Anſwer certain Articles, in which his Life and Fortune were nearly concern'd, he was deny'd the Aſſiſtance of Council, contrary to all Equity and Juſtice. Thirdly, he complains the Proceſs went on, notwithſtanding his Appeal; which was breaking in upon the general Rule in ſuch Caſes. Farther, that after his Proteſtation had been admitted, and a Copy of his Anſwer promis'd him for farther Amendment, neither the one, nor the other were made good. To paſs over his other Reaſons, and juſt mention his Opinion concerning the Holy Euchariſt: I ſhall give it the Reader in Fox's Words:

His Belief concerning the Holy Eucharist.

Cranmer diſputing againſt the Popiſh Doctrine, which by Conſequence as he argues, affirms, our Saviours having Two Bodies very different from each other, one in Heaven; and the other in the Sacrament of the Altar. Now to me, ſays the Archbiſhop, it ſeems a more ſound and comfortable Doctrine, that Chriſt has but one Body, and that has Form and Faſhion of a Man's true Body; which Body ſpiritually enters into the whole Man, Body and Soul: And tho' the Sacrament be conſum'd, yet whole Chriſt remains, and feeds the receiver unto eternal Life, if he continue in Godlineſs, and never departs until the receiver forſake him. And as for the Wicked they have not Chriſt within them at all, who cannot be where Belial is. And this is my Faith. (r) And for this Belief he declares he was govern'd by the holy Scriptures, by the Primitive Church, and the Expoſition of the Fathers. And that he was not only willing to be determin'd by the Senſe, but to Subſcribe the very Phraſes and Terms of the Antients, relating to the Holy Euchariſt.

February 14. His Appeal is Over-rul'd.

He is degraded and put into the Hands of the Civil Magiſtrate.

He Signs a Recantation of his Doctrine.

The Archbiſhops Appeal being over-rul'd, Bonner, and Thirlby, proceeded to a formal degradation. They put a Mitre and Pall upon him, with the reſt of the Habit for an Inſtalment: And that the Ceremony might be perform'd in the moſt ignominious manner, this Equipage was made of Canvaſs. Thirlby, it muſt be ſaid, did his part with regret and good Nature: But Bonner manag'd in a rallying inſulting way, and made pageantry and diverſion of the Employment. Being thus put into the Hands of the Secular Magiſtrate, a Writ for burning him went out on the Twenty Fourth of February, which notwithſtanding was not executed 'till the Twenty firſt of March following. In the mean time, the Doctors and Divines of the Univerſity endeavor'd to reconcile him to the Church of Rome, and bring him to retract his Opinions. To this purpoſe they remov'd him from the Priſon to the Deans Lodgings, and treated him with great Civility and Reſpect: They employ'd proper Agents to argue with him firſt, and if that expedient fail'd, to try his Conſtancy with Overtures of Favor. One Henry Sydall, and a Spaniſh Fryar de Villa Garcina, were the principal Managers. They acquainted him how acceptable the diſowning his Errors would be to the King and Queen: That the Council and others of the Nobility, were inclin'd to do him good Offices: They gave him hopes not only of his Life, but his former Station: And that nothing was requir'd of him but only ſubſcribing a ſhort form: That upon this condition the Queen would give him his Choice, either of an honourable Poſt, or a private Life. That without this Compliance there was no proſpect of a Pardon, no hopes of either ſtaying in this World, or being well receiv'd in the other. In ſhort, the Infirmities of Nature prevail'd, and Cranmer was gain'd to Sign a Recantation. In this Inſtrument he owns the Popes Supremacy to the utmoſt Extent: He declares for the Corporal Preſence, and Tranſubſtantiation, and for the other Six Sacraments as they are held in the Church of Rome: He owns his Belief of Purgatory, of praying for thoſe detain'd there, and Invocation of Saints. And in general, he profeſſes to believe every thing taught by the Catholick Church of Rome. He begs God's forgiveneſs for his having been of another Opinion, and Conjures thoſe who have been miſled either by his Doctrine or Example, to return to the Unity of the Church. And in the Cloſe, Appeals to God Almighty for his Integrity in this Declaration: That he was not ſway'd by any regards of Intereſt or Fear; but that 'twas his Conſcience which govern'd him wholly in this Affair.

Fox affirms the chief Motive to Cranmer's Compliance, was to gain him Time, for the finiſhing his Anſwer to Gardiner's Book, call'd Marcus Antonius Conſtantius, concerning the holy Sacrament. Fox attempts to prove his Conjecture by a Letter of Cranmer's, ſent to a Lawyer. But nothing of this can be concluded from the Letter, as 'tis printed by Fox. On the contrary, the Archbiſhop acquaints the Lawyer, whom he deſir'd to draw up his Appeal from the Pope, that the principal reaſon of his applying to this Expedient, was to lengthen his Life a little, 'till he had finiſh'd his Anſwer to the Book above-mention'd: But here is not a Syllable of his Recantation in the Letter, which was not made 'till his Appeal was over-rul'd, 'till he was degraded in Form, and put into the Hands of the Secular Magiſtrate. (s) After all, Cranmer found no Account in giving way thus unhappily. The Queen was inexorable upon this Head, and reſolv'd to proceed to the laſt Rigors. One of our learned Church Hiſtorians ſays, 'twas thought Pool himſelf haſtn'd Cranmer's Execution, longing to be inveſted in that See. (t) But ſo diſhonourable a Practiſe is foreign to the Cardinals Character: And if we examine the matter farther, 'twill be found Pool could have no Temptation to ſuch extraordinary Management: For, as hath been already obſerv'd, the See of Canterbury was actually Void upon Cranmer's Attainder, Two Years ſince. Beſides, the preſent Pope in his Bull of December laſt, had collated Pool to the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury. And in this Inſtrument he declares he had ſolemnly excommunicated and depoſed Cranmer. (u) From hence 'tis evident that Cranmer's Life could be no hindrance to Pool's Advancement to the See of Canterbury.

Fox.

To proceed; the Queen ſent Dr. Cole to Oxford, with private Inſtructions, to prepare a Sermon againſt the Twenty firſt of March, when Cranmer was to be Burnt. The Lords William's and Chaundois, Sir Thomas Bridges, Sir John Brown, and ſome other Perſons of Condition were likewiſe order'd to be at Oxford the ſame Day, with their Retinue, to prevent diſturbance. When the Time drew near, Cole viſited Cranmer in the Priſon, and queſtion'd him touching his Perſeverance in the Catholick Faith. Cranmer gave him a Satisfactory Anſwer. The next Morning, which was the Day of the Execution, Cole made him another Viſit, Exhorted him to conſtaney, and gave him Mony to diſpoſe of to the Poor as he thought fit. Soon after, the Spaniſh Friar, who was a Witneſs to his Recantation, propos'd the Reading his Recantation to a publick Audience: And to this purpoſe deſir'd him to Tranſcribe the Inſtrument with his own Hand, and Sign it. 'Till this Time, as far as it appears, Cranmer had no Suſpicion of being brought to the Stake. And here it muſt be ſaid he was us'd with unpreſidented Severity: For either the Friar, or the reſt who tamper'd with him, had Authority from the Court, or not: If they had not, they were ſcandalouſly falſe in giving ſo ſtrong an expectation of Favor: If they had Inſtructions to flatter him thus far, the Imputation muſt lie elſewhere: But farther, when his Doom was unalterably fix'd, 'tis ſtrange, they would not give him notice of what he was to expect: To hurry a Man blindfold into the other World, not to afford him Time for Recollection, and putting himſelf in a Poſture for Eternity, looks like Cruelty in Diſtraction.

Dr. Coles Sermon at Cranmers Execution.

To proceed, Cranmer, who was ſtill uncertain what would become of him, was brought from Priſon to St. Mary's Church, and plac'd over againſt the Pulpit upon a low Scaffold. Soon after Dr. Cole began his Sermon: He diſcours'd upon the Juſtice and Mercy of God: That notwithſtanding the Attribute of Mercy prevail'd ſo far, as not to charge the Puniſhment to the Bulk of the Crime, yet his Juſtice requir'd, that even Repentance ſhould not wholly protect ſome Offenders from Corection: Of this he gave an Inſtance in David, who when he had the Liberty of chuſing his Puniſhment, and prefer'd the Plague, tho' God ſhorten'd the Time, yet did not releaſe him from all the Calamity. This he applied to Cranmer's Caſe, and told him that notwithſtanding by diſclaiming his Errors, he had gain'd the Churches Abſolution, yet there were Reaſons why the Queen and Council ſhould order his Execution. And that he might be the leſs ſurpriz'd at theſe Proceedings, he put him in mind that he had divorc'd the Queens Mother, drawn a Blemiſh upon her Birth, and thrown the Popes Supremacy out of the Kingdom: That he had been at the Head of Hereſy and Schiſm, and exerted himſelf with all imaginable Zeal in ſo bad a Cauſe. That as the taking off the Duke of Northumberland, was ſome Reparation for the Execution of Sir Thomas Moor, ſo 'twas but reaſonable there ſhould be an Equivalent for deſtroying Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter. And becauſe Ridley, Hooper, and Ferrar, had not bulk enough for a Counterpoiſe to Fiſher's Character, 'twas fit Cranmer ſhould be thrown in to make up Weight. Beſides theſe, the King and Queen had other juſt Motives, which was not proper to inſiſt on.

After this, he Addreſs'd himſelf to the Audience, exhorted them to Caution, and Loyalty; Put them in Mind by the Inſtance before them, that no dignity or heighth of Station was ſufficient to protect a Criminal from Juſtice: And here he run on upon the uncertainty of human greatneſs, the ſtrange reverſes of Fortune, and drew a Paralel between Cranmer's former Circumſtances, and the deſpicable Condition he was in at preſent. At laſt, directing his Diſcourſe to the Archbiſhop, he endeavor'd to ſupport him againſt the Terrors of Death: He told him he had no reaſon to diſtruſt the Application of our Saviours ſaying to the Penitent Thief, this Day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe: And that God was faithful, and would not ſuffer him to be tempted above what he was able. To this he added, the miraculous Deliverance of the Three Children, that the Flame of Nebuchadnezzars Furnace played about them like a lambent Fire: That St. Andrew expir'd in Pleaſure on the Croſs: And that St Lawrence held out with Patience upon the burning Grate. After this he gave God thanks for Cranmers Converſion, and promis'd him, there ſhould be Diriges and Maſſes ſaid for his Soul in all the Churches of Oxford.

Cranmers Exhortation to the People.

During the Sermon, Cranmer wept, and gave great Signs of Grief and Diſpleaſure at himſelf. And now Cole call'd upon him to make an open Profeſſion of his Faith, to remove all Suſpicion of Heterodoxy, and give the World Satisfaction of his dying a good Catholick. The Archbiſhop agreed to the Motion, and ſpeaking to the Company, told them there was one Miſcarriage in his Life, which troubled him more than all the reſt. And after having kneeled down and prayed, he ſuggeſted ſome Things briefly to the Audience by way of Exhortation. He put them in mind not to engage their Affections too far with the World: To obey the King and Queen not only for Wrath, but for Conſcience ſake: Becauſe they were Gods Miniſters, and that whoever reſiſts them, reſiſts the Ordinance of God. Upon theſe Grounds he told them they ought to do the Duty of good Subjects, not out of Fear only, but Inclination. From hence he proceeded to recommend benevolent Temper, and general Kindneſs, and not to hate, or hurt any one: And that thoſe who were Rich, ſhould by no means forget being charitable to the Poor. And now he told them that being upon the brink of Eternity, he ſhould declare his Faith without the leaſt Reſerve or Diſſimulation. And after having repeated the Creed, and profeſs'd his Belief of every Article of the Catholick Faith; of every Thing contain'd in the Old and New Teſtament, he came to the great Thing which troubled more than any Action of his whole Life: And that was the ſigning and publiſhing a Paper againſt his Conſcience: That 'twas the Fear of Death which carried him to this Prevarication: And ſince his Hand had mov'd counter to his Heart, he reſolv'd it ſhould be burnt before the reſt of his Body. Then he renounc'd the Pope in ſtrong Language, and as to the Holy Euchariſt he declar'd his Belief, was the ſame with what he had maintain'd in his Book againſt the Biſhop of Wincheſter. This was a great Diſappointment to the Roman Catholicks: They were ſtrangely ſurpriz'd at his recanting his Recantation, and charg'd him with Diſſembling and Falſehood; he replied, he was always a Lover of Truth and clear Dealing, and never practic'd otherwiſe, except in his late Recantation. Upon this, he was hurried to the Place where Ridley and Latimer were executed, and the Fire ſet to him. He made his Word good, and held his Right Hand extended in the Flame, never drawing it back, excepting once to wipe his Face. His Fortitude was very extraordinary. He burnt to Appearance without Motion or Pain: He ſeemed to repel the Force of Fire, and overlook the Torture by ſtrength of Thought. 'Tis reported by ſome of our Hiſtorians, that his Heart was found whole, after his Body was burnt to Aſhes: (u) But the Truth of this Relation may be queſtion'd: For Fox, who never omits any thing for the Advantage of thoſe who ſuffer'd, ſays nothing of this wonderful Circumſtance.

Fox.
He recants his Recantation.

And ſuffers with great Fortitude.

The Court was reſolv'd to have his Life: But which way they could reach it upon the ſcore of Religion, is not eaſy to diſcover at firſt Sight. His Recantation had brought him within the Mercy of the Eccleſiaſtical Law, for he was no Heretick relaps'd. Now to condemn a Catholick to the Flames, and burn a Man for Hereſy, that they own is no Heretick, is myſterious Severity. To make this matter ſomewhat more intelligible, we are to obſerve, that Cranmers Recantation was poſterior to the Writ for his Execution. Had he recanted before they had put him in the Hands of

of the ſecular Magiſtrate, his Life in all likelyhood had been ſaved. For then he might have pleaded the Canon Law for his Diſcharge. However, tho' he might have loſt the Letter, he was ſtill within the Equity. Why then did not the Biſhops petition for ſtopping the Execution of the Writ? Since they could not call him an Heretick relaps'd? 'Tis true, they might have injoyn'd him Penance: But which way they could bring him to the Stake, is hard to conjecture. Such Rigour was ſtreining againſt the Canon Law, contrary to cuſtomary Practice, and particularly to the Proceedings in the preſent Reign. For thoſe who were burnt had the Offer of their Lives, upon condition of recanting their Tenents. As to the civil Magiſtracy, ſince the Church had put him in their Hands for Hereſy, 'tis granted they might legally award a burning Writ: But then ſince the Government had determin'd his Death, was it not leſs invidious to take him off for Treaſon, than burn him for Hereſy?

Something of his Character.

To add a Word or Two farther concerning this Archbiſhop. He was deſcended from an Antient and Wealthy Family in Nottinghamſhire; and bred in Jeſus College in Cambridge: Upon what occaſion he was firſt taken notice of by King Henry the Eighth, has been already related. He was a Perſon of great Equality of Temper, and never diſcover'd his Hopes or Fears with Levity or Dejection. He was of a gentle, generous, and forgiving Diſpoſition. When he was in Power, he treated the Roman Catholicks with Lenity and good Humour: And being charg'd with Remiſsneſs, and Overcomplaiſance for ſuch Management, he us'd to defend himſelf by ſaying, that People ought to have time to diſentangle themſelves; and be led, rather than driven out of their Miſtakes. As to his Learning, he was a great Divine, and over and above well read in the Canon and Civil Laws. By extracting the Books he made uſe of, he was prepar'd to give a ſudden and ſatisfactory Reſolution of almoſt any Queſtion within his Profeſſion. He had ſtudied the Controverſy touching the Holy Sacrament with the utmoſt Exactneſs: And made a full Collection of the Senſe of the Fathers, Councils, and modern Doctors, upon this Argument: As to the reſt of his Character and Management, it has been already related in the order of time, and therefore needs not be repeated. An Account of the Miſunderſtandings between the Engliſh Refugees in Germany.

I ſhall now go back a Year or Two, and give the Reader a brief Account of the Differences which happen'd amongſt the Engliſh Refugees in Germany. I have already obſerv'd, that ſome of theſe Exiles ſettled at Emden in Weſtfrizland: Some at Arrow in Switzerland: Some at Straſbourg: And ſome at Zurich and Franckfort. To begin with thoſe at Francfort, where they procur'd the Liberty of a Church, by the Favour of Glauberge one of the Principal Senators. Here they had the ſame Liberty of preaching and adminiſtring the Sacraments with the French: But with this Condition, that the Engliſh ſhould conform to the French in Doctrine and Ceremonies, and ſubſcribe their Confeſſion of Faith, which was done accordingly. However, they were not bound up to Punctualities, but had ſomething of a diſcretionary Latitude: For ſo far as the French gave way to a Diverſity of Ceremonies, the Magiſtracy were content to allow it. Upon this Permiſſion, the Engliſh gave in to the German and French Novelties, and refin'd to a conſiderable Alteration upon their own Common-Prayer-Book. For inſtance, they agreed the Reſponſes ſhould not be pronounc'd aloud: That the Litany, the Surplice, and ſeveral other Things preſcrib'd by the Rubrick, ſhould be omitted: The Reaſon was, becauſe the Reform'd in thoſe Countries would be ſomewhat ſhock'd with theſe Ceremonies. 'Twas farther reſolv'd, that the Prieſt (whom they call the Miniſter) ſhould uſe a Confeſſion different from the Engliſh, and as they fancied better ſuited to their preſent Circumſtances. When this was done, the People were to ſing one of Hopkins and Sternholds Pſalms. This Innovation was made in Conformity to the French, Dutch, Italian, Spaniſh, and Scotch Cuſtom: And thus it ſeems, they thought all the Reform'd wiſer than thoſe of their own Country. After the Pſalm, the Miniſter was to pray for the Aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, and then proceed to the Sermon. When the Sermon was done, they made a General Prayer for all Eſtates and Conditions, and particularly for England: Then follow'd the Lords Prayer, and the Creed, after which the People ſung another Pſalm, and were diſmiſs'd with the Miniſters Bleſſing. As to the Adminiſtration of the Holy Euchariſt, they unanimouſly agreed to leave out ſeveral things as unneceſſary and ſuperſtitious. And thus after they had diſguis'd and maim'd the Engliſh Service to a remarkable Diſadvantage, they choſe their Miniſter, and Deacons, and open'd their Church. (y)

Upon this Eſtabliſhment, they thought fit to acquaint the reſt of the Engliſh Refugees, and invite them to ſettle at Franckfort. To this purpoſe Letters were ſent to Straſbourg, Zurich, Emden, and Weſel. This Letter is ſign'd by John Stanton, John Makebray, William Williams, William Wittingham, William Hammond, Thomas Wood, Michael Gill.

Aug. 2*d*.

The Engliſh at Straſbourg miſtook the meaning of their Letter. They imagin'd the Requeſt was only to furniſh thoſe at Franckfort, with One or Two for the paſtoral Charge, and to take the Government of that Church upon them. To this purpoſe, Mr. Grindal wrote to Biſhop Scory at Emden, to undertake the Super-intendency of the Frankfort Congregation. Scory complied, and offer'd his Aſſiſtance: But before his Letter came to Frankfort, the Engliſh there had elected Knox, Haddon, and Lever for their Miniſters. Beſides, the Frankfort Congregation had no Inclination for a Super-intendents being put upon them; for in the firſt Place they reſerv'd the choice of their Church Governors to themſelves: And over and above, had already declar'd againſt a ſpiritual Monarchy, and made choice of Two or Three Paſtors with co-ordinate Authority.

Id. Page 9.

The Engliſh at Zurich refuſe to uſe any other Form excepting the Engliſh Common Prayer.

The Engliſh at Zurich being inform'd of the meaſures taken at Frankfort, refuſe to concur with thoſe Innovations, and declare their Reſolution not to uſe any Form different from the Engliſh Common-Prayer-Book. Soon after, the Engliſh at Zurich ſent Chambers to Frankfort, to adjuſt the Terms for them, and make them eaſy at their coming thither: But the Frankfort Congregation giving Chambers no Aſſurance his Friends ſhould have the Liberty of uſing the Engliſh Service, the Invitation was refuſ'd: And ſoon after Knox came from Geneva to Frankfort, and officiated as their Miniſter. This Refuſal was ill taken by the Frankfordians, who complain of the Incompliance in their Letter to Zurich. In this Remonſtrance, they except againſt the Uſe of the Engliſh Common-Prayer-Book, and take the Freedom to call ſome of the Ceremonies unprofitable, and others not to be endur'd. And whereas, it might be objected their refining upon the Liturgy, and diſcharging great Part of it, might be a Hardſhip upon the Memories of the Compilers, and ſtick a Blemiſh upon the Engliſh Reformation: To this they anſwer'd, that the Engliſh Biſhops and Divines in the late Reign, had made no ſcruple to alter many Things, and would have gone on to farther Deletions and Improvements, had they not been prevented by the Iniquity of the Times: And had they been in the Circumſtances of the Refugees, there is no Queſtion, but that they would have relax'd upon theſe Points, and practic'd with the ſame Latitude.

Id. page 16. Nov. 15.

Thoſe at Strasbourg offer ſomething towards an Accommodation.

The Exiles at Strasbourg, not willing to break altogether with the Frankfordians, ſent Chambers and Grindall to them with farther Overtures for compoſing the Difference. They acquaint them in a Letter how willing they are to accept their Invitation, and cloſe with their Church: But then they deſire the Engliſh Service may be retain'd as far as 'tis poſſible. That going off from that Form to any remarkable Alteration, could not be done without throwing a hard Imputation upon thoſe who drew it up, and upon the Engliſh Martyrs who loſt their Lives in Defence of it. That a new Model would give the Enemy an Occaſion to charge them with Errors in Doctrine, and Inconſtancy: That 'twas likewiſe the way to unſettle the Reform'd in England: To make them Queſtion the Orthodoxy of their Religion, and diſcourage them from tranſporting themſelves. This Letter was ſign'd by James Haddon, Edwin Sandes, Edmund Grindal, John Huntington, Guido Eaton, John Jeffry, John Peddar, Thomas Eaton, Michael Reymuger, Auſtin Bradbridge, Arthur Saul, Thomas Steward, Chriſtopher Goodman, Humphrey Alcoxon, Thomas Lakin, Thomas Crafton.

Nov. 23. 1554.

Knox comes from Geneva, and is choſen Miniſter at Frankfort.

After the reading this Letter to the Congregation, Grindal acquaints them that the chief Buſineſs of his and Chambers coming, was to ſollicit the ſettling of the Engliſh Liturgy. But then he added, his Commiſſion allow'd him to ſink the Terms a little, and inſiſt only on the Subſtance. Knox and Whittingham ask'd what they meant by the Subſtance of the Book? To this Grindal and Chambers replied, they had no Inſtructions to ſtate that Point, and therefore deſir'd the Congregation would anſwer Three Queſtions. Firſt, they deſir'd to know what Parts of the Common-Prayer-Book they were willing to admit. Secondly, whether thoſe of Strasbourg might have the Favour of a diſtinct Church to meet in: And thirdly, what Security they could have for Quiet and Protection? To the Firſt Queſtion 'twas anſwer'd, they ſhould have the Uſe of the Common-Prayer-Book, as far as they could maintain it by Scripture, and the Country would give leave. To the Second, in which they petition for a Church to meet in by themſelves, 'twas anſwer'd, they were inform'd by the Magiſtracy, that 'twas not ſeaſonable to move that Point, till the Diet at Augsberg was over. To the Third, they told them the Government of Frankfort had given the Engliſh in general all the Encouragement imaginable, and that thoſe of Strasbourg might ſettle upon the common Security.

Knox declines making uſe of the Geneva Form till farther Conſultation.

The Refugees at Frankfort not yielding to a ſatisfactory Anſwer, thoſe at Strasbourg ſtand off from the Invitation. The Frankfort Congregation at laſt propoſe the ſettling the Geneva Service. This being in their Opinion moſt remote from Superſtition: But Knox refuſ'd to officiate by this Form, till the Engliſh at Strasbourg, Zurich, Emden, and other Places were conſulted. He likewiſe declined uſing the Engliſh Book in the interim: His Exceptions were, becauſe many Things in it ſtood only upon human Authority without any Warrant from the Holy Scripture, and had over and above been abus'd to Superſtition in the Maſs. In caſe therefore he might not be permitted to adminiſter the Sacraments, as his Conſcience would give him leave, he deſir'd his Buſineſs might be only Preaching: And if that was thought too much, he was willing to reſign.

Id. page 22. A Temper propos'd by Leaver but rejected.

Whilſt theſe Matters were under Debate, Leaver propos'd a Temper, and mov'd the drawing up a Form might be refer'd to himſelf: And here he promis'd, that he would neither be govern'd by the Geneva Model, or any other. But when they perceiv'd his Scheme would fall ſhort of their Notion of Purity and Reformation, they rejected the Overture. Knox, Whittingham, and their Party, were apprehenſive theſe Diſputes might terminate in ſomething worſe: To prevent this Iſſue, they extracted the Engliſh Common-Prayer-Book in Latin, and ſent it to Calvin for his Opinion: Letting him know that ſome of their Country Men endeavour'd to obtrude the Engliſh Service, magnified it as a moſt perfect Form, and engag'd their utmoſt to ſettle it in England, in caſe they ſhould ever return.

Page 24. The Knoxians Cenſure, the Common-Prayer in their Letter to Calvin.

In this Abſtract, the Knoxians make a ſcandalous Repreſentation of ſome Part of the Litany: They call the Petition by thy Holy Incarnation, &c. a conjuring of God. They ignorantly carp at the Angelick Hymn, Glory to God in the higheſt for this lamentable Reaſon, becauſe the Papiſts uſe it. They find fault with with the Arguments for Confirmation: They call the Ceremonies in the Office of Matrimony Follies, and cenſure the Offering at the churching of Women as a Jewiſh Cuſtom: And laſtly, they pretend to conceal ſome Blemiſhes out of Shame and Pity. Thus they endeavour'd to prepoſſeſs Calvin, and lead him to a Deciſion on their ſide; but Calvin was ſufficiently byaſs'd by his own Principles, and needed no Suggeſtions of this kind. This Divine in his Anſwer, “ complains of the Unſeaſonableneſs of the Conteſt, but then lays “ the blame upon thoſe who preſs'd the Engliſh “ Service: He confeſſeth, tho' it has been “ his Cuſtom to ſhew himſelf eaſy and reſigning in the Point of Ceremonies, yet he “ does not always think it proper to give way “ to People fooliſhly and inflexibly conſtant, “ and who can't be prevail'd with to give up “ the leaſt Circumſtance of what they had “ been uſed to. He pretends to diſcover a “ great mny tolerable Fopperies in the Engliſh “ Liturgy: Meaning, as he explains himſelf, “ the Ceremonies were not ſo pure as might “ be wiſh'd. Theſe Blemiſhes not riſing to “ any downright Wickedneſs, might be allow'd at firſt. The Juncture conſider'd, “ 'twas lawful to begin with ſuch imperfect “ Rudiments: But then the Miniſters of Chriſt “ were oblig'd to make farther Advances, to “ preſs to greater Degrees of Purity and Perfection. If the Reformation had continued “ undiſturb'd in England, they ought to have “ refin'd in ſeveral particulars, and many “ Things ſhould have been quite thrown out. “ Now ſince the Engliſh Church is over-born “ by the Perſecution; ſince the Circumſtances “ of Time are ſo much alter'd, what ſhould “ hinder melting down the old Figure, mending the Metall, and caſting it in a better “ Mould? And here he blames thoſe who “ doat upon the Remains of Popery, and are “ ſo childiſh as to throw away a noble Opportunity of Improvement. And as he would “ not have the Knoxians ſtand too nicely upon “ Terms, and manage with too much Rigour; “ ſo he adviſes the other Party not to value “ themſelves upon their own Whimſies, nor “ check the Edification of the Church by Peeviſhneſs and Pride. For what makes them “ ſo ſtiff and quarrelſome? Is it not becauſe “ they are aſham'd to own their Miſtakes, and “ give way to wiſer Reſolutions? If they are “ afraid their Brethren in England, will charge “ them with deſerting their Religion, their “ Fears, are altogether chimerical. For by “ complying with the godly at Frankfort, they “ will bring their Brethren at home to more “ ſerviceable Reflections. By this means they “ will lead them to conſider into what Gulph “ Popery has thrown them; and to what a “ dangerous Depth they were ſunk: And thus “ they will ſtill be more ſenſible of the falſe “ Ground, when they find, ſays he, you don't “ think it ſafe to ſtop at the firſt Remove, but “ are ſtill going off to farther Diſtance. Mary Queen.

This peremptory Letter of Calvins gave a Turn to the Congregation at Frankfort, puſh'd them to a farther Diſlike of the Common-Prayer, and made the Knoxian Faction more hardy and enterprizing. However, the Victory was not entire; for after they had raiſ'd a Ferment, and broke in upon the Engliſh Eſtabliſhment, the Difference was ſtill kept on. At laſt, 'twas reſolv'd by the Diſſenters, that Knox, Whittingham, Gilby, John Fox, and Thomas Cole, ſhould form a Draught for Divine Service. Theſe Men who it ſeems, were Calvin's Diſciples, tranſlated the Geneva Office, and layed it before the Congregation. But this would by no means paſs with thoſe who were well affected to the Engliſh Liturgy. To prevent a Rupture, 'twas agreed that Knox, Whittingham, Parry, and Leaver, ſhould try to accommodate the matter, and project another Form more inoffenſive to both Parties. And thus to make the Expedient receiv'd, there were Conceſſions made on each ſide, and an Office partly extracted from the Engliſh Liturgy, and partly form'd upon Calvin's Model. This Order was to continue till the firſt of May next enſuing: And if in the mean time any Controverſy ſhould happen, 'twas to be determin'd by Calvin, Muſculus, Peter Martyr, Bullinger, and Vyret. This Agreement was ingroſs'd, and ſign'd by the Congregation. And now the Differences ſeem'd to be laid aſleep, and the Parties brought to a Coalition. And thus the matter reſted till March following, when Dr. Cox and fome others, came to Frankfort from England. Theſe Men, as the Writer of this Narrative relates, broke in upon the Conpromiſe, repeated the Reſponſes aloud, and would recede from nothing of the Engliſh Service. Upon this Knox mounts the Pulpit, and declaims intemperately againſt our Liturgy. Here amongſt other Things, he pretends to Divination and Propheſy; and affirms that the Engliſh being too heavy and languid in the Reformation, was one Reaſon why that Nation was ſo much puniſh'd at preſent. And here he run out in his Cenſure of the Conſtitution of the Engliſh Church; charg'd it with Want of Diſcipline, found fault with the Epiſcopal Habit and the Permiſſion of Pluralities.

A Compromiſe of the Difference.

Another meeting was appointed to debate theſe matters at large: And here a motion was made that Dr. Cox, and his Company, might have the liberty of voting in the Congregation: The Diſſenters (for ſo I ſhall diſtinguiſh them) objected that the Controverſy on Foot ought firſt to be decided, and that the Coxians ſhould be oblig'd to Subſcribe the Diſcipline as the reſt had done. They objected farther, that ſome of thoſe lately arriv'd, lay under Suſpicion of going to Maſs in England; and that others had Sign'd the Doctrine of the Church of Rome: It ſeems they had been inform'd of Mr. Jewel's failing in that Point, which he afterwards lamented there in the Pulpit. And thus the motion made in behalf of Dr. Cox and his Friends, was at firſt rejected: 'Till at laſt Knox, by a ſurpriſing compliance, prevail'd with the Congregation to admit the Coxians to Vote with the reſt. When they had gain'd this Point, they ſoon grew to a Majority, and were admitted Members of the Church: And thus puſhing the Advantage, they drove Knox from his Poſt, and order'd him not to officiate any longer in the Congregation.

Upon this Whittingham goes with a Remonſtrance to the Senator Glauberg, who interpoſing in the Diſpute, ſilences the Pulpit for one Day, ſends for Valerand the French Miniſter, and orders him to appoint the chuſing Two learned Perſons of each Party: That theſe Four ſhould pitch upon an expedient, and make a report to him of what they had done. Cox and Leaver were Choſen by one Party, and Knox and Whittingham by the other; and Valerand was order'd to take Notes of what they agreed in: But when they came to the Conference, they could not get thro' the Morning Prayer, nor come to any tolerable Harmony. The Author of this Narrative, who was a Knoxian, lays the blame upon Dr. Coxes ſtiffneſs, and Magiſterial Behavior. Thus the Committee breaking up without Effect, the Knoxians addreſs'd the Senate, and complain'd loudly of the other Party, and the Engliſh Reformation.

Page 34.

Upon this Addreſs, Glauberg comes to the Engliſh Congregation, acquaints them 'twas the Magiſtrates Command they ſhould conform to the French, both in Doctrine and Ceremonies, menac'd them with ſhutting up their Church, and that thoſe who refus'd to comply ſhould quit the Town. Cox being preſs'd thus cloſe, was willing to Relax: He told the Congregation he had perus'd the Geneva Service; thought it good and defenſible, and therefore adviſ'd them to comply with the order of the Magiſtracy: The Congregation conſenting, Glauberg return'd ſatisfied.

A Charge of high Treaſon againſt Knox.

The matter had not been long ſettled upon this foot, when Knox was charg'd with Treaſon by the Coxians. They drew the Impeachment out of his Book, Intitled, an Admonition to Chriſtians written in Engliſh. In this Tract, he had taken ſome unaccountable Freedoms with the Emperor, his Son King Philip, and Mary Queen of England. The paſſage relating to the Emperor preach'd in Buckinghamſhire, in the beginning of the preſent Reign, was this: O England, England, if thou wilt obſtinately return into Egypt, that is, if thou contract Marriage, Confederacy, or League, with ſuch Princes as do maintain and advance Idolatry, ſuch as the Emperor, (who is no leſs Enemy to Chriſt than was Nero) if for the Pleaſure and Friendſhip (I ſay) of ſuch Princes, thou return to thine old Abominations before us'd under Papiſtry, then aſſuredly (O England) thou ſhalt be plagued and brought to Deſolation, by the means of thoſe whoſe Favor thou ſeekeſt, and by whom thou art procured, to fall from Chriſt and ſerve Antichriſt. There were Eight other obnoxious Citations, but this was the moſt Remarkable. The Magiſtracy, 'tho' not pleas'd with the Information, order'd Knox to depart the City: For that otherwiſe they ſhould be oblig'd to deliver him up to the Emperors Council upon Demand. Thus Knox having made a farewel Sermon to ſupport his Party, retires to Geneva.

March 26. 1555.

He quits Frankfort and retires to Geneva.

The Engliſh Common Prayer Book receiv'd at Frankfort.

And now the Intereſt of thoſe who adher'd to the Engliſh Eſtabliſhment, improv'd to an Over-ballance. For the ſame Day that Knox went off, Adulphus Glauberg, Nephew to John Glauberg the Senator, ſent for Whittingham, and told him, that Three Doctors, Thirteen Batchelors of Divinity, beſides others of the ſame Nation, had petition'd the Magiſtrates for the uſe of the Engliſh Service: That they had ſucceeded in their Application, and therefore charg'd him not to Claſh with what was ſettled, or make any diſturbance. Whittingham Anſwer'd he was ready to acquieſce, but moves for Toleration: And that himſelf and his Friends, might have the liberty of joining ſome other Church: Cox ſoliciting againſt this Indulgence, Whittingham offer'd to Diſpute before the Magiſtracy againſt the Engliſh Liturgy: But this Offer was over-rul'd by Young Glauberg. The Knoxians thus diſtreſs'd, apply to Glauberg the Senator: But this Gentleman told them he was inform'd both Parties had agreed to receive the Engliſh Book, and that he had referr'd the matter to his Nephew Adulphus.

Whittingham in a Letter to his Correſpondent in England, reports the misfortunes of his Friends, charges Cox with breach of Promiſe, and indirect Dealing, and magnifies the Geneva Church above all the reſt. This Whittingham was employ'd as an Agent to procure a Settlement for his Party at Geneva and Baſil. He ſucceeded in his Negotiation, and paſſing by Zurich, ask'd Bullingers Opinion of the Engliſh Service. And here Bullinger declar'd againſt the uſe of the Surplice, againſt private Baptiſm, churching of Women, and the Ring in Marriage.

Dr. Co Forms the Church towards the Engliſh Conſtitution.

Cox having gain'd his Point, began to form the Congregation to farther Advantage, and bring it forward to the Face and Reputation of an Engliſh Church. He gets Whitehead Choſen Superintendant or principal Paſtor, appoints Two Clergy-men for Elders, and Four Deacons to Aſſiſt: He likewiſe proceeds to ſome reſemblance of an Univerſity: Robert Horn has the Hebrew Lecture, and Mullings the Greek: Trahern is prefer'd to the Divinity Chair, and Chambers made Treaſurer for the Contributions remitted from England.

He Writes to Calvin.

The Church Settlement being thus far advanced, Cox gives Calvin an Account of their Proceedings: The Letter is Subſcrib'd by Fourteen of the chief in the Congregation; They excuſe their going ſo far without conſulting him: But conclude with the ſatisfaction they had of bringing over the greateſt part of the Church to their Sentiments. Calvin in his Anſwer, complains of their preſſing the Engliſh Common Prayer Book too far: And here he takes the Freedom to dictate with his uſual Haughtineſs, and calls the uſe of the Croſs, and other Ceremonies, Trifles and Dregs: And makes no ſcruple to ſay they are Hurtful and Offenſive in the preſent Circumſtances. And laſtly, he recommends a fair Correſpondence between thoſe who remain at Frankfort, and the others who ſeem diſpos'd to go off: And points at ſome farther Expedient to make up the Breach.

May 31. 1555. Page 43.

Thoſe who refus'd to acquieſce in the Majority, and retir'd to Geneva and Baſil, wrote a Letter to the Coxians to purge themſelves from the Imputation of Schiſm, and offer to refer the Controverſy to Four Arbitrators: This Letter is Sign'd by Eighteen, of which Whittingham, Gilby, Chriſtopher Goodman, and John Fox, the Martyrologiſt, are Four. But Cox thinking it beſt to maintain his Ground, inſiſts on the preſent Settlement, and declines any farther Reference. And in this Condition I ſhall leave the Engliſh Refugees at preſent.

A general Account of the Perſecution.

I ſhall now return to England, and proceed to a farther Account of the Perſecution: And here I ſhall only be Brief and General in the Narrative. To begin, Bonner is reported to have Burnt no leſs than Two Hundred in Three Years. Chriſtopherſon Biſhop of Chicheſter brought Ten to the Stake together at Lewis; and Seventeen more during the Courſe of this Reign. Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury, and Thornton Suffragan of Dover were remarkably Sanguinary, as hath been already obſerv'd. Griffin Biſhop of Rocheſter was furiouſly Warm in his Proſecutions: And Biſhop Baine of Lichfield and Coventry, burnt ſeveral Clergy-men, and others, of both Sexes.

The Prelates in the Northern Province, manag'd with more tenderneſs and humanity: Neither Heath Archbiſhop of York, nor Oglethorp Biſhop of Carliſle, proceeded to any Severity upon the ſcore of Religion: And in the Dioceſe of Cheſter, there were none Burnt, excepting one George Marſh. In the Four Welſh Dioceſes, Biſhop Farrar, and Two more, were Condemn'd to the Fire. In the Dioceſes of Exeter, Peterborough, Bath and Wells, and Lincoln, Four Suffer'd by the ſame Cruelty: Two in the Dioceſe of Ely, and Six by the Biſhops of Saliſbury, and Briſtol: And laſtly, the Biſhops of Oxford, Glouceſter, Worceſter, and Hereford, ſtood off from Perſecution, and made no Martyrs. In ſhort, thoſe who Suffer'd Death for their Belief, are ſaid to Amount to Two Hundred and Seventy Seven: And to mention ſomewhat of the diſtinctions of thoſe that were Burnt: In this Liſt there are Five Biſhops, one and Twenty Clergy-men, Eight Lay Gentlemen, Eighty Four Tradeſmen, one Hundred Huſbandmen, Servants, and Laborers, Five and Fifty Women, and Four Children; Sixty Four more were proſecuted for Religion, Seven of which were Whip'd, and Sixteen Periſh'd in Priſon: Not to mention thoſe who lay Condemn'd in Durance, and were diſcharg'd by the Queen's Death. In fine, the Proceedings againſt the Reform'd in this Reign were extremely Bloody and Barbarous: To deſtroy People for Points of mere Speculation, and which have no ill Effect on Practiſe and Civil Government, ſeems very remote from the Spirit of Chriſtianity. Suppoſing Truth on the perſecuting Side, yet to Burn a Man becauſe he will not belie his Conſcience, and turn Hypocrite, is ſtrangely unaccountable. Men can't believe what they Pleaſe: Their Underſtandings are not all of a Size. Things don't ſtand in the ſame Light, and ſtrike with the ſame force on every Body.

Beſides, if the Roman Catholicks believ'd the Reform'd ſuch notorious Hereticks: If they believ'd they would be ſo ill receiv'd in the other World, why did they not uſe them gentlier in This? Why did they hurry them to eternal Deſtruction before their Time? If Life had gone on in its natural Courſe, 'tis poſſible they might have alter'd their Belief: Mere Compaſſion, one would think, ſhould have given them the utmoſt leaſure to recover themſelves. If 'tis ſaid that in Charity to other People, they were oblig'd to come to Extremities: Had the Hereticks (as they call them) Lives been ſpar'd, they would have ſpread the Contagion, and deſtroy'd great Numbers with themſelves. To this it may be return'd, they might have been cloſely Confin'd, barr'd Correſpondence, and made very Inoffenſive as to this Matter. (y)

In a Word, theſe cruel Expedients ſerve only to blacken a Communion, to heighten Differences, and Inflame one Part of Chriſtendom againſt another. And beſides the doing no Buſineſs in Religion, the State has ſometimes ſuffer'd upon this Account. The dread of the Smithfield Fires, has given deſigning Men a Handle to impoſe on the People; to make them Tools to their Ambition; and Fright them into a Revolt. Whether the Grounds of their Fear are Real, or Imaginary, is little material: They are generally apt to Indulge their Suſpicion, to ſwallow a Calumny, and believe the worſt of their Governors. Thus to avoid being Martyrs, they turn Rebels: And rather than endure the Fire a few Minutes with a good Conſcience, venture to Burn always with a bad one.

January $155\frac{6}{7}$.

Before I ſhut up this melancholy Scene, it may not be improper to add ſome ſtreins of ill uſage upon the Dead. For inſtance, the Cardinal's Commiſſioners at Cambridge, interdicted Two Churches for affording Graves to the Bodies of Martin Bucer, and Paulus Fagius. Thus there was a Proceſs form'd againſt theſe Two learned Men, ſome Years after they were Dead. The Pageantry went ſo far as to Summon them before the Commiſſioners; And Depoſitions were taken to Convict them of Hereſy: From hence they proceeded to Sentence: The Writ de Hæretico Comburendo was ſent down, the Bodies taken up, and Burnt, with their Books in the Market Place.

And that one Univerſity might not fare better than the other, the ſame Treatment was offer'd to the Corps of Peter Martyr's Wife at Oxford. This Gentlewoman had been very Charitable there, and liv'd every way to a Character of Advantage. And now Oxford being ſuppos'd to want a Viſitation, no leſs then Cambridge, a Commiſſion was directed by Cardinal Pool, to Brook's Biſhop of Glouceſter, Ormanetto the Pope's Datary, and ſome others: Their Buſineſs was to rectify ſuch things as they found amiſs: Amongſt other matters they had Inſtructions to take up the Corps of Peter Martyr's Wife. But when they came to Execute their Orders, no Evidence appear'd to prove her an Heretick. It ſeems ſhe ſpoke only the Language of her own Country, and therefore no Body could depoſe what Religion ſhe Profeſs'd. This defect of Witneſs, being ſent up to the Cardinal, an Order was given to Dr. Marſhal Dean of Chriſt Church, to take up the Body, and bury it in unconſecrated Ground. This was not done 'till the latter end of this Year, but I have mention'd it here for the reſemblance of the matter.

'Tis no wonder if the Rigors of this Reign, tranſported ſome People beyond Decency and Duty, put them upon foul Practiſe, and libelling the Government. That there were Diſorders of this kind, appears by a Letter of thanks, ſent by the Council to the Lord Chamberlain, for the pains he had taken in ſearching for ſeveral ſeditious Pamphlets diſpers'd in Suſſex: There was likewiſe another Letter Sign'd by the Board, and ſent to the Earl of Rutland, to Sir William Cecil, and other Juſtices of Peace, in the County of Lincoln, to thank them for examining certain Perſons ſeiz'd, for ſpreading falſe and ſeditious News. (z)

The Queen Founds ſeveral Religious Houſes. Nov. 21. 1556.

And now to proceed to more agreeable matter. The Queen's Reſolution to return the Church Lands in her Poſſeſſion has been juſt mention'd. To give a brief Account of the executing this Project. Her Majeſty began with the Church of Weſtminſter, prevail'd with Dean Weſton, to ſurrender the late Foundation. Thus the Houſe was return'd to its firſt Benedictine Order, and furniſh'd with an Abbot and Fourteen Monks; which was as full a Number as the Lands could maintain. Dr. Fecknam Dean of St. Paul's, a Perſon of Learning and Moderation, was prefer'd to the Government of this Abby. And the Prebendaries ejected, were allow'd Penſions 'till better provided for. The Queen reſtor'd the Convent of Obſervants at Greenwich. Some of the Friars of this Houſe, as has been related, appear'd very boldly againſt the Divorce, between King Henry, and Catherine of Spain. The Queen therefore out of Gratitude, and Regard to her Mother's Memory, Rebuilt the Monaſtery, brought in as many of the old Fraternity as could be met with; and and recruited them with new ones to a competent number. To proceed; ſhe founded a new Convent of Dominicans, or Black Friars in Smithfield. By the way, theſe Obſervants and Dominicans, being both begging Orders, were reſettled at the leſs Expence.

At Sion near Brendford in Middleſex, there was a famous Nunnery of the Order of St. Bridget. Since the late Diſſolution, the greateſt part of theſe Recluſes were either Dead or Married. However, the Society was ſoon competently furniſh'd, the Houſe repair'd, and endow'd with a proportionable Revenue. At Sheen, on the South Side of the River near Richmond, there had been another Antient Monaſtery. This Place the Queen Furniſh'd with a new Convent of Carthuſians, an Order of great Diſcipline and Mortification. Another conſiderable Benefaction this way, was the refounding the Fraternity of the Knights Hoſpitallers of Jeruſalem. This Monaſtery was put in a Condition to dwell in, and an honourable Maintenance ſettled. Sir Thomas Treſham was made the firſt Lord Prior, who died ſoon after his Promotion, and was ſucceeded by Sir Richard Shelley, the laſt great Maſter of that Order in England.

And the Hoſpital in the Savoy.

All theſe Foundations were Seculariz'd, and fell at the Queen's Death: But her new Hoſpital at the Savoy had better Fortune: For what Purpoſes this Houſe was Founded by King Henry the Seventh, and when Diſſolv'd, has been already related. As for the Lands, they had been granted to the City of London: There was no other way therefore of executing the Scheme, but by a new Endowment: However, the Queen's Piety was not to be check'd by Conſiderations of Expence: And therefore out of the remainder of the Abbey Lands in the Crown, ſhe ſettled a fair Revenue for the purpoſes of the firſt Inſtitution: The Queens Example had a good Effect upon the Court Ladies, who furniſh'd the Houſe at their own Charge: And thus a conſiderable Number of Poor were comfortably provided for. And ower and above, the Maſterſhip of the Hoſpital was a conſiderable Preferment. Theſe Foundations were carried on at ſome Diſtances of Time, but I thought it moſt proper to mention them together.

An Attempt to ſettle ſome Monks at Glaſſenbury.

The new founding theſe Religious Houſes gave the Monks of Glaſſenbury ſome hopes of raiſing their own Abbey, which was one of the Antienteſt and Richeſt in England. Some of theſe Monks now plac'd at Weſtminſter, petition'd the Lord Chamberlain to put the Queen in mind of her Promiſe, for erecting the late Monaſtery of Glaſſenbury: And here they take notice, that by her Majeſties and the Cardinals Encouragement their Abbot had procured a Warrant from the Lord Treaſurer: That upon the ſtrength of this Favor, their Friends had begun to Build and Repair to a conſiderable Expence; but that now the Project was ſtop'd. They deſire the grant of nothing but the Houſe and Site: That for the reſt a few of them would endeavor to Maintain themſelves upon their Labor and Induſtry, 'till the Charity of good People would furniſh farther, and ſubſiſt a greater Number. To make their requeſt ſpeed the better, they ſuggeſt their Monaſtery was not ſurrendered, but wreſted from them, and their Abbot and Two Inoffenſive Monks, illegally executed: At laſt, they plead from the Antiquity of their Houſe, and the general Regard paid to it, upon the Score of its being begun by Joſeph of Arimathea, who, as they pretend, lies buryed there. But this Tradition has been diſprov'd in the firſt part of this Work. As to their Petition, I don't find it had any Succeſs: Whether the ſhortneſs of the Queen's Reign, or the impracticableneſs of the Project, made it miſcarry, is ſomewhat uncertain.

Bp. Burnet's Records, pt. 2. Book 2. N°. 30.

In mentioning the Abbey of Weſtminſter, one of our learned Church Hiſtorians, (a) makes a Tragical complaint of the raſure and deſtruction of Records in this Reign: Of Records relating to the irregularities of Religious Houſes; to the renouncing the Pope's Authority, and the new Extent of the Regale. To make good this Charge, he produces a Commiſſion to Bonner and ſome others, to ſearch for Records of this Nature, and certify the Lord Cardinal what they had done in the Enquiry: The deſign of this ſearch was to inform the Queen of the Contents of ſuch Inſtruments, and that they might be conſider'd, and diſpos'd of as ſhe thought fit. But how far this Commiſſion was executed is no where to be found, as this learned Author confeſſes: And that there were no ſuch Raſures appears pretty plain from the Regiſters of Cranmer and Bonner; where the Biſhops Solemn diſclaiming the Pope, and holding their Biſhopricks by Letters Patent from the King, are entred at large: And as to the State of the Abbies, with reſpect to Manners, and other Circumſtances, they are ſtill to be ſeen in the Augmentation Office. And to be more particular, Bale affirms he had in his Cuſtody an Account of the Viſitation, of a Hundred Monaſteries, and Eighteen Collegiate Churches, drawn up by Layton and Beadill, Two of the King's Viſitors, and by Berthet a publick Notary. This Collection is Intitled Breviarium Compertorum in Monaſteriis, Conventibus, Collegiis, &c. (b) To this may be added the Teſtimony of Ackworth, in his Book againſt Saunders de viſibili Monarchia, where he affirms the Records of the Immoralities of the Monks were then Extant. But whether the Miſbehaviour of theſe religious was not ſwell'd and miſreported by ſome of the Viſitors, is another Queſtion.

In the beginning of the Spring next Year King Philip embark'd for England, landed at Dover, and made a Cavalcade with the Queen, and a great Train of the Nobility through London. In April following, Thomas Stafford a Gentleman well extracted, ſet ſail from France with ſome Mal-contents and Foreigners, landed in the North of England, and ſurpriz'd Scarborough Caſtle. Upon this Succeſs he endeavours to raiſe the Country upon the Government. To this purpoſe, he diſpers'd Declarations ſtuffed with Treaſon and Untruth. He diſclaims the Queens Title, gives her coarſe Language, pretends King Philip had landed Twelve Thouſand Spaniards, and that the Forts of the Kingdom were to be put into their Hands. (c) But Dr. Wotton Dean of Canterbury the Engliſh Ambaſſador at Paris, having got within Staffords Plot, and trac'd the Scheme, ſent her Majeſty Intelligence. Upon this warning the Earl of Weſtmoreland was prepar'd for Stafford at his Landing. And thus in a Weeks Time this Rebel was ſeiz'd, brought to London, and Beheaded.

An Inſurrection in the North.

May 28. 1557.

The next Month the Queen publiſh'd a Proclamation in which She complains of being ill us'd by the French King: That this Prince had countenanc'd the Rebellions headed by Northumberland and Wyat; and that Dudley and

Pool (Reginald) Abp. of Canterbury.

The Queen declares War againſt France.

Aſton, who form'd a Conſpiracy in the French Ambaſſadors Houſe, were afterwards entertain'd in France: And laſtly, that Stafford was furniſh'd by the French King with Shipping, Forces, Ammunition and Mony to Invade her Dominions and Seize the Government. For theſe Provocations, ſhe forbid her Subjects Trading with France, and declar'd that Monarch an Enemy. Now notwithſtanding this Manifeſto was reaſonable and well Founded, yet 'tis thought ſhe would not have come to an open Rupture, if the Pope had not prevail'd with the French King to break the Truce between Him and King Philip. And thus the War breaking out between France and Spain, the Queen was reſolv'd not to ſtand Neuter in her Husbands Quarrel.

The Pope takes away Pool's Legantine Character, and commands him to Rome.

The Queen's Letter to diſſwade the Pope from calling back the Cardinal.

The Pope was diſpleas'd with the Queen for taking theſe Meaſures; and not being in a Condition to reach Her, diſcharg'd his Choler upon Cardinal Pool: Beſides, ſome old Grudges, he was highly diſſatisfied with Pool for endeavouring to adjuſt the Differences between the two Crowns of France and Spain. This was downright claſhing with the Court of Rome, who made it their Buſineſs to bring on a Rupture. The Cardinal out of a Zeal for the Repoſe of Chriſtendom had been very Active in this matter, and taken the Freedom to ſuggeſt the Mediation of a Peace to his Holineſs. And tho' this Addreſs was couch'd in all the terms of Reſpect, yet 'tis thought the Pope's heighth of Temper would not bear being put in mind of his Duty. In ſhort, Pool's Legantine Commiſſion was revok'd, and himſelf cited to appear before the Inquiſition at Rome; and to make him farther ſenſible how much his Intereſt was ſunk there, the Pope had lately Impriſon'd his intimate Friend St. Felice Biſhop of Cava. And that Pool might have no pretence of Church Buſineſs in England, William Peyto an Engliſh Franciſcan, and afterwards Biſhop of Salisbury, was made Cardinal and Legate in his Place. This Peyto, tho' a ſtrong Roman Catholick, and a Man of regular Behaviour, wanted Pool's Quality and Learning to ſupport the Dignity, and make the Character ſignificant. When the Queen was inform'd of the Pope's Intention, ſhe took all imaginable Precaution to prevent the Iſſue. To this purpoſe, concealing the News from the Cardinal, ſhe order'd the Ports ſhould be guarded, and no body ſuffer'd to come on Shore from Rome; and if any Packets came from thence, they were ſeiz'd, and brought to the Council. She likewiſe wrote to her Ambaſſadour at Rome, to acquaint his Holineſs, that in caſe Pool was ſtrip'd of his Character, and recall'd, the Intereſt of Religion would ſuffer extremely in England: This Letter was back'd with a Remonſtrance to the Pope himſelf upon this ſubject: She puts him in mind, Pool had a double Commiſſion; one as he was Legate a latere from his Holineſs, and another upon the ſcore of his being Archbiſhop of Canterbury. That both theſe diſtinctions were neceſſary to the preſent Juncture: That his Predeceſſors at Rome had annex'd this Legantine Privilege to the See of Canterbury: That 'twas partly granted out of Regard to the Kings of England: That uninterrupted Uſage and length of Time had made it unqueſtionable, and that 'twas farther fortified by the Engliſh Conſtitution: That ſhe look'd upon her having a Legate in England as part of her Prerogative: That by her Coronation Oath ſhe was bound to maintain the Rights of the Crown, and the Privileges of the Kingdom: That nothing of this kind can be reſign'd without great Ignominy and Damage: That the Nobility and Commons would by no means give up the Honour and Advantage of the Government: And in Caſe they might be work'd to a Complyance, ſhe could not concur with them. (d)

(d) Ex Biblioth. R. Harley Armig. Bacatellus vit. Reginald. Poli.

I have tranſcrib'd this Letter ſomewhat at large to ſhew, that notwithſtanding the Queens being a Roman Catholick, ſhe took Care to guard her Prerogative, and ſtood firm to the Publick Intereſt. As for the Pope, he was reſolv'd to gratify his Paſſion, and make a Blow at the Cardinal, right or wrong. However, to keep this Motive ſomewhat out of ſight, he told the Engliſh Ambaſſador he had Buſineſs of great Importance to communicate to Pool: And beſides, he threw out ſome Hints as if he ſuſpected the Cardinals Orthodoxy. To this the Queen's Anſwer was, that this ſuſpicion could be of no long Date; For that otherwiſe his Holineſs would never have given ſo large a Commendation of Pool in the Conclave, nor ſent him the Pall for the See of Canterbury: But if his Holineſs had any late grounds (which ſeems unlikely) to queſtion the Cardinals Religion, ſhe would take care he ſhould be Tryed by the Biſhops in England.

The Pope, to colour his Proceedings, made ſome faint excuſes to the Ambaſſadour Sir Edward Carne for recalling Pool. He told him that ſince King Philip had broke with him, 'twas not proper he ſhould have any Legate in that Princes Dominions. To this Carne replied, his Holineſs had promis'd him, England and Ireland ſhould be excepted: And not come under the ſame hoſtile Treatment with the reſt of that Prince's Dominions. The Pope pretended he could not reverſe a ſolemn Decree paſs'd in Conſiſtory: And all that the Ambaſſadour could get of him was to ſtop the Intimation, till he heard farther from the Queen. *

* Paper Office.

The Cardinal being apprehenſive the Queen had intercepted the Popes Letter to him, acquieſc'd at a venture, and laid aſide the Functions and Diſtinction of a Legate. He likewiſe diſpatch'd his Friend Ormanett to Rome to purge himſelf; To give his Holineſs an Account of his Adminiſtration, and acquaint him with the State of Religion in England. And now the Pope receiving Advice of the defeat of the French in Flanders and of his own Forces in Campania, grew more tractable, diſſembled his former Reſentment, and told Ormanett, that now he was ſatisfied Pool had been miſrepreſented, and that no body Living could be cover'd from Calumny. (e) As for Cardinal Peyto, tho' he took the title of Legate to keep the Pope in Humour; yet he never exercis'd the Charge, but treated Pool with the ſame regard as formerly. (f)

King Philip gains a Battle againſt the French at St. Quintins.

July this Summer King Philip took leave of the Queen, and Embark'd for Flanders. And in Auguſt following gain'd the Battle at St. Quintins in Picardy. Great numbers of the French Nobility were made Priſoners in this Action, and the Town ſurrendred in a Week after. King Philip's Succeſs was in a great Meaſure owing to the Bravery of the Engliſh Troops.

The Norfolk and Suffolk Addreſſes for Liberty of Conſcience.

This Year, Commiſſioners were ſent down into Norfolk and Suffolk by the Queen and Council. Their Buſineſs was to enquire into Religion and preſs Conformity to the Worſhip Eſtabliſh'd. To this Committee certain Inhabitants of the two Counties preſented an Addreſs for Liberty of Conſcience. They requeſt they may be allow'd to ſerve God by the Engliſh Common-prayer-book, and King Edward's R*eformation*. They complain of great hardſhip put upon them with reſpect to Perſon and Fortune. Notwithſtanding theſe Grievances, they declare poſitively againſt the lawfulneſs of relieving themſelves by applying to Force: They mention the Service they did the Queen againſt the Lady Jane, and the Duke of Northumberland: Own 'twas no more than their Duty, and thank God they had the Honeſty to do it. * Theſe Men were of Opinion the right to the Crown lay in the Conſtitution and not in the Creed. They thought a different Religion in the Prince, was no diſcharge of their Allegiance; nor gave them any Liberty of ſtanding Neuter in the Quarrel.

They declare againſt the lawfulneſs of Reſiſtance.

To return to the Church at F*rankfort*, and give the Reader a farther Account of the claſhing between the Engliſh there. When Dr. C*ox* had gain'd his Point, and ſettled Horn in the Paſtorſhip, he retir'd to Strasbourg for the Pleaſure of Peter Martyr's Converſation: Who by the way had formerly been his Acquaintance at Oxford. Cox's going off is ſuppos'd to have given occaſion to a new miſunderſtanding. Some warm Diſcourſe paſs'd at Supper between Horn abovemention'd, and Aſhley a Lay-Gentleman. About three Days after, Aſhley receiv'd a Summons to appear at the Houſe of one of the Elders to anſwer for ſome Expreſſions in Contempt of the Miniſtry. Aſhley ſuſpecting the Cauſe would go againſt him, appeals from the E*lders* to the Congregation. Upon this the Paſtor and E*lders* are requir'd to ſtop the Proceſs. The Pretence was that in regard tney were Parties, they were unqualified for the Cognizance of that matter. Horn and C*hambers* the Treaſurer except againſt this Order: 'Twas paſs'd, they ſaid, at a private Meeting: And not being carried by a Majority of the Congregation, they were reſolv'd to exert their Authority, and manage by the direction of their Diſcipline. Aſhley and his Adherents juſtify their Reſolution at the laſt Meeting, and proteſt againſt the Paſtor and E*lders* as incompetent Judges. (g) Horn, and the E*lders* thought the Bodies interpoſing thus far, a ſort of Anarchy in the Church, remonſtrated that the Congregation had left them nothing but a ſhadow of Authority, and therefore threw up their Character, and refus'd to act. The Congregation being willing to keep the Dernier Reſort, and not be govern'd by their Governors, propos'd ſome new Regulations. They complain of the defectiveneſs of the old Diſcipline, and that there was no Proviſion made to call the Paſtor and Elders to Account in caſe of misbehaviour: They inſiſt therefore, that a ſupplemental Clauſe might be added for this purpoſe: The Paſtor and Elders not liking the Supremacy ſhould be thus lodg'd in the Congregation, diſſented from the Motion; but offer'd at the ſame time to go upon Amendments in the Diſcipline, provided themſelves might be part of the Committee: But this, conſidering the Matter, was thought too much by the Congregation. In ſhort, a Committee is appointed to decide the difference between Horn and Aſhley: But Horn and the Elders refus'd to acquieſce in this Authority, or ſo much as come amongſt them. And to prove the Nullity of their Proceedings, they argue againſt the Authority of the Congregation, and aſſert it no better than a Conventicle in the Paſtors Abſence. This Point is conteſted by Aſhley's Party, who urg'd the Decrees of the Councils of Baſil and Conſtance, tho' but little to the purpoſe. For from an Aſſembly of Biſhops in Council being ſuperior to a ſingle Biſhop at Rome, it does not follow that a Congregation of the Laity have any Right to try their Paſtors, or revoke an Authority which they never granted. The Congregation finding Horn incompliant, and that he declin'd Preaching, mov'd for another Election, and reſolv'd to ſettle their Church without Him or the Elders. The Magiſtracy ſomewhat Alarm'd at this Claſhing, command Horn and Chambers to forbear the Congregation till farther Orders, but ſome few Days after reſtor'd them and the Elders, to their firſt Authority. The Congregation demur to ſome part of this Order, Addreſs the Magiſtracy with a Remonſtrance againſt Horn and his Party, and complain of their encroachment.

Id. pag. 67.

In the mean time a Committee had drawn up a new Diſcipline, which was laid before the Congregation, and paſs'd. By this draught the ſpiritual Supremacy was lodg'd with the diffuſive Body of the Church, and the diſpoſing of the Publick Mony taken from the Treaſurer, and intruſted with the Deacons. This refining upon the old Settlement widen'd the Breach. The Magiſtracy being now prevail'd with to favour the Congregation, Horn and his Party agree the Diſcipline ſhould be review'd by a Committee, but except againſt having more than one Paſtor: Notwithſtanding the Diſcipline goes on and is ſubſcrib'd by a Majority. Upon this, Horn, Chambers, and ſome others deſire the Magiſtrates their not ſubſcribing may be excus'd.

Id. p. 72, 3.

The Controverſy being ſtill kept on foot, a new expedient is propos'd; and by the conſent of the Magiſtracy, Letters are diſpatch'd to Strasbourg to Dr. Cox, Dr. Sandys, and Robert Bertie Eſq; to undertake adjuſting the Difference. Each Party is contented to accept them for Arbitrators, but diſagree upon the conditions of the Reference. This jarring about the Terms of the Compromiſe, gave occaſion to more Noiſe and Scandal: The cauſe was bandy'd, and the heats kept up by Horn's and Whitehead's drawing their Pens upon each other. At laſt a reconciling Form was tendred by ſome of the Engliſh, who valued Peace more than Victory, and Party-intereſt. But the New-diſcipline Men now grown a Majority, refus'd to ſubmit to any leſſening of the Power of the Congregation. And now Horn and Chambers deſpairing of an Accommodation, withdrew to Strasbourg. As for the Congregation they took little notice of Chambers's Letters, but ſtood by the late Election of new Miniſters and look'd after the old ones no longer.

April 1557.

Thus theſe Diſorders in the Church at Frankfort took their riſe from a diſlike of the Engliſh Common-prayer-book, and giving in too much to the Geneva Model. The Difference was farther continued by the Mutiny of the Congregation againſt the governing part of the Church. From hence the Engliſh Reformation broke into Parties: This was the leading Caſe to the Puritans and Presbyterians in after Reigns. Upon theſe Principles and Preſidents, they form'd their Schiſm, and rais'd their exceptions againſt the Liturgy and Government of the Church. But of this more hereafter.

It

The Service us'd by the Engliſh Refugees at Geneva.

It has been already obſerv'd, ſome of the Engliſh at Frankfort propoſ'd officiating by the Geneva Form. It may not be amiſs therefore to give the Reader a brief Account of the Church Service and Diſcipline approv'd by Calvin, and us'd by the Engliſh at Geneva. To begin with the Election of their Miniſters and Elders: They are choſen by the whole Congregation, after a previous enquiry into their Life and Qualifications. The people are to prepare themſelves by Faſting and Prayer for a Bleſſing upon their Choice: The Miniſters chief Buſineſs lies in Preaching and Adminiſtring the Sacraments: For as to Diſcipline, managing Elections, and other Branches of Government, he has no Authority to overrule any thing, neither is his judgment conſider'd any farther than by way of Advice. (h) The Elders are likewiſe choſen by the Body: They make a ſort of ſtanding Committee with the Miniſters for the executive part of Government and Diſcipline: They neither Preach, nor Adminiſter the Sacraments. When the Congregation is to be Summon'd, notice muſt be given by the joint conſent of Miniſters and Elders, otherwiſe 'tis no lawful Aſſembly. The Office of their Deacons is to collect and diſtribute Charity, and take care of Perſons diſabled by Age, Accident, or Sickneſs. Theſe Diſtributions are not to be made without the conſent of the Miniſters and Elders: They are choſen by a Majority of the Congregation, like thoſe already mention'd.

The Election of Miniſters and Elders.

The Miniſters and Elders Conſiſtory.

The Miniſters, Elders, and Deacons, meet every Week in Conſiſtory to inſpect the conduct of the Church. And here they are to be particularly careful in cenſuring themſelves. For Inſtance; if the Miniſter is delated for Affectation or Negligence in his Sermon, for Flattery, Detraction, &c. he is firſt to be admoniſh'd, and afterwards Depoſ'd in caſe he continues Incorrigible. But for Crimes of a blacker Complexion, ſuch as Hereſy, Blaſphemy, Fornication, Theft, Drunkeneſs, and ſuch like, he is to be diſcharg'd without farther Tryal.

Id. 214.

The Congregation meets every Week to hear ſome parts of the Scripture expounded; and here every Man has the liberty to ſpeak to the Point. And if they happen to carry the Diſcourſe to Controverſy and Squabble, the Moderators are to Interpoſe: And if the Party refuſes to acquieſce, he is injoin'd Silence, and the caſe is refer'd to the Reſolution of the Conſiſtory abovemention'd.

Their Common-prayer begins with a Confeſſion. After the Confeſſion a Pſalm is Sung by the People: Then the Miniſter makes an Extempore Prayer for the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit. Then follows the Sermon: After which the Miniſter prays in a Form for the whole State of Chriſt's Church, but very different both in Matter and Expreſſion, from that in the Engliſh Liturgy: 'Tis concluded with the Lord's Prayer: Then follows this ſhort Collect, tho' 'tis not called ſo.

Almighty and Everliving God vouchſafe we beſeech thee to grant us perfect continuance in thy lively Faith, augmenting the ſame in us dayly till we grow to the full meaſure of our Perfection in Chriſt, whereof we make our Confeſſion, ſaying, I believe in God, &c. After the repeating the Creed another Pſalm is Sung; then the Miniſter pronounces the Bleſſing either taken from Numbers 6. verſe 24, 25, 26. or that Cor. 2d Chap. 13. verſe 14 And here to guard againſt the danger of believing the Miniſter has any Spiritual Authority, and to ſtrike him out of all Repreſentation of God Almighty, not only the Antient Form of the Church is declin'd, but the Scripture Language is chang'd to a great Alteration in Senſe: For inſtead of the Lord bleſs thee, and keep thee, it runs, the Lord bleſs us and ſave us, and ſo us is made uſe of inſtead of thee, to the end of this and the other Benediction, in the ſecond of the Corinthians.

A diſcretionary Latitude allow'd for Extempore Prayer.

And to avoid the Imputation of being tied to a Form, and encourage unpremeditated Effuſions, the Rubrick allows a large diſcretionary Latitude. The Miniſter, ſays this Directory, is not oblig'd to repeat all theſe ſtated Prayers: He has the liberty of beginning with a Confeſſion of his own: From hence he may go on directly to the Sermon: After which 'tis at his choice either to uſe the Form for all Eſtates abovemention'd, or elſe to pray, as the Spirit of God ſhall move his Heart. And here his Prayer is to be ſuited with regard to the circumſtances of time, and the matter of his Diſcourſe in the Pulpit.

At the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, they very commendably declare againſt Chriſtning in private Houſes. The Father and God-father are order'd to come to Church with the Child. And after a Queſtion being ask'd, whether they come to have the Child Baptiz'd, and their Anſwer in the Affirmative, the Sacrament of Baptiſm is explain'd by the Miniſter: After this, the Father, or in his abſence the God-father, repeats the Creed, which is expounded by the Miniſter in a Form preſcrib'd thro' all the Articles. After which follows a Prayer for the Sanctification of the Child, which concludes with the Lord's Prayer. When the Sacramental Words are pronounc'd, the Miniſter takes Water in his Hand, and lays it upon the Child's Forehead: And the Office ends with a ſtated Prayer of Thankſgiving for the benefit of this Sacrament.

The Holy Euchariſt is commonly Adminiſtred once a Month. The Service begins with ſetting forth the Inſtitution in the words of the Apoſtle St. Paul. Then follows an Exhortation to the receiving of the Sacrament. This Diſcourſe is preſcrib'd and made in the Pulpit. And here, the Miniſter to prevent unqualified Perſons approaching the Holy Table, delivers himſelf in very ſignificant ſolemn Language: The Words are theſe.

In the Name and Authority of the Eternal God, and of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, I excommunicate from this Table all Blaſphemers of God, all Idolaters, all Murderers, all Adulterers, all that be in Malice or Envy, all diſobedient Perſons to Father or Mother, to Princes or Magiſtrates, to Paſtors or Preachers, all Thieves and Deceivers of their Neigbour, &c.

When the Exhortation is over, the Miniſter comes out of the Pulpit, ſits down at the Communion Table, with the reſt of the Congregation, and then taking Bread, either uſes a Thankſgiving Form for the Redemption of Mankind, or prays to the ſame Effect from his own Thoughts or Compoſition: Then he breaks the Bread, and delivers it to the People, who divide it amongſt themſelves: The Cup is likewiſe given in the ſame manner. While the Congregation are receiving, ſome Portion of Scripture repreſenting the Death of our Saviour in the moſt affecting manner, is read to aſſiſt Devotion. Then follows a Thankſgiving, intermix'd with a Prayer to live anſwerably to ſo great a Bleſſing. After this Prayer, the Hundred and Third, or ſome other Euchariſtick Pſalm is ſung. One of the Benedictions above-mention'd follows next, and thus the Solemnity is ended.

To proceed, thoſe who intend to marry, have their Bannes publiſh'd Three ſeveral Days in the Congregation. The Miniſter begins the Service, with an Exhortation, in which the Ends of Marriage, and the Duties of the Relation are explain'd: Then both the Parties and the Congregation are queſtion'd, concerning any lawful Impediment. Upon Silence to this Interrogatory, they proceed to the matrimonial Stipulation, which is made much in the ſame Form with that in the Engliſh Service. Then follows a ſhort Exhortation to make good the Engagement. And after the Miniſter has given them the Bleſſing, the Office is clos'd with ſinging the Hundred and Twenty Eighth Pſalm, or ſome other of a reſembling Subject.

In the Viſitation of the Sick, there are general Rules laid down for the Miniſters Management: That Regard is to be had to the Temper and Condition of the Penitent: That Terror or Comfort muſt be applied, as the Caſe requires, and the Remedy proportion'd to the Diſeaſe. After this general Direction, a long Prayer is ſubjoin'd for the Sick Perſon.

At Burials, the Corps attended to the Grave by the Congregation, is thrown into the Ground without any Prayers, or other Ceremony: There is no neceſſity for the Miniſters being preſent: But if he happens to be there, if the People deſire a Funeral Diſcourſe, and the Church is at no great Diſtance, he goes thither and makes a conſolatory Sermon upon the Subject of Death and the Reſurrection. To conclude, as to the Exerciſe of publick Diſcipline, the Miniſters are not to overlook any Crime, Irregularity, or Behaviour unbecoming a Chriſtian: And therefore, Admonition or other Correction is to be applied in Proportion to the Fault. But as to the higheſt Cenſure of Excommunication, 'tis not to be exerted without the Conſent of the whole Church. And laſtly, the excommunicated Perſon, though excluded from the Sacraments and Prayer, is permitted to hear Sermons. (i)

Excommunication not to paſs upon any Perſon without the Conſent of the Congregation.

(i) Id. p. 229.

And from this ſhort View the Reader may perceive, what ſmall Reſemblance there is between Calvin's Model, and that of the Antient, and Engliſh Liturgies. We need not wonder therefore, at our Countrymens receiving an odd Tincture at Geneva: 'Tis not ſtrange I ſay, if after ſuch a Compliance with Calvin and his Congregation, they came home prepoſſeſs'd with Novelties, contemn'd the Fathers, and ſtood off from the Government and Worſhip of the Primitive Church.

Some Articles of Enquiry ſet forth by Cardinal Pool.

To return to England this Year, if Fox's Chronology holds, Cardinal Pool gave out Articles of Enquiry for the Viſitation of his Dioceſe of Canterbury. They are rang'd under Two Heads, the Firſt One and Twenty relate to the Clergy, and the other Three and Thirty to the Laity. I ſhall mention only ſome few of the moſt remarkable, and Firſt of thoſe which concern the Clergy.

The Viſitors were to enquire whether any of the Pariſhioners died without Miniſtration of the Sacraments, through the Negligence of their Curates.

Whether Parſons, Vicars, or Curates haunted Taverns or Ale-houſes?

Whether they were diligent in teaching Midwives, how to Chriſten Children in Time of Neceſſity, according to the Canons of the Church?

Whether they keep a Book of all the Names of thoſe reconcil'd to the Church?

Whether they diligently teach their Pariſhioners the Articles of their Faith, and the Ten Commandments?

Whether any of them ſay the Divine Service, or miniſter the Sacraments in the Engliſh Tongue, contrary to the uſual Order of the Church?

Whether any of them keep Company with Men ſuſpected of Hereſy, or dangerous Tenents?

Whether any of them uſe unlawful Games, as Dice, Cards, and ſuch like?

Whether they are Reſident, and live hoſpitably upon their Benefices?

Whether they enter the Chriſtnings, Burials, and Marriages, upon the Church Regiſters, together with the Names of the Godfathers and Godmothers?

To proceed, to ſome of thoſe in which the Laity are concern'd.

Whether any refuſe or deny auricular Confeſſion?

Whether there be any guilty of Inceſt, Fornicators, or Adulterers, any Bawds, or ſuch as entertain licentious People?

Whether any Blaſpheme, take the Name of God in vain, or are noted for common Swearers?

Whether any are guilty of Perjury or Symony?

Whether any are common Drunkards, or uſe any ſcandalous Diverſions, eſpecially in Time of Divine Service?

Whether any keep private Conventicles, for the Exerciſe of Religion contrary to the Laws?

Whether the Poor in every Pariſh are charitably provided for?

Whether there is a Lamp or Candle in Churches burning before the Sacrament?

Whether any Perſon works upon Sundays or Holy Days?

Whether Taverns or Ale-houſes entertain any Gueſt in Time of Divine Service?

Whether Fidlers or any others, ſing any burleſquing Songs upon the Holy Sacraments, or other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church?

Whether rhe Revenues of Hoſpitals are ſpent purſuant to the Intendment of the Foundation? And whether any Goods, Plate, Jewels, or Land are taken away, and detain'd from ſuch Houſes? †

This Summer the Council ſent the Mayor of Canterbury a Letter of Thanks for his Diligence, in apprehending and committing the Players: He is commanded to keep them confin'd, till farther Order from the Board. In the mean time their lewd Play Book, as 'tis call'd, is referr'd to the Conſideration of their Majeſties Learned Council. Theſe Men had run much the ſame Riot at London: This the Reader may perceive, by the Councils Letter to the Lord Mayor, to diſcharge thoſe Players they had order'd him to impriſon. And here the Priſoners, and others of the ſame Buſineſs, were commanded not to act any Stage Entertainment, excepting between the Feaſts of all Saints and Shrove-tide; and

About this time the Council wrote to the Mayor and Aldermen of Briſtol, to conform themſelves to the Worſhip eſtabliſh'd, to frequent Sermons, to aſſiſt at Proceſſions, and other publick Ceremonies at the Cathedral: That they ſhould not expect Attendance from the Dean and Chapter to bring them to Church: That Uſage being indecent and much out of Order. A Peace between the King of Spain and the Pope. Ann. Dom. 1557.

Upon the Defeat near St. Quintin, the French King recall'd his Army out of Italy, to defend his own Kingdom. The Duke of Alva, King Philips General, now much Superior to the Popes Troops, marched directly towards Rome. The Town might eaſily have been taken, had the Duke preſs'd the Opportunity. Whether 'twas want of Courage, or a religious Regard to the Pope which made him loſe the Advantage, is ſomewhat uncertain. 'Tis probable, he believ'd a Treaty would be more acceptable to his Maſter, than proceeding to Extremities. The Pope on the other ſide, was very ſtiff in the Articles, and held up his Prerogative as high, as if Victory had been at his Diſpoſal. In ſhort, he inſiſted upon Alva's coming to Rome, aſking Pardon, and receiving Abſolution; proteſting that rather than loſe the leaſt Part of his Right, he would venture the Ruin of the Univerſe: For ſince our Saviours Honour was concern'd in the Diſpute, 'twas not in his Power to give it up. The Duke of Alva ſubmitted to this, and ſome other Conditions not diſadvantagious to the Pope, went to Rome and receiv'd his Holineſſes Abſolution for the King and himſelf. Thus the conquering Party ſtoop'd to Acknowledgment and Diſgrace, and he that was at Mercy, appear'd with all the Signs of Succeſs and Superiority. † 'Tis ſaid, that by one of the ſecret Articles, Cardinal Pool was reſtor'd to his Legantine Authority. This ſeems not improbable, conſidering the Queens Reſolution not to admit any other with the ſame Character: For when Cardinal Peyto * was upon his Journey to England, with his Bulls and Faculties, the Queen forbad him coming into her Dominions at his Peril: Peyto being willing to acquieſce, ſtop'd in France, and died there in April following.

The Queen Regent of Scotland breaks the Peace with England.

The War being now broke out between England and France, the French ſollicited the Queen Regent of Scotland, and endeavour'd to draw that Nation into the Quarrel. A Convention was ſummon'd upon this occaſion: But when they met, their Sentiments were not unanimous. The Eccleſiaſtick State was now for keeping fair with England; as for the Queen Regent, they did not altogether approve her Conduct: They fancied ſomewhat of a Partiality in her, to thoſe they call'd the heretical Lords: Thoſe Noblemen on the other hand, being willing to improve their Intereſt with the Regent, and the French Court, cloſ'd with the Motion for a War. By breaking with our Queen, they hop'd to increaſe their Party by a foreign Acceſſion: For in conſequence of this, the Queen Regent would be oblig'd to protect the Engliſh Refugees. However, the Majority of the Convention declar'd againſt a Rupture. The Queen Regent notwithſtanding being willing to attempt ſomething in Favour of France, ſent her General D'oiſel to fortify Aymouth, which was an Infraction upon the laſt Treaty with England. Upon this the Governor of Berwick made an Incurſion into Scotland, to diſturb their Works; this gave D'oiſel a Pretence to march into England, and ſet down before Warke Caſtle: The Scotch Nobility alarm'd at theſe Sallies, met at Edinborough, remonſtrated againſt D'oiſels Conduct, and requir'd him to counter-march, under the Pain of being declar'd a publick Enemy. He complied with the Order, tho' with great Regret. The Queen Regent finding her Meaſures thus remarkably check'd, wrote to France to haſten the Marriage between the young Queen her Daughter, and the Dauphine; ſuggeſting withal that this was the moſt likely Expedient to raiſe the French Intereſt in Scotland. The French Court complying with the Motion, Agents were diſpatch'd to the Scotch Convention, to acquaint them the Dauphine was now near coming of Age, and therefore deſir'd they would ſend over Commiſſioners to conclude the Marriage. The Requeſt was anſwer'd, and an Embaſſy furniſh'd out of the Three Eſtates; and tho' they had an unfortunate Voyage, they ſucceeded in their Negotiation; and the Marriage was ſolemniz'd in the latter End of April following. *

To return to England, the Queen receiv'd Advice from King Philip, that Calais was in Danger of a Siege: And that 'twas neceſſary to reinforce the Garriſon; offering at the ſame time a ſufficient Number of Troops for that purpoſe. The Engliſh Court ſuſpecting the Kings Kindneſs, and preſuming upon the Strength of the Place, neither accepted the Offer, nor increas'd the Garriſon themſelves. The French King therefore ſeizing the Advantage, order'd the Duke of Guiſe to make a ſudden March: This General ſate down before the Town on the Firſt of January, and had it ſurrendred on the Sixth.

Calais &c. taken by the Duke of Guiſe.

By the Articles, the Garriſon and the Burghers were to march out with their Effects: The Lord Wentworth, who was Governor, and Fifty others remaining Priſoners of War. This Town had been in the Hands of the Engliſh ſomewhat above Two Hundred Years, ever ſince the Reign of King Edward the Third. Soon after the Loſs of Calais, Guiſneſs and Hamne were carried by the French: And thus the Remainder of the Engliſh Dominions upon the Continent, were all loſt. * This unexpected Misfortune ſate heavy upon the Queens Spirits, threw her into a deep Melancholy, and proved very unſerviceable to her Health.

And now to ſupport the Government, and put Things in the beſt Poſture, the Parliament met on the Twentieth of January, and ſate till the Seventh of March: Their Buſineſs was moſtly military Proviſions, and granting of Taxes for the War againſt France. At this Seſſions, Fecknam the new Abbot of Weſtminſter, and Treſham the new Prior of St. Johns of Jeruſalem took their Places in the Houſe of Lords.

A Parliament and Convocation.

The Convocation ſate at the ſame time with the Parliament: And here Harpsfield Archdeacon of London was choſen Prolocutor. The Pool (Reginald) Abp. of Canterbury.

Cardinal propos'd that ſome Expedient might be thought on, for the Recovery of Calais: But a Scheme of this Nature being look'd on as impracticable by the Clergy, the Motion drop'd. His Eminence was as little ſucceſsful in his other Suggeſtion, for the reviewing the Statutes of the new Foundations, and altering them to a more ſerviceable Form.

On the other Hand, the Clergy applied to the Cardinal for the Redreſs of Grievances, and ſupplying ſome Defects in the Church Eſtabliſhment. Firſt, that the Queen may be intreated to give Orders, that no Parſon, Vicar, or Curate, may be preſs'd to ſerve in the War. Secondly, that where the Endowments of Two Neighbouring Benefices are too ſlender to maintain a Prieſt, the Biſhop may give them in Commendam to one Incumbent to ſupply them by Turns. Thirdly, that thoſe Pariſhioners who have Chappels of Eaſe, and want Prieſts to officiate, may be oblig'd to come to the Pariſh Churches, 'till the Chappels of Eaſe are provided with ſome Curate. And Fourthly, that every Biſhop may be authoriz'd by the Pope to ordain extra Tempora præſcripta; that is, at other Times, as well as on the Sundays after the Four Ember Weeks.

This Convocation conſidering the preſſing Neceſſities of the State, granted the Queen a Subſidy of Eight Shillings in the Pound, to be payed in Four Years: They likewiſe charge themſelves with finding Horſe and Arms for the Defence of the Kingdom. Their Subſidy according to Cuſtom, is confirm'd by Act of Parliament; but the other Impoſition upon their own Body is uncorroborated by the State, and ſtands wholly upon the Authority of the Synod. †

The Proſecution againſt Hereticks, as they call'd them, went on, but turn'd to little Account; for the Courage of thoſe that ſuffer'd continued, neither was the Reformation to be ſtifled by any Rigours. Upon this occaſion one of our Learned Church Hiſtorians affirms, he finds it ſaid, that ſome adviſ'd, that Courts of Inquiſition like thoſe in Spain might be ſet up in England. (l) But here he is not pleas'd to tell us, by whom 'tis ſaid, neither can I meet with this Advice in any of our Hiſtorians: Nay even Fox himſelf, is ſilent in the Caſe. Indeed, conſidering the Queens late Expoſtulation with the Pope, in which ſhe declares her Reſolution to maintain the Prerogative and Conſtitution; conſidering King Philips Confeſſors declaiming againſt Perſecution in the Pulpit; to which we may add the Gentleneſs and uncontested good Nature of Cardinal Pool; conſidering theſe Things I ſay, one would think the Project of an Inquiſition looks very improbable.

However, the Reverend Author above-mention'd thinks there was a conſiderable Advance made towards it in the latter End of this Year. And for Evidence, reports a Commiſſion given to the Biſhops of London and Ely, the Lord North, Secretary Bourne, Sir John Mordaunt, Sir Francis Englefield, Sir Edward Walgrave, Sir Nicholas Hare, Sir Thomas Pope, Sir Roger Cholmely, Sir Richard Read, Sir Thomas Stradling, Sir Rowland Hall, Serjeant Raſtall, Dr. Cole Dean of Pauls, William Cook, Thomas Martin, John Story, John Vaughan, Doctors of Law, William Roper, and Randolph Chomley Eſquires.

Mary Queen.

A Commiſſion to enquire into Hereſy, Sedition, &c.

Theſe Commiſſioners were impower'd to enquire after all Perſons ſuſpected of Lollardies and Heretical Opinions: To ſearch for Seditious and Heretical Books, with Power to ſeize them as well in Printers Houſes, Shops, as elſewhere: To trace and examine Concealments, Contempts, Conſpiracies, Seditious Diſcourſes, and Calumnies againſt the Government. 'Tis likewiſe their Buſineſs to enquire after Perſons who refuſe to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, to hear Maſs, and come to their Pariſh Churches: who decline Proceſſions, taking Holy Bread, or Holy Water, or misbehave themſelves in any Church or Conſecrated Place. They are likewiſe Commiſſionated to call what Witneſſes they think proper before them, and to tender an Oath to the Parties proſecuted to anſwer ſuch Queſtions as ſhall be thought ſerviceable for the Diſcovery of the Truth: But then here is a remarkable Clauſe of Reſtraint upon the Commiſſioners. For 'tis expreſly commanded, that if any Perſon brought before them for Hereſy or Heretical Opinions, happen to perſiſt in his Error, he ſhould be immediately committed to his Ordinary, there to be uſed according to the Spiritual and Eccleſiaſtical Laws. (m)

(m) Biſhop Burnet pt. 2*d. Records Book* 2. n. 32.

And from hence the Reader may perceive, there was nothing of the Face, Proceſs, or Power of an Inquiſition in this Inſtrument. The Commiſſioners had no Authority to try Heterodoxy, or put the Offenders upon making an Act of Faith. On the contrary, they are commanded, to deliver them up to their Ordinaries: And here the Proceedings againſt them were to be govern'd by the Laws of the Church. Beſides, the Commiſſioners it may be, not liking their Employment, did little in the Buſineſs, eſpecially as to the ſearching after prohibited Books. To quicken the Execution of this Part, a Proclamation was publiſh'd. Here the Queen complains of the importing ſeditious and treaſonable Books, and that Pamphlets of the ſame malignant Tendency were printed at Home, and diſpers'd. This Complaint was not without reaſon: For beſides the Treatiſe of Politick Power, already mention'd, Knox and Goodman had lately printed their Blaſts againſt the Government of Women. Goodman in his Performance, calls the Queen Traitreſs, Baſtard, Proſerpine, and other coarſe Names: This Goodman rais'd another Battery againſt all Government: Part of the Title is, wherein Superior Powers may by God's Word be lawfully reſiſted. (n) As the Provocation was great, the Proclamation runs high, and ſtreins the Conſtitution: For the Inſtrument ſets forth, "that upon whomſoever any of the ſaid wicked or ſeditious "Books are found after this Notice given; or "in Caſe thoſe that find them, don't immediately Burn them, without ſhewing or reading the ſame to any other Perſons, they "ſhall be reputed and taken for Rebels, and "executed accordingly by Martial Law. This Proclamation, tho' ſufficiently Arbitrary, was not altogether ſo ſurpriſing as another which came out the ſame Month. 'Twas Publiſh'd at Newgate, and in Smithfield, at the Burning of Seven Proteſtants. And here all Perſons were commanded neither to Pray for, nor ſpeak to thoſe that Suffer'd: This, to ſpeak ſoftly, was unprecedented Rigor, and the laſt exceſs of Perſecution.

Fox. p. 878.

Notwithſtanding the ſtrictneſs of this uncharitable Order, Bentham a Clergy-man, who officiated at a private Congregation in London, ventur'd to break thro' it. When the Fire was kindled, he ſpoke aloud to the Company, told them that thoſe who Suffer'd, were certainly the People of God : Therefore, ſays he, we cant chuſe but wiſh them well, and ſay, God ſtrengthen them. After this, he gave an Inſtance of the Courage he recommended, and ſpoke out boldly; Almighty God for Chriſt's ſake ſtrengthen them. Upon this, all the People cried, Amen, Amen : And here the Noiſe was ſo great, and made by ſo many, that the Officers were almoſt overſet, and thought it to no purpoſe to ſeize any ſingle Perſon. (p)

(p) Fox. Heyjin.

The Reform'd had Congregations in London.

By the way, Bentham was not the only Reform'd Clergyman who had a Congregation in London : For notwithſtanding Bonner's Sanguinary Temper, the R*eform'd* bore up bravely againſt the Perſecution, and kept on their religious Meetings, tho' at the utmoſt Hazards : And Bentham's Church, for ſo I ſhall call it, tho' without a Steeple, had ſometimes Two Hundred in the Audience.

A great many Books, as hath been obſerv'd already, were ſent over from beyond Sea, to ſupport the Spirits of the R*eform'd*, and enable them to defend their Religion. As to the Engliſh R*efugees*, they had little Shelter amongſt the Lutherans, excepting at Embden. The rigid Lutherans had a ſtrong Averſion for our R*eformation* : The diſſent of the Engliſh from theſe Germans, in the Points of Ubiquity and Conſubſtantiation, was not to be forgiven. The diſtance and diſguſt upon this Score went ſo far, that Peter Martyr takes notice, a Friend of his in the Dukedom of Saxony, was generally hated by his Countrymen for entertaining ſome few of the Engliſh Exiles. (q) And Peter Martyr obſerves with Regret, that many of theſe ſtiff Lutherans, called the Engliſh who Suffer'd for Religion, the Devils Martyrs. (r) John Alaſco and his Company, in their Paſſage thro' Germany, ſeem to have contributed to this ill Opinion. For theſe Polanders coming from England, and declaiming coarſly againſt Luther, the Auguſtane Confeſſion, and the Ceremonies of that Church; made the Lutherans apt to conclude the Engliſh were of the ſame Sentiment.

This Year there were great numbers in England dyed of a Peſtilential Feaver, and Quartain Ague : Theſe Diſtempers ſeiz'd thoſe moſtly who were advanc'd in Years : Thirteen Biſhops died within leſs than Twelve Months : And the Mortality reach'd ſuch numbers of the Prieſts, that in many Pariſhes there was no Parſon to Officiate.

The Queen's Death.

The Queen was carried off by a Dropſy, to which ſhe had been inclin'd for ſome Time. The Phyſicians miſtook her Diſtemper, 'till 'twas grown too ſtrong to deal with. 'Tis ſaid the Wars, in which the King her Husband was involv'd, The Death of her Father in Law the Emperor, and eſpecially the loſs of Calais, afflicted her extremely : Theſe Accidents ſtruck in with the Diſeaſe, and made a fatal Impreſſion upon her Conſtitution. She died at St. James's on the Seventeenth of November : The Funeral Service was perform'd at Weſtminſter in the cuſtomary manner, and on the Thirteenth of December, ſhe was buried on the North Side of King Henry the Sevenths Chappel. The Sermon at this Solemnity was Preach'd by White Biſhop of Wincheſter : He made his Diſcourſe upon theſe Words; a living Dog is better than a dead Lion. He was very ſtrong in his Panegyrick upon Queen Mary, but not without ſome Satyrical Innuendoe's, and ſtroaks of Diſadvantage on Queen Elizabeth. For this he was afterwards queſtion'd by the Privy Council, and order'd to keep his Houſe. And being call'd before the Board a Second Time, receiv'd a Reprimand, and had his Liberty. *

There was another Funeral Sermon Preach'd for Queen Mary, by Dr. Fecknam Abbot of Weſtminſter : His Text was, Laudavi Mortuos Magis quam Viventes, ſed feliciorem utroque Judicavi, qui necdùm Natus eſt. i. e. Wherefore I praiſed the Dead, which are already Dead, more than the Living which are yet Alive; yea better is he, than both they, which has not yet been. (s)

(s) Eccleſ. 4. verſe 2 and 3.

Part of her Funeral Sermon.

This Preacher, when he comes to touch upon the Queen's Character, gives the Audience a hint of the Traverſes of her Fortune, and the Troubles ſhe had met with. “ And here he Commends her for her Patience and Reſignation to Providence. And that no Perſon gave better Signs of Integrity, and religious Diſpoſition, than this Princeſs : He adds, that to put her ſelf in Mind of the cloſe Relation between the Prince and Subject, ſhe us'd her Ring as an Emblem of being Married to the Kingdom : And that ſhe never forgot to make her Conduct anſwerable to this Ceremony. She was remarkable as he goes on, for her Clemency, for her Compaſſion to the Poor, and for her Benefactions to the Church. And here he takes notice of her reſtoring ſeveral Abbies, and Church Ornaments, taken away in the late Reigns. Amongſt other Inſtances of Commendation, he mentions her bringing Religion to the old State, and Form : And particularly, that ſhe declin'd being call'd Head of the Church; which Title was never Uſurp'd by any Prince for Fifteen Hundred Years after Chriſt. Neither was the laying aſide this indefenſible Addition an Implicit Reſignation to Cuſtom. No, her Majeſty was well prepar'd to Account for what ſhe did. She conſider'd that after Zacharias was Dead, Onias the Prince aſſum'd the Prieſts Office : That this Incroachment had a very unhappy Iſſue : That God ſtruck him with Leproſy, for exceeding his Commiſſion. And thus the Propheſy of David was fulfill'd upon him, Imple Faciem eorum Ignominiâ. She would argue (continues this Preacher) how can a Woman be Head of the Church, who by the Scripture is forbidden to ſpeak in the Church? Upon this Principle the Church muſt have a dumb Head. But this can by no means be maintain'd : For 'tis part of the Functions of the Head of the Church to Preach there. Beſides, the Head of the Church is oblig'd to offer Sacrifice for the Sins of thoſe departed : But we don't Read either in the Old or New Teſtament, that ever a Woman Sacrific'd. He proceeds to tell the Audience how uncomfortable this Princeſſes Life had been : And that, abating the Satisfaction ſhe took in the Exerciſe of Religion, few People had leſs Pleaſure than her ſelf.

“ From hence he goes on to commend her for her Patience in her laſt Sickneſs : With what Devotion ſhe receiv'd the Sacraments, and prepar'd for her Paſſage into the other World : That ſhe had the Pſalms, uſed in the Offices of the Church, without Book. And in ſhort, that conſidering her Reſignation, and the Piety of her Behavior, if an Angel had been Mortal, ſaith he, he could ſcarcely have gone off with more Advantage. And laſtly, "notwithſtanding he believ'd her in a State "of Happineſs, yet becauſe it would be raſh "to pronounce upon People in the other "World, he thought it adviſable to comply "with the common Cuſtom, and therefore "deſires the Audience to join with him in "praying for her Soul. And now turning his Diſcourſe from Queen Mary, to Queen Elizabeth, he wiſhes the latter a proſperous Reign: And that, ſhe may ſee her Children's Children, and Peace upon Iſrael. (t)

(t) Cotton Library Veſpaſian D. 18. Fol. 94.

Something farther of her Character.

But this Sermon apart, it may be affirm'd without Panegyrick, that the Queen's private Life was all along ſtrict and unblemiſh'd It muſt be ſaid that Religion had the Over-ballance, the other World was uppermoſt with her, and ſhe valued her Conſcience above her Crown. But her Zeal was ill directed; She was under an Unhappy Management: Gardiner and Bonner, and ſome few others of reſembling Bigottry, ſeem to have puſh'd her upon Severities beyond her Temper. That ſhe was not of a Vindictive Implacable Spirit, may be inferr'd from her pardoning moſt of the great Men in Northumberland's Rebellion. She was well furniſh'd with Reſolution, and I may ſay, with Martial Vigor, when occaſion call'd for it; as appears by her Behavior upon Wyat's Inſurrection: For in her Speech at Guild-hall, when the danger was not unformidable, ſhe declar'd her ſelf ready to March in Perſon againſt that Rebel. That the publick Intereſt, and the Honour of the Kingdom was much her Concern, may be collected from the Stand ſhe made upon the Popes Incroachment in obtruding a new Legate, and the deep Melancholy ſhe fell into upon the loſs of Calais.

Beſides her founding ſome religious Houſes, and returning Impropriations, Tenths, and firſt Fruits, to the Church, ſhe built the publick Schools in Oxford, which continued for that Service 'till the Reign of King James the firſt, when they were taken down to make way for a much nobler Structure.

Two Colleges Founded in Oxford.

During her Reign, and poſſibly by the Encouragement of her Example, there were Two Colleges founded in this Univerſity. Sir Thomas Pope, one of King Henry's Abbey-viſitors, had a Grant from the Crown, of a ſmall College in Oxford, Founded by the Biſhop and Prior of Durham, for a Nurſery to their Monaſtery. To the Lands belonging to this Houſe, this Gentleman adding ſome other Eſtate of his own, Founded Trinity College: And ſettled a Maintenance for a Preſident, Twelve Fellows, Twelve Scholars, beſides Officers and Servants.

Sir Thomas White's was a nobler Benefaction: This worthy Perſon, who was Lord Mayor of London, Built and Founded St. John Baptiſt's College. This Foundation is Endow'd with Lands for a Preſident, Fifty Fellows and Scholars, not to mention the Officers and Servants belonging to the Chappel. The College Preferments are generally fill'd from Merchant Tailors School in London: Of which Company the Founder was a Member. (u)

To proceed; Cardinal Pool ſurviv'd the Queen but Sixteen Hours: He had been for ſometime languiſhing under a double Quartan: And tho' his Recovery was unlikely, yet 'tis thought the News of the Queen's Death precipitated his own.

Some few Days before his Death, when he deſpair'd of the Queen's Recovery, and had little or no proſpect of his own, he ſent a Letter to the Princeſs Elizabeth, by Holland his Chaplain Dean of Worceſter. The deſign of it was to ſatisfy the Princeſs, that he had acted nothing againſt her, and that no part of the unacceptable Uſage ſhe had met with, was owing to his Advice. The Meſſage the Dean was Charg'd with all, 'tis likely, was to fortify the Contents of the Letter, in caſe of any Objection. And ſince the Princeſs was next in the Succeſſion, and ſo very near mounting the Throne, 'tis highly Probable the Dean was to recommend the ſupporting the Roman Catholick Religion: To ſhew the danger of unſettling the Church, and argue from the Topicks of Intereſt and Duty. * The Reader ſhall have the Cardinals own Words in the Records.

* Biblioth. Cotton Veſpaſian. F. III. Records N°. 75.

As to his Character, it may be partly collected from what has been already deliver'd: However, ſome things not falling within the courſe of the Hiſtory, may be reported here. At the calling the Council of Trent, Paul the Third made Pool one of his Legates there, and join'd him in Commiſſion with the Cardinals Monte, and Santacroce, afterwards higher diſtinguiſh'd, by the Names of Julius the Third, and Marcellus the Second. Paul the Third, had a great Opinion of Pool's Learning and Judgment. He often conſulted this Cardinal, and made uſe of his Pen in Affairs of Religion. For inſtance, Pool drew the Pope's Anſwer to the Interim, propoſ'd by the German's: He likewiſe Pen'd the Reply to the Imperial Ambaſſadors Remonſtrance againſt the Council's being tranſlated from Trent to Bononia. (w) He was a very Exemplary Perſon: Nothing could be more regular and better guarded than his Conduct. The retiredneſs of his Temper, and his Inclination for Study did not govern him ſo far, as to make him unfit for publick Buſineſs. He was of a modeſt unpretending Behavior, and his good Nature made him willing to over-look the Advantages of his Birth and Station. However; the Port of his Family, and his Figure on publick Occaſions, was not unbecoming his Quality. Notwithſtanding his Intereſt at Court, he never ſolicited the Queen on his own behalf. He declin'd the Opportunities of enriching himſelf by his Legantine Character; would neither accept Preſents, nor ſuffer his Servants to receive any: And as for the Surpluſuſage of his Revenues, he turn'd it to Charity and pious Uſes. He made Prioli a noble Venetian, with whom he had Maintain'd a long and intimate Acquaintance, his Executor. This Gentleman undertook the Truſt, but refuſ'd to receive any Advantage of Pool's Bounty, reſerving nothing to himſelf of what belong'd to the Cardinal, excepting his Breviary and Diurnal.

As to the Proſecutions of the Reform'd, the Cardinal ſeems to have been Over-rul'd in his Temper, and gone off in ſome meaſure, from thoſe gentle Methods he had formerly recommended. Whether he was over-ſet by the Court of Rome, and gave way for the Pope's Satiſfaction, is ſomewhat uncertain. But let this be as it will, 'tis certain he can't be excus'd from being concern'd in the Perſecution. For the purpoſe, he gave a Commiſſion for the Tryal of Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, at Oxford, and Conniv'd at the Cruelties of Harpſfield and Thornton, in his own Dioceſe.

And farther; he granted a Commiſſion to this Nicholas Harpſfield Archdeacon of Canterbury, bury, Robert Collins Batchelor of Law, Commiſſary General for the Dioceſe of Canterbury, Richard Foſſet, and Hugh Turnbole, Doctors in Divinity, to John Mills, Hugh Glaſier, and John Warren, Batchelors in Divinity, and Prebendaries of Canterbury: To enquire into, and Try Perſons of Heretical Pravity And in Caſe they were Convicted, to oblige them to Abjure. And if they continued Obſtinate, to deliver them over to the Secular Power, ſi Facti atrocitas ità expoſceret. This Commiſſion is dated from Lambeth, the Twenty Eighth of March, 1558.*

* Regiſt. Pool. Fol. 29.

About Four Months after, the Cardinal returns a Significavit into the Court of Chancery, certifying, that John Cornford, Chriſtopher Brown, John Hurſt, Catherine Knight, and Alice Snoth, had been brought before the Commiſſaries above-mention'd, and Convicted of Hereſy: Upon this Proceſs he remits them to the Juſtice of the Secular Magiſtrate. †

† See Records N°. 76.

It muſt be allow'd however he preſerv'd Two and Twenty at one Time, who otherwiſe, had in all likelyhood been deſtroy'd by Bonner: For they were ſeiz'd in Eſſex, and brought up Priſoners to London. But the Cardinal Interpos'd for their Reſcue, and contriv'd them a gentle and ambiguous Confeſſion of Faith: This Form running with an eaſy Latitude, and lying ſmooth upon their Conſcience, they made their Submiſſion, and were diſcharg'd. That theſe Perſons had all been Sentenc'd to the Stake: That they had all, I ſay, been thus diſpos'd off, appears by Bonner's own Letter: What then prevented their Doom? Why, Bonner was afraid of looſing the Cardinal's Friendſhip by ſuch Barbarities. His Eminency, it ſeems, had formerly ſhewn his diſlike of Bonner's Proceedings. This Sanguinary Prelate therefore, ſends to him now, to know his Pleaſure.

† Fox Vol. 3. p. 783. 785, 786.

After all, 'tis true, he was far from having a good Opinion of the Reformation: The Diviſions amongſt the Proteſtants, and their want of Diſcipline; their diſregard of the Prieſthood, and ſeizing the Church Revenues; theſe things, together with the Prepoſſeſſions of his Education, might probably incline him to think the Intereſt of Religion, could not be ſupported without an Adherence to the Pope; and the Countenance of ſo powerful a See, as that of Rome.

But tho' his Judgment miſled him in this matter, 'tis plain he was Govern'd by Motives of Conſcience. Had Mony or Ambition ſway'd him, he would certainly have complied with the Meaſures in the Two late Reigns. Had he then fall'n in heartily with the Court, no one could have open'd a fairer proſpect to Wealth and Greatneſs than himſelf; In this Caſe, he would probably have ſtood foremoſt in his Princes Favor, and gain'd a Preference to Cranmer and Cromwell.

This Cardinal died in the Nine and Fiftieth Year of his Age; the Corps after having lain in State about Six Weeks at Lambeth, was convey'd to Canterbury, and ſolemnly interr'd in Archbiſhop Becket's Chappel.

He wrote ſeveral Books, beſides that pro Unitate Eccleſiaſtica, and his Reformatio Angliæ:

To mention Two of them in Print: The firſt, de Concilio lib. 1. the other, de ſummi Pontificis Officio, & Poteſtate. And thus I ſhall take leave of this Reign, and the Cardinal.

PART II. BOOK VI.

THE Queen's Death being ſome Hours Conceal'd, was firſt ſignified to the Lords lately Aſſembled in Parliament. This unwelcome News ſtruck the Houſe to Silence for ſome time: Afterwards recollecting themſelves, and diſguiſing their Concern, they turn'd their Thoughts to the Publick: And firſt, 'twas unanimouſly Reſolv'd to Proclaim the Princeſs Elizabeth, founding her Right upon the Thirty Fifth of Henry the Eighth Chapter the firſt. This being agreed, Heath Archbiſhop of York, and Lord Chancellor, ſending for the Houſe of Commons, acquainted them with the Queen's Death: That the loſs of this admirable Princeſs, was ſo great a Calamity to Church and State, that they ſhould have remain'd Unconſolable, had it not pleas'd God to have preſerv'd her Siſter Elizabeth. And ſince ſhe ſtood next upon the Line, and was by Law the undoubted Heir of the Crown, the Prelates and Temporal Nobility, had all reſolv'd to Proclaim her; and only wanted the Concurrence of the other Houſe. Upon this the Commons immediately ſhouted, one and all, God ſave Queen Elizabeth; may her Reign be long and proſperous: And now the Parliament being Diſſolv'd upon the Demiſe of Queen Mary, Elizabeth was Proclaim'd by Sound of Trumpet, and ſtrong Acclamations, firſt in the Palace Yard at Weſtminſter, and afterwards in London.

Queen Elizabeth Proclaim'd.

The Queen was now but Five and Twenty Years Old; But her natural Abilities, the nice Juncture of the late Reign, and the difficulties ſhe had to deal with, had furniſh'd and improv'd her beyond the expectations of her Age: And of this early ſufficiency ſhe gave good Proof in the Choice of her Council. She thought it moſt adviſable to intermix Papiſts and Proteſtants at the Board: That by this means neither Party would deſpair of her Favor, and the Ballance would be beſt kept in her own Hands. (x) The Roman Catholick part, were Nicholas Heath Archbiſhop of York, William Pawlet Marqueſs of Wincheſter Lord Treaſurer, Henry Fitz-Alan, Earl of Arundel, Francis Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury, Edward Stanly Earl of Derby, William Herbert Earl of Pembroke, Edward Lord Clinton Admiral, and William Lord Howard of Effingham Lord Chamberlain, Sir Thomas Cheyney, Sir William Petre, Sir John Maſon, Sir Richard Sackville, and Dr. Nicholas Wotton Dean of Canterbury: Theſe were all Privy Counſellors to the late Queen. The others of the Reform'd Perſwaſion, as Cambden reports, were William Parr, Marqueſs of Northampton, Francis Ruſſel Earl of Bedford, Sir Thomas Parr, Sir Edward Rogers, Sir Ambroſe Cave, Sir Francis Knolles, and Sir William Cecill: To this Number, Sir Nicholas Bacon was ſoon added. But that Two of this laſt diviſion conform'd to the Roman Catholick Religion in the late Reign, may eaſily be collected from their having a ſhare in publick Buſineſs. (y)

She chuſeth her Privy Council.

At her firſt entring upon the Government, ſhe ſelected a ſort of Cabinet Council from ſome few of the Proteſtant Party, and with theſe ſhe concerted Meaſures for retrieving the Reformation; but this was to be done with great Precaution and gradual Advances. In the firſt place therefore ſhe took care to ſettle the Magiſtracy, giſtracy, and ſecure the Kingdom from Diſturbance. And to prevent Confederacies and Invaſions from Abroad, ſhe diſpatch'd her Ambaſſadors to keep on the Friendſhip of Foreign Princes. For the purpoſe, Sir Thomas Chaloner was ſent to the Emperor to acquaint him with the Queens Inclinations for cultivating the antient Correſpondence between the Houſes of England and Auſtria. The Lord Cobham was diſpatch'd with reſembling Inſtructions to the Spaniſh Court in Flanders. This Nobleman and the Lord Howard of Effingham were likewiſe furniſh'd with Powers to go on with the Treaty at Cambray, begun in the latter end of the late Reign. Beſides theſe Sir Henry Killigrew was privately ſent to form an Alliance with the Proteſtant Princes in Germany: There was likewiſe Ambaſſadors diſpatch'd to the Courts of Denmark and Holſtein. King Philip Courts her.

The King of Spain being inform'd of his Queen's Death, order'd the Count of Feria his Ambaſſador at London, to addreſs Queen Elizabeth for Marriage, giving her an Aſſurance of the Pope's Diſpenſation for this purpoſe. Philip was not only willing to keep his Engliſh Title and Intereſt, but likewiſe apprehenſive leaſt the Britiſh Dominions and Ireland ſhould fall into a Union with France by the Queen of Scots Pretentions: Theſe are ſuppos'd to be the motives to King Philip's Courtſhip. The Queen being thus ſolicited was unreſolv'd in her Anſwer for ſome time: An overture of this kind from ſo great a Prince, and one who had formerly been much her Friend, was not ſuddenly to be refus'd. That King Philip had done her good Offices in her Siſters time, is beyond Diſpute. To lay ſomething of this matter before the Reader. It has been already obſerv'd that the Princeſs Elizabeth being ſuſpected of concerting Wyat's Inſurrection was kept ſometime confined, and ruggedly Treated. While ſhe was under theſe hardſhips, Henry II. the French King wrote privately to her, profeſs'd a great Regard, and gave her a ſtrong Invitation into France. Chriſtian III. likewiſe King of Denmark, who had receiv'd Luther's Reformation, Courted her privately for Prince Frederick his Son. When ſome bigotted Papiſts had got Wind of this Application, they began to Threaten her afreſh, and cry out that neither Religion, the Queen, nor the Kingdom, could be ſecure as long as this Princeſs was in Being. About this time when the Eccleſiaſtical Courts were proſecuting Proteſtants, as we call them, Dr. Story, and ſome other warm Men, us'd to declare, that unleſs they ſtruck at the Root of Hereſy (meaning the Princeſs) the lopping the ſmall Branches would ſignify nothing. The Princeſs either ſatisfied in her Conſcience, or over-aw'd by Terror, which is more likely, went frequently to Confeſſion, and complied with the Eſtabliſh'd Religion. However, the Queen being ſenſible from her ſelf, how far Fear might govern Practiſe, queſtion'd her Siſters Sincerity. And to what degrees of Rigor this Suſpition might have carried her, is ſomewhat uncertain. But the King made it his Buſineſs to take off this Jealouſy, and bring her to a kinder Opinion. In ſhort, he ſcreen'd the Princeſs from farther Miſchiefs, and diſappointed the ill will of her Enemies: Whether 'twas pure Friendſhip or State Policy is another Queſtion: However, the Favour was to be interpreted to the faireſt Senſe.

She is ſometime unreſolv'd about the overture.
Id. in Apparat.

But at laſt refuſeth it.

Theſe Conſiderations kept the Queen in Suſpence upon the overture. At laſt, looking farther into the Conſequence, ſhe perceiv'd that the marrying the Wives Siſter was equally forbidden with entring into the ſame Relation with the Brother's Wife. That ſuch an engagement ſtanding Condemn'd by the Holy Scriptures, the Popes Diſpenſation could never diſentangle the Matter. Beſides, by engaging with her Siſters Husband upon the ſtrength of a Papal Diſpenſation, ſhe muſt by neceſſary Inference, own her ſelf the Iſſue of an unlawful Marriage: A Marriage which ſhe might think ſhe had no Reaſon to ſuſpect, conſidering the publick Determinations both at Home and Abroad in favour of her Fathers Divorce with Katherine of Spain. Upon the whole thought, ſhe return'd King Philip's Addreſſes the ſmootheſt Refuſal. Shewing herſelf rather diſenclin'd to Marriage, than denying upon any other ſcore. But this Prince renewing his Application by ſeveral Letters, ſeem'd to have gotten ſome ground in her Fancy: For ſhe made no ſcruple to commend him for the reſervedneſs and decency of his Behaviour, and that ſhe ſhould value herſelf in imitating his Conduct. This Diſcourſe made the Proteſtant Courtiers apprehenſive of an Impreſſion, and that the King might probably gain her. To prevent this Alliance therefore they ventur'd to remonſtrate loudly againſt the Haughtineſs of the Spaniard: And ſome of her Council ſhe admitted to the higheſt Confidence, told her that herſelf, her Friends, and the Kingdom, were perfectly ruin'd, if ſhe own'd the Papal Authority either in diſpenſing, or any other matter: That two Popes had pronounc'd her Mothers Marriage unlawful: And that upon this Sentence the Queen of Scots had now put up her Claim to the Engliſh Crown: That the Pope would never reverſe this Judgment of his Predeceſſors: That 'twas in vain to expect Juſtice from the Court of Rome, who had ſhewn themſelves ſo Partial againſt her Mother: And that the French King was now trying his utmoſt with that See, that Mary Queen of Scots might be declar'd Soveraign of England.

She intends the Reſtoring the Reformation.

The Queen being now wrought to a Reſolution againſt the Marriage, believ'd nothing would give a more effectual check to King Philip's importunity, than a ſpeedy Alteration in Religion. Now therefore ſhe conſulted the Cabinet upon the meaſures for recovering the Church to the Condition it was left in by her Brother King Edward. And here, to proceed with the greater ſecurity, the Danger of the Enterprize, together with the method for diſentangling the Government, was layed before the Board. The Danger might be rang'd under two Heads, either Foreign and Domeſtick. From Abroad her Majeſty might expect the Pope would Excommunicate her, and encourage an Invaſion. 'Twas likewiſe not improbable the French King might make his Advantage of the Opportunity, break off the Treaty at Cambray, and it may be ſolicit the Queen of Scots to make War upon England: Neither was it improbable but that the Iriſh being Malecontents, and ſo warmly affected to the Church of Rome, might riſe upon the Government: And laſtly, the King of Spain's great Power and Neighbourhood in the Low Countries, was no favourable Circumſtance. The remedies in Counterballance were theſe: As to the Popes Excommunication, 'twas only inſig-inſignificant Noiſe, Powder without Ball, and ought to be deſpiſ'd: The French, if they offer'd a Peace, they were to be cloſ'd with: If not, 'twas thought worth the while to court their Friendſhip, ſince it brought that of Scotland along with it. The Proteſtants in France and Scotland were to be encourag'd, and the Diviſions in Religion fomented: The Garriſons in Berwick and upon the Borders were to be reinforc'd; and the ſame Securities provided in Ireland: And that a good Correſpondence with the Spaniards was to be kept on, and the old Alliance with the Houſe of Burgundy renew'd.

The Dangers of the enterprize Conſider'd

The Remedies ſuggeſted.

The Dangers at Home the Cabinet foreſaw would ariſe from the Temporal Nobility diſcharg'd the Council Board: From the Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſticks who muſt loſe their Preferments: From the Judges and Juſtices of Peace, employ'd in the late Reign: And in ſhort, from all other hearty Papiſts of Wealth and Diſtinction. The way to make theſe People inoffenſive, was to throw them out of Commiſſion, and bring none but Proteſtants into the Adminiſtration: To purge the Univerſities, to place new Preſidents in the Colleges, and turn out the Maſters at Wincheſter, Eaton, and other Schools. That the Papiſts muſt not only be put out of Buſineſs, but care muſt be taken to ſink their Character, and leſſen their Intereſt, as long as they continue of that Perſwaſion. And if ſome of them ſhall happen to comply with the Alterations in the Church, they are not to be truſted: It being natural for every Man to watch his Opportunity for recovering his old Ground; and to like that Eſtabliſhment beſt, which himſelf had a Share in ſettling. And particularly, as to the non-complying Biſhops, they muſt be reduc'd by ſome new Parliamentary Proviſions: The Premunire muſt be played upon them: And when once they are in Miſericordiâ they are not to be Pardon'd without entire Submiſſion and Conformity: And that by hampering them well, and preſſing the Laws cloſe, Her Majeſty's Occaſions for Mony may be ſomewhat ſupplied. (a)

That thoſe Proteſtants who affected improper Alterations, and were for throwing the Eccleſiaſtical Polity into a new Form, ought to receive an early Check: That 'twas by no means adviſeable to allow more than one Church: That the free Exerciſe of different Religions would prove an everlaſting Principle of Sedition and Diſturbance, eſpecially in a Nation of ſo Martial a Genius as the Engliſh. However, to prevent Diſcontents, the Reform'd Liturgy ought to be review'd, and made as inoffenſive to all Parties as may be. That this Affair ſhould be refer'd to Parker, Bill, May, Cox, Grindal, Whitehead, and Pilkington: Theſe Divines being all Remarkable for Learning and Temper: And that Sir Thomas Smith (who is ſuppos'd to have drawn this Advice) was to bring them together, and have a ſhare in the Conſultation. That when the Debate was ſettled, and the Performance finiſh'd, the Book was to be preſented to the Queen, and after her Approbation, layed before the Parliament: That beſides this Committee, other Perſons of Learning and Character ſhould have the Peruſal of the Book to give it a farther Reputation. That before the review'd Service was Publiſh'd, there muſt be a ſtrict Prohibition of all Innovation: That frequent changes leſſen'd the Authority of a Government, and therefore ought to be prevented as much as poſſible: Beſides, the giving out Orders would ſuggeſt an inſtance of Duty to the Subject, and train them to the Practiſe of Obedience: And as to Her Majeſty, She may keep to the ſame Form of Religion, unleſs with reſpect to the Communion on high Feſtivals: At which times her Highneſs may receive with ſuch a Latitude of Ceremonies, as ſhe ſhall think fit: That where there are more Prieſts than one at Maſs, they may all Communicate in both kinds: And for farther Relief of her Highneſs Conſcience, if need be, the Office of the Maſs may be the ſeldomer read, and ſome other devout Prayers or Memory us'd inſtead of it: And laſtly, to the Queſtion what Noblemen were to be made Privy to this Deſign before 'twas open'd to the whole Council? The Anſwer was, that none but the Marqueſs of Northampton, the Earl of Bedford, the Earl of Pembroke, and the Lord John Gray, were to be truſted with the Secret. (b)

But the Queen having diſcharg'd thoſe Committed for Religion in the late Reign, and given the Exiles leave to return, the Inclinations of the Court were not difficultly Collected. The Proteſtants therefore preſuming on the favour of the Government, ventur'd beyond the Protection of the Conſtitution: And thus meeting firſt in private Houſes, and afterwards in Churches, preach'd their Perſwaſion, and drew great Audiences after them. The Papiſts, on the other ſide, not dropping their Defence, the People began to ruffle and grow warm in the Controverſy: And thus Images were pull'd down in ſeveral Churches, and the Prieſts affronted. The Queen to keep the Kingdom quiet, and prevent unſeaſonable Squabbling, put out a Proclamation for ſilencing the Pulpit, and commanded all Diſputes of this Nature ſhould be forborn. And thus for ſome time none were allow'd to preach without a Licenſe under the Broad Seal. But to give ſome Diſcovery of what ſhe intended, ſhe allow'd the Liberty of reading the Epiſtles, the Goſpels, and Ten Commandments in Engliſh, provided 'twas done without expounding: The Lord's Prayer, the Creed and the Litany, might likewiſe be ſaid in the ſame Language. As to the reſt of the Service 'twas to go on by the Rubrick of the Miſſals and Breviaries, till the Queen and Parliament had farther debated this Matter.

A Proclamation to forbid Preaching.

To proceed; The Day before the Coronation, there was a ſplendid Cavalcade from the Tower to Weſtminſter. The Queen, before ſhe ſtep'd into her Coach, is ſaid to have made a ſhort Ejaculation, heard by thoſe near her: She return'd "God Thanks for preſerving her to ſo happy a Day: Acknowledg'd her being reſcued by Providence from the extremity of Danger: Comparing it with Daniels Deliverance in the Lion's Den. She was Saluted as ſhe paſs'd with all imaginable Marks of Duty and Affection: Her return to theſe Acclamations was very engaging both in Air and Geſtures. Her receiving an Engliſh Bible was particularly taking in the manner. 'Twas let down from one of the Triumphal Arches, and preſented by a Child repreſenting Truth. When ſhe diſcover'd the Preſent, ſhe firſt kiſs'd her Hands, and then receiving the Book, kiſs'd it, layed it to her Heart, promiſs'd to read it, and return'd the City more thanks for this Preſent than for all the reſt of great value ſhe had already receiv'd. It muſt be ſaid ſhe was a great Miſtreſs of Behaviour; and perfectly underſtood the Art of making herſelf Popular without expence.

The Queens Coronation.

The next Day ſhe was crown'd at Weſtminſter, by Owen Oglethorp Biſhop of Carliſle: The Solemnity was perform'd according to Antient Cuſtom, and directed by the Roman Pontifical: And here ſhe took the uſual Oath for preſerving the Rights and Liberties of the Church. None but the Biſhop of Carliſle could be prevail'd with to officiate at the Coronation. Archbiſhop Heath and the reſt of that Order ſtood off from this Buſineſs. They were afraid the Impreſſions of her Proteſtant Education were not worn out: This Suſpicion was confirm'd, by her late forbidding a Biſhop to elevate the Hoſt for Adoration. Her permitting ſome of the Church Service in Engliſh was alſo much diſlik'd. However, the Queen to give her her Due, appear'd very religious; came conſtantly to the Cloſet, or Chappel, at the Hours of Prayer, and behav'd her ſelf there with exemplary Devotion: She wore black in Lent, and was very attentive at the Sermon; tho' ſhe us'd to ſay, ſhe had rather addreſs God Almighty in Prayer, and converſe more immediately with him, than hear a Learned and Rhetorical Diſcourſe upon the Divine Attributes. She had honourable Sentiments of the Uſe of the Croſs, of the Bleſſed Virgin, and other Saints; and never mention'd them without Regard and Reverence.

Id.

The Reader may poſſibly be at a Loſs, why the Queen riſqued her being refus'd at the Coronation, by ſo many Biſhops of the Roman Perſwaſion: For were not Barlow, Scory, and Coverſdale living? Were not theſe Three Prelates all hearty in the Reformation? Why then was not the ſetting the Crown on her Head offer'd to one of theſe? To this it may be anſwer'd, that theſe Three Biſhops were then actually depriv'd: And the Proceſs being not revers'd, their Character might be queſtionable. Beſides, ſhe had reaſon to believe theſe Prelates would have ſcrupled the Ceremoniale: And to have alter'd it to their Approbation, might probably have drawn a Blemiſh upon the Solemnity, and repreſented her to Diſadvantage in foreign Courts. And after all, 'tis poſſible, the old Form might ſit eaſy enough upon her Mind, and her Conſcience give her leave to humour the Juncture.

In December this year, the Privy Council ſtopt the Chief Juſtice Saunders Attachment againſt Dr. Lewis Judge of the Admiralty; brought the Cauſe before the Board, and undertook the deciding the Controverſy. It ſeems they did not think it reaſonable, that either of the Parties ſhould over-rule the other, or give Sentence in their own Cauſe. *

Council Book Strype Annal. p. 31.

Upon the Queens Acceſſion to the Throne, the Engliſh Exiles at Geneva ſeem'd willing to take up the old Difference with their Brethren, and moved towards a Reconciliation.

Decemb. 15. Anno Dom. 1558.

To this purpoſe, they diſpatch'd William Keth one of their Congregation, to the Engliſh at Arrow, Baſil, Strasbourg, Wormes, Franckfort, &c. In their Letter to thoſe of Arrow and Franckfort, they expreſs a ſtrong Inclination to recover a right Underſtanding, and come up to a perfect Harmony with the reſt of the Engliſh: But then their Propoſals are ſomewhat narrow and reflecting, they call'd the Ceremonies Trifles, they propoſe the beſt Reform'd Churches, that is Calvin's Congregation, for the Meaſures of Agreement. They are ſenſible, that claſhing would diſſerve the Reformation, and report them to Diſadvantage amongſt the Papiſts. And thus they would gladly have an end put to their former Diſputes: But then the Accommodation muſt be made upon their own Terms.

This Letter is ſubſcrib'd in the Name of the whole Church by Chriſtopher Goodman, Miles Coverdale, John Knox, Anthony Gilby, William Whittingham, and Six others.

The Engliſh Church at Franckfort in their Anſwer to this Letter, declare themſelves pleaſed with this friendly Overture, but are ſorry it came no ſooner: For now almoſt all thoſe of the Congregation they conteſted with at Franckfort, were remov'd: However, they did not queſtion but that they would drop their Reſentment, and look upon them as Brethren. As for Ceremonies the ſettling that Point muſt neither be referr'd to the Churches of Franckfort, nor Geneva. The Divines in England with the Concurrence of the Parliament, muſt put an end to that Controverſy. They hope the Reformation will recover, and not be clog'd with an Over-weight of Ceremonies. And therefore provided nothing Immoral is impos'd, they are reſolv'd to acquieſce in the publick Eſtabliſhment, and wiſh their Brethren of Geneva may be equally reſigning. And ſince all the Reform'd abroad differ in Rites, and yet agree in Doctrine, they ſee no Reaſon why the Engliſh Church may not be allow'd the ſame Latitude. However, if any Ceremonies really exceptionable, ſhall happen to be put upon them, they promiſe at their Return home to join with them in an Addreſs for removing this Grievance.

This Letter was ſign'd in the Name of the Church by James Pilkington, Richard Beeſley, Henry Knolles, Alexander Nowel, and Seven others. *

* Troubles at Franckfort page 160. & deinceps.

And now the Engliſh at Geneva return'd home, excepting ſome few who ſtayed behind to finiſh their Tranſlation of the Bible. They had already made a Verſion of the Pſalms, which they publiſh'd by it ſelf, and dedicated to the Queen.

The Parliament meets.

On the Twenty Fifth the Parliament met at Weſtminſter: Sir Nicholas Bacon Lord Keeper, open'd the Seſſion with a Speech: His Diſcourſe ſuggeſting to the Houſes the matter upon which they were to go, was rang'd under Three Heads; Religion, redreſſing Grievances, and reforming the Adminiſtration: And laſtly, they were to conſider the State of the Kingdom; The Diſadvantages lately happening to the Crown, and conſult about proper Remedies. I ſhall wave the Two latter Branches, and only give the Reader the Senſe of the Firſt. “ And here the “ Lord Keeper acquaints the Houſes, that the Ho- “ nour of God Almighty was the Queens prin- “ cipal Concern: That this ought to have the “ Preference in their Debates: That Religion “ was the ſureſt Baſis for the Support of the “ Common-wealth: That the Civil Admi- “ niſtration ought to take its Meaſures from “ hence: And this World be govern'd upon “ the Views of the other. That a Diſcharge

The Lord Keepers Speech concerning Religion.

“of Duty in this particular would derive Succeſs upon all the reſt: But Remiſsneſs and Negligence here, muſt have an unfortunate Effect upon other Proviſions. For not being ſettled upon Strength and Clearneſs of Principle, they muſt of courſe be expos'd to Queſtion and Change: Now theſe are Circumſtances which bring Diſcredit upon a publick Eſtabliſhment: And ought to be particularly avoided in matters of Faith and Religion: For theſe Things as they are certain and ſettled in themſelves, ſo we ought to be uniform and conſtant in our Belief and Practice.

“Her Highneſs therefore, continues the Lord Keeper, earneſtly requires you, that in Regard to the Duty you owe to God and her Majeſty; the Concern you have for your Country and your ſelves, you would recollect your Thoughts, and exert your Endeavours. That you would ſpare no Pains for the eſtabliſhing that which after your utmoſt Enquiry ſhall be judg'd moſt ſerviceable: And that in managing this Debate, no Conſiderations of Superiority or Power, of Intereſt or Pleaſure: No Oſtentation of Learning, no Conteſt for Victory, may prevail upon you: And to this purpoſe, her Majeſty expects you ſhould decline ſquabbling, Heat of Diſputation, and Scholaſtick Arguing: That ſuch Niceties, and Methods of Contention, are below the Dignity of the Subject, and unbecoming a Parliamentary Aſſembly. Beſides, there is a great deal of Time unneceſſarily ſpent this way: And when Men harangue and wrangle to ſhew their Parts, they ſeldom agree in any ſerviceable Reſolves: And as your own Debates ought to be govern'd by Temper, Gravity, and good Humour; ſo 'tis proper ſome publick Proviſion ſhould be made to check Contention and contumelious Behaviour without Doors; And that no Party Language, no Terms of Reproach, no provoking Diſtinctions, ſhould be kept up in the Kingdom. That the Names of Heretick, Schiſmatick, Papiſt, and ſuch like ſhould be layed aſide, and forgotten. For what do theſe Diſcriminations tend to, unleſs it be to perpetuate Diviſions, to encourage Faction, to enflame Mens Spirits, and make them hate and do Miſchief to each other?

“In the Management of this Affair touching Religion, Two Extremes are to be carefully avoided: On the one Hand, there muſt be a Guard againſt unlawful Worſhip and Superſtition: And on the other, Things muſt not be left under ſuch a looſe Regulation, as to occaſion Indifferency in Religion, and Contempt of Holy Things. The Exemplary Puniſhment of undue Worſhip and Superſtition, and eſpecially of Atheiſm and Immorality, is clear from the Hiſtory of all Ages, and needs not be particularly recited: And the Bleſſings of Providence are no leſs remarkable on the contrary Practice. And for your farther Encouragement, I think I may affirm, that neither good King Hezekiah, nor the noble Queen Eſther had a ſtronger Zeal to diſcharge Error, and reform what's amiſs, than our Soveraign Lady has to recommend herſelf to the Approbation of God Almighty. Let therefore the Conſideration of our Duty to God, the Terror of his Judgments, the Senſe of his Goodneſs, the Love to our Country and our ſelves, and the Encouragement of ſo inviting an Example in the Queen, put us upon our beſt Endeavours for providing ſuch Laws as may tend to the Honour of God, the Settlement of his Church, and the Repoſe of the Kingdom. And this was the Cloſe of the Lord Keepers Speech concerning Religion. (b)

Sir Simon D'ewes Journal. of both Houſes of the Parliament. page 12.

The Convocation met the next Day after the Parliament: After a Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt, Bonner Biſhop of London open'd the Meeting with a ſhort Diſcourſe. For in the Vacancy of the See of Canterbury the Biſhop of London was commonly Preſident of the Convocation.

Journal of Convoc. Fol. 53. & 97.

But this Poſt was not annex'd to the See of London by common Right, but by the Choice of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury: For in caſe a Convocation meets when the See of Canterbury happens to be void, the Prior and Convent formerly, but ſince the Reformation the Dean and Chapter direct a Commiſſion to ſome Biſhop to repreſent them; for being beneath an Epiſcopal Character, they are unqualified to preſide in Perſon in the upper Houſe: They commonly make the Biſhop of London their Repreſentative upon ſuch occaſions: They have the Liberty notwithſtanding of pitching upon any other; And thus in the Convocation held in the year 1532. When the See of Canterbury was void by the Death of Archbiſhop Warrham, the Prior and Convent choſe the Biſhop of St. Aſaph for their Commiſſioner, who upon the Strength of this Repreſentation preſided in the Convocation. Farther, they are not tied to the Nomination of a ſingle Biſhop, but may join Two or Three in the Inſtrument for this purpoſe: And thus it happen'd at preſent. The Biſhops of Worceſter and Coventry being join'd in Commiſſion with Bonner.

This Prelate told them, that notwithſtanding a Latin Sermon had been cuſtomary upon ſuch occaſions, yet now 'twas not to be expected. The chief Reaſon was, becauſe the Council had forbidden any Sermons in that Church, 'till farther Order from her Majeſty. Nicholas Harpsfield Doctor of Law, and Archdeacon of Canterbury, was choſen Prolocutor.

By the way, this Harpsfield had been lately complain'd of to the Council for mutinous Behaviour and Diſaffection to the Government: Upon this the Board wrote to Sir Thomas Finch and George May Aderman of Canterbury, to enquire into the matter, acquainting them farther, that ſome of the College of Chriſt Church were reported to have thrown out menacing Words, declared Religion ſhould not be alter'd, and provided Arms for that purpoſe. The Truth of theſe Reports Finch and May are requir'd to examine, and commit ſuch Perſons as they thought deſerv'd it. But ſince Harpsfield had his Liberty, it may be the Evidence was ſhort, or the Information over flouriſh'd. *

To return, the only remarkable Buſineſs done by this Convocation was the drawing up certain Articles in defence of the Religion eſtabliſh'd. This Paper was couch'd by way of Addreſs to the Biſhops, who were to lay it before the Lords in Parliament. The Subſtance of it is to this Effect.

The lower Houſe of Convocations Articles deliver'd to the Biſhops.

They acquaint the Biſhops, that being inform'd by publick Fame, that many Points of Religion, hitherto unanimouſly receiv'd by the whole Church, and handed down without Interruption from the Apoſtles, were now call'd in Queſtion, and particularly the Articles underwritten; for this reaſon, they thought themſelves concern'd to provide in the beſt manner they could, for the Salvation both of themſelves, and the People committed to their Charge. Therefore being ſupported with the Precedent of their Predeceſſors upon a reſembling occaſion, they thought themſelves oblig'd to publiſh their Belief of the following Articles, appealing to God in the moſt ſolemn manner for the Sincerity of their Declaration.

Firſt, That in the Sacrament of the Altar, by Virtue of the Words of Conſecration duly pronounc'd by the Prieſt, the natural Body and Blood of Chriſt conceiv'd of the Bleſſed Virgin, are really preſent under the Species of Bread and Wine.

Secondly, That after Conſecration the Subſtance of Bread and Wine does not remain, nor any other Subſtance, excepting that of God and Man.

Thirdly, That the true or real Body of Chriſt, and his real Blood, * is offer'd in the Maſs, as a propitiatory Sacrifice for the Quick and Dead.

* Verum Chriſti Corpus & verus ejuſdem Sanguis. Journal Convoc. Fol. 99.

Fourthly, That the ſupreme Power of feeding and governing the Church Militant, and confirming their Brethren, is given to the Apoſtle St. Peter, and his lawful Succeſſors in the Apoſtolick See, who repreſent our Saviour for this purpoſe.

Fifthly, That an Authority for debating and ſettling thoſe Things which belong to Faith, the Sacraments, and Diſcipline of the Church, is a Privilege which always has, and ought to belong to the Hierarchy, and not to the Laity; the Holy Spirit having given a Commiſſion to the former for theſe Functions.

Theſe Articles being put into Biſhop Bonners Hand, were preſented by him to the Lord Keeper Bacon: And in the next Seſſion, Bonner acquainted the lower Houſe of Convocation, that an Inſtrument was ſent up from both the Univerſities, atteſted by a publick Notary, in which the Articles were all ſubſcrib'd, excepting the laſt. A Diſputation between the Papiſts and Proteſtants at Weſtminſter.

All the Effect this Declaration had with the Houſe of Lords and the Queen, was the bringing on a Diſputation between the Roman Catholicks and the Reform'd. This Conference was by the Queens Order began on the Thirty Firſt of March in the Abbey Church at Weſtminſter. The Archbiſhop of York being one of the Council, was requir'd in her Majeſties Name, to intimate her Pleaſure to ſome of the Biſhops: And to make choice of Eight, Nine or Ten of their own Party, to manage a Diſpute with an equal Number of the other Perſwaſion. Archbiſhop Heath and the other Biſhops conſented to the Motion, and the Points propos'd to be argued. Upon this at the Queens inſtance 'twas mutually agreed, that to prevent wrangling, the Debate ſhould be manag'd in Writing: That the Biſhops being Perſons of the beſt Quality, ſhould give in their Papers in the Firſt Place: And that the other Party ſhould return them their Anſwer in Writing the ſame Day: That the Papers which were mutually exchang'd one Day, ſhould be reciprocally anſwer'd another. And that this Method ſhould be kept 'till they had gone through all the Articles. And becauſe the Iſſue of this Diſpute might give ſome meaſures to the Parliament, the Lords deſir'd the Papers might be pen'd in Engliſh. This Motion was likewiſe agreed by the Biſhops, and the Reform'd. And thus the Preliminaries being all ſettled, the Conference began at the Time and Place above-mention'd; the Privy Council, a great Part of the Nobility, and ſome of the Houſe of Commons, being preſent. (d)

The Perſons made choice of to engage in the Controverſy were theſe. For the Roman Catholicks, White Biſhop of Wincheſter, Bayn Biſhop of Litchfield, Scott Biſhop of Cheſter, Watſon Biſhop of Lincoln, Dr. Cole Dean of St. Pauls, Dr. Harpſfield Archdeacon of Canterbury, Dr. Chadſey Prebendary of St. Pauls, and Dr. Langdale Archdeacon of Lewis.

Thoſe for the Reformation, were Dr. Scorey late Biſhop of Chicheſter, Dr. Cox late Dean of Weſtminſter, Mr. Horn late Dean of Durham, Mr. Elmer late Archdeacon of Stow, Mr. Whitehead, Mr. Grindal, Mr. Gueſt, and Mr. Jewel. The Points to be argued were theſe Three?

The Queſtions.

Firſt, whether 'tis againſt the Word of God, and the Cuſtom of the Antient Church, to officiate, and adminiſter the Sacraments, in a Language unknown to the People. Secondly, whether every Church has Authority to appoint, to change, or ſet aſide, Ceremonies and Eccleſiaſtical Rites, provided the ſame be done to Edification. Thirdly, whether it can be proved by the Word of God, that there is offer'd in the Maſs a propitiatory Sacrifice for the Quick and Dead. The Papiſts were to defend the Negative of the firſt, and the Affirmative of the laſt Queſtion, and the Proteſtants were to make good the Affirmative of the Second.

And that the Diſputation might be manag'd in Form, and the Order obſerv'd, the Lord Keeper took the Chair: Not that he had any Commiſſion from the Queen to determine between the Parties, or over-rule any Point in the Controverſy.

Notwithſtanding Things had been thus thoroughly adjuſted, the Biſhops broke the Method, and came unprovided with their Paper; they pretended they had miſtaken the Agreement. However, they were prepar'd, they ſaid to argue the firſt Propoſition by word of Mouth. The Lord Keeper after a Reprimand for departing from their Preliminaries, gave them the Liberty to proceed in their own way, they having promiſ'd to put their Arguments in Writing afterwards, and deliver them to the other Party.

Dr. Cole argues for the Biſhops, &c.

Matters being thus far recover'd, the Papiſts appointed Dr. Cole to repreſent them, and deliver their Senſe upon the firſt Queſtion. This Doctor diſcharg'd his Commiſſion ſometimes by ſpeaking off hand, as 'twas pretended, ſometimes by reading Authorities out of a Paper, and ſometimes he ſpoke what was prompted by his Party: But what he deliver'd does not appear. For 'tis plain his Argument upon the firſt Queſtion, preſerv'd in Bennet College Library, was not his firſt Diſcourſe, but a Reply to Hornes Paper: This is evident from Coles Speech introductive to his Argument: His Words are theſe.

“ Moſt Honourable.

“ That whereas theſe Men here preſent, have declar'd here openly, that it is repugnant and contrary to the Word of God, to have the Common Prayers and Miniſtration of the Sacraments in Latin here in England;

“ England; That all ſuch Common-Prayer,
“ and Miniſtration ought to be, and remain
“ in the Engliſh Tongue. Ye ſhall under“ ſtand that to prove this their Aſſertion, they “ have brought in as yet, only one Place of “ Scripture taken out of St. Paul's firſt Epiſtle
“ to the Corinthians, Chapter the Fourteenth,
“ with certain other Places of the holy Do“ ctors; where unto Anſwer is not now to be “ made: But when the Book which they “ Read, ſhall be deliver'd unto us, according “ to the Appointment made in that behalf,
“ then God willing, we ſhall make Anſwer,
“ as well to the Scripture, as other Teſtimo-
“ nies, alledg'd by them, ſo all good Men
“ may evidently perceive and underſtand, the “ ſame Scripture to be Miſconſtrued, and drawn
“ from the native and true Senſe.

From hence he proceeds to reply to Hornes Paper upon the firſt Queſtion. And here he Aſſerts, firſt, that Divine Service, in an unknown Tongue, is no contradiction to any plain Declaration of Scripture. And Secondly, ſuppoſing there were any plain Text againſt this Uſage, the conſtant Practiſe of the Church ought not to be Condemn'd. This bold Propoſition he endeavors to make good by the following Arguments.

His Reaſons for juſtifying the Church Service in a Language not underſtood by the People.

Firſt, he takes notice that notwithſtanding the keeping the Sabbath or Saturday, was expreſly commanded by God Almighty, yet the Church, without any Warrant from written Revelation, has chang'd the Feſtival to Sunday. That this Alteration having paſs'd all along without Scruple or Conteſt, is a good reaſon to rely on the Authority of the Church in other matters. He obſerves farther, that when our Saviour waſh'd his Diſciples Feet, he told them 'twas for their Example; that they ſhould do as he had done. Notwithſtanding which expreſs Words the Church had without breach of Duty, omitted the Imitation. And in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, the Practiſe of our Saviour mention'd in Scripture is not followed in every Circumſtance: For he celebrated this Myſtery after Supper. Now if a Man ſhould Quarrel the preſent Uſage, and inſiſt upon the Inſtitution, he may receive an Anſwer from St. Auſtin, who tells him, it ſeem'd good to the Holy Ghoſt, that in Honour to ſo great a Sacrament, the Body of our Lord ſhould be receiv'd before any other Nouriſhment. * From hence, his Inference is, that the Church is govern'd by the direction of the Holy Spirit; and that in Virtue of this Privilege, ſhe is impower'd to change a Cuſtom, even recommended by our Saviour himſelf. And that by our Saviour's Promiſe, the Authority of the Primitive, is continued down to the preſent Church. And upon this Ground the Church has barr'd the Laity receiving under both kinds, and pronounc'd thoſe Guilty of Hereſy, who affirm that whole Chriſt is not contain'd under either Species.

John 13. v. 15.

He reinforces his reaſoning from a Text in the Acts, where the Council of Jeruſalem Publiſh'd their Decree in theſe Words: It ſeem'd good to the Holy Ghoſt and to us, to lay upon you no greater Burthen than theſe neceſſary things: That ye abſtain from Meat offer'd to Idols, and from Blood, and from Things ſtrangled, and from Fornication. Here's a plain Precept from the Apoſtles, and other Perſons unqueſtionably inſpir'd, for abſtaining from eating Blood, no leſs than from other things, which are unalterably unlawful: And yet this Branch of the Decree has not been kept: The Church for many Ages has diſpens'd with the Command; neither is ſhe blam'd by the Reform'd for indulging this Latitude. To this he adds another Inſtance from the Acts of the Apoſtles, where 'tis ſaid the Chriſtians Sold their Eſtates, lodg'd the Purchaſe Mony with the Apoſtles, and had all things common: But this charitable Precedent was never reckn'd binding to ſucceeding Ages. From all theſe Inſtances, his Concluſion is, that ſuppoſing the Proteſtants had the Scripture on their ſide, in the caſe conteſted, ſuppoſing this, which He won't grant, yet ſince the Church is always under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, her deciſions are no leſs to be regarded than thoſe of the Apoſtles. That this Aſſertion is a plain Conſequence of our Saviour's Promiſe, that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould teach his Diſciples all things, and guide them into all Truth; and that himſelf would be with his Church to the World's End. To this purpoſe, he Cites a Paſſage from St. Auſtin, † where 'tis ſaid, “ that tho' the Church tolerates a great many things, yet ſhe neither “ Approves, nor Connives at, nor Practiſes, any thing contrary to Faith, or moral “ Duty.

Acts 15. v. 28.

After this Attempt to Eſtabliſh the Catholick Church in this extent of Authority, his next Effort is, to prove the See of Rome the Seat of this Authority, and the Center of Unity: But for this he offers nothing but the Teſtimony of Irenæus, where that Church, or probably the City of Rome, is call'd Potentior Principalitas.

From hence he proceeds to ſhew the danger of Schiſm, that St. Paul conjures the Corinthians, that they all ſpeak the ſame thing, and that there be no Diviſions amongſt them: That neither Knowledge, Faith, good Works, nor Martyrdom it ſelf, will ſignify any thing to thoſe who are out of the Communion of the Church: For, as St. Auſtin ſpeaks, let a Man's Pretenſions be what they will, whoever is ſeparated from the Church of Chriſt, can be no Chriſtian. From hence Cole argues, that the tranſlating the Common Prayer into the Mother Tongue, is a breach upon the Cuſtom of the Univerſal Church: And that ſuch an Alteration muſt of neceſſity be introductive of an horrible Schiſm.

His next Eſſay is, to prove that Prayers in an unknown Language, has been all along the Cuſtom of the Weſtern Church. And here by a common miſtake he makes Dionyſius the Areopagite, the firſt Preacher of Chriſtianity in France: He mentions Martialis, and Auſtin the Monk, for the Converſion of the Spaniards and Saxons: He takes notice of the Britains and Germans being brought over to the Belief of the Goſpel: But when he comes to make out his Point, that the Service was perform'd in theſe Churches, in a Language not underſtood by the People, he offers nothing but the Silence of Hiſtorians. However, to give ſomething of the Face of an Argument, he affirms the Proteſtants can never prove the Church-ſervice in the vulgar Tongue was generally Practis'd, either with reſpect to Place, or Time. From hence he proceeds to argue from the Permanency of the Latin: That the Phraſe and Conſtruction of this Language keeps ſteady and fix'd; whereas the reſt ſpoken by the common People, are ſtrangely floating and uncertain: Inſomuch, that one Age is ſcarcely intelligible to another. Now if the Church Liturgy ſhould be always

Reform'd

* In Os Chriſtiani hominis priùs intret Corpus Dominicum quam exteri Cibi.

† Epiſt. ad Januar.

Reform'd to the Modern Style, and chang'd as often as Language wears, and Words grow out of Faſhion, ſuch frequent Alterations would leſſen the Veneration for holy Things, ſtrike off the Advantage of Antiquity, and diſſerve the Majeſty of Religion.

He endeavors to fortify his reaſoning, that the Laity amongſt the Jews were not permitted to enter, either the Holy of Holies, or the Body of the Temple: And yet the Prieſts officiated in the firſt, and the High Prieſt in the latter. That in the Greek Church, the Prieſt Conſecrates with the Curtains drawn before the Altar. Cùm vela videris retrahi, ſays St. Chryſoſtome, tunc supernè Cœlum aperiri cogita. That the People by not underſtanding the publick Prayer, have a better opportunity for their private Devotion, which would be diſturb'd if they ſhould nothing but attend to anſwer Amen: Beſides, in a great Church 'tis impoſſible for every Body to hear what the Prieſt ſays.

His next Effort is ſomewhat ſurprizing: He affirms, that if 'twere neceſſary to Officiate in the vulgar Tongue, it would follow that no Body could be the better for any Prayers, unleſs he underſtood them, and heard them when they were ſaid: From whence the Inference would be, that the Churches Prayers for St. Peter in Priſon, ſignified nothing: Each of which Conſequences, as he argues, are no leſs than Hereſy.

His laſt Topick is from the ill Tranſlation of the Bible. If we ſhould, ſays he, conſent to the Engliſh-Service, we muſt be oblig'd to King Edward's Common-Prayer-Book: Now this Book conſiſts of Verſions of the Pſalms, and other Parts of the Scripture, in which are ſeveral plain Miſtakes and Deviations from the Original: Now this, continues he, is downright depraving the holy Scriptures: And if the Liturgy muſt be regulated upon this falſe Tranſlation, we may be ſaid to ſerve God with Lies.

We ought not therefore to alter the Form of the Common-Prayer to that degree, as to loſe the Benefit of all Devotion: And yet ſuch muſt be the Iſſue of this uncharitable Contention, unleſs our Adverſaries think fit to acquieſce. The Church of God, as St. Paul ſpeaks, has no ſuch Cuſtom as they would bring upon us. And therefore we may put the Apoſtles Queſtion to them, what? Came the Word of God out from you? Or came it to you only? Has the whole Church of Chriſt been all along miſtaken, and never ſeen the Fourteenth Chapter of St. Paul to the Corinthians? Has the Holy Ghoſt laid down his Office, and diſcontinued his leading Chriſtians into all Truth, 'till now of late? St. Auſtin in his Letter to Julianus the Pelagian, who complain'd of hard Uſage in the Eaſtern Church, anſwers him thus: In my Opinion, ſays this "Father, you ought to have been determin'd "by that part of the World, in which our "Bleſſed Saviour Crown'd his Chief Apoſtle "with Martyrdom; and a little after, he tells "him; you had your firſt and ſecond Birth "in the Weſtern Church. What makes you "endeavor to bring in foreign Doctrine upon "her? Or rather, why would you take away "part of that Faith, which you found in her "at your Baptiſm? (f)

Cole pretends, 'twas in their Power to cite a great many more Authorities, in which, the Antients declare ſtrongly againſt breaking the Unity, and diſturbing the Government of the Church: That this reaſoning would affect their Adverſaries: However, he was willing to wave this Advantage for fear of being tedious to the Audience. (l)

Hornes Paper for the Reform'd.

This Divine by way of Preface declares a great regard for the Authority of the Catholick Church: And that they profeſs'd an entire Submiſſion to all the Articles of the Apoſtolical, Nicene, and Athanaſian Creeds: That they are willing to refer the whole Controverſy to the Holy Scriptures and the Catholick Church. But then by the Catholick Church, they don't underſtand the Church of Rome, but that Body of Chriſtians which can prove her Title to Catholiciſm from the Scriptures, and is under the Directions of the Holy Spirit: And that they have the Warrant of St. Auſtin, and other Fathers, to reſtrain the Catholick Church to this Notion. (n)

(n) Fox vol. 3. p. 981.

From hence he proceeds to State the Queſtion: And firſt, that by the Word of God, the Proteſtants mean only the Written Word, or Canonical Scriptures. And ſecondly, by the Cuſtom of the Primitive Church, they underſtand the general Practiſe of the Church for the firſt Five Centuries.

The Common-Prayer in an unknown Language, contrary to the Scriptures.

His firſt undertaking is to prove Common-Prayer in an unknown Language, contrary to the Word of God. And upon this Head he argues at length, and with ſufficient Force from 1 Cor. 14. But I ſhall omit the recital of his reaſoning, and refer the Reader to what I have offer'd already in defence of the Engliſh Liturgy. (o) However, I ſhall mention one Text cited by Horn from this Chapter: I will pray by the Spirit, and I will pray with the Underſtanding alſo. From hence he argues that Common-Prayer in the notion of it, Imports the joint Petitions of the Congregation, declar'd by their Language. That this Definition is approv'd by St. Auſtin. (p) There would be no need, ſays he, of forming our Prayers into Words, unleſs to diſcover the Mind of the Underſtanding to the People. *

* Nihil opus eſt locutione, niſi ut fortè ſacerdotes faciant ſignificandæ Mentis cauſâ, ut populus Intelligat.

The Miniſtration, as he goes on, of the Lord's Supper and Baptiſm, are as it were Sermons upon the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt: But Sermons, or Repreſentations, muſt be made in intelligible Language, otherwiſe they are to no purpoſe. 'Tis not lawful for a Chriſtian to abuſe the Gifts of God: But he that Prays in an unknown Language, is Guilty of this Miſmanagement; for the uſe of Speech is only to Communicate Thoughts, and diſcover the Mind to the Hearer. (q) He fortifies his reaſoning from the Practiſe of the Heathen, and the Suggeſtions of natural Light; and obſerves that the Pagans in all Countries, tho' never ſo much uncultivated, tho' never ſo ſlenderly improv'd, put up their Prayers to their Deities, and perform their religious Solemnities, in the vulgar Language.

(q) Auguſt. de Doctrin. Chriſtian. lib. 4. Cap. 10. loquendi autem nulla eſt Cauſa, ſi quod loquimur non intelligunt, propter quos, ut intelligant, loquimur.

The Second Part of his Aſſertion, is to prove Prayers in an unknown Tongue, contrary to the Cuſtom of the Primitive Church.

And to the Practiſe of the Primitive Church. Juſtin Martyr Apol. 1.

He begins with Juſtin Martyr's Apology: Where this Father giving an Account of the Chriſtian Worſhip to the Roman Emperors, acquaints them that at their Aſſemblies on Sundays, the Writings of the Apoſtles and Prophets us'd to be Read: That after Sermon they all ſtood up and Pray'd: And that when the Biſhop officiated in the Communion-ſervice, the People all anſwer'd Amen. From hence 'tis evident the Scriptures were Read in the vulgar Language: And that the Liturgy was underſtood by the People, otherwiſe which way, as the Apoſtle argues, could they be qualified to ſay Amen. (r)

(r) 1 Cor. 14. v. 16.

This Cuſtom may be farther trac'd in St. Baſils, and St. Chryſoſtome's Liturgies, where the People have a ſhare in the Service. For inſtance, they anſwer, Lord have Mercy upon Us: And with thy Spirit: We lift them up unto the Lord, &c. Now which way could they make theſe Reſponſes, or adjuſt them to the Time, unleſs the publick Form was drawn up in the common Language? Farther, St. Baſil in his Letter to the Clergy of Neo-Cæſarea, endeavors to take off ſome Objections againſt the Pſalmody us'd in his Church: And having premis'd that their Practiſe in this particular was Uniform and General, takes notice, that the People at Church, after having made their Confeſſion to God, threw themſelves into Two Diviſions, and Sung the Pſalms alternatively. (s)

(s) Baſil. Epiſt. 63.

To theſe Authorities he adds farther Teſtimonies from St. Ambroſe, on the Fourteenth of the firſt to the Corinthians; from St Jerome on theſe Words of the ſame Chapter, How ſhall he that Occupies the Room of the unlearned, ſay Amen? From the ſame Father in the end of his Comment on the Epiſtle to the Galatians; from St Chryſoſtome on 1 Cor. cap. 14. From Dyoniſius, from St. Cyprian, and St. Auſtin. (t) To theſe the Teſtimony of Juſtinian is ſubjoin'd, where the Emperor commands all Biſhops and Prieſts to pronounce the Liturgick Prayers, and the Office for Baptiſm, with a loud Voice, that the People may hear, and be aſſiſted in their Devotions: which Benefit they can't have, as the Emperor continues, unleſs they underſtand what is ſaid: And here he founds himſelf upon the Apoſtles reaſoning, and argues from the Fourteenth of the Corinthians already mention'd. When Horn had thus Read thro' his Paper, the Audience ſeem'd to diſcover their Satiſfaction, and give a Preference to his Argument: Upon which the Biſhops alledg'd they had more to offer upon the firſt Queſtion. This was contradicting their former Anſwer: For when Cole had ended his firſt Diſcourſe, the Privy Council asking them if they had any thing to ſay farther upon that Head, they anſwer'd no. (w) Notwithſtanding, to take off all pretences of Complaint, the Conference was adjourn'd 'till Monday following, and the Biſhops were order'd to bring in their Paper to the Second Propoſition, with a promiſe that what they had farther prepar'd upon the firſt Queſtion, ſhould likewiſe be heard: And to this both Parties agreed. (x) But when the Day came, the Biſhops inſiſting upon their reading the Supplemental Paper to the firſt Queſtion, and refuſing to abide by the laſt Compromiſe, the Conference after ſome ſquabble broke up. White and Watſon Biſhops of Wincheſter and Lincoln, ſhewing more heat than the reſt, and miſbehaving themſelves to a remarkable degree, were committed to the Tower, and Fin'd. The reſt were bound in a Recognizance to appear before the Council, where moſt of them were deeply Fin'd.

The Biſhops thus declining to go on with the Controverſy, and falling off from their own Appointment, look'd like deſpairing of keeping their Ground, and being conſcious of an ill Cauſe. However, they pretended themſelves ſtreitn'd in time: That 'twas beneath their Character to go through a Diſputation of this kind, where Bacon, a mere Lay-man, was to ſit as Judge: That the Points to be argued had been already determin'd by the Catholick Church, and therefore were not to be farther debated, without leave from the Pope. Theſe Objections being made after the Method of the Conference was mutually ſettled, were accounted no better than trifling and evaſion. Particularly; their exception againſt the Preſidency of the Lord Keeper Bacon, ſeems to have little Weight: For 'twas no uncuſtomary Practiſe for the Chriſtian Emperors, to appoint Secular Men of Diſtinction, to interpoſe ſo far in Eccleſiaſtical Synods, as to keep good Order in the Debates, to hold the Parties cloſe to the Queſtion, and prevent their flying out into cavilling, and foreign Diſcourſe; and of this, to mention nothing more, we have Inſtances in the general Councils of Epheſus, and Chalcedon. Sanders in reporting this Conference commends ſome of the Biſhops for their Magnanimity, and informs us of their Reſolution to Excommunicate the Queen, and the leading Hereticks: But it ſeems the other Biſhops were wiſer, or more tame at leaſt, then to venture on ſo rugged an Expedient. They choſe rather to refer the exerciſe of Diſcipline to the Pope, than exert ſuch a Cenſure upon their Sovereign: They thought ſuch extreme Proceedings might be miſinterpreted, and carried too far in the Conſequence: And over and above, they might exaſperate the Government this way, and draw a Perſecution upon their whole Party. White and Watſon were the warm Prelates who threatn'd the Queen with Excommunication, which was the reaſon of their Commitment to the Tower. (y)

Which Occaſions the breaking off the Conference.

(y) Sanders de Schiſm. Anglic. lib. 3.

As the Reform'd Divines kept cloſe to the conditions of the Conference, and came off with advantage upon the firſt Queſtion, ſo they were likewiſe no leſs prepared for the Second. I ſhall give the Reader part of the ſubſtance of it. The Propoſition is this: Every particular Church has Authority to inſtitute, change, or ſet aſide Rites and Ceremonies, provided 'tis done to Edification.

The Paper drawn up by the Reform'd Divines upon the Second Queſtion of the Conference.

Before they proceed to their Proof, they ſettle the Terms of the Queſtion. “ And firſt by every particular Church, they mean every Kingdom, Province, or Country, which is form'd into a diſtinct Society. By Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, they underſtand ſuch Rites and Ceremonies as are neither expreſly, nor by neceſſary conſequence forbidden by the Scriptures.

“ To make good their Aſſertion, they obſerve in the firſt Place, that Rites and Ceremonies under the State laſt mention'd, are things which relate to Order and Decency. But matters of this nature are by the Apoſtle St. Paul referr'd to the Management of the particular Church of Corinth, and by conſequence to all other particular Churches; For the Corinthians had no pretences to ſpecial Privilege.

“ Secondly; thoſe Uſages which were ſerviceable at the firſt Inſtitution, may afterwards grow dangerous and inconvenient. For this reaſon the meeting of Men and Women at the Tombs of the Martyrs, on the Vigils, was forbidden, and diſcontinued, tho' very much commended by St. Jerome.

“ To ſtay for General Councils for removing diſorders, and bringing things to a proper regulation, is ſometimes too ſlow a Remedy: For inſtance, the Church was govern'd for near Three Hundred Years before the firſt Oecumenical Synod at Nice. And ſince that time there have been long intermiſſions of ſuch General Aſſemblies. Now if particular Churches are not impower'd to ſuppreſs Superſtition, and diſcharge ſuch Ceremonies as lead to unlawful Practiſe, a great number of Souls might miſcarry before the Biſhops from all parts could be drawn together.

“ Thirdly; Aretus Biſhop of Cæſarea and Primaſius Biſhop of Utica teach us, that the Seven Churches in Aſia mention'd in the Revelations, repreſent all other particular Churches in the reſt of Chriſtendom: From whence it follows, that the Biſhops and Paſtors of every Kingdom and Province were to have the ſame Authoriry with thoſe who preſided in the Seven Aſiatick Churches. But the Angels or Biſhops of theſe Seven Churches had Authority to reform what was amiſs, as appears by the Orders St. John was commanded to ſend them.

Revel. Cap. 1.

“ Fourthly; if a particular Church was tied down to immoral or enſnaring Rites and Ceremonies of human Inſtitution, and had no Authority to ſet aſide an ill Cuſtom; then ſuch a Church would be oblig'd to obey Man rather than God, and not to do every thing to Edification, which is a direct Contradiction to the Holy Scriptures.

“ That when circumſtances change, things decline from their firſt Condition, and Cuſtoms ſuffer upon the Progreſs, common Senſe ſuggeſts Reformation, and directs to a ſtop of the Miſchief: To apply this reaſoning, 'tis not likely a wicked Ceremony ſhould ſpread to an univerſal Extent, and grow into a general Abuſe, all at once: Now as the Contagion is particular as to Place, the Cure ought to be ſo too. And if the Corruption happens to grow general, St. Auſtins Rule muſt govern for the Remedy. A good Husbandman, ſays this Father, when he ſees his Corn choaked with Weeds, does not attempt the pulling them out all together, but begins firſt at one Corner of the Field.

“ If 'tis objected that the Ceremonies of Holy Church are privileg'd from Danger and Miſapplication: To this it may be return'd, that the Inſtitutions of Men, like their Nature, are ſubject to change and degeneracy.

“ To give an inſtance of a Ceremony which one would have thought had been fenc'd better than Ordinary. The Brazen Serpent was ſet up by Moſes for an Antidote againſt Poiſon. But even this was afterwards abus'd to Idolatry, for which Reaſon King Hezekiah beat it to Powder. Thus Ceremonies are ſometimes honour'd with Exceſs of Applications, and made Eſſential to Divine Worſhip. And in ſuch Caſes our Saviour pronounces, In vain do they Worſhip me, teaching for Doctrines the Commandments of Men.

“ Sometimes they grow too Bulky for uſe, and multiply to an intolerable Number. St. Auſtin complains of this Grievance. All, ſays he, is over-run with human Fancies. * The Jews under the Law, as this Father goes on, were in a better Condition than the Chriſtians: For tho' they had none of the Privilege of Evangelick Liberty, yet their Servitude was more honourable: The Burthen was layed upon them by God Almighty, and not by any human Invention.

* Omnia ſunt plena humanis Præſumptionibus.

“ Sometimes they are altogether Idle and Uninſtructive, and as one may ſay, Signs without Signification. And this is the Caſe of moſt of the Ceremonies ſo warmly conteſted for at preſent. And ſometimes they are contriv'd purely to make a Penny of the People.

“ Farther; the Apoſtles Authority is deriv'd upon after Ages, and convey'd to the Biſhops their Succeſſors. This muſt be granted by the Roman Catholicks; with what Colour elſe can they preſs Obedience to the Pope's Decrees? Beſides, St. Jerome is full for the Point. (z) And St. Cyprian makes no Scruple to affirm that the Apoſtles were all equal to St. Peter by their Commiſſion. * From whence it follows, that all Biſhops have the ſame Authority for ordering things to Edification.

(z) Hier. ad Evag.

* Hoc utiq; erant cæteri Apoſtoli quod fuit Petrus, pari conſortio præditi,& Honoris & Poteſtatis. Cyprian. de unitat. Eccleſ.

“ And that particular Churches in the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity made uſe of this Liberty touching Ceremonies, is evident by variety of Precedents. For the purpoſe; Ireneus ſpeaking of the Lenten Faſt obſerves, that the Chriſtians did not only differ about the Time, but the Manner: That notwithſtanding this Difference, the Churches kept a good Correſpondence with each other. (a) Socrates has a remarkable Diſcourſe upon this Subject. This Hiſtorian affirms, that neither the Apoſtles nor the Goſpel oblig'd to Uniformity in theſe Matters. That the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches kept Eaſter on different Days. That this Diverſity did not hinder St. Polycarp Biſhop of Smyrna, and Anicetus Biſhop of Rome from Communicating together: That at Rome they Faſt Three Weeks before Eaſter excepting Sunday: That in Greece, Illyricum, and Alexandria they lengthen their Abſtinence to Six Weeks: And all of them notwithſtanding call it a Quadrageſimal Faſt. The Churches differ likewiſe in other Circumſtances of their Abſtinence. For ſome refuſe Eating any Animals, others make no ſcruple of Fiſh-diet: And a third ſort take the Liberty of feeding both upon Fiſh and Fowl, becauſe they were created out of the ſame Element. Some abſtain from Eggs and all ſort of Fruit: Some eat nothing but dry Bread, and ſome wont venture ſo far as that neither: And in fine, ſome Faſt till three in the Afternoon, and then refreſh themſelves with any ſort of Nouriſhment without diſtinction. And ſince there's no poſitive Precept to determine this Point, 'tis plain the Apoſtles have left every Body to their own Diſcretion. That their ſelf denial being thus at Liberty might have more Commendation in it. (b) The Hiſtorian proceeds to Inſtance in other different uſages touching the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm and the Holy Euchariſt, the Marriage of the Clergy, &c.

“As to the point of Faſting, St. Auſtins reaſoning falls in with that of Socrates: He grants Faſting is commanded in the New Teſtament: But in regard the Days on which we are to Faſt, are not preſcrib'd by our Saviour, or the Apoſtles, he thinks it more convenient this matter ſhould go at large. (c) Theodoret's Comment upon theſe Words in the Fourteenth to the Romans, Let every Man be fully perſwaded in his own Mind is urg'd to the ſame purpoſe.

“Farther; a Church that has the liberty to receive a Ceremony or not, at firſt, has the ſame liberty to diſcharge it, when 'tis found inconvenient: But every Church has this Liberty; for as St. Auſtin writes, to Januarius, whatever is neither Repugnant to Faith or good Manners, is to be look'd on as an indifferent Matter. “Now if it lies at the choice of particular Churches, to admit or reject an indifferent Ceremony, 'twill be ſtill more reaſonable to grant them a Power to thro' it out, when they find it Blemiſh'd, and grown out of Kind.

“When 'twas objected to St. Cyprian, that no Tradition ought to be alter'd, the Martyr replies, whence came this Tradition at firſt? Does it ſtand upon any Divine Authority? Was it commanded by our Lord or his Apoſtles, and do we find it in the Canon of the New Teſtament? (d) As much as to ſay, that if it was no more than human Conſtitution, 'twas not to be concluded unalterable. And elſewhere he allows, that changing things for the better, is a very reaſonable Inconſtancy.

“St. Auſtin has a remarkable Paſſage to this purpoſe. 'Tis not true, ſays he, which ſome Men pretend, that a thing once well done, muſt by no means be alter'd. For when the Ground of any Practice fails, and the Circumſtances of time are alter'd, we have all imaginable Reaſon to alter the Cuſtom too. (e)

Having now ſupported their Propoſition from Scripture, and the Teſtimony of the Antients, they proceed to Precedents in the Primitive Church. “They alledge St. Baſil and St. Chryſoſtome's Liturgies were receiv'd without the Authority of a General Council: And if 'twas lawful for ſingle Biſhops to ſettle Liturgick Forms, and differ from other Churches in Ceremonies of the greateſt Weight, in Rites annex'd to the moſt ſolemn Part of Religion, how unreaſonable is it to deny the ſame Latitude to a whole Kingdom or Province? In St. Gregory's time there were three Canons or Forms for the Adminiſtration of the Holy Euchariſt; the Canon of St. Ambroſe, the Canon of Scholaſticus, and the Canon of St. Gregory. At Rome every Saturday was a Faſt: But at Milan the Practice was otherwiſe: Now when St. Auſtin and his Mother liv'd at Milan they govern'd themſelves by St. Ambroſe's Cuſtom, and kept no Faſt on Saturdays. Farther, St. Ambroſe brought in ſomewhat of the Alexandrian Cuſtom of Pſalmody, into the Church of Milan, as St. Auſtin relates in his Confeſſions. And as this celebrated Biſhop ſet up one uſage, he put down another. There was a Cuſtom in Africk and Italy, to bring Entertainments to the Tombs of the Martyrs when the Chriſtians met there: This St. Ambroſe look'd on as a heatheniſh Fancy; that it gave occaſion to Intemperance, and therefore ſuffer'd it to continue no longer. Thus Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople ſuppreſs'd the Office of a publick Penitentiary: And which is farther remarkable, this Function was not reviv'd by his Succeſſor St. Chryſoſtome.

“They make good their Aſſertion farther, from the Practiſe of our own Country. For the purpoſe; in the Reign of King Henry VIII. many ſuperſtitious Doctrines and Ceremonies publickly countenanc'd, and long continued, were thrown out: Such as Pilgrimages, Stations, and Pardons, to which may be added many unaccountable Opinions touching Purgatory, Holy Water, Scala Cæli, and Maſſes for Cattel: Many Romantick Miracles, and viſionary Relations in the Saints Lives, were diſbeliev'd and diſcharg'd. And yet theſe things were once Eſtabliſh'd by pretended Catholick Authority: And are ſtill kept up in other Countries upon the ſame Ground. However, at the return of Popery in the late Reign, theſe groſs Errors and Corruptions in Practiſe, were not thought fit to be reviv'd.

They proceed to argue from the frequency of Provincial Councils in the firſt Ages of the Church: Now ſuch Aſſemblies were conven'd to no purpoſe, unleſs they had a Power for reforming what was amiſs. “They obſerve that ſeveral Heterodoxies relating to Marriage, to reſtraints in Diet, and the liberty of Slaves, were Condemn'd in the Council at Gangra, that the Hereſy of Pelagius was likewiſe cenſur'd in ſeveral provincial Synods, before the cauſe was brought to a General Council. Now Doctrine is matter of more Importance than Rites and Ceremonies. If therefore Provincial Councils have Authority to determine in the firſt Caſe, they muſt à fortiori be allow'd it in the latter. And thus, as was obſerv'd before, the Church for near Three Hundred Years was well govern'd with this Aſſiſtance; and had no publick Regulations but what were ſettled in provincial Councils. They urge the Fathers of the ſixth Council of Carthage check'd the Incroachment of the Biſhop of Rome; this Synod complain'd of his attempt to draw a Cauſe before them to his own Juriſdiction. They tell him the Council of Nice had very wiſely decreed, that all Diſputes ſhould be determin'd where they commenc'd; and that the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt would not be wanting to particular Provinces.

“Theſe Divines proceed to argue, that ſome diverſity in Ceremonies is more ſerviceable to the Church than a nice Uniformity. For by this means the indifferency of things is beſt diſtinguiſh'd, and the Church preſerv'd in her Liberty: And over and above, by this Latitude, the Ceremonies will not be overvalued by the ignorant People, nor ſtrein'd to an equality with what is commanded in Holy Writ.

(e) Auguſt. ad Marcell. in Cap. 5.

“As for the Uniformity now viſible in the Popiſh Churches, 'tis not of the higheſt Antiquity. Making all things thus of one Colour, was the Policy of latter Ages; 'twas a conſequence of the Pope's Uſurpation, and a ſtretch of his pretended Supremacy. And thus 'tis rather kept on for a Badge of Servitude, and a Recognition of the Roman Authority, than for any Edification.

They are ſenſible the force of General Councils may be objected againſt their Proof; But the diſcuſſion of this Queſtion requiring a long Diſcourſe, they promiſe to conſider it in their Reply to their Adverſaries. “And here they intend to diſentangle the difficulties of the Argument, and prove by ſufficient Authority, in what Points, and how far, Chriſtians are bound to acquieſce in General Councils.

“And whereas the Roman Catholicks inſiſt upon length of time, and Immemorial Poſſeſſion, they ſhould prove the matters conteſted defenſible, before they inſiſt on their Antiquity: For there's no preſcribing againſt the Word of God. For as St. Cyprian ſpeaks, cuſtom without Truth, is no better than antient Error. And laſtly, as to their Adverſaries pretence of Poſſeſſion, they think it foreign to the Controverſy, and no good Plea. For if they can't make good the Pope's univerſal Paſtorſhip from the Holy Scriptures, the Authority of their Church ſignifies nothing, and by conſequence their Poſſeſſion ſinks with it. Theſe Objections and any others offer'd they undertake to anſwer more at large when the Papers of the other Party ſhall be deliver'd. (f)

(f) Mſs. C. C. C. C. Synodal.

I ſhall now go back to the Parliament, and conſider the Proceedings there with Relation to the Church. As to the Lords Spiritual, none of them had Summons but ſuch as acted in the late Reign. Thoſe who were preſent, were Heath Archbiſhop of York, Bonner Biſhop of London, White of Wincheſter, Pate of Worceſter, Kitchen of Landaff, Bayne of Coventry and Litchfield, Turbervile of Exeter, Scot of Cheſter, Oglethorpe of Carliſle, and Feckenham Lord Abbot of Weſtminſter. The Biſhops of Durham, Peterborough, Ely, (now Ambaſſador) Bath and Wells, and St. Davids ſent their Proxies, the other Sees were vacant by Death.

An Act for the Reſtitution of Tenths, Firſt-fruits, &c.

The firſt Bill I ſhall mention, was for the Reſtitution of Tenths, firſt Fruits, and Parſonages Impropriate to the Crown, which Queen Mary out of her Piety had return'd to the Church. The Bill, as a motive to make it paſs, ſets forth the Huge, Innumerable and Ineſtimable Charges of the Royal Eſtate. “That the Crown deſcended to her Majeſty very much incumbred, and leſſen'd in the Revenues: And that the Statute of the Second and Third of Philip and Mary for the extinguiſhing Payment of Tenths, &c. was made to the great diſheriſon, and decay of the Eſtate Royal. From this Preamble the Statute goes on to repeal the Second and Third of Philip and Mary Cap. 4. And thus the Acts for the Payment of Tenths paſs'd in the Reign of King Henry VIII. were reviv'd. By this Act, Vicaridges not exceeding the yearly Value of Ten Pounds in the King's Books, and Parſonages not exceeding Ten Marks, are exempted from the Payment of Firſt-fruits. The Grants, Liberties, and Immunities, made to the Univerſities by any of the Queen's Predeceſſors, together with the Grants and Privileges belonging to the Colleges of Eaton, Wincheſter, and St. Georges Chappel at Windſor, are likewiſe ſaved. To which may be added the Revenues of Hoſpitals and Schools which are alſo diſcharg'd from this Burthen. (g)

1. & 2. Phil. & Mar. cap. 4.

(g) 1. Eliz. Cap. 4.

The Biſhops all proteſted againſt this reannexing the Tenths, &c. to the Crown. But the Temporal Lords went with the Bill nemine Contradicente. This is ſomewhat ſtrange, conſidering they were almoſt all of them the ſame Members which made the Act for returning theſe things to the Church in the late Reign. * However, the Preamble of this Statute complains the extinguiſhing the Payment of Tenths, Firſt-fruits, &c. was a great Diſheriſon and Decay of the Eſtate Royal. From hence the Reader may obſerve the miſfortune of ſome Junctures, and how neceſſitous the Court is at one time, more than another! King Henry VIII. was the firſt who made this Branch of the Churches Revenue, Parcel of his own. And yet as it happen'd, in the Reigns of his Predeceſſors for many Hundred Years, the Royal Grandeur was kept up, the Functions of Government carried on, and the publick Charge ſupported, without this remarkable Aſſiſtance.

An Act for reſtoring Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction to the Crown.

The next Parliament buſineſs I ſhall mention is the Supremacy Bill for reſtoring to the Crown the antient Juriſdiction over the State Eccleſiaſtical, and aboliſhing all foreign Power repugnant to the ſame. By this Act ſuch Juriſdictions, Privileges, Superiorities, and Preeminences Spiritual and Eccleſiaſtical, as by any Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Power or Authority, hath heretofore bin, or may lawfully be exercis'd or us'd, for the viſitation of the Eccleſiaſtical State and Perſons, and for Reformation, Order, and Correction of the ſame, and of all manner of Errors, Hereſies, Schiſms, Abuſes, Offences, Contempts, and Enormities, ſhall for ever by Authority of this preſent Parliament, be United and Annex'd to the Imperial Crown of this Realm.

Then follows the Clauſe for impowering the Queen and her Succeſſors to erect the High Commiſſion Court for the exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction. And by this Branch the Queen and her Succeſſors are enabled to aſſign by Letters Patents under the Great Seal, ſuch Perſons, and for ſo long time as they ſhall think fit, (provided they are natural born Subjects) for the exerciſing under the Crown all manner of Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction. Particularly, by this Act the Commiſſioners are impower'd to Viſit, Reform, Redreſs, Order, Correct, and amend all ſuch Errors, Hereſies, Schiſms, Abuſes, Offences, Contempts, and Enormities whatſoever, which by any manner Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Power, Authority, or Juriſdiction, can or may lawfully be Reform'd, Order'd, Redreſs'd, Corrected, Reſtrain'd or Amended, &c. (h)

(h) 1 Eliz. Cap. 1.

The Comprehenſive extent of this Statute.

Nothing can be more Comprehenſive than the Terms of this Clauſe. The whole compaſs of Church Diſcipline ſeems transferr'd upon the Crown. And thus by the Queen's Letters Patents paſs'd in the Eighteenth Year of her Reign, her Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners are authoriz'd to viſit, reform, correct, as well in Places exempt, as not exempt, all Errors, Hereſies, Schiſms, &c. by Cenſures Eccleſiaſtical, Deprivation, or otherwiſe. (i) And which is particularly remarkable, notwithſtanding the Queen and her Succeſſors, King James and King Charles the Firſt, join'd Churchmen with others, in the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, yet by this Branch of the Statute they are impower'd to have made Uſe, if they had ſo pleas'd, of none but Lay-men.

(i) Biblioth. Cotton. Cleop. 6. F. 2. Fol. 139.

For the better Maintenance of this Act, the Oath of Supremacy is annex'd. And here the Subject ſwears to defend all Juriſdictions, Privileges, Pre-eminences and Authorities, granted, or belonging to the Queens Highneſs, her Heirs and Succeſſors, or united and annex'd to the Imperial Crown of this Realm.

Part of the Oath of Supremacy.

As to the Penalties for refuſing this Oath, I ſhall refer the Reader to the Statute Book. 'Tis farther enacted, that if any Perſon ſhall by Writing or otherwiſe maintain, that any foreign Prince or Prelate has any Spiritual Juriſdiction within the Queens Dominions, he is to forfeit all his Goods and Chattels for the Firſt Offence: And over and above to ſuffer a Years Impriſonment, in caſe his Goods don't amount to the Value of Twenty Pounds. And if the Perſon offending was a Clergyman, he was to loſe all his Preferments. The Second Offence incurrs the Penalties of Præmunire: And the Third is made High Treaſon.

Penalties for maintaining any foreign ſpiritual Juriſdiction.

To proceed, by a Proviſo in this Statute, no manner of Order, Act, or Determination, for any matter of Religion, or Cauſe Eccleſiaſtical, had or made by the Authority of this preſent Parliament, ſhall be interpreted or adjudg'd to be any Error, Hereſy, or Schiſm.

And by the next Proviſo, 'tis enacted, that no Perſon, nor Perſons who ſhall be authoris'd by the Queen, her Heirs, or Succeſſors, to execute any Spiritual Juriſdiction, ſhall have any Authority or Power to determine or judge any Matter or Cauſe to be Hereſy, but only ſuch as heretofore had been determin'd, order'd, or adjudg'd to be Hereſy by the Authority of the Canonical Scriptures, or by the Firſt Four General Councils, or any of them, or by any other General Council, wherein the ſame was declar'd Hereſy by the expreſs and plain Words of the ſaid Canonical Scriptures, or ſuch as hereafter ſhall be order'd, judg'd, or determin'd to be Hereſy by the High Court of Parliament of this Realm, with the Aſſent of the Clergy in their Convocation: Any thing in this Act to the contrary notwithſtanding.

The Aſſent of the Convocation neceſſary for the determining Hereſy.

By this Act the following Statutes in the Reigns of Henry the Eighth and Edward the Sixth, are reviv'd. viz. 23. H. 8. C. 9. 24. H. 8. C. 12. 25. H. 8. againſt the Payment of Annates to the See of Rome. 25. H. 8. C. 19. 25. H. 8. C. 21. 26. H. 8. C. 14. 28. H. 8. C. 16. 32. H. 8. C. 28. 2. Ed. 6. C. 23. 37. H. 8. C. 17. 1 Ed. 6. Cap. 1. Four Statutes made or reviv'd in the late Reign are likewiſe repeal'd. viz. 1. & 2. Phil. & Mar. Cap. 6. 5. R. 2. C. 5. 2. H. 4. Cap. 15. 2. H. 5. C. 7. All theſe Statutes either reviv'd, or repeal'd by this Act relate to Eccleſiaſtical Matters: But having been already mention'd in the Firſt or Second Part of this Work, the Purport of them needs not be repeated. And here it may be obſerv'd, that to make the Act more inoffenſive, the Title of Supreme Head was changed into that of Supreme Governor.

At the Third Reading of this Bill, the Archbiſhop of York, the Vicount Mountague, the Biſhops of London, Ely, Worceſter, Landaff, Coventry and Litchfield, Oxford, Cheſter, Carliſle, and the Abbot of Weſtminſter, diſſented: And Two of the Biſhops made Speeches againſt it.

Heath Archbiſhop of York deliver'd himſelf to this Effect. (k)

(k) Fox Mſs. & Mſs. Coll. Cor. Chriſt. Cant. Synodalia Fol. 75.

Archbiſhop Heaths Speech againſt the Bill for the Queens Supremacy.

" He intreats their Lordſhips to conſider, whether the Supremacy granted by this Bill conſiſted in Spiritual or Temporal Juriſdiction: If in the latter he deſires to be inform'd what new Authority the Houſes can convey to her Highneſs, ſince her Soveraignty deſcends upon her by Hereditary Right, and not by the Grant of the Subject? But if this Supremacy conſiſts in Spiritual Government, the Nature and Extent of it ought to be conſider'd. After this, the next Thing to be debated, will be whether the Houſe may lawfully grant, and her Highneſs receive, ſuch Juriſdiction.

" The Archbiſhop endeavours to maintain, but without any great Strength of Argument, that they could not quit the See of Rome without deſerting the Four Firſt General Councils; without renouncing the Article in the Creed where they profeſs to believe the Holy Catholick Church: That the meaning of this Article comprehends a Profeſſion of receiving the Doctrine and Sacraments of the Church, and living conformably to her Laws. But theſe Laws as he infers, depend wholly upon the Papal Authority. For as a Bill paſs'd both Houſes, has no Force without the Royal Aſſent, ſo neither are any Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions binding to the univerſal Church, unleſs confirm'd by the Apoſtolick See.

" Farther; by granting the Queen this Spiritual Juriſdiction, we ſhall fall, ſays he, into a great Singularity, and differ from all Chriſtian Princes, as well Proteſtant, as Catholick. For none of theſe Soveraigns, except King Henry the Eight, ever aſſum'd the Stile of an Eccleſiaſtical Supreme. If this Spiritual Supremacy belongs to the King quatenùs King, as was lately affirm'd in the Houſe by a noble Peer, then it muſt neceſſarily follow, that King Herod was Supreme Head of the Church at Jeruſalem, and Nero of that at Rome, notwithſtanding they were both Infidels. And if our Saviour Chriſt had not intruſted the Apoſtles and their Succeſſors with the Government of the Church, but left it in the Hands of Temporal Princes, 'twould have been a very ſlender Proviſion. For by this Reaſoning, either the Church muſt have been without a Head 'till the Reign of Conſtantine the Great, which was near Three Hundred Years; or elſe this Society muſt have been all along under the Spiritual Supremacy of Pagan Emperors, who were no Members of her Communion, and often made it their Buſineſs to extinguiſh Chriſtianity. From hence he proceeds to the Inſtance of King Uzziah, who was ſtruck with Leproſie for invading the Prieſts Office.

" After this he goes on to conſider the Branches of Spiritual Government: And whether the Houſe can give, or the Queen receive them. Spiritual Government conſiſts principally in theſe Four Particulars. The Firſt is the Power of “ binding and loſing, which was convey'd by our Saviour to the Apoſtles, and chiefly to St. Peter, as the Archbiſhop will have it. Now he deſires their Lordſhips to conſider, whether 'tis within their Authority to grant her Highneſs the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. If they ſay yes, he would gladly know by what Warrant, and deſires an Oyer of their Commiſſion in the Holy Scriptures. If they ſay no, 'tis plainly evident they want ſufficient Authority to conſtitute her Highneſs ſupream Head of the Church in this Realm. The Second Branch of Spiritual Government may be collected from the laſt Chapter of St. John's Goſpel, where our Saviour commands St. Peter to feed his Sheep. Now to juſtifie their Lordſhips Conveyance of this Function to their Soveraign Lady, 'twill be neceſſary for them to ſhew the Authority they act upon. And here the Archbiſhop obſerves, how by St. Paul's Doctrine all Women are entirely unqualified for Spiritual Functions. But this has been mention'd already upon another occaſion. The Third Diviſion of Spiritual Government may be inferr'd from the Twenty Second Chapter of St. Luke, where our Saviour bids St. Peter ſtrengthen his Brethren. And under this Head, Preaching and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments may be compriz'd. But if a Woman can do neither of theſe, which way can ſhe commence a Spiritual Soveraign? The laſt Branch conſiſts in Excommunication, and exerting the Cenſures of the Church againſt thoſe who miſbehav'd themſelves. But this Authority falls within the Compaſs of retaining Sins, and is ſettled by our Saviour upon the Hierarchy. And thus much of Archbiſhop Heath. Scott of Cheſter was the other Biſhop who harangu'd in the Houſe upon the ſame Subject.

The Biſhop of Cheſters Speech upon the ſame Subject.

This Prelate argues with a great deal of Zeal, but not much Evidence for the Papal Supremacy. “ He pretends the Unity of the Church cannot be maintain'd without a Supreme Paſtor for receiving Appeals, and determining Controverſies. And here he cites a great many Texts of Scripture, wide of his purpoſe, to prove the Pope this Spiritual Soveraign. After this, he goes on to anſwer ſome Objectious. Firſt, he takes notice 'tis alledg'd the Popes Authority has been diſclaim'd by a Provincial Council of the Engliſh Biſhops and Clergy. To this he anſwers, “ that the Reſolutions of a Provincial Synod are of no Force againſt the Counter Decrees of the Univerſal Church. He obſerves farther, that thoſe who renounc'd the Apoſtolick See may be rang'd under Two Diviſions; either Dead, or Living. Thoſe who are Dead, repented this Freedom, and recanted their Declaration. Thoſe who are Living, and formerly pronounc'd againſt the Popes Authority, are now return'd to their Firſt Belief, and publick Champions for his Holyneſs.

“ And whereas it has been alledg'd by the Catholicks, that as a Temporal Prince who has no Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction aſſign'd him by our Saviour can't be Head of the Church himſelf, ſo neither can he ſubſtitute any other Perſons to execute Spiritual Juriſdiction under him: The Reaſon is, becauſe no Man can give that Power to another, which he has not himſelf. To this the Proteſtants anſwer, that a Prince may grant another an Authority which he neither has, nor can exerciſe himſelf. For inſtance, they ſay tho' a King is no Judge, 'tis within his Authority to Commiſſionate others for this Function. But the Biſhop not ſatisfied with this Reaſoning replies, “ that the Authority of a Judge is originally in the King: And that the Adminiſtration of Juſtice is deſcrib'd as Part of the Regal Office in Scripture: To which he might have added, that ſeveral of our Engliſh Kings have ſat in their Courts, and tried Cauſes. (l) The reſt of this Biſhops Speech being either coincident with Heaths, or not much material, ſhall be omitted. (m) Beſides the Oppoſition of the Spiritual Lords, the Viſcount Mountague who had been lately Ambaſſador at Rome, diſſented to this Bill for the Regal Supremacy.

An Act for granting the Crown Mannors, &c. belonging to Biſhopricks in Exchange for Impropriations and Tenths.

The next remarkable Tranſaction with Reference to the Church, is, an Act giving Authority to the Queens Majeſty upon Avoidance of any Archbiſhoprick or Biſhoprick to take into her Hands certain of the Temporal Poſſeſſions thereof, Recompencing the ſame with Parſonages impropriate and Tenths. The Statute runs thus. (n)

“ The Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons of this preſent Parliament aſſembled, perceiving how neceſſary it is for the Imperial Crown of this Realm to be repair'd, with Reſtitution of Revenue meet for the ſame: And having aſſented and fully accorded to reſtore to the ſame Imperial Crown the Firſt Fruits, and Tenths, and Parſonages, impropriate for the Increaſe of the Revenue thereof, be alſo deſirous to deviſe ſome good means, whereby the ſaid Revenues of Tenths, and impropriate Benefices, might be in the Governance and Diſpoſition of the Clergy of this Realm, being moſt apt for the ſame. In ſuch ſort, as yet thereby the ſaid Imperial Crown ſhall not in any ways be diminiſhed, by the ſaid reſtor'd Revenue.

“ And therefore beſeech your Majeſty, that it may be enacted by the Authority of this preſent Parliament, in manner, and form hereafter following.

“ That is to ſay, upon the Vacation or Avoidance of any Archbiſhoprick or Biſhoprick within this your Realm of England and Wales, and other your Highneſſes Dominions, it ſhall and may be lawful for your Highneſs to elect, and chooſe, and take into your Hands and Royal Poſſeſſion as much, and ſo many of the Honours, Caſtles, Mannors, Lands, Tenements, or other Hereditaments, being Parcel of the Poſſeſſions of any ſuch Archbiſhoprick or Biſhoprick, ſo being void; as the clear yearly Value of all your Majeſties Parſonages appropriate, and yearly Tenths within any ſuch Archbiſhoprick or Biſhoprick ſhall yearly amount and extend unto. And for the Trial of the very Value of ſuch Honours, Caſtles, Mannors, Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, it ſhall and may be lawful, for your Highneſs from Time to Time, to direct your Letters of Commiſſion under your Highneſs great Seal of England, into any ſuch Archbiſhoprick or Biſhoprick, ſo being void; unto ſuch Per-ſons as your Majeſty ſhall think meet and convenient, giving them Authority thereby to ſurvey ſuch Honours, Caſtles, Mannors, Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, being Parcels of the Poſſeſſions of the ſame Archbiſhoprick or Biſhoprick, ſo being void; as ſhall by your Majeſty be thought meet and convenient, to be taken into your Highneſſes Hands and Poſſeſſion. And thereupon to certify the very clear yearly Value thereof, over all Charges and Reprizes into your Highneſs Court of Exchecquer, at ſuch Day and Time as by the ſaid Commiſſion ſhall be limited, and appointed. And after ſuch Certificate into the ſaid Court of Exchecquer of the clear yearly Value of ſuch Honours, Caſtles, Mannors, Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments ſo had and made, it ſhall and may be lawful for your Highneſs by your Letters Patents to give, and aſſure unto ſuch Archbiſhop, or Biſhop, of ſuch Archbiſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, ſo being void; ſo much and as many of your yearly Tenths, Tythes, and Parſonages appropriate, being within the ſaid Archbiſhoprick, or Biſhoprick, as ſhall be of as much, or more yearly Value as the ſaid Honours, Caſtles, Mannors, Lands and Tenements, or Hereditaments, ſo certified into your ſaid Court of Exchecquer, be certified unto.

“And then immediately upon ſuch Gift and Grant, made by your Highneſs, and the ſame by your Majeſty, under your Signet or Sign Manual, ſignified unto your Treaſurer and Barons of your ſaid Court of Exchecquer, together with your Pleaſure for the retaining and keeping of the ſaid Honours, Caſtles, Mannors, Lands, Tenements, or other Hereditaments, ſo certified into your ſaid Court of Exchecquer, in lieu and place of the ſaid Tenths, Tythes, and Parſonages appropriate, the ſame and ſuch Honours, Caſtles, Mannors, Lands, Tenements, or other Hereditaments, as ſo ſhall then be certified into your ſaid Court of Exchecquer, ſhall be adjudg'd, veſted, and deem'd by Authority of this preſent Parliament, actually and really in your Highneſs, and your Heirs, and Succeſſors. And be from thenceforth united and annex'd to the Imperial Crown of this Realm for ever. And from thenceforth ſhall be in the Order, Survey, Rule, and Governance of your ſaid Court of Exchecquer, in ſuch like manner and form, as other your Highneſſes Poſſeſſions and Hereditaments be at this preſent, provided always, and be it enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, that this Act nor any thing therein contain'd, ſhall not extend nor give any Liberty or Authority to your Highneſs, to take from any ſuch Archbiſhoprick or Biſhoprick, any of the Manſion Houſes commonly us'd for the Habitation or Dwelling of any ſuch Archbiſhop, or Biſhop, or any of the Demeſne Lands commonly us'd or occupied with any ſuch Manſion, or Dwelling Houſe or Houſes, or any of them, or to take any other Lands or Tenements, commonly uſed or kept in the Manurance, Tillage, or Manual Occupation of any ſuch Archbiſhop or Biſhop, for Maintenance of Hoſpitality or good Houſe-keeping; any thing in this Act contain'd to the contrary notwithſtanding.

“Saving to all and every Perſon and Perſons, Bodies politick and corporate, their Heirs and Succeſſors, and the Heirs and Succeſſors of either of them, other than the ſaid Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and their Succeſſors, all ſuch Eſtate, Right, Title, Term, Intereſt, Rent, Profit, Offices, and Commodities, as they or any of them have, ſhould, might, or ought to have had in, or to, any Honours, Caſtles, Mannors, Lands, Tenements, or other Hereditaments whatſoever, in ſuch like Manner, Form, and Condition to all Intents and Purpoſes as if this Act had never been, had, or made: Any thing herein contain'd to the contrary notwithſtanding.

This Bill begun in the Houſe of Lords, was on the Sixth of April read the Third Time and paſs'd: The Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhops of London, Worceſter, Coventry, Exeter, Cheſter, Carliſle, and the Abbot of Weſtminſter diſſenting. (o) The Commons were not ſo unanimous as the Lords. For at the Third Reading, the Houſe dividing upon the Queſtion, there was a Hundred Thirty Four with the Bill, and Ninety againſt it. Could I recover the Names of thoſe Ninety Gentlemen who diſſented, I would do them the Juſtice to tranſmit their Memory to Poſterity. But they will ſuffer nothing by the Silence of Records. For if the reſt of their Lives anſwer'd this Vote, they will always ſtand in a much better Regiſter of Honour, than Hiſtory can give them.

Remarks upon the Exchange.

By this Statute the Crown is oblig'd to return the ſame, or a greater yearly Value to the Biſhopricks, as the Rent of the Honours, Caſtles, &c. taken from them, amounted to. But with Submiſſion, this Exchange conſidering the different Condition of the Eſtates, falls far ſhort of an Equivalent: On the one Hand, there are Honours, Caſtles, Lordſhips, &c. with Woods, Fines, Sute, and Service, Knights Fees, and a great deal of Juriſdiction, Profit, and noble Incidents belonging to them. And in lieu of this, there is nothing but Tenths, and Impropriations, Eſtates upon Rack Rents return'd: And which it may be, many of the Tenants are in no Condition to anſwer. And which is ſomewhat remarkable, this ſuppoſed Equivalent was perfectly left at Diſcretion: 'Twas referr'd to the Conſcience of the Courtiers, and no Clergymen order'd to be join'd in Commiſſion with them. Whereas in a reſembling Caſe, tho' the Intereſt of the Church was leſs concern'd, a Parliament of the late Reign provides, the Commiſſioners ſhould be half of the Spiritualty, and half of the Temporalty, * From hence the Reader may perceive, this Queen Elizabeths Parliament, was under no Exceſſes of Superſtition, no manner of Partialities to the Church.

If this Uſage had been practis'd upon the Queens Wards, as they fell: Had there been a Bill brought in to give the Crown moſt of the Mannors of the Temporal Lords when they happen'd to die, and leave their Heir a Minor: Had ſuch a Bill been brought in, we need not queſtion its having been thrown out at the firſt Reading. For why ſhould a Minor be ouſted of his Inheritance without any Faults of his Anceſtors or his own? If when he ſued his Livery, the beſt Part of his Eſtate had been detain'd: If he had been forc'd upon an unequivalent Exchange, and had nothing but a poor Remainder of his Birthright left him: Had this been the Point, the Queſtion is, whether he would not have thought the Crown had overrated the Trouble of being a Guardian, and taken too much for Protection? To tell him his Eſtate is legally convey'd away, and his Right transferr'd by Act of Parliament, would ſcarcely make him eaſy. Such an Anſwer gives little Relief. It only clinches the Misfortune, and leaves the Man without Remedy. And therefore peradventure his Thoughts might be ſo mutinous as to fancy he had hard meaſure. Where an Eſtate is entail'd, Treaſon does not work ſo far, as to affect the Deſcent, or diſappoint the Heir. And therefore to have the Bulk of it convey'd off, without any forfeiting Misbehaviour, looks unkindly at firſt Sight. As to the Parallel, I ſhall only obſerve, that the Patrimony of the Church is ſettled upon Succeſſion, and has the Force of the ſtrongeſt Entail. Not to mention the Holy Revenues were given to maintain the Honour and Intereſt of Religion, and are veſted as it were in the Divine Majeſty. To which may be added, that the Queen had lately ſworn to maintain the Rights of the Church, at her Coronation. It may be obſerv'd farther, that one remarkable Conſideration for granting the Monaſteries to King Henry the Eighth, was not thought neceſſary to this Bill. For the Thirty Firſt of Henry the Eighth, Chapter 13. ſets forth in the Preamble, that the Religious Houſes had been freely ſurrendred into the Kings Hands, without any manner of Force, Coaction, or Compulſion. But here no ſuch voluntary Surrender is alledg'd. On the contrary, the Biſhops declar'd their Diſlike of ſuch an Exchange; remonſtrated loudly againſt the Bill, and charg'd the Alienation with no leſs than Sacrilege. But of this more afterwards.

In the mean time, I can't well omit one of our Learned Church Hiſtorians Remark upon this Act. (p) He takes notice, many had obſerv'd, that in Edward the Sixths Time, under a Pretence of giving ſome Endowments to the Crown, the Courtiers got all the Church Lands divided amongſt themſelves; ſo it was believ'd the Uſe to be made of this Statute would be the robbing the Church, without the enriching the Crown.

A Bill for reviſing the Eccleſiaſtical Laws by Thirty Two Perſons ſunk in the Houſe of Lords.

To proceed, the Bill for giving Authority to Thirty Two Perſons to reviſe the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and digeſt them into a Body, was read the Second Time in the Houſe of Commons and not thrown out, (q) but order'd to be engroſs'd. (r) It paſs'd at the Third Reading, but the Houſe of Lords not being diſpos'd for the Revival of Church Diſcipline, the Bill came to nothing. Another intended Proviſion relating to the Church, which miſcarried this Seſſions, was the Bill that the Queen by Commiſſion might reſtore ſuch Spiritual Perſons as have been unlawfully depriv'd, either for being married, or Nonconformity in Religion. This Bill the Learned Hiſtorian laſt mention'd affirms, did not paſs the Houſe of Commons. His Reaſon is, that the Queen order'd it to be laid aſide. (s) Had this been matter of Fact, it would have look'd like a Stretch of the Prerogative, and a Preſſure on the Privileges of Parliament: But this Author is ſomewhat miſtaken, for the Bill was thrice read, paſs'd the Houſe, and was ſent up to the Lords by Mr. Sadler and others. (t) 'Tis true the Bill fail'd, and either ſunk in the Houſe of Lords, or miſs'd the Royal Aſſent.

The beſt on it was, there was now no Statute in force againſt the Marriage of the Clergy: 'Tis true, Queen Mary had repeal'd her Brother King Edwards Laws by which 'twas allow'd: But then the Acts of King Henry the Eighth, which put the married Clergy under Penalties, were repeal'd by the Firſt of Edward the Sixth, Chapter 12. Now the Branch of this Statute relating to this matter, ſtands unrepeal'd by the Firſt and Second, Phil. & Mar. Chap. 8. And thus there was nothing but the Canon Law which ſtood in the way: And that in all likelyhood would be overlook'd by the Reform'd Biſhops: Who till farther Proviſion, may well be ſuppos'd to govern their Courts by the Thirty Firſt Article ſet forth in the Year 1552.

A Bill for annexing Abbeys, Priories, Nunneries, Hoſpitals and Chauntries, paſt both Houſes, and was no doubt ſign'd by the Queen, tho' the Journal of the Lords does not mention what publick Acts had the Royal Aſſent. (w) In the upper Houſe all the Lords Spiritual, and the Vicount Mountague diſſented. The Bill for Uniformity of Common Prayer in the Church was brought into the Houſe of Commons April the 18th. and April the 20th, it paſs'd the Third Reading. From this Diſpatch we may collect the Houſe was ſtrongly inclin'd to reſtore the Reform'd Eſtabliſhment. This Bill did not paſs the Houſe of Lords, without ſomething of ſtruggle. For the purpoſe, Scott Biſhop of Cheſter, and Fecknam Abbot of Weſtminſter made Speeches againſt it. Fecknam ſpoke to this Senſe.

Dr. Fecknams Speech againſt the Bill for Uniformity of Common-Prayer.

(x) Biblioth. Cotton. Veſpaſian. D. 18. fol. 8.

"In ſpeaking to the Firſt Point, the "Abbot pretends, the Reform'd Religion was "altogether Modern and Novel, and never "receiv'd till the latter End of the Reign "of K. Edward the Sixth. Whereas the Roman "Catholick Faith and Worſhip, profeſs'd at "preſent in this Realm, had been the Religion of the Iſland for no leſs than Fourteen Hundred Years. And here he proceeds to Eliz. Queen.

“to mention the Converſion of the Britiſh King Lucius, by Damianus and Faganus, ſent hither by Pope Eleutherius at that Princes Inſtance: Before he parts with this Authority, he cites a Counterfeit Paſſage in Gildas, to prove the Church Service in Latin. He likewiſe takes it for granted, that the Articles and Worſhip of the Chriſtian Religion, when firſt planted here, were the ſame with the preſent Belief and Practice of the Church of Rome. And that all Parts of Chriſtendom were agreed in theſe matters.

“From hence he proceeds to his Second Rule, or Teſt of the Two Communions. And here they were to enquire, whether the new or old Religion (as he calls them) was moſt conſtant and conſiſtent with it ſelf. The new Religion (as he goes on) ſet forth in the Articles and the Liturgick Books of the Engliſh Reformers, he charges with Inconſtancy and different Appearance. That theſe Reformers floated in their Opinion, quitted their firſt Plan, and refin'd upon themſelves: And yet always pretended to publiſh and decree, nothing but the ſincere Word of God. He proceeds to maintain an Inconſiſtency between the Firſt and Second Liturgy in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth. That in one Book they own the Seven Sacraments, and the Real Preſence of Chriſt's Body in the Euchariſt, which they denied in the other. That at firſt, they allow'd the receiving of the Sacrament in one kind, and order'd the Bread ſhould be unleaven'd. But in their latter Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions, the Holy Euchariſt is order'd to be receiv'd in both kinds, and in common Bread. And here likewiſe it was decreed, that no Reverence ſhould be payed to the conſecrated Elements, but only to the Body of Chriſt in Heaven. The Abbot continues to acquaint the Lords, that 'twas no wonder to find ſuch Diverſity in the Religious Syſtem of the Reform'd, ſince the Men that compos'd it, could neither agree with each other, nor with themſelves. To make out this Charge, he pretends our Engliſh Reformers took their meaſures, and were govern'd in their Reſolutions, by the Divines of Germany, ſuch as, Caroloſtadius, Melancton, Luther, and Zuinglius. And touching the Doctrine of the Holy Euchariſt, the Abbot gives an inſtance of their Diſagreement. As for Caroloſtadius, he interprets the Words of the Inſtitution of the Holy Euchariſt thus, accepit Panem, benedixit, fregit, deditque Diſcipulis ſuis dicens, accipite & comedite, hoc eſt Corpus meum, quod pro vobis tradetur, monſtrans Corpus viſibile ſuum, i. e. according to Caroloſtadius's Divinity, our Saviour pointed to his viſible Body, and ſaid, this is my Body which ſhall be betray'd for you. This Expoſition was condemn'd by Luther, who expounded the Words of the Inſtitution to a Senſe of Conſubſtantiation. Zuinglius makes the Words, my Body, ſignify no more than the Figure of my Body. Peter Martyr in his late Diſputations at Oxford, differ'd from theſe Three, and would have us to underſtand by this is my Body, that our Saviours Body receiv'd by Faith, ſhall be pro Pane vel inſtar Panis, i. e. inſtead of Bread to the Communicants. From theſe German Divines, he proceeds to charge Archbiſhop Cranmer with Self Contradiction, and fluctuating in his Belief. His inſtance is, that in one Year he publiſh'd a Catechiſm in Engliſh, and dedicated it to King Edward the Sixth, in which he aſſerts the real Preſence of Chriſt's Body in the Holy Euchariſt. But ſoon after he printed another Book, in which he plainly maintain'd the contrary Doctrine. Dr. Ridley, whom this Abbot ſtiles the moſt Learned of the Engliſh Reformers, fell into the ſame Inconſiſtency. For at St. Pauls Croſs, in the hearing of this Abbot, (as he pretends) the ſaid Biſhop Ridley aſſerted the real Preſence of Chriſt's Body in very ſtrong Expreſſions, and ſuch as reach in a manner to Tranſubſtantiation. He told the Audience, that the Devil believ'd the Son of God was able to make the Stones Bread, and we Engliſh People, who confeſs that Jeſus Chriſt is the very Son of God, will not believe, that he did make of Bread, his very Body, Fleſh and Blood; therefore we are worſe than the Devils, ſeeing that our Saviour Chriſt by expreſs Words did moſt plainly affirm the ſame. But afterwards in the laſt Book, publiſh'd by Archbiſhop Cranmer, with the Aſſiſtance of Ridley, the Senſe of our Saviours Words was very much incumbred, and perplex'd with their Interpretation. From hence he infers, that ſince both the Engliſh, and German Reformers, are ſo inconſiſtent with themſelves, their Lordſhips have great Reaſon to queſtion their Belief, and refuſe their Scheme, 'till they are better agreed.

“He comes now to his Third Rule, or Charactariſtick of the true Religion, i. e. Whether the Roman Catholick, or the Reform'd Communion, affords the beſt People, both with reſpect to Piety and Civil Life. And here he is ſo hardy, as to appeal to matter of Fact, and deſires their Lordſhips to conſider how much the Subject is chang'd for the worſe, ſince the Death of Queen Mary: Which declenſion in Virtue he lays to the charge of the New Preachers. In her late Majeſty's Reign, (ſaith he) your Lordſhips may remember how quiet and governable the People were; 'Twas not then their Cuſtom to preſcribe to Authority, to run before the Laws, nor diſobey the Proclamations of their Sovereign. There was then no ſacrilegious Rapine, no plundering of Churches, no blaſphemous Outrage, and trampling the holy Sacraments under their Feet. 'Twas none of their way, to tear down the Pix, and hang up the Knave of Clubs in the Place. They did not hack and hew the Crucifix in thoſe Times. They were better obſervers of Diſcipline than to Eat Fleſh openly, and fill their Shambles with Butchers Meat, in the holy Solemnity of Lent. In the late Reign, the generality of the People, and particularly the Nobility, and thoſe of the Privy Council, were exemplary for their publick Devotion: It being the Cuſtom to go to a Church or Chappel, to beg the Protection of God, before they entred upon the Buſineſs of the Day. But now the Face of things is quite otherwiſe. The New Preachers and the Stage, by rallying, and running down the old Religion, have rais'd a turbulent humour in the People, brought on a Diſſolution of manners, and a Contempt of religious Appointments.

“Tho', to do juſtice to the Queen, her Majeſty has endeavor'd both by her Example and Proclamations, to reſtrain ſuch intemperate Sally's. He goes on in his Declamation, and complains that Virtue has in a manner taken her leave of the Kingdom. That Humility, Obedience, Submiſſion, and a governable Temper, regularity and good Behavior, are hardly to be met with. For now, as tho' the Reigns were laid upon their Necks, and they had a Diſpenſation from Heaven, all ſorts and degrees fly out into liberty, and diſorder. Children degenerate from the ſobriety of their Fathers, Servants fly in the Face of their Maſters, and Subjects make no ſcruple of being diſobedient to their Superiors both in Church and State.

“From this declenſion in Piety and good Manners, (which he takes for granted) he ſolicits the Lords to expel the Reformation, and adhere to the Antient Belief. And to make the deeper Impreſſion, he puts them in mind 'tis ſettled by the Conſtitution, and that they are now in Poſſeſſion of it.

“In the cloſe of his Speech, he ſuggeſts Four things, which, as he obſerves, ſettled St. Auguſtin in the Communion of the Catholick Church, and kept him ſteady to the Doctrines receiv'd. The firſt was, Auctoritas Eccleſiæ Chriſti, Miraculis Inchoata, ſpe nutrita, Charitate aucta, Vetuſtate firmata, i. e. The Authority of the Church of Chriſt founded upon Miracles, ſubſiſted with the hopes of Immortality, encreas'd by benevolent Principle and Practiſe, and ſtrengthn'd by length of Time. The Second thing was, Populi Conſenſus & Unitas, i. e. The general Conſent, Union, and good correſpondence of the Chriſtian Society. The Third was, Perpetua Sacerdotum Succeſſio in ſede Petri, i. e. an uninterrupted Succeſſion of Biſhops in St. Peter's See. The Fourth was, ipſum Catholicæ Nomen, i. e. the Name or Diſtinction of Catholick. Theſe Four Conſiderations, continues the Abbot, kept St. Auguſtin firm to his Principles: All which Motives he ventures to apply to the preſent Occaſion, and ſuppoſes they lie all on the ſide of the Roman Catholick Communion.

But here Fecknam, to remark nothing farther on his Speech, miſreports Cranmer and Ridley on the Subject of the Holy Euchariſt. For neither of theſe Biſhops had contradicted their Prints or Sermons in King Edward's Reign. No; they explain'd themſelves to a Senſe of Conſiſtency, and refuted the Calumnies thrown upon them. (y)

After the Third reading of the Uniformity Bill, Scott Biſhop of Cheſter, deliver'd himſelf againſt it to this Effect.

“My Lords, this Bill, though it has been Thrice Read, yet in my Opinion ought neither to have been mention'd, nor regarded, in this honourable Houſe. (z) The deſign of this Bill being to expoſe thoſe things to Queſtion, which ought to be receiv'd without farther enquiry: To ſpeak particularly; the Buſineſs of this Bill is to bring on a change in Religion, or more properly a total Suppreſſion of what has been antiently Profeſs'd. As to Religion it conſiſts partly in Circumſtances or Externals, and partly of things which relate to the Subſtance, and are Eſſential to Practiſe. As for thoſe matters which are more Eſſential, they may be reduc'd to Faith, Hope, and Charity; and touching the Externals, the Liturgy, and the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, may be rang'd under this Head. Now with Reference to theſe latter, they are clearly ſunk and extinguiſh'd by this Bill. And as for the former, the Efficacy of them is much weakn'd. For firſt, by breaking the Unity of the Church, Charity is loſt, for nunquam relinquent Unitatem, qui non prius amittunt Charitatem. And St. Paul tells us, that Charity is the Bond of Perfectneſs. And when Charity is once departed, there's nothing left to cement a Chriſtian Society. And thus we ſplit into Sects and Fractions, which is the Calamity of the preſent Age. And as for Faith, ſeveral of the Articles and Myſteries of this Theological Virtue, are not only queſtion'd, but denied. Tho' this Contradiction is not openly avow'd in every Point. Now when Faith and Charity have thus taken their leave, Hope muſt either be in a ſolitary Condition, or (which is moſt likely) Preſumption ſet above it; which Diſorder commonly ends in Deſpair. From what I have already obſerv'd, we ought rather to pay a regard to our holy Religion, then Diſpute upon it. For as a learned Author ſuggeſts, quæ Patefacta ſunt, quærere; quæ perfecta ſunt, retractare; & quæ definita ſunt, convellere; quid aliud eſt quam de adeptis Gratiam non referre; i. e. To moot upon Points clearly diſcover'd, to touch over things which are well finiſh'd, and to unſettle matters which have paſs'd the Teſt, what is it leſs than Ingratitude for the Bleſſings we have receiv'd? And to the ſame purpoſe, St. Athanaſius argues, quæ nunc à tot & talibus Epiſcopis probata ſunt, & decreta, clareque demonſtrata, ſupervacuum eſt denuò revocare in Judicium. i. e. 'Tis a very unneceſſary Buſineſs (to ſpeak ſoftly) to bring the Cauſe to a rehearing, which has been throughly examin'd, and ſettled by ſo many Biſhops of Character. He means the Prelates that aſſiſted at the Council of Nice; For as St. Athanaſius goes on; if their Deciſions muſt be re-examin'd, this Liberty is the way to keep us under perpetual Uncertainty, and hinder the Controverſy from ever coming to an End. For, as we are told, ſi quotidie licebit Fidem in Quæſtionem vocare, de Fide nunquam conſtabit. i. e. If matters of Faith may be every Day diſcuſs'd, there will be no poſſibility of knowing when we are in the Right. Now if St. Athanaſius thought it unreaſonable to queſtion the Deciſions of the Council of Nice, where there were but Three Hundred and Eighteen Biſhops preſent; how much more unaccountable muſt it be in us, to queſtion the Belief and practiſe of the whole Catholick Church, where inſtead of Three Hundred, we have Three Hundred Thouſand Biſhops to vouch for Authority. And as for the Grounds and Articles of Faith, then which nothing ought to be better fix'd, and more certain; Theſe things, I ſay, muſt be very floating and precarious, if they hang upon an Act of Parliament. In earneſt, this is but a weak ſupport for ſo great a Weight: And here I deſire your Lordſhips to underſtand me rightly. I have no Intention to ſay any thing to leſſen the Authority of Parliament. I own the Acts

“ of this honourable Court are not to be conteſted, when paſs'd upon matters within your Juriſdiction. But as to Religion, I humbly conceive that's a Subject altogether Foreign to the Buſineſs of Parliament. For Faith, as I have obſerv'd before, ought to have a firm Baſis, to be as unalterable as the Laws of the Medes and Perſians, and not ſtand liable to Amendments and Repeals, and all other Caſualties of the Statute Book. We ought not to waver and be at uncertainties in our Belief; for as St. James ſpeaks, he that doubts or wavers, is like a Wave of the Sea, always rowling from one Figure to another. This Man as the Apoſtle goes on, is unſtable in all his ways. Beſides, the Body of the Parliament conſiſts moſtly of the Temporal Nobility, and the Commons, which, tho' Perſons of great Judgment and Learning in civil matters, yet Divinity is none of their Profeſſion. The Expoſition of the Scriptures, the reading of the Antients has been none of their Employment. Theſe things conſider'd, they cannot be ſuppos'd to be rightly qualified, to pronounce upon the Doctrines and Practiſe of the Church. Neither indeed, do theſe things belong to their Function, or lie within their Character. And for this, my Lords, I appeal to a late Inſtance. I remember this Parliament there was a Nobleman's Son put under an Arreſt, and committed. This Confinement was reſented by your Lordſhips, and the Honour of the Houſe was thought to ſuffer by it. Upon this Reſolution the Young Gentleman, the Bailiff, and the Perſon at whoſe Suit he was Arreſted, were all order'd to appear before your Lordſhips; But before they were brought into the Houſe, 'twas thought proper to debate the matter over again, for fear the Houſe might concern themſelves in things without their Cognizance. And here the Caſe was found to contain Three Points. The firſt was a Debt, and that your Lordſhips thought proper to remit to the common Law. The Second Point was upon Enquiry found an Encroachment upon the Court of Chancery: The Third was the Arreſt and Committment, in which the Houſe thought themſelves concern'd. Upon the whole, if by your Lordſhips Reſolution, the Parliament has no Authority to check the Courts of common Law, and Chancery, which relate only to Civil Juſtice, and turn upon matters which lie open to human Reaſon; then by all force of Conſequence, your Pretenſions muſt be ſtill lower in matters of Faith. In matters of Faith and Religion, which ſo far exceed the extent of Reaſon. The Subject of this Bill being of this ſublime Nature, there are Three things principally to be conſider'd. Firſt, the importance of the Matter, Secondly, the obſcurity of the Caſe, and the difficulty in trying the Truth; and Thirdly, the danger of miſtaking the Point, and coming to a wrong Reſolution. As to the firſt, the importance of the Matter, nothing can be greater. 'Tis no Temporal Intereſt, no Mony Buſineſs, no Branch of Property, no; 'tis of a much higher conſideration. The Fate of Eternity, Life and Death, Heaven and Hell, are concern'd in it. For now, as the Scripture ſpeaks; Life and Death, Fire and Water, are ſet before us: Now to judge rightly in a Concern of this Conſequence, is neither every Bodies Talent, nor every Bodies Buſineſs. Farther, we ſhould be eſpecially careful, not to paſs a raſh Cenſure upon the Judgment and Practiſe of our Fore-fathers. Now that Syſtem of Belief, that Form of Religion, which is to be ſet aſide by this Bill, is the ſame which was profeſs'd by our Anceſtors for a Thouſand Years and upwards. And, which is more, 'twas likewiſe receiv'd by the Univerſal Church from the Times of the Apoſtles: And here by way of Oppoſition he inſiſts upon the Novelty of the Reformation. To go on with the Biſhop. “ A noble Member of this Houſe was lately pleas'd to ſay, that our Fore-fathers Liv'd in the Dark, and therefore we have great reaſon to lament their Ignorance. To this we may Anſwer, that if our Fore-fathers were within the hearing of this Imputation, we have reaſon to believe they would reply, as our Saviour did to the Women that lamented for him; Weep not for us, but for your ſelves: Don't trouble your ſelves for our Ignorance, but for your own Preſumption; for being ſo hardy to juſtify your Innovation, and Condemn the Ages before you.

“ Secondly; And as the Subject is of the laſt Importance, ſo the matter is perplex'd, and not to be diſentangled without difficulty and Penetration. The Queſtion to be reſolv'd, relates to the Maſs Book, and the New Common-Prayer. The firſt by the Bill is to be ſuppreſs'd, as Unorthodox and Indefenſible. The other to be Eſtabliſh'd, as agreeable to the holy Scriptures. Now the Commendation of the one, and the diſlike of the other, relates to the ſame matter, (i. e.) a right Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, purſuant to the Inſtitution of our Saviour Chriſt. In which Adminiſtration we are to conſider Three things; firſt, The Inſtitution of our Bleſſed Saviour, which comprehends the Matter and Subſtance of the Sacraments: Secondly, the Regulations of the Apoſtles, from which the Form of the Sacraments may be ſaid to Emerge. To which in the Third Place, we may put the Additions of the holy Fathers for the perfecting, and farther advantage in the Adminiſtration. Theſe Three things, as they are neceſſary, ſo they are duly obſerv'd in the Maſs Book, or old Service. But the other Book, which is ſo much magnified, not only ſtrikes Two of them clear out of Practiſe, but makes the Third in a manner Inſignificant. For firſt, as touching the Traditions of the Antients in the Maſs, as the Confiteatur, the Miſereatur, Κύριε ἐλέησον ſequentes Preces, Sanctus, agnus Dei, &c. To which we may add, the Rites Preſcrib'd by the Apoſtles, as Benedictions, and the uſe of the Croſs. And in the Adminiſtration of ſeveral of the Sacraments, Exſufflations, Exorciſms, Anointing, Praying towards the Eaſt, Invocation of Saints, and Prayers for the Dead, &c. Theſe Rites and Uſages, I ſay, are either Maim'd, or clear taken away by this New Book. Notwithſtanding which Omiſſions, the Compilers pretend it exactly agreeable to our Saviour's Inſtitution, and the Cuſtom of the Primitive Church. But to wave the inſiſting upon Apoſtolical Regulations, and Primitive Tradition, though theſe things may juſtly challenge our Re“gard. However, let us paſs over theſe things at preſent, and come to the Inſtitution of our Bleſſed Saviour; and examine which of theſe Two Books comes up cloſeſt to this Standard. And to clear the Controverſy the better, we'll take the Maſs, or as they call it, the Lord's Supper, for an Inſtance. And here, as all the Fathers Collect from the Scripture, our Saviour Inſtituted Three things. Theſe he commanded to be continued in remembrance of his Paſſion until his coming again. Do this, &c. The firſt is the Conſecration of the bleſſed Body and Blood of our Saviour Chriſt: The Second conſiſts in the Offering up the ſame to God the Father. The Third we may call the Communion, (i. e.) the eating and drinking the ſaid bleſſed Body and Blood, under the Form of Bread and Wine. As to the firſt Two, he Cites a Paſſage from St. Chryſoſtom, to prove the Conſecration in the Maſs, and the Oblation of the Body and Blood of our Saviour, as a Sacrifice to God the Father. Now to ſpeak in the Biſhops Perſon.

“Theſe Two things are taken away in the New Service Book. This ſaith he, the Compilers of that Book are willing to acknowledge. They declaim againſt the Doctrine which aſſerts Chriſt's being Offer'd oftner than once. Though on the other ſide, the Holy Fathers unanimouſly maintain, that Chriſt is ſtill Offer'd in an Unbloody manner. Now if theſe Men would conſider the Conſequences of their Tenents, this Reflection might be ſerviceable to recover them. For if there is no external Sacrifice, then there's no Prieſthood: For the Function of a Prieſt, (as St. Paul Informs us) is to offer Gifts and Sacrifices for Sin. Now if there's no Prieſthood under the New Teſtament, the next Inference is, that we have no Religion: And thus we are without God in the World. For theſe, like the Links of a Chain, have a cloſe Connexion with each other. Farther, I deſire your Lordſhips to conſider, that the Conſecration likewiſe fails in this Modern Liturgy. Theſe Men talk of nothing but the Holy Communion, but fall ſhort of the meaning of that Expreſſion. For the things which ſhould make it Holy, i. e. the Body and Blood of Chriſt, is not there. 'Tis true, when the Adminiſtration is duly perform'd, the Communion may well be call'd Holy: For then we receive our Saviour's bleſſed Body and Blood into our Bodies; and thus we are united with him, like Two Pieces of Wax, which are melted into each other. This Similitude St. Cyril and St. Chryſoſtom make uſe of upon this occaſion: And as St. Paul ſpeaks, we are made Fleſh of his Fleſh, and Bone of his Bone. But this great Advantage cannot be expected from the new Book: For by the Miniſtration preſcrib'd, Chriſt's Body is not truly there. For where there is no Conſecration, there can be no real Preſence. But this is the Caſe of the new Service. For theſe Men neither obſerve the Form preſcrib'd by Chriſt, nor the Cuſtom of the Church. The Evangeliſt informs us, that our Saviour took Bread, bleſs'd, broke, and gave it to his Diſciples, ſaying, take and eat, this is my Body, do this in Remembrance of me. By theſe Words we are commanded to take the Bread in our Hands, to bleſs it and break it; but by the Order of this Book all this is omitted.

“For the Prieſt neither takes the Bread in his Hands, nor bleſſes it, nor breaks it. And as for the Words, this is my Body, by the pronouncing of which, (as St. Chryſoſtom teaches us) the Conſecration is perform'd. Their Prieſts, I ſay, when they pronounce theſe Words of our Saviour, have no Regard to the Sacramental Solemnity, or the Force of the Expreſſion, or the Effect upon the Bread: But make no more of the Words than if they were telling a Story. To proceed, the Doctors of the Church affirm, that an Intention to do that which Chriſt did, i. e. to conſecrate his Body and Blood, is a Circumſtance of abſolute Neceſſity. For this purpoſe, the Church has appointed certain Prayers in the Canon of the Maſs to be ſaid before the Conſecration: The Words are theſe: Ut fiat nobis Corpus & Sanguis Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti, i. e. that the Elements may be made unto us, the Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Thus the Intention of the Church, and of the Prieſt Officiating, is plainly declar'd: But in this New Book there is neither any ſuch Intention declar'd, or any Petition put up to God for that Purpoſe. The contrary does rather appear, by theſe Words in their Office: That we receiving theſe thy Creatures of Bread and Wine may, &c. Which Words declare they intend nothing of Conſecration. And if ſo, let them value themſelves as much as they pleaſe upon their Communion, 'tis to no manner of purpoſe, in regard the Body of Chriſt is not there. Which, as I have already obſerv'd, is the thing which ſhould be communicated.

“Yeſterday a noble Peer was pleas'd to ſay, be believ'd Chriſt was receiv'd in the Communion Preſcrib'd by the New Service: But upon his being ask'd, whether he Worſhip'd him there, he anſwer'd, no, nor never intended it. Now this is a ſtrange Opinion, that Chriſt ſhould not be Worſhip'd, where-ever he is own'd to be preſent. I grant they tell us, they Worſhip our Saviour no leſs than we do: But then they diſtinguiſh, and affirm 'tis with reſpect to his being in Heaven, and not as he is preſent in the Sacrament; which is juſt as if a Man ſhould ſay, that he is willing to pay a Civil Worſhip to his Prince, when he ſits under a State, and has his Robes on: But if he comes abroad under a Diſguiſe, or in a plain Habit, they deſire to be excus'd. And yet by their Favor, he's as much a Sovereign in a Frieze-Coat in the Streets, as when he ſits upon the Throne in Gold Tiſſue. And thus he that ſits on the right Hand of God, in the Appearance of a glorified Body, is the ſame Chriſt which is conceal'd in the Sacrament, under the Forms of Bread and Wine.

“The Scripture (as St. Auſtin expounds it) commands us to Worſhip our Saviour's Body in the Sacrament. The Text runs thus. Adorate Scabellum ejus, &c. i. e. Worſhip his Footſtool, for it is Holy. Upon this Place St. Auguſtin's Comment is, that Chriſt aſſum'd Fleſh of the bleſſed Virgin his Mother, in the ſame Fleſh he convers'd upon Earth: And the ſame Fleſh he gave us to Eat; but no Man will preſume to Eat, before he Worſhips it. And in this Senſe we may be ſaid to Worſhip his Footſtool. And we ſhall not only not Sin in Worſhipping, ſhipping, but we ſhall Sin in not Worſhipping. Thus far St. Auſtin.

“ Upon a farther conſideration of this matter we ſhall have great reaſon to admire the Gracious conduct of Almighty God in this matter: For by this merciful Diſpenſation he has provided for the Converſions even of Hereticks, and brought them towards an Acknowledgment of the Truth. For the Lutherans in their Diſputes with the Zuinglians prove the natural Body of our Saviour in the Holy Euchariſt. Upon this the Zuinglians turn their Adverſaries Argument upon them, and infer, that then it will be neceſſary to Worſhip him there. And thus by the Conteſt of theſe Two Parties, like the Colliſion of hard Bodies, the ſparkles of Truth fly out. And therefore in my Opinion, to affirm that Chriſt is in the Sacrament, and yet not to be Worſhip'd, is a miſ-perſwaſion more without Colour, than to affirm he is not there at all. For either they hold no more than an imaginary Preſence, or elſe they believe his Body is preſent, abſtracted from his Divinity; and thus they fall into the wicked Hereſy of Neſtorius.

“ And now my Lords, I beg you would pleaſe to conſider the Subject of the preſent Controverſy, and whether your Lordſhips are ſufficiently qualified to examine the Points, and pronounce upon the Caſe. i. e. whether your Lordſhips are furniſh'd ſo far with Eccleſiaſtical Learning, as to give a Judgment whether the Body of Chriſt is Conſecrated, Offer'd, Ador'd, and truly Communicated, by the order of this new Book. Whether theſe Acts and Circumſtances are made Eſſential by the Inſtitution of our Saviour; and whether this new Book follows the direction of that infallible Rule. Theſe things, as I obſerve to your Lordſhips, are weighty and perplex'd. And 'tis no eaſy matter not to fall into an Error. And then your Lordſhips may likewiſe conſider the condition of the other Sacraments: And that theſe are either perfectly ſunk, or mangled after the ſame rate, by this new Book.

“ Thirdly, your Lordſhips may pleaſe to remember the great danger you draw upon your ſelves by undertaking to judge in the Cauſe, eſpecially if you ſhould happen to make a wrong Deciſion. For then beſides the Misfortune of your own Perſons, you will prove the unhappy occaſion of miſleading others. King Jeroboam has this Mark ſet upon him, as an Aggravation of his Miſbehaviour, that beſides his Perſonal Miſcarriage, he made Iſrael to Sin. My Lords I intreat you would be very careful to prevent the Application of this Text. To ſpeak freely, in my judgment, if you paſs this Bill, you will not only err your ſelves, but be Inſtrumental in miſleading the Nation, for which you muſt expect to give an Account to Almighty God.

“ Thoſe who are well read in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and acquainted with the Methods of the Church, in debating Religious Controverſy, can eaſily inform your Lordſhips, that theſe Matters have been all along decided by the Clergy, and not by the Laity. The Arrian Hereſy in the Reign of Conſtantine the Great, was Canvaſs'd and Condemn'd in the Council of Nice. The Hereſy of Macedonius, in the firſt Council of Conſtantinople, in the time of Theodoſius the Great. The Hereſy of Neſtorius in that of Epheſus, in the Reign of Theodoſius the Younger. The Hereſy of Eutyches in the Council of Calcedon, under Martin, (he means Marcian.) But here we are to obſerve that none of theſe religious Emperors ever conven'd their Temporal Nobility, or Commons, to adviſe, or determine in theſe Controverſies. They did not refer the Caſe to the Majority of the Laity, nor go to the Poll to diſcover Truth.

“ And to come nearer Home, to the Third Council of Toledo in Spain, in the time of King Herre (as he calls him) and to a French Council in the Reign of Charles the Great: In both theſe Councils, I ſay, the cuſtomary uſage of the Church was obſerv'd: The Prelates had the Popes leave to meet, and then reform'd the Abuſes, and decided the Matters in Queſtion. And here theſe Princes abovemention'd, brought none of the Laity to intermeddle in the Affair: Neither did they themſelves offer to debate the Matter, but left the Controverſies entirely to the management of the Clergy, neither need we wonder at this Conduct in Catholick Princes, for even Heretical Emperors declin'd bringing the Laity to interpoſe in religious Diſputes.

“ Thus Conſtantius and Valens, who drew ſeveral Synods together, left the Deciſion to the Body of the Clergy. And the Emperor Zeno, who was a favourer of the Eutychians, manag'd by the ſame Rule. And to this purpoſe I might give many more Inſtances. Nay, in the Acts of the Apoſtles the Infidels refus'd to concern themſelves this way. For when St. Paul was brought before Gallio, and charg'd with teaching the People to worſhip God contrary to the Laws of the Country, this Magiſtrate replied, if it were any matter of Wickedneſs, O ye Jews, I might well bear with you: But if it be concerning any Queſtions and Doubts in the Law. i. e. If it be a charge concerning your Religion, I will be no Judge in theſe Matters. I beſeech your Lordſhips to recollect, that all Princes and Magiſtrates, Catholick, Heretick, and Infidel, have all along refus'd to put themſelves in a Poſt, which your Lordſhips are now going to challenge. But I ſhall diſtreſs your Lordſhips Patience no longer, and conclude with the mention of two Inſtances.

“ The firſt is in the Emperor Theodoſius the Great, who makes no ſcruple to confeſs, that Illicitum eſt qui non ſit ex ordine Sanctorum Epiſcoporum, Eccleſiaſticis ſe immiſcere Tractatibus. (i. e.) 'tis not lawful for a Man, who has not the Epiſcopal Character, to interpoſe in Religious Affairs. The other is a Saying of the Emperor Valentinian, mihi quidem qui in ſorte Plebis ſum, fas non eſt iſta curioſius ſcrutari: Sacerdotes quibus iſta curæ ſunt, inter ſeipſos, quocunque loco voluerint, conveniant. (i. e.) 'Tis not lawful for me (ſaith the Emperor) who am but a Layman, to enter into any curious enquiry upon theſe Matters: This is the Biſhops Buſineſs, and therefore let them meet about it where they pleaſe. Now if theſe Emperors had nothing to do in ſuch Debates, I muſt crave leave to ſay, your Lordſhips have as little.

And thus deſiring their Lordſhips to conſider what was offer'd, and interpret him favourably, he concludes his ſpeech.

The deſign of this Work not being Controverſy, I ſhan't examine the Reaſoning, nor detect the Miſtakes. Moſt Readers I conceive may be in a Condition to diſſentangle the matter. It being no difficult undertaking to ſhew the Principles lay'd down, the Authorities produc'd, and the Conſequences drawn, won't bear in the Application. The advantage gain'd by the Reform'd at the late Conference in Weſtminſter Abbey, ſmooth'd the paſſage for the Uniformity Bill, and brought over a Majority of the Houſes; and thus the Rhetorick and Learning of Scot and Fecknam was diſappointed: Tho' it muſt be ſaid, they argued with ſomething of Colour; and made a bold puſh for their Perſwaſion. The reaſon why we have no Anſwers to theſe Speeches is, becauſe there were no Reform'd Biſhops then ſitting in the upper Houſe: For the Controverſy was too much embarraſs'd with Eccleſiaſtical Learning to be manag'd by the temporal Nobility. When the Bill paſs'd, the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhops of Ely, London, Worceſter, Landaff, Coventry and Litchfield, Exeter, Cheſter, and Carliſle; And Nine Temporal Lords, the Marqueſs of Wincheſter, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Vicount Mountague, and the Lords Morly, Stafford, Dudley, Wharton, Rich, and North, diſſented. (a)

And here it may not be improper to obſerve that tho' the uſe of the Engliſh Common-prayer was injoyn'd by the Parliament, yet the Book was not drawn up either by the Council Board, or any Lay Committee of the two Houſes. What Biſhops and Clergymen of Eminence compos'd the Liturgy us'd in the Reign of Edward VI. has been already related. The ſame Method was now taken under Queen Elizabeth. And a Committee of Divines order'd to bring the whole Service under a Review. They were all Men of Character: Some of them had been Exiles, and adher'd to the Engliſh Eſtabliſhment at Frankfort againſt Knox and Calvin's Party. Their Names are theſe, Mr. Whitehead, Doctor Parker, afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Doctor Grindal, Doctor Cox, Doctor Pilkington, Doctor May, Doctor Bill. To theſe Sir Thomas Smith a Perſon of Learning and Doctor of Civil Law, was join'd in the Commiſſion, to bring them together and expedite the Affair. Theſe Divines entred upon the Review in December laſt, but did not finiſh the Performance till ſometime in April. The Draught lay'd before the Parliament was paſs'd as far as it appears without any Alteration. 'Tis not found that the Lords and Commons had any conference upon this Subject in the Painted Chamber, or that they appointed any Committees to examine the Book. They concluded this Regulation was properly the Buſineſs of the Clergy. And therefore relying upon the judgment of the Divines abovemention'd, paſs'd the Service in the Form 'twas deliver'd: Paſs'd it, I ſay, without any Amendments, excepting in one circumſtance. In the Draught lay'd before the Houſes by the Committee of Divines, 'twas left at the Peoples liberty to receive the Communion, either Kneeling or Standing: This poſture, 'tis probable, was reſtrain'd to kneeling by the Parliament: And if ſo, they did no more than follow the Direction of the Church, and ſettle the matter by the Rubrick of the Old Book. That Kneeling or Standing was left indifferent by the Committee of Divines, ſeems very probable by Doctor Gueſt's Papers, in anſwer to ſome Queries put to him by Secretary Cecil. By the way this Gueſt was made one of the Committee. (b) By the Queſtions put, 'tis not improbable that the Secretary, and it may be the Queen, were not unwilling the firſt Service Book ſet forth in the Reign of King Edward ſhould be lay'd before the Parliament: But this motion if made, was over-rul'd by Gueſt, and the other Divines. As to their Reſolution, I ſhall object nothing: But ſome of the Anſwers return'd by Gueſt, ſeems ſhort of Satisfaction.

The Penalty for Depraving the Common-prayer, for the Third Offence, is the forfeiture of all the Criminals Goods and Chattels, and Impriſonment during Life. This Clauſe did not paſs without a Guard for the Honour and Privileges of the Lords: For 'tis expreſly, provided that all and ſingular Lords of the Parliament ſhall be tried by their Peers. And thus in the late Reign 'twas Enacted, that all Lords of Parliament having Place and Voice in Parliament, are to be tried by their Peers, in caſe of petit Treaſons, Murder, and Felony. * Now Sir Edward Coke makes no ſcruple to affirm, that the Biſhops are Lords of Parliament. His Reaſons are undeniable. They hold of the King, ſays he, by Barony, and are call'd by Writ to Parliament. * From hence it follows that by the Statutes of Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth, laſt mention'd, the Biſhops have a Right to be tried by their Peers, no leſs than the Temporal Nobility.

The Service Book having paſs'd the Parliament, was Printed ſoon after: How far it differ'd from the Second Book ſet forth in the Reign of King Edward, the Reader may ſee in the Records. (c)

Beſides the Statute already mention'd for Authorizing the Queen to take Biſhops Lands into her Hands upon a Vacancy, there were other Private Acts for the Alienation of Church Eſtates. For inſtance, an Act for the aſſurance of certain Lands parcell of the Biſhoprick of London to the Lord Wentworth, the Lord Rich, and the Lord Darcy. And an Act for aſſuring Lands Parcell of the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter to King Edward's Patentees. (d)

There was another Act which affected the Patrimony of the Church to a greater Extent, tho' at firſt appearance it carried a friendly Aſpect. By this Statute the Biſhops were barr'd making any Grants of their Farms or Mannors for more than One and Twenty Years, or Three Lives at the fartheſt, unleſs it were to the Queen, her Heirs, and Succeſſors. But this exception left the Breach open. For the Courtiers, as Cambden obſerves, abuſing the Queen's goodneſs, and practiſing upon ſome mercenary Clergy, got ſome of the beſt Eſtates of the Biſhopricks convey'd to them. * Thus for inſtance, Crediton was gain'd from the See of Exeter, and Sherborn from Salisbury: Not to mention the Alienation of a great many other wealthy Mannors from Wincheſter, Ely, and other Biſhopricks.

On the Eighth of May the Parliament was Diſſolv'd; and on the Twenty Fourth of June following, the Act for the Engliſh Common-prayer-Book enur'd. And now the Oath of Supremacy was tendred to the Biſhops and Clergy. 'Twas refus'd by all the Biſhops, excepting Kitchin of Landaff, who Cambden calls the Calamity of his See. I ſhall give the Reader their Names together with part of the Character given them by this Learned Hiſtorian. Nicholas Heath Archbiſhop of York, who reſign'd the Broad Seal, ſpent the remainder of his Time in Study and Retirement at Cobham in Surry, and had ſometimes the honour of a Viſit from the Queen. Edmund Bonner Biſhop of London who had gone thro' ſeveral Embaſſies, but loſt himſelf by his Proſecuting Temper, and harſh Management; Cuthbert Tunſtal Biſhop of Durham, a Prelate thoroughly Accompliſh'd in the Polite part of Learning. Thomas Thirlby Biſhop of Ely the Queen's Ambaſſador at Cambray, where he manag'd the Treaty to great Commendation; Gilbert Bourn Biſhop of Bath and Wells who took care of the Intereſt of his See. John Chriſtopherſon of Chicheſter a good Grecian, as appears by what he has Tranſlated of Euſebius and Philo Judeus. But by the way this Prelate did not live long enough to refuſe the Oath: (f) He died within ſix Weeks after Queen Mary. For the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, ſeiz'd the Spiritualties of the See of Chicheſter vacant by the Death of Chriſtopherſon January the Second 1559. And here to make the obſervation bear, the Learned Harmer takes it for granted the Canterbury Regiſter began their Computation either on Chriſtmas Day, or the firſt of January. (g) To go on with Cambden's Liſt of ejected Biſhops; John White Biſhop of Wincheſter a tolerable Scholar, and as the times went, no ill Poet. Thomas Watſon of Lincoln a good School Divine, but of a ſower, and unſociable Humour. Ralph Bain of Coventry and Litchfield, who reviv'd the Hebrew Learning, and was Regius Profeſſor of that Language at Paris under Francis the Firſt. Owen Oglethorpe of Carliſle, James Turberville of Exeter, and David Pool of Peterborough. Theſe ejected Biſhops were Impriſon'd at firſt, but ſoon after, their confinement was made more eaſy, and they were either put into their Friends Hands, or the cuſtody of the Reform'd Biſhops. 'Tis true, the Biſhops of Lincoln and Wincheſter, who had been moſt troubleſome, and threatn'd to Excommunicate the Queen, had no ſhare in this Favour. But as for Cuthbert Scott Biſhop of Cheſter, Richard Pate of Worceſter, and Thomas Goldwell of St. Aſaph, they had the Liberty of retiring beyond Sea, which they made their Choice. (h) When theſe Biſhops were turn'd out, may be accounted for as far as the Province of Canterbury, by inſpecting the Dates when the Spiritualties of their reſpective Sees were ſeiz'd by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. For during the vacancy of this Metropolitical See, the Archiepiſcopal Juriſdiction was in the Hands of the Dean and Chapter. Now the Spiritualties of the See of London, void by Bonner's Deprivation, were thus ſeiz'd June the ſecond 1559. The Spiritualties of Litchfield June the 24th. The Spiritualties of Worceſter June the 30th. The Spiritualties of Lincoln July the ſecond. The Spiritualties of St. Aſaph July the 15th. The Spiritualties of Wincheſter July the 18th. The Spiritualties of Peterborough November the Eleventh. Thoſe of Exeter November the 16th. And thoſe of Ely November the 23d, all the ſame Year. (i) As for the See of York, the Dean and Chapter there, exercis'd the Spiritual Juriſdiction belonging to that Archbiſhoprick on the 3*d* of Feb. 155$\frac{59}{60}$.

In ſhort, they were all Depriv'd by the Queens Commiſſion. And it ſeems Heath, Bonner and Thirleby were afterwards Excommunicated.

* Strype Annal.

The whole Number of the Clergy depriv'd at this time ſtands thus: Fourteen Biſhops already mention'd: Three Biſhops Elect: One Abbot, Four Priors, and one Abbeſs: Twelve Deans, Fourteen Archdeacons, Sixty Canons or Prebendaries, One Hundred Prieſts well preferr'd, Fifteen Heads of Colleges in Oxford and Cambridge; to which may be added about Twenty Doctors in ſeveral Faculties. (k) But then conſidering there are about Nine Thouſand Four Hundred Spiritual Promotions in England, this was no ſurprizing Number upon ſo great a Revolution in the Church. As to the Biſhops they had moſt of them ſworn the Regale in the Reign of King Henry VIII. Not to mention their Compliance with the Reformation under Edward VI. But ſince they had now made their Submiſſion to the See of Rome, and gone all the Religious Lengths of Queen Mary's Reign, they were reſolv'd to make a ſtand, and adhere to their laſt Change. And in regard they threw up their Preferments, and ventur'd the Penalties of the Act, 'tis moſt likely they went off upon Motives of Conſcience.

To be ſomewhat more particular: Soon after the Diſſolution of the Parliament the Fourteen Biſhops, together with ſome others of the Clergy, are ordered to attend the Queen. At their coming She put them in mind of the Act of Supremacy, recommended the Affairs of the Church, preſs'd them to Uniformity, and ſuggeſted the diſcharging the Superſtitious Worſhip of the Roman Communion.

“ Upon this the Archbiſhop of York replied, that the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury with ſeveral Biſhops of both Provinces had deſir'd him to move her Majeſty, that ſhe would pleaſe to recollect the late Queen her Siſters Zeal to the Apoſtolick See: That the engagements of that Princeſs to his Holineſs were binding to herſelf and Succeſſors. And that unleſs theſe Articles were made good, and Hereſy ſuppreſs'd, the Kingdom muſt lie under perpetual Ignominy and Cenſure.

The Biſhops order'd to attend the Queen

The Queen told him, that “ as Joſhua declar'd I and my Houſe will ſerve the Lord; ſo herſelf and her Subjects were reſolv'd to be govern'd by that Reſolution. That ſhe had call'd her Parliament and the Clergy together in imitation of Joſiah, to

That her Crown being wholly independent, ſhe would own no Soveraign, excepting Chriſt Jeſus the King of Kings. That the Pope's Uſurpation over Princes was intolerable: And that ſhe ſhould look upon all her Subjects both Clergy and Lay, as Enemies to God and the Crown, who ſhould from henceforth abett his Pretenſions. About this time Jewel afterwards Biſhop of Salisbury, wrote to Zurich, and gave Bullinger an Account of the State of Religion in England.

Jewels Letter to Bullinger.

“ He returns this Divine Thanks for his Favours in Germany; and for the Letters he had lately written to encourage them to ſtand firm for the Truth. That Arguments for Reſolution were very neceſſary at the preſent Juncture. That the Reform'd in England had not only their old Antagoniſts, but their late Friends to encounter. That theſe latter had deſerted the Cauſe, join'd the Enemy, and made a more vigorous and obſtinate Reſiſtance than any of the reſt. And which gives us, ſays he, moſt Trouble, we have the Remainder of the Spaniſh Vices, Luxury, Pride, and Libertiniſm, to conteſt with. As yet our Fortunes are unreſtor'd, and we are little the better for returning to our Country. But we hope our Affairs will mend ſhortly. For the Queen is a prudent and religious Princeſs, and inclin'd to favour us. Religion is recover'd to the ſame Foot on which it ſtood in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth. And I am ſatisfied the Letters ſent hither by your ſelf and your Republick, had a conſiderable weight in this matter. The Queen won't endure the Style of Head of the Church of England. She is altogether of Opinion, that Title is too big for any Mortal, and ought to be given to none but our Bleſſed Saviour. And beſides, it has been ſo horribly abuſed by the Pope, that 'tis ſcarcely conſiſtent with a good Conſcience for any Perſon to make uſe of it.

“ The Scottiſh Presbyterians call'd this Diſtinction, a Blaſphemous Title when us'd either by Popes or Princes. Their Argument is this; the Church ſay they, is the Spouſe of Chriſt: No Spouſe can be ſaid to have any other Head, but him whoſe Spouſe ſhe is. Now if the Church ſhould acknowledge herſelf to be the Spouſe of any other, but of Chriſt, ſhe were a profeſs'd Whore and Adultereſs. † † Reformation of the Church of Scotland. Preface.

“ To return, our Univerſities continues Jewel, are in a lamentable Condition, and almoſt quite loſt to all Senſe of Orthodoxy: There are not above Two in Oxford of our Sentiment: And thoſe ſo far diſpirited as to be good for nothing. Thus Friar Soto and another Spaniſh Monk have entirely deſtroy'd Peter Martyrs Plantation, and made a mere Wilderneſs of the Lord's Vineyard. You can ſcarcely imagine ſo great a Ravage, and Deſolation of Principles, could have happen'd in ſo ſhort a Time. And tho' I ſhould be glad to ſee any thing from Zurich in England, yet I would not adviſe you to ſend any young Travellers hither at preſent, unleſs you would have them come home with leſs Learning, and a worſe Belief.

The reſt of the Letter relates either to private Perſons, or Buſineſs of State. (m)

Some time after the Diſſolution of the Parliament there was a Conſultation at Greenwich, whether 'twas adviſeable for the Queen to receive Martinegoe the Popes Nuncio: 'Twas carried in the Negative: The Reaſons alledg'd were, that by the Statutes of the Realm no Perſon with a publick Character from Rome was permitted to come into the Kingdom: That at the preſent Juncture, 'twould be dangerous to entertain an Agent from his Holineſs: That the Countenance of a Nuncio would encourage the Malecontents and hinder their Compliance with the late Eſtabliſhment. *

* Biblioth. Cotton. Julius F. 6. Annal. Eliz. Appen. Num. 20.

The Pope was all along advertiz'd of the Progreſs of the Reformation. When the Queen came firſt to the Crown, he was extravagantly haughty: He pretended England was a Fee of the Apoſtolick See. And that the Queen ought to ſubmit her Title to his Deciſion. Thus he continued impolitickly ſtiff, and untractable till Things were paſt Remedy. At laſt, perceiving his Gaſconades made him only remarkable, he grew more moderate in his Demands, drop'd his Civil Soveraignty, and only inſiſted there might be no Innovation in Religion. Sir Edward Cairne the Queens Ambaſſador told him, he had no Inſtructions to anſwer upon that Head: And that the way for his Holineſs to receive Satiſfaction, would be to declare for the Lawfulneſs of the Marriage between King Henry, and Anne Bulloign. This was a ſhocking Requeſt to the Pope and Conclave, and could not be complied with without putting a Diſgrace upon the former Proceedings of that Court. They choſe rather to riſque the Iſſue, than run upon this Rock. And when by farther Advices from England, his Holineſs underſtood a Revolution in the Church was coming forward, he commanded Cairne not to depart Rome without leave; and in the mean time undertake the Government of the Engliſh Hoſpital there. The Popes Aim in putting this Reſtraint upon Cairne, was to prevent his giving Intelligence of the Practice carried on by the French and the Court of Rome, againſt the Queen. But Cairne had ſent ſome Advices of this Intrigue already. (n) But the Deſign was quickly no Secret, nor needed any Agent to diſcover it. For now the Queen of Scots, ſway'd either by the Ambition of the Dauphin her Husband, the Popes Incitement, or the Advice of the French King, puts up a Claim to the Britiſh Soveraignty, aſſumes the Title, and quarters the Arms of England: She founds her Right upon Deſcent, and pretends her ſelf Heir to the late Queen Mary. Theſe Pretenſions could not be ſupported without a Blemiſh upon Queen Elizabeths Birth, and plainly declaring her Illegitimate. This was a ſevere Provocation, gave our Queen a laſting Averſion to that Princeſs, and was attended with a very Tragical Event.

The Pope orders the Queens Ambaſſador to continue at Rome.

The Queen thus alarm'd with a Competition, provided for her Defence, and it may be went on with greater Vigour in the Reformation.

To this purpoſe, a Body of Injunctions was ſet

ſet forth: The Import of them was moſtly the ſame with thoſe of King Edwards. However, the Reſemblance admits of ſome Difference. There is a ſingular Article relating to the Marriage of the Clergy. 'Tis very myſteriouſly couch'd; and had it not the Face of ſo ſolemn an Authority, would look like Banter and Burleſque. But having taken notice of this Proviſion elſewhere, (o) I ſhall ſay nothing farther. The other new Regulations in theſe Injunctions are much more intelligible.

The Firſt is, concerning the uſe of ſinging, which the Queen would have kept up to preſerve the Science and Advantages of Muſick: That therefore all Maintenances ſettled for the Service of the Choirs ſhould be continued. There is likewiſe Care taken that an Affectation of Skill ſhould not be carried ſo far as to make the uſe of the Church Service leſs ſignificant: And that the Common-Prayer ſhould be ſung in ſo plain and diſtinct a manner, that the Pronunciation might be altogether as well underſtood, as if it had been read. However, for the ſatisfaction of thoſe that were particularly pleas'd with Muſick, a Religious Anthem was allow'd at the beginning or end of the Service. Purſuant to this Order the Pſalms were ſung in plain Song in moſt Pariſh Churches. And in the Queens Chappel, in Cathedrals, and Colleges; the Hymns were ſung in a more awakening and improv'd manner: And to make the Performance farther entertaining and ſolemn, Organs and other Inſtrumental Muſick were made uſe of.

To proceed, the cuſtomary Reverences in Churches are order'd to be continued. For inſtance, when the Name of Jeſus was pronounc'd, all Perſons were to bow, or ſhew ſome other ſuitable Mark of Reſpect.

Farther, there are Directions given for placing the Communion Table. The Article ſets forth, that no Altar ſhould be taken down, but under the Inſpection of the Curate or Church-wardens, and that the Holy Table was to ſtand in the Place of the Altar.

The Form for bidding Prayers in the Congregation, is almoſt literally the ſame with that preſcrib'd in the Fifty Fifth Canon of 1603.

The Senſe in which the Queen was willing to receive the Oath of Supremacy.

And becauſe the Oath of Supremacy had been miſconſtrued by ſeveral Perſons, as if the Kings or Queens of this Realm, had challeng'd an Authority and Power of Miniſtry of Divine Service in the Church; the Queen diſclaims the Supremacy in this Senſe, and that her Majeſty neither does, nor ever will, challenge ſuch Authority: And that ſhe intends to ſtretch the Regale no farther than 'twas carried by King Henry the Eighth, and King Edward the Sixth; and was of Antient Time due to the Imperial Crown of this Realm: And how far this reach'd, the Admonition proceeds to explain: And that is, under God to have the Soveraignty and Rule over all manner of Perſons born within theſe Realms, Dominions and Country, either Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal, ſo as no foreign Power ought to have any Superiority over them. And here the Queen profeſſes herſelf willing to accept the Oath of Supremacy ſworn in this Senſe. Had this Admonition, as 'tis call'd, been paſs'd into an Act of Parliament; or the ſame Explanation at leaſt, been made by ſucceeding Princes, it might poſſibly have not been unſerviceable.

At the end of the Injunctions there is an Order for removing the Altars, tho' not without the Overſight of the Curate, and one of the Church-wardens. The Order takes notice, that in ſome Places the Altars were not remov'd: And then ſubjoins, that ſaving for an Uniformity there ſeems no matter of great moment, ſo that the Sacrament be duly and reverendly miniſtred.

Some Divines perceiving, 'tis probable, the Queen had ſome Inclination to continue the old Cuſtom, and let the Altars ſtand, they drew up a Paper in which they endeavour'd to ſhew the Inconveniency of adminiſtring the Holy Euchariſt at an Altar. I ſhall give the Reader the Reaſons, omitting that Part of them which has been already mention'd in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth.

“They argue firſt, that the Holy Ghoſt in the New Teſtament makes mention of a Table, 1 Cor. 10. but no where calls it an Altar. *

“Secondly, the Antients frequently uſ'd the Name of a Table, and for this they cite the Council of Nice, St. Auſtin, and St. Chryſoſtome. They grant theſe Fathers call it an Altar ſometimes, but then as they argue, thoſe Places are not to be interpreted to the Letter. For as the Fathers when they call'd the Lord's Supper a Sacrifice, mean no more, as they explain themſelves, than the Commemoration or Reſemblance of a Sacrifice: † So by Parity of Reaſon when they term the Place where the Elements are conſecrated an Altar, yet they mean no more than a Repreſentation or Remembrance, and not the Form of a material Altar: Thirdly, an Altar is a Term of Relation and ſuppoſes a Sacrifice, from whence it follows, that if we allow the Firſt, we muſt grant the Second. Now this was more than theſe Divines were willing to allow, which is a Sign they had no great Regard for the Language of Antiquity.

“Fourthly, 'tis pretended, if the Communion ſhould be adminiſtred at an Altar, the Miniſter could not be heard, and by conſequence the Engliſh Common-Prayer would be as inſignificant as the Latin.

“And granting there was no direct Unlawfulneſs in the Practice, the continuance of Altars, conſidering the Juncture would be attended with great Inconveniencies. For firſt, their Adverſaries would charge them with Inconſtancy, and departing from the Order ſettled in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth. Secondly, the greateſt Part of the Reform'd Preachers in England have frequently deliver'd themſelves in the Pulpits againſt the Uſe of Altars, and therefore can't recommend them now without Self-contradiction, and owning themſelves in a Fault: For as St. Paul ſpeaks, if I build again thoſe Things which I deſtroy, I make my ſelf a Tranſgreſſor. Fourthly, they urge the People were generally prepoſſeſs'd againſt Altars: That the keeping them on would end in claſhing and Schiſm. That this Iſſue was more likely to be expected, in Regard the Altars in many Places were remov'd alrea“dy. Fifthly, ſince her Majeſty has declar'd her ſelf very unwilling to ſet aſide any Eccleſiaſtical Laws confirm'd by Parliament, her Subjects will be much ſurpriz'd, if any Order ſhould be iſſued out for the replacing of Altars, conſidering the Rubrick of the Common-Prayer which ſtands upon a Parliamentary Authority, ſuppoſes a Table for the Adminiſtration of the Holy Euchariſt, and gives Directions about it. Sixthly, that Biſhop Ridley juſtified the King's Letter for the removing of Altars, and that Day Biſhop of Chicheſter was committed for Non-compliance in this matter. Seventhly, they deſire the Queen to remember, that Oecolampadius, Zuinglius, Bullinger, Calvin, Martyr, Alaſco, Hedio, Capito, and a great many other eminent Divines had made the taking away the Altars part of the Reformation. And that this was the Practice of the Proteſtants in Savoy, and Switzerland, and particularly at Baſil and Geneva, at Straſbourg, Wormes, Franckfort, and other Places. That amongſt the Reform'd none but the Lutherans made Uſe of Altars: But that their Churches had more Imperfections, as they call them, ſtill remaining, ſuch as the guilding of Images, the Common-Prayer half Latin, and half high Dutch, and the Elevation of the Sacrament of the Altar. Eighthly, they repeat part of their Sixth Reaſon, and argue from the Authority of thoſe Eminent Engliſh Divines who ſuffer'd in the late Reign: They mention Cranmer and Ridley, Latimer, Hooper, Bradley, with an &c. That theſe Men of Character had approv'd the Second Common-Prayer-Book, publiſh'd in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth, and particularly declar'd themſelves for the Preference of a Table. So that by ſetting Altars up again, 'twill look as if we condemn'd ſome part of the Doctrine of theſe good Men, and concurr'd with their Adverſaries that burnt them. And laſtly, they put her Majeſty in mind, that if the Opinion of the Preachers and Learned Men of this Realm were layed before Her, they believe her Highneſs would find them unanimous in this Point. *

* Mſs. Petyt. Strype Annal. Eliz.

This Addreſs the Reader may perceive was prior to the ſetting forth the Injunctions: The Application had its Effect, as appears, by the Article for removing the Altars already mention'd.

As to the Time of theſe Injunctions, they were certainly publiſh'd before the 17th of November: For the Print tells us they were ſet forth in the Firſt Year of her Reign. And by the Firſt Article it may be probably collected, they came out in the Interval of the Two Religions, between the turning out the old Biſhops, and making the new. For in the Firſt Article, there's no mention of any Biſhops, where it might have been expected: The Orders being only directed to Deans, Archdeacons, and ſo downwards. (p) Who form'd theſe Injunctions is ſomewhat uncertain. By a Paſſage of Dr. Cox's Letter to a Friend of his at Wormes, 'tis not improbable he might be employed in this Affair. For there he acquaints his Correſpondent, they were pulling up the Popes Fences, and cultivating the Lord's Vineyard. (q) That theſe Directions were review'd and touched over by Secretary Cecil, is pretty plain, as appears by a Paſſage of Archbiſhop Parkers Letter written ſome Years after to this Miniſter. † Where the Archbiſhop tells him, that whatever the Queens Eccleſiaſtical Prerogative may be, he is afraid, 'tis not ſo large as his Lordſhips Pen had made it in the Injunctions.

By theſe Directions all carv'd Images, Paintings, of Counterfeit Miracles, and other ſuperſtitious Remains, were remov'd out of Churches, and defac'd. They enquir'd likewiſe into the Preaching, Morals, and Management of the Clergy. In London the Commiſſioners were Sir Richard Sackville, Dr. Huick, Mr. Horn afterwards Biſhop of Wincheſter, and one Salvage. Theſe Gentlemen calling ſuch Perſons of every Pariſh before them as they thought fit, gave them an Oath to preſent upon the Articles deliver'd. And here ſome Peoples ignorant Zeal carried them too far; For not only Images were deſtroy'd, but Copes, Altar Carpets, Prayer-Books, other Church Furniture, and even Crucifixes, were burnt together. There is an odd bantering Letter written from London into the Country, upon this occaſion, the Words are theſe.

Images remov'd, and Paintings defac'd and burnt.

“Since the Day before our Bartholomew Fair, we have had ſuch Bonefires, as paſſes all the Blazes that were made for the winning of St. Quintins: For all our Church Patrons, Maries, Johns, Roodes, and all the Rabblement of the Popes Ornaments, were ſent to Terra Sancta in this fiery Sacrifice. (s) Biblioth. Robt. Harley Armig.

To worſhip Images, is puſhing Regard much too far; 'tis without doubt a Criminal Exceſs, unpractis'd, and condemn'd by the Primitive Church: But then on the other hand, to treat them coarſly and burn them, looks like an Affront to thoſe they repreſent, and is altogether unbecoming Chriſtians. To burn the Figure of the Croſs, and eſpecially that of our Saviour, is to ſpeak ſoftly, a horrid Profanation: And if we may reaſon from ſuch Indignities done to Men, muſt be ſuperlatively wicked. The Reader therefore is to ſuppoſe, that all this Diſorder was without Commiſſion, and nothing but Mob-Execution: For 'tis evident the Practice of the Queen and Court was quite different, and therefore would give no Countenance to ſuch ſingular Extremes.

The Queen was the more diſpos'd to give way to the Removal of Images, upon the ſcore of an impoſterous Practice lately diſcover'd. At the Arrival of the Earl of Suſſex the Queens Lieutenant in Ireland, the Litany was ſung in Engliſh at Chriſt Church Dublin. Some bigotted Papiſts were much diſturb'd at this way of Worſhip, and endeavour'd to retrieve their old Service by counterfeiting a Miracle. To this purpoſe, a Marble Figure of our Saviour ſtanding in the Cathedral with a Reed in his Hand, and a Crown of Thorns on his Head, was obſerv'd to bleed through the Thorns upon the Face of the Crucifix. This wonderful Appearance happen'd in Service time, when the Lord Lieutenant, the Archbiſhop, and the reſt of the Privy Council were at Church. When this was perceiv'd by the People, they were ſtrangely affected, eſpecially when one privy to the Contrivance told them, that our Saviour could not chuſe but ſweat Blood, when Hereſy was come into the Church. In ſhort, all the Audience being not of the ſame mind, the Miracle occaſion'd a Confuſion, and the Congregation broke up. Several of the People however ſtayed behind, fell on their knees, and prayed before the Image.

The Archbiſhop of Dublin ſuſpecting ſome foul Play, order'd the Sexton to waſh and examine the Image. This being done, the Man perceiv'd a Spunge ſoak'd in Blood within the Hollow of the Head. This Spunge one Lee formerly a Monk of the Cathedral, had put within the Head that Sunday Morning, and being loaded with Blood, 'twas ſtrain'd through the Cracks of the Marble, and fell down in Drops upon the Face. The Cheat being thus diſcover'd, the Archbiſhop preach'd in the Church upon that Subject the next Sunday. And to make the more ſerviceable Impreſſion, Lee with his Aſſiſtants were planted upon a Table before the Pulpit, with their Hands and Legs tied, and their Crime in Paper upon their Breaſt. In this Equipage they appear'd Three Sundays, were impriſon'd for ſome time, and afterwards baniſh'd the Realm. A Detail of this Impoſture was tranſmitted in a Letter by Archbiſhop Curwin to Parker Elect of Canterbury. Parker brought it to the Queen, gave a Turn to her Inclination, and prevail'd with her ſo far as to gain her Conſent for the removing Images out of Churches: However, all his Learning and Zeal could not perſwade the Queen to part with the Crucifix, and lighted Tapers in her own Cloſet: She thought 'tis likely that the arguing againſt the Uſe, from the Abuſe, was ſhort of exact Reaſoning. *

* Cecil's Memoirs.

On Midſummer Day this Year the Queen ſign'd Commiſſions for a Royal Viſitation all over England. One of them for the Archbiſhoprick and Province of York, is directed to Francis Earl of Shrewsbury, Edward Earl of Darby, Thomas Earl of Northumberland, William Lord Evers, Sir Henry Piercy, Sir Thomas Gargrave, Sir James Crofts, and Sir Henry Gates Knights: To theſe are join'd Edwyn Sandys Dr. in Divinity, Henry Harvey Dr. of Law, Richard Bows, George Brown, Richard Kingſmale and Chriſtopher Eſcot, Eſquires.

The Inſtrument ſets forth in the beginning, “that the Queen could not faithfully diſcharge the Buſineſs of her Station without making a Proviſion for the Worſhip of God Almighty, and the propagating the true Religion: From hence ſhe proceeds to declare her Royal Power abſolute, with Reſpect both to Church and State. Nos igitur Regalis & abſolutæ Poteſtatis noſtræ, nobis in hoc Regno noſtro commiſſæ, reſpectu, quoniam utrumque Regni noſtri Statum tam Eccleſiaſticum, quam Laicum viſitare, & certas Pietatis ac Virtutis Regulas illis præſcribere conſtituimus, præfatum Franciſcum Comitem Salop. &c.

Amongſt theſe Fourteen Commiſſioners, there is never a Clergy-man excepting Sandys, unleſs Harvey Dr. in Law was in Orders, which is ſomewhat unlikely. Notwithſtanding this, any Two of them are authoriz'd to viſit all Cathedrals, Collegiate, and Parochial Churches; and all Degrees of the Clergy the Biſhops not excepted. They are impower'd to examine them upon the Articles of their Belief, the Qualifications of their Learning, and their Behaviour as to Morals: And in caſe they find them Defective, Heterodox, or Irregular, they are to proceed againſt them by Impriſonment, and Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. Farther, their Commiſſion impowers them to deliver new Injunctions, to declare Spiritual Promotions void, to allow competent Penſions to thoſe who quit their Livings; to examine Letters of Orders, to give Inſtitution and Induction, to convene Synods, and receive Synodals; and to excommunicate thoſe who refuſe to pay: To give Licences to preach to thoſe they judge qualified, to diſcharge Perſons committed to Priſon upon the Score of Religion: To try the Cauſes of Deprivation, and reſtore ſuch as have been illegally diſplaced: In ſhort, their Commiſſion takes in the whole compaſs of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and reaches to every Part of the Epiſcopal Function, excepting Ordination, conſecrating of Churches, and officiating in Divine Service. And which is ſtill more ſingular, Sandys the Clergy-man is not conſtituted one of the Quorum, but any Two of the Lay-commiſſioners are authoriz'd to tranſact all this extraordinary Buſineſs, and to exert the higheſt Cenſures of the Church. * This one of our Learned Hiſtorians obſerves, was more than ſome People underſtood, and ſeem'd a great Stretch of the Queens Supremacy. But the Author appears inclin'd to juſtify the Commiſſion. For he ſubjoins, 'twas thought that the Queen might do that, as well as the late Chancellors did it in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts; ſo that one Abuſe was the Excuſe for another. † But 'tis to be fear'd this Plea won't hold; for the Imitation of an ill Precedent is no ſufficient Defence: Beſides, Lay-chancellors, tho' they ſometimes judge what Crimes deſerve Excommunication, yet they never pronounce the Sentence: That ſolemn Part is always perform'd by a Prieſt. But theſe Commiſſioners were not tied to the Rules of Eccleſiaſtical Courts: Their Juriſdiction was unconfin'd and paramount: And therefore as far as it appears, they might have pronounc'd the Sentence of Excommunication without exceeding the bounds of their Deputation. And laſtly, the Chancellors act in the Biſhops Name, and by Virtue of his Commiſſion; of the Biſhop I ſay, who has undoubtedly a Right to admit to the Communion of the Church, and exclude from it. But theſe Fourteen Commiſſioners manag'd purely upon the Strength of the Regale. They had no Authority but what they receiv'd from the Queen, who was without Queſtion a Lay Perſon, and by conſequence could make out no Claim to any Share of the Sacerdotal Character, nor produce any Warrant from our Saviour for the Exerciſe of the Keys.

Foreign Princes ſolicit the Queen for the Ejected Biſhops

The Caſe of the Popiſh Biſhops lately turn'd out, was not neglected Abroad. The Queen was Solicited by the Emperor, and other Roman Catholick Princes, to deal favorably, with them: And to allow the Papiſts ſome Churches in Cities, and great Towns. To this her Majeſty replied, "that notwithſtanding thoſe "Biſhops had diſobey'd the Laws, and "diſturb'd the Quiet of the Kingdom: "Though they refus'd Compliance with "that Doctrine, which in the Reigns of "her Father and Brother, they had publickly recommended, and maintain'd: "Notwithſtanding this Inconſiſtency, and "Miſbehavior; yet in regard to thoſe "Princes, ſhe was willing to treat them "gently; though this could not be done "without diſguſting the reſt of her Subjects. But to grant them Churches, "to Officiate in their Worſhip, and keep "up a diſtinct Communion, were things "which the publick Intereſt, her own "Honour and Conſcience, could not allow; neither was there any reaſon "for ſuch an Indulgence: For there "was no New Faith propagated in England: No Religion ſet up, but that "which was commanded by our Saviour, practis'd by the Primitive Church, "and unanimouſly approv'd by the Fathers of the beſt Antiquity. Beſides, "to aſſign Churches to different Ceremonies and Perſwaſions, is the direct "way to perplex good People, and make "them unreſolved. To encourage Faction, to break Religion into Sects, "and Parties, and Embroil both Church "and State. Now ſuch a Toleration "would be both unwarrantable in it "ſelf, and pernicious in the Preſident: "And which is more, would be neither "convenient, nor ſafe, for thoſe who "ſhould Enjoy it. And therefore, though "out of her own Clemency, and eſpecially at the Requeſt of Crown'd Heads, "ſhe was willing to connive a little, "in order to reclaim thoſe Prelates to "better Temper, yet ſhe was reſolv'd "not to be ſo kind, as to feed their "Diſeaſe, aud cheriſh their Obſtinacy. (s)

Her Anſwer.

The Popiſh Biſhops and other Clergy of Character, quitting their Employments, was not without ſomething of Inconvenience. This turn diſfurniſh'd the Church in ſeveral Places: For there was not a ſufficient number of qualified Perſons, to ſucceed them in the Charge. And thus not a few Mechanicks, altogether as unlearn'd as the moſt remarkable of thoſe ejected, were preferr'd to Dignities and Livings. However, the greateſt part of the Roman Catholick Clergy thought it moſt adviſeable to ſwear the Supremacy, renounce the Pope, and conform to the Reformation. They ventur'd upon this Latitude out of a politick reſerve. 'Twas to keep the Proteſtants out of the Churches, and put themſelves in a condition to ſupport their Abdicated Friends. They ſeem'd to applaud this prudential Conduct, and hop'd the Pope would diſpenſe with the whole length of their Compliance.

Id.

The review of the Common-Prayer, the throwing out the Petition againſt the Pope in the Litany, and reſtoring ſome part of King Edward's firſt Book in the Communion Office, the decency of the Sacerdotal Habits, the Muſick and Solemnity of the Service, reconcil'd a great part of the Roman Catholick Laity to our Communion. And thus for the firſt Ten Years of Queen Elizabeth, they came frequently to Church. This Sir Edward Coke declar'd in his Charge at Norwich Aſſizes; and in his Speech againſt Garnet and other Conſpirators in the Powder Plot. And this he affirm'd upon his own certain Knowledge, and gave an inſtance in Beddinfield, Cornwallis, and ſeveral others of the Roman Catholick Perſwaſion. And to fortify Coke's Evidence, the ſame thing is averr'd by the Queen her ſelf, in her Inſtructions to Sir Francis Walſingham: * Here with reference to the principal Perſons of that Party, 'tis expreſly affirm'd, that they did ordinarily reſort from the beginning of her Reign, in all open Places to the Churches, and to Divine Services in the Church, without contradiction, or ſhew of miſliking. Now if the beſt diſtinguiſh'd of the Party, were thus conformable, we may imagine their Precedent was not without Effect, upon thoſe of more private condition. (t)

The Papiſts frequent the Engliſh Service for ſeveral Years.

However, this Compliance was not univerſally approved. Some Roman Catholicks ſtood off from our Communion from the beginning, and endeavor'd to propagate their Sentiment, as appears by a Paper Written againſt the Common-Prayer in the beginning of this Reign. (u) This Paper privately diſpers'd, was afterwards anſwer'd in Print by Pilkington Biſhop of Durham. To give the Reader ſome part of it.

Whereas the Paper objects that this Engliſh Common-Prayer-Book was ſet forth by the mere Authority of the Laity, the Biſhops and the whole Clergy of England diſagreeing to this Alteration. To this Pilkington anſwers, that in this reſpect, the Proceedings in the preſent Reign were no otherwiſe than in the laſt. That Queen Mary in her Parliaments, ſtifled one Religion and reviv'd another, which was the weight of the exception in the preſent Caſe: That the diſſenting Biſhops in Parliament could not reaſonably be ſaid to comprehend the whole Clergy: That many in the Univerſities, and elſewhere in the Country, had openly officiated in this Service, before it was impos'd by Act of Parliament, and which was more, her Majeſties late Parliament did by no means introduce a New, but only reſtor'd an old Religion: A Religion reform'd and ſettled by the Clergy and Parliament in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth; and afterwards ſuppreſs'd by Violence and Perſecution in the next Succeſſion.

The Sees excepting Landaff, being now all Vacant either by Death, or Deprivation, the Reader may expect to find them fill'd: But this Proviſion was not made with that expedition the Church ſeem'd to require. 'Tis true, Dr. Matthew Parker was elected to the See of Canterbury on the firſt of Auguſt; and ſome others were thus far preferr'd, about the ſame time: But then there was no Conſecrations 'till the middle of December following. Why the compleating the Epiſcopal Character, and furniſhing the Diſtricts with ſpiritual Governors, was thus long deferr'd, is variouſly conjectur'd. Some will have it that the Queen made this Pauſe to gain Time for a regal Viſitation: And that the Commiſſioners were to make ſome preparatory Alterations before the Biſhops entred upon their Charge. Others fancy her Majeſty charm'd with the Luſtre of the Regale: That ſhe was reſolv'd to exerciſe the Privilege, and take the Satisfaction when 'twas leaſt encumbred. 'Tis not impoſſible but both theſe Conſiderations might have ſome Weight: But the main reaſon of this Conduct muſt be farther look'd for.

The Act for impowering the Queen for taking what Caſtles, Mannors, &c. her Majeſty thought fit, was not to enure 'till after the Seſſions. Beſides, the Act could reach no Sees but during the Vacancy. Now the Popiſh Biſhops being turn'd out for Non-Conformity, the Court thought it neceſſary to Poſtpone the Conſecrations of the Reform'd, 'till the Queen had time to iſſue out her Commiſſion, and carry a Survey through all the Biſhopricks. Now the Church Lands, as has been obſerved, were certified into the Exchequer upon the old Rents, without any Conſideration of Fines, or other caſual Profits; whereas the Compenſation was made up of poor Eſtates, rated at the utmoſt Extent. In ſhort, this was Glaucus his Change, excepting its being involuntary on the Churches part.

Parker and ſome other Biſhops Elect, foreſeeing how lamentably the Church would be impoveriſh'd, endeavor'd to prevail with the Queen to drop this ſeeming Advantage. Their Application 'tis confeſs'd, could not be too early: For ſoon after the Diſſolution of the Parliament, her Majeſty appointed Commiſſioners to ſurvey the vacant Biſhopricks, and ſend their returns into the Exchequer. And over and above, there was a ſpecial Commiſſion directed to the Lord Treaſurer, Sir Richard Sackville, Sir Walter Mildmay, and Mr. Keilway, a common Lawyer. Theſe Four, or any Three, or Two of them, are authorized to examine the Certificates of all Biſhops Lands, return'd into the Exchequer, and to deliver their Opinions, what quantity of them 'twas proper to annex to the Crown, and what Proportion in Impropriations and Tenths, ſhould be given back in exchange. The Churches Patrimony being referr'd to ſo few Hands, and put upon ſo nice an Iſſue, the Biſhops Elect thought it highly ſeaſonable to exert themſelves. To this purpoſe they Addreſs the Queen to ſtop the Progreſs of theſe Seizures, for the Commiſſioners had made no ordinary Diſpatch. And here amongſt other things they intreated her Majeſty the new Sees erected by King Henry might be continued; and that the Biſhops promoted thither might have the common Privileges of diſpoſing of the Prebends: That Cliff might be annex'd to the See of Rocheſter, and the Benefice lately laid to the See of Cheſter, not taken away. (w) And to come to the main Buſineſs, Cox, afterwards Biſhop of Ely, applied himſelf particulary to the Queen, and put a Paper into her Hands to diſſwade the taking away the Temporalties of the Biſhops, upon ſuch an unequal Exchange.

And here he puts her in mind how happily ſhe has been inſtructed in the beſt Religion: That he had heard her ſay ſhe was not afraid of Dying, but ready to reſign at the firſt Summons of Providence: That from hence 'twould neceſſarily follow, her Majeſty muſt Act upon the Motives of Conſcience, the Fear of God, and the conſiderations of another World. From hence he goes on to an humble Requeſt, that her Commiſſioners may proceed no farther: That her Majeſties putting a ſtop to this Affair, would be a noble Inſtance of Goodneſs: The reaſons of his Petition ſhould come next; but here the Record fails. However, there is another Paper of the ſame Tendency under Cox's Hands, and Addreſs'd to the Queen in his own Name, and the other Biſhops Elect: And here the Queen is ſolicited with variety of Arguments.

"when King Artaxerxes furniſh'd Mony and Materials for building the Temple at Jeruſalem, and commanded the Jews to contribute to the Structure; There was an exception in this Order, to exempt the Prieſts and Levites from all Toll, Tribute, and Cuſtom: (y) That theſe Precedents were recorded by the Holy Ghoſt, for the Inſtruction of Poſterity: And that this was done to put Princes in Mind of extending their Bounty to the Miniſters of God; and not ſink them to a worſe Condition, and treat them with diſtinguiſhing Hardſhips. That the common Bleſſings of Providence were withdrawn and blaſted, becauſe the Jews were negligent in building the Temple. If therefore thoſe who build the Chriſtian Church, ſhall have their Pains diſcourag'd, and their Salaries leſſen'd, can God be pleas'd with ſuch uſage? God was angry with his People for Offering, and his Prieſts for receiving, the Blind and the Lame in Sacrifice; therefore if the beſt of the Churches Patrimony is wreſted from her, and a lean Conſideration return'd; both thoſe that take it away, and the Clergy that conſent to the Alienation, will incur the diſpleaſure of the Divine Majeſty. The Apoſtle St. Paul does not allow the Will of a Teſtator ſhould be alter'd in any particular: This reaſoning muſt evidently hold where things are ſettled for pious and beneficial Uſes. And ſince Men of Conſcience and Quality, have convey'd Lands for the ſupport of the Clergy, and the Service of the Chriſtian Religion, with what Juſtice can their Wills be broken through, and their godly Settlements defeated? God declares that the whole Jewiſh Nation were curs'd with Poverty, becauſe they fail'd in paying their Tythes, and firſt Fruits: And if the holy Revenues are thus leſſen'd, have we not reaſon to apprehend ſomewhat of a reſembling Calamity?

"That 'twas foretold in Eſaiah, that King's ſhould be Nurſing Fathers, and Queens Nurſing Mothers, (not Spoilers and Stepdames, to uſe the Words of the Paper) to his Church. In Obedience to this Prophecy, great Princes have not only regulated their Conduct by the Laws and Diſcipline of the Chriſtian Religion, but endow'd the Hierarchy, and ſupported them in their Function. and to be particular, the Kings and Queens of this Realm, though ſlenderly inſtructed in the Chriſtian Faith, if compar'd to her Majeſty, have all along been Benefactors to the Church, and improv'd her Patrimony. God forbid, ſay they, your Grace ſhould be diſinclin'd to ſo honourable a Bounty, and act Counter to the Piety of your noble Progenitors. Such ſurprizing Meaſures would be acceptable News to your Enemies, diſhearten the Honeſt and Orthodox Clergy, and give an undoubted occaſion to Cenſure, and unſerviceable Reports.

"Your Majeſties Father and Brother, though they Diſſolv'd the religious Houſes, and took their Eſtates which had been abus'd, yet they never laid their Hands on the Endowments of the Secular Clergy. * And therefore when the Univerſity Colleges were granted them by Act of Parliament, in order to an Exchange, they would by no means make uſe of the Advantage. And ſince the preſent Caſe is a reſembling Inſtance, and has no worſe Plea, they humbly beſeech her Majeſty to manage by this Preſident. And ſince ſhe has given ſuch Proofs of a holy Zeal, and a hearty regard to the true Religion, they hope her Highneſs will ſupport the Intereſt of the Clergy, and countenance thoſe who carry our Saviour's Commiſſion.

As to Impropriations they ſhould look upon it as a great Misfortune to part with their Lands upon ſuch an Exchange: For ſuppoſing the return ſhould amount to an Equivalent, they could not reconcile themſelves to it: Becauſe their Conſcience tells them this Revenue ought to revert to the Parochial Clergy, for otherwiſe the original Settlement is defeated, and the ends of the Endowment not anſwer'd.

"As to the forwardneſs of the Parliament for relieving her Graces Neceſſity, they have nothing to object: Tho' by the way 'tis to be fear'd, the force of the expedient will be ſpent in a ſhort time. But waving that Conjecture, they think themſelves bound in Conſcience to lay the matter before her Majeſty, and to ſuggeſt the Tendency of this new Proviſion, and that her Majeſty would pleaſe to act with that Reſerve, as may be conſiſtent with the Fear of God, and a regard to his Word and Sacraments: And to make this Remonſtrance the better receiv'd, they promiſe to aſſiſt her Majeſty with a conſiderable Summ, to be paid Yearly out of the Revenues of their Biſhopricks; hoping that when the State recover'd, and the exigency of the Juncture was over, the Mony advanc'd would be return'd. On the back ſide of the Addreſs, ſeveral of the Sees and Summs are mention'd, which without Queſtion would have been an effectual Preſident to the reſt. "For the purpoſe, Canterbury offer'd Two Hundred Pounds, Ely as much, London a “ Hundred Pounds, Hereford and Chicheſter a Hundred Marks each.

At the cloſe of the Paper, they make a Solemn Appeal to God, “ that no Mercenary View, no indirect Motives, put them upon this Application : But that 'twas purely the Intereſt of Religion and Learning, and a dutiful regard for her Majeſties Honour, which govern'd them in this Affair. (y)

(y) Petit's Mſs. N°.64.

There was another Paper under Cox's Hand, to be offer'd to the Queen for a farther Diſſwaſive. 'Tis call'd, Conſiderations why Biſhops Temporalties ſhould not be taken away.

The Paper ſuggeſts, “ that Biſhops have formerly brought up a great many Scholars at the Univerſities, founded Colleges, and promoted Learning to a very ſerviceable Degree : That by this Exchange they would be wholly diſabled for ſuch noble purpoſes. That Men will always be ſway'd in ſome Meaſure by Temporal Advantage : And when they perceive the Encouragements of Study withdrawn, they will take care not to Educate their Children to a lean Profeſſion, and make learned Beggars of them. Thus Knowledge, eſpecially with reſpect to Divinity, muſt loſe Ground lamentably in the Kingdom ; Chriſt Jeſus be in a manner forgotten, and Truth as much, or more Ecclips'd, as in the Times of Popery.

“ Queen Mary return'd thoſe Lands to the Biſhopricks, which had been taken away in her Brothers Reign, and look'd upon ſuch Seizures as down right Sacrilege. Now with Submiſſion, it may reaſonably be expected, a Reform'd Church ſhould not be treated with abatement of Favor.

“ Such Rigors upon the Clergy, will be blazon'd to diſadvantage, and carry an ill Sound through all Chriſtendom. For indeed the Uſage is without Preſident : There's no Parallel in Germany. In ſhort ſuch an Exchange will tarniſh the Reformation, and draw a blemiſh upon the Goſpel. For all People will ſay, reforming Religion is nothing but pretence : Nothing but a colour for ſeizing the Church Lands, and impoveriſhing the Biſhops. Beſides, when the Biſhops have loſt their Lands, the Crown will never have ſuch a proſpect of preſent ſupply upon occaſion. The reſt of their Arguments are coincident with the firſt Paper, excepting that they conclude with a terrible Example in Belſhazzar : “ That when this Prince had revell'd in the conſecrated Plate, he was frightn'd with an Apparition, ſtruck with immediate Vengeance, and loſt his Kingdom and his Life the ſame Day. (z)

(z) Mſs. Petit. Ibid.

And thus the Biſhops Elect plied her Majeſty with Arguments from Juſtice and good Nature, from Religion and Intereſt, from Credit in this World, and ſafety in the other. How they miſt reaching her Conſcience, and which way ſhe broke through all this reaſoning, is ſomewhat difficult to diſcover. The beſt way to relieve her Memory, is to ſuppoſe this remonſtrance was only prepar'd, but not laid before her. But this will be an unpardonable Omiſſion in the Biſhops who drew it up, and Convict them of want of Courage under their own Hands. Beſides, when they were thus well furniſh'd, 'tis not likely they could be guilty of ſo great a Failure. But which way ſoever the matter of Fact ſtands, 'tis certain the Queen was reſolv'd to take the Benefit of the Act, and enrich her ſelf, for ſome little time at leaſt, at the lamentable diſadvantage of the Clergy : And thus the Courtiers had another plentiful Church Harveſt. 'Tis granted Truth, and primitive Practiſe, can never be bought too dear : However, by the Conduct of this Reign eſpecially, it appears ſome People were reſolv'd to hold the Bargain upon high Terms ; and make the Clergy pay for their Orthodoxy, if they would have it.

To what degree the Biſhopricks were ſtrip'd by this Exchange, I can't wholly diſcover. By the Fortune of the large and wealthy See of Lincoln, where there was but one Mannour left, the Reader may give ſomething of a Gueſs how far the reſt ſuffer'd. But how much ſoever the Church might loſe, the Crown was no laſting gainer by this expedient. This may be partly collected from a Remonſtrance to the Queen not long after. Where waving what had been convey'd to the Subject by way of Gift, the Paper ſets forth, that the Profits of the Abbey and Church Lands, for Four Reigns together, had been intercepted by the Courtiers ; that the Crown had been extremely impoveriſh'd by indirect Management : And that none of theſe corrupt Officers were call'd to any Account. (a)

(a) See Records Num. LXXIX.

To proceed ; the Papiſts, to diſcredit the Engliſh Reformation, charg'd the Proteſtant Clergy with Novelty and Hereſy, with Inconſiſtency and ſeditious Principles. To ſhew the injuſtice of this Charge, the Divines, concern'd in the late Conference at Weſtminſter, and in preparing the Common-Prayer for the view of the Two Houſes, drew up a Confeſſion of their Faith, which they intended to publiſh at the receſs of the Parliament. Dr. Sandy's one of the Divines acquainted Dr. Parker with this Deſign, and requeſted him to Subſcribe with the reſt. But afterwards, it ſeems, upon Recollection, they found no neceſſity of making this Declaration publick. But the Inſtrument is ſtill preſerv'd amongſt Archbiſhop Parker's Papers in Bennet College Library in Cambridge. (b)

(b) Vol. Synodal.

And here the Articles of their Belief, are not couch'd in the ſame Terms with thoſe concluded in Convocation in the Year 1552; the Senſe is deliver'd in a more diffuſe and paraphraſtical manner: However, they expreſly declare, that tho' they don't preciſely obſerve the Words and Order, yet they diſagree in no particular, but own an intire Aſſent to the whole Body of thoſe Articles.

And to take off the Imputation of Diſloyalty thrown upon them by the Papiſts, they renounce the rebellious Tenents publiſh'd at Geneva by Chriſtopher Goodman and John Knox.

As for Goodman, he afterwards retracted ſomewhat of his Principles before the Lords of the Council. He is contented to own, that good and godly Women may lawfully ſit at the Helm, and govern Kingdoms: And that he heartily recogniz'd the Queen's Authority. That he never meant to affirm that any private Perſon might lawfully have taken off Queen Mary: Nor that the People have any original inherent Authority to puniſh wicked Magiſtrates; or, that ordinarily God gives the People a Commiſſion to promote his Service by forceable Expedients; or puts the Sword in their Hands, to carry on a Reformation in Church or State. (c)

(c) Mß. Petit.

By the way, this is a lame Recantation: For Goodman founds the Queen's Title upon her Moral, not upon her Civil Qualifications. Godly Women, he ſays, may lawfully Govern: But by this Doctrine, where there's no Virtue, there can be no Claim to Authority: And when their Godlineſs is at an end, their Government muſt be ſo too: This is directly founding Dominion in Grace. And when the Prince has ſo precarious a Title, and the Subjects made Judges of the Forfeiture, Peace and publick Order, muſt be ſlenderly Eſtabliſh'd: The next part of his Recantation is not one jot better: For by only denying that private People may execute their Princes, he ſeems, to allow Magiſtrates and Parliaments, may fairly do it. And by ſaying, that God does not ordinarily put the Sword in the Peoples Hands, what can be inferr'd, but that in ſome Caſes 'tis lawful for the People to riſe upon their Soveraign, and Reform the Church and State at Diſcretion? This is ſome of the Geneva Doctrine which has more than once been put in Practice, embroil'd Kingdoms; and ſet the World on Fire, to the Scandal and Confuſion of Chriſtendom. (d)

(d) Calvin Inſtitut. L. 4. Sect. 31.

The Settlement of the Reformation in England, encourag'd ſome of John Alaſco's Congregation to return hither, and Petition for their Church in Auſtin Friars, granted them by King Edward the Sixth. Utenhovius a Man of Learning and Condition, who had formerly been a Member of this Congregation, came over with recommendatory Letters from Bullinger to the Queen. This Utenhovius with one Peter De Loene a Miniſter, join'd themſelves at firſt to Adrian Hampſtedius's Congregation. Hampſtedius was a learned Preacher who came hither from Zealand. And had the Pulpit for his Congregation at Chriſt's Church, and elſewhere in London. As for Utenhovius, the granting him a new Patent with the old Privileges was at firſt refus'd. The Biſhops ſuggeſted to the Queen, that the making a Foreigner Superintendent, could not be done without maiming the Juriſdiction of the Dioceſan. To take off this Objection, they choſe Grindal Biſhop of London for their Superintendent. (e) The French Proteſtants though formerly incorporated with the Low Dutch, and Germans, in King Edward's Patent, made no attempt to recover their former Privileges: However, they had the Uſe of a Church in Threadneedle-ſtreet, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Windſor. 'Twas part of St. Anthony's Hoſpital, and ſtill continues for the uſe of that Nation.

The Reformation was now advanc'd beyond Tweed, and gain'd Ground through the whole Iſland. The turn in England gave the Scots a proſpect of the ſame Succeſs. But here the Scheme, and the Purſuit, had a different Complexion: And both the Form, and the Manner, was leſs intelligible. John Knox ſignaliz'd himſelf upon this Occaſion, and did his utmoſt to encourage the Undertaking. This Divine made unuſual Room in the Conſcience, and lay'd down looſe and over indulgent Maxims. In his Letter to the Scotch Nobility † who were concerting a publick Reformation, he acquaints them, he had the Concurrence of the moſt Pious and Learned People in Europe to warrant their Conſciences, and engage in the Enterprize: By theſe Men of Piety and Learning Knox meant Calvin, and other eminent Miniſters at Geneva. The Doctrine maintain'd by theſe Divines, which was the ground of the Scottiſh undertaking, was this, That if Kings and Princes refus'd to reform Religion, inferior Magiſtrates and the People being directed and inſtructed in the Truth before by their Preachers, may lawfully reform within their own Bounds themſelves: And if all, or the far greateſt Part be enlighten'd by the Truth, they may make a publick Reformation. (f) This Principle was afterwards maintain'd at large in a Book, call'd, Vindiciæ contra Tyrannos ſuppos'd to be Written by Gentiletus. The Tract de Jure Magiſtratuum in Subditos, of which ſome make Beza the Author, and Paræus's Comment upon the Romans, are full for the ſame purpoſe.

Some of his Tenents and Character.

To proceed, when the Scotch Nobility began to repent the Steps they had taken, and recover themſelves, Knox writes them another Letter from Diepe to bring them back to their former Reſolution: He makes no ſcruple to tell them, they muſt be loſt both in this World and the other, unleſs they have the Courage to maintain their Religion in the Field: Unleſs they defend their Cauſe againſt their Sovereign if need be; and exert themſelves to the utmoſt ſtretch of Violence. He Addreſſes the Lords in this remarkable Language. "No leſs cauſe have ye to enter into your former enterprize, than Moſes had to go to the Preſence of Pharoah: (for your Vaſſals,) yea, your Brethren, are oppreſs'd, their Bodies and Souls holden in Bondage, and God ſpeaks to your Conſciences, (unleſs you be dead with the blind World) that ye ought to hazard your own Lives, (be it againſt Kings or Emperors) for their Deliverance. For only for that Cauſe are ye call'd Princes of the People. And ye receive of your Brethren Honour, Tribute, and Homage, at God's Commandment, not by reaſon of your Birth and Progeny, (as the moſt part of Men do falſely ſuppoſe) but by reaſon of your Office and Duty, which is to vindicate and deliver your Subjects and Brethren, from all Violence and Oppreſſion, to the uttermoſt of your Power.

And here he refers them to a former Letter upon the ſame Subject, directed to all the Nobility, putting them in mind that their Conſciences ſhall be one Day compell'd to acknowledge that the Reformation of Religion, and of publick Enormities, appertains to more than the Clergy, or chief Rulers call'd Kings. (g)

This Knox had formerly at Frankfort given a publick Proof of his Regard to Crown'd Heads of a different Communion. Something of this has been already mention'd with Reference to the Emperor. His Satyr againſt Queen Mary in his Admonition to England runs thus. Firſt, If Mary and her Counſellors had been Dead before theſe Days, then ſhould not her Iniquity and Cruelty ſo manifeſtly have appear'd to the World. Secondly, Jezabell never erected half ſo many Gallows in all Iſrael, as miſchievous Mary hath done in London alone. Thirdly, Would any of you have Confeſs'd Two Years ago, that Mary your Mirror had been Falſe, Diſſembling, Unconſtant, Proud, and a breaker of Promiſes, except ſuch Promiſes as ſhe has made to your God the Pope, to the great Shame and Diſhonour of her noble Father. Fourth, The Love of her native Country could not move that wicked Woman's Heart to Pity. Fifthly, She declareth her ſelf an open Traitereſs to the Realm of England, contrary to the juſt Laws of the ſame, to bring in a Stranger, and to make a proud Stranger King, to the Deſtruction of the Nobility, and Subverſion of the Realm. Sixthly, If God for our Scourge, ſuffer'd her and her cruel Council to come to Authority. Seventhly, Under an Engliſh Name ſhe hath a Spaniards Heart. Eighthly, Much Trouble in England for eſtabliſhing that unhappy and wicked Woman's Authority, I mean of her that now reigneth in God's Wrath.

And after having rail'd againſt the Queen, the Miniſtry, and the Biſhops in the coarſeſt manner, he ſubjoins a Prayer, where he points directly upon them. This Prayer he recommends to the Engliſh: Where by miſapplying the Text, and teaching the Subjects to Curſe the Higher Powers, he uſes the Bible as ill as he had us'd the Government before. I ſhall give the Reader ſome of the Expreſſions. Repreſs the Pride of thoſe Bloodthirſty Tyrants, Conſume them in thy Wrath, pour forth thy Vengeance upon them. * O let the Vengeance of thy Servant's Blood that is Shed, be openly ſhew'd upon them in our Sight. Delay not thy Vengeance, O Lord, but let Death devour them in haſt, and let the Earth ſwallow them, and let them go down quick to the Hells, for there is no hope of their Amendment; The Fear and Reverence of thy holy Name is quite baniſh'd from their Hearts: And therefore yet again, O Lord, Conſume them, Conſume them in thine Anger, and let them never bring their wicked Councils to effect, but according to the godly Powers let them be taken in the Snare which they have prepar'd for thine Elect. †

Theſe are the Effects of Blind and Intemperate Zeal: Thus Knox wreſts the Scri-

Scriptures to miſlead the Subjects from their Duty, and turns his Prayer into Sin. We are charg'd in the Scripture to Honour the King, and not to curſe Him ſo much as in Thought. And the Higher Powers, though then Heathen, are call'd the Miniſters of God. We are commanded to lay aſide all evil Speaking, to love our Enemies, and pray for them, to Bleſs, and not to Curſe them. * Notwithſtanding all this, and a great deal more to the ſame purpoſe, Knox makes no ſcruple to ſpeak Evil of Dignities, and preſcribes a Prayer for the Engliſh to treat their Governors, in much harſher Language, than St. Michael thought fit to uſe againſt the Devil. †

For this Seditious and Treaſonable Doctrine, Knox was oblig'd to quit Frankfort and retire to Geneva. During his ſtay here, he wrote a warning to London, Newcaſtle, and Berwick, an Appeal to the Nobility of Scotland; and the firſt Blaſt of the Trumpet againſt the Government of Women. This Book was written on purpoſe to throw Mary Queen of England, and Mary of Lorrain Regent of Scotland, out of the Seat. Knox deſign'd to have ſounded this Trumpet of Rebellion thrice: But the Death of Queen Mary of England made him halt a little: Beſides, he underſtood there would be an Anſwer publiſh'd to his firſt Blaſt, and therefore he delay'd his Second 'till he had a farther View of the Strength of his Adverſaries. However, he had made ſome Progreſs in his Second Blaſt, of which I ſhall give the Reader ſome Paſſages in his own Words. Firſt, It is not Birth only, nor Propinquity of Blood, that maketh a King lawfully to reign above a People, profeſſing Chriſt Jeſus and his Eternal Verity; but in his Election, the Ordinance, which God hath Eſtabliſh'd in the Election of inferior Judges, muſt be obſerved. Secondly, No manifeſt Idolater, nor notorious Tranſgreſſor of God's holy Precepts, ought to be promoted to any publick Regiment, Honour or Dignity, in any Realm, Province, or City, that hath ſubjected themſelves to Chriſt Jeſus and his bleſſed Evangel. Thirdly, Neither can Oath nor Promiſe bind any ſuch People to Obey and Maintain Tyrants againſt God, and againſt his Truth known. Fourthly, But if raſhly they have promoted any manifeſt wicked Perſon, or yet ignorantly have choſen ſuch an one, as after declareth himſelf unworthy of Regiment above the People of God, (and ſuch be all Idolaters and cruel Perſecutors) moſt juſtly may the ſame Men Depoſe, and Puniſh him, that unadviſedly before they did Nominate, Appoint, and Elect. (h)

To give a farther View of the Temper and Complexion of this Man. When he lay at Diepe, in order to Embark for Scotland, he wrote a Letter to one Mrs. Locke, in which he paſſes the following Cenſure upon the Engliſh Common-Prayer-Book. His Words are theſe. Our Captain Chriſt Jeſus, and Satan his Adverſary, are now at plain Defiance. Their Banners are diſplayed, and the Trumpets blow on either ſide, for Aſſembling of their Armies: Our Maſter calleth upon his own, and that with Vehemency, that they may depart from Babylon. Yea, ſeverely he threatneth Death and Damnation, to ſuch, as either in their Forehead, or Hand, bear the mark of the Beaſt. And a Portion of his Mark are all theſe Dregs of Papiſtry, which are left in your great Book of England, (viz. croſſing in Baptiſm, kneeling at the Lord's Table, mumbling, or ſinging of the Litany, à Fulgure & Tempeſtate, * à Subitaneâ & Improviſâ Morte) any one jot of which diabolical Inventions, will I never Counſel any Man to uſe. The whole Order of your Book appeareth rather to be deviſed for upholding of Maſſing-Prieſts, then for any good Inſtruction, which the ſimple People can receive thereof. Your Sacraments were miniſtred, for the moſt part, without the Soul, and by thoſe who to Chriſt Jeſus are no true Miniſters; and God grant that ſo yet they be not. Without the Soul I ſay, they were miniſtred, becauſe they were miniſtred without the Word truly and openly Preach'd, and your Miniſters before, for the moſt part, were none of Chriſt's Miniſters, but Maſs-monging Prieſts. And towards the latter End of his Letter, he diſſwades the Gentlewoman from countenancing ſuch ſuperſtitious Prieſts in their corrupt Liturgical Services, affirming with great Vehemence, that all things ſhould be judg'd abominable, yea execrable and accurſed, which God by his Word has not ſanctified in his Religion.

His ſcandalous Cenſure of the Engliſh Common-Prayer.

* From Lightning and Tempeſt, and from ſudden Death,

Id.

Upon this Occaſion it may not be improper to obſerve, that Dr. Bancroft, afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury, affirms that the firſt Liturgy ſet forth in the beginning of King Edward's Reign, was carefully Compil'd and Confirm'd by a Synod, but ſoon after, to uſe Fox's Words, thro' the obſtinate and diſſembling Malice of many, Objections were rais'd againſt it. Theſe unneceſſary Cavils brought on Bucer's Review. Thus the Second Book was Publiſh'd, and this Archbiſhop Cranmer offer'd to defend againſt the Papiſts, as hath been already related. And when Dr. Grindal wrote from Franckfort to Ridley then in Priſon, and acquainted him with Knox's Oppoſition to the Engliſh-Service, the Biſhop lamented Knox's litigious Humour, and juſtified the Liturgy. (i)

(i) Bancroft's Sermon Preach'd at Paul's Croſs. Feb. 1588.

Knox's Blaſt, as he call'd it, againſt the monſtrous Regiment and Empire of Women, was not without its Effect. This hot Pamphlet catch'd upon ſome of the Engliſh, fill'd them with treaſonable Scruples, and made them ſtagger in their Allegiance. Queen Elizabeth, as ſhe had reaſon, was highly diſpleas'd, and the Geneva-Exiles coldly receiv'd at their return. However, Knox was reſolv'd to give up no part of his Book, nor make any Abatement. For in a Letter to Secretary Cecill, he tells this Miniſter he no more queſtion'd the Truth of his main Propoſition, then he queſtion'd the Text in Geneſis being the Voice of God, where 'tis ſaid, in Sorrow ſhalt thou bring forth Children. And here he boldly declar'd himſelf ready to defend his Tract againſt any Perſon that ſhould undertake it. But after all; this Peremptorineſs was not without ſomething of Art: For he recurrs to a nice diſtinction in Favor of Queen Elizabeth. He believ'd her rais'd to that Station by extraordinary Providence: That God had promoted her, for his miraculous Work, comforting his afflicted by an infirm Veſſel. But this was a particular exception in the Divine Oeconomy: 'Twas contrary to Nature, and God's moſt perfect Eſtabliſhment. And therefore he charg'd the Secretary, in the Name of the Eternal God, to acquaint the Queen, that if ſhe would found her Right upon miraculous Bounty, upon extraordinary Diſpenſation with the Laws of God and Nature; upon a Privilege no other Perſon of her Sex could pretend to; if ſhe would Confeſs ſhe ſtood upon this Bottom, none would be more willing than himſelf to maintain her Authority. But if ſhe inſiſted upon humane Conſtitution, Legal Title, and Proximity of Blood, he was then well aſſur'd ſuch fooliſh Preſumption, would be highly Offenſive to Almighty God; and was very much afraid her Ingratitude would not go long unpuniſh'd. He had the Courage to Write to the Queen in the ſame Streins of Whimſey, and Arrogance. * He told her, that if ſhe began to brag of her Birth, and Found her Authority upon the Laws of the Kingdom, her Happineſs would be ſhort Liv'd: And thus, according to his cuſtomary manner, he pretends to a certainty in future Events, and delivers his Extravagancies with an Air of Propheſy.

* July 28. 1559.

From this introductive Character of Knox, I ſhall paſs on to the Church alterations in Scotland. In this Kingdom the Queen Regent had been petition'd for Reformation of Religion.

In their firſt Petition they requeſted the Biſhops might be choſen by the Temporal Lords and Gentlemen. †

† Leſley p. 504.

The Second Petition ſtands at length in Knox's Hiſtory. || Here after an introductive complaint againſt the Clergy they proceed to the particulars of their Requeſt. The Reader ſhall have them in the Words of the Scottiſh Hiſtorian;

|| Hiſt. Ref. Scotl. p. 130.

Firſt, humbly we aſk, that as we have by the Laws of this Realm, after long Debate obtain'd to Read the Holy Books of the Old and New Teſtament in our vulgar Tongue, as Spiritual Food to our Souls: So from henceforth it may be lawful, that we may meet publickly or privately to our common Prayers in our Vulgar Tongue, to the end that we may increaſe and grow in Knowledge, and be induc'd by fervent and oft Prayer, to commend to God the Holy Univerſal Church, the Queen our Sovereign, her honourable and gracious Husband, the Ability of their Succeſſion, your Majeſty Regent, the Nobility, and whole State of this Realm.

Secondly, if it ſhall happen in our ſaid Meetings any hard Place of Scripture to be read, of which without Explanation, hardly can ariſe any Profit to the Hearers, that it ſhall be lawful to any qualified Perſons in Knowledge, being preſent to interpret and open up the ſaid hard Places to God's Glory, and to the Profit of the Auditory. And if any think that this Liberty ſhould be occaſion of Confuſion, Debate, or Hereſie, we are content that it be provided, that the ſaid Interpretation ſhall underly the Judgment of the Godly, and moſt Learned within the Realm at this time.

Thirdly, that the Holy Sacrament of Baptiſm may be uſed in the vulgar Tongue, that the Godfathers and Witneſſes may not only underſtand the Points of the League and Contract made betwixt God and the Infant, but alſo that the Church then aſſembled, more gravely may be informed and inſtructed of their Duties, which at all times they owe to God, according to that Promiſe made unto him, when they were receiv'd into his Houſhold by the Laver of Spiritual Regeneration.

Fourthly, we deſire that the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, or of his Bleſſed Body and Blood, may likewiſe be miniſtred unto us in the vulgar Tongue, and in both kinds, according to the plain Inſtitution of our Saviour Chriſt Jeſus.

And laſtly, we moſt humbly require, that the wicked, ſlanderous, and deteſtable Lives of Prelates, and of the State Eccleſiaſtical, may be reformed, that the People by them have not occaſion (as of many Days they have had) to contemn their Miniſtery and the Preaching, whereof they ſhould be Meſſengers. And if they ſuſpect that we rather envying their Honours, or coveting their Riches and Poſſeſſions, than zealouſly deſiring their Amendment and Salvation, do travel and labour for this Reformation: We are content, that not only the Rules and Precepts of the New Teſtament, but alſo the Writings of the Antient Fathers, and the godly and approved Laws of Juſtinian the Emperor, decide the Controverſy betwixt us and them. And if it ſhall be found, that either malevolently or ignorantly we aſk more than theſe Three forenam'd have required, and continually do require of able and true Miniſters in Chriſt's Church, we refuſe not Correction, as your Majeſty with right Judgment ſhall think need. But if all the forenam'd ſhall condemn that which we condemn, and approve that which we require; then we moſt earneſtly beſeech your Majeſty, that notwithſtanding the long Cuſtom which they have had to live at their Luſt, that they be compelled either to deſiſt from Eccleſiaſtical Adminiſtration, or to diſcharge their Duties, as becometh true Miniſters. So that the grave and godly Face of the Primitive Church reduced, Ignorance may be expell'd. True Doctrine and good Manners may once again appear in the Church of this Realm. Theſe Things we as moſt Obedient Subjects, require of your Majeſty, in the Name of the Eternal God, and of his Son Chriſt Jeſus, in Preſence of whoſe Throne Judicial, ye and all other that here in Earth beareth Authority, ſhall give Account of your Temporal Regiment. The Spirit of the Lord Jeſus move your Majeſties Heart to Juſtice and Equity.

It muſt be ſaid they laid down good Rules for a Reformation, if they had practic'd up to them. The Hiſtorian does not tell us who they were that preſented this Petition, he only ſays in general they were Proteſtants. That they were Perſons not much diſtinguiſh'd appears by their Preamble: However, they ſeem to have been puſh'd forward, and countenanc'd under hand by Men of Figure. For this Addreſs not meeting with Succeſs, ſome Noblemen and Barons form'd an Aſſociation, engag'd by Oaths, and ſubſcrib'd an Inſtrument to aſſiſt each other, and venture their Lives and Fortunes for that purpoſe. The Principals in this Engagement were Archibald Earl of Argyle, Alexander Earl of Glencayrn, James Earl of Morton, Archibald Lord Lorne, Sir James Sandilands of Caldar, John Ereskin of Dun, and William Maiteland of Lethington the Younger. Theſe covenanting Lords and Gentlemen after ſome Debate came to this Reſolution: “That all the Curates of Pariſhes ſhould be oblig'd to read the Prayers and Leſſons of the Old and New Teſtament on Sundays and other Feſtivals, purſuant to the Form ſet forth in the Book of Common-Prayers: And in caſe they refuſe to comply, that then thoſe of the Pariſhioners who were beſt qualified ſhould perform that Office. But as for preaching and expounding the Scriptures, that ſhould be done only in private Houſes, 'till God ſhould diſpoſe the Queen to give farther Liberty. This Order was executed within the Juriſdiction of the Aſſociation. And more than that, the Preſident of theſe great Men brought ſeveral Towns and Pariſhes to an Imitation. The Clergy were very much alarm'd, and complain'd of theſe Proceedings to the Queen Regent. She told them the preſent Juncture was no proper time for Redreſs: But that it would not be long before an Opportunity would offer. The Clergy apprehending Delays might prove dangerous, went forward to a Remedy themſelves. For this purpoſe a Provincial Council met at Edinborough. And here they pretended to reform ſeveral Abuſes, and reviv'd ſome old Conſtitutions for better Diſcipline. (l)

Some Noblemen and Barons in Scotland engage to Reform Religion tho' in Oppoſition to the Government.

At this Synod ſeveral Perſons were condemn'd for Hereſy. The Sentence againſt them went no farther than injoyning a Recantation in the Market Place on St. Giles's Feſtival. This Saint being reputed the Guardian of Edinborough, there was a ſolemn Proceſſion on the Anniverſary. When the Day came, the Mob riſing in Favour of thoſe who were to recant, diſturb'd the Proceſſion, broke St. Giles's Figure, and reſcued their Friends.

Spotſwood, Leſley. Sept. 1. 1558.

As for the Queen Regent, Reaſons of State had for ſome time clogg'd her Zeal, and made her leſs diſpos'd to gratifie the Clergy, than otherwiſe ſhe would have been. 'Tis granted, the Prelates had concurr'd with her in breaking the Contract of Marriage with England, and tranſporting her Daughter the young Queen to France. But not long after, the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews began to croſs the Queens Meaſures, and entertain a Project in Favour of his Family. He conſider'd that if the young Queen died without Iſſue, the Earl of Arran his Nephew might probably gain the Crown; the Duke his Father being then Governor of the Realm. Upon this View he oppos'd the Queens Marriage with the Dauphin. This Archbiſhop having the Aſcendant over the Governor his Brother, and a great Intereſt in the Country, brought moſt of the Clergy into his Sentiment. This being a very unacceptable Scheme to the Queen Dowager, 'tis no wonder if ſhe endeavour'd to break it. But to put herſelf into the better Capacity for this purpoſe, ſhe was oblig'd to court the Nobility and Barons, to forbear proſecuting the Preachers and connive at the Progreſs of their Reformation. For 'twas by the Aſſiſtance of the Proteſtant Lords, Melvils Memoirs page 14.

Lords, that ſhe prevail'd with the Duke of Chatelherault to reſign the Regency into her Hands. The Queen Regent having theſe Motives to indulge the Proteſtants, made them in a ſhort time an Overballance to the other ſide.

A Tumult at Edinborough.

And now thoſe who were carrying on a Revolution in the Church, endeavour'd to ſtrengthen their Party, and procure more Hands to the Aſſociation. This Motion was well entertain'd, and great Numbers gave in to the Deſign. Some engag'd out of Zeal, ſome out of Levity, and ſome to be reliev'd from the Diſcipline and Juriſdiction of the Clergy: And how far Intereſt and a Proſpect of the Church Revenues might prevail, was beſt known to thoſe concern'd. That the Enterprize was not carried on without ſecular Views, may fairly be conjectur'd by the Iſſue. When the Subſcriptions were return'd, when the Reformers had computed upon their Strength, and found themſelves riſe up to a Ballance, they open'd the Scene and went vigorouſly on. And to give the Undertaking the better Complexion, they preſented an Addreſs to the Queen Regent, and Council. The Heads were theſe.

Firſt, That publick Service and the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments might be perform'd in the vulgar Language.

The Congregation addreſs the Queen Regent for a Reformation.

Secondly, That the Sacrament of the Lords Supper might be given the People in both kinds. Thirdly, that for the future the Nobility and Gentry of each Dioceſe might vote at the Election of a Biſhop: And that the Pariſh Curates ſhould be choſen by a Majority of the Pariſhioners: And that thoſe concern'd in the Election ſhould examine the Qualifications of the Candidate, and inſpect the Behaviour and Learning of the Clergy. And this they call'd the Primitive Cuſtom. Fourthly, that thoſe who were unqualified for the Paſtoral Function ſhould be diſmiſs'd, and a preaching Miniſtry put in their Places. And in ſhort, that none either exceptionable in their Lives, or defective in their Learning, ſhould be permitted to adminiſter the Sacraments, or execute any Part of the Sacerdotal Office.

Theſe were unacceptable Requeſts to the Regent: However, ſince the Seſſion of the Parliament drew near, where the Matrimonial Crown for the Dauphin, and the Naturalization of the French, was to paſs, the Party was kept in hopes, and a ſmooth Anſwer return'd. The Queen Regent allow'd them their Service in the vulgar Tongue, upon Condition they held no publick Meetings in Edinborough or Leith.

The Regent allows them Prayer in the vulgar Tongue.

This Indulgence ſhock'd the Biſhops, and when the Articles were brought to them, they refus'd to give their Conſent. As to the Election of Biſhops and Pariſh Prieſts they inſiſted upon Antient Cuſtom, and the Regulations of the Canon Law: To this they added, that the Crown and the Pope, had an Intereſt in the Choice of Biſhops: And that to innovate in theſe matters during the Queens Minority, would be an Encroachment upon the Prerogative Royal. As to the Article concerning the Management of the Clergy, they were willing to be govern'd by Antient Uſage, and the Decrees of the Council of Trent: And that all Biſhops, Religious, and Clergy, however dignified or diſtinguiſh'd, that within Six Months did not in Perſon diſcharge their reſpective Duties, ſhould loſe their Preferments. But this Conceſſion was too narrow, and gave no Satisfaction. Upon this the Biſhops made a farther Overture, and offer'd a Conference upon the Points in Queſtion. Thoſe of the Congregation (for ſo they call'd the Reformers) agreed to the Motion upon Two Conditions: One was that the Scriptures might be the Rule for deciding the Controverſy: The other, that ſuch of their Brethren that were either baniſh'd, or lay under other Cenſures, might aſſiſt at the Diſpute, and have a ſafe Conduct for that purpoſe. The Biſhops and Clergy refus'd to comply with either of theſe Terms: They would try the Cauſe by no other Records than Councils and Canon Law, neither would they relax any Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. Some of them however, were more pliable, and came farther towards an Accommodation. They told the Congregation, that if the cuſtomary Reverence to the Maſs might be continued; if they would own Purgatory, Invocation of Saints, and Prayers for the Dead, they ſhould be allow'd to pray, and adminiſter the Sacraments in the Language of the Country. Theſe were look'd on as extravagant Demands, and rejected without farther Anſwer.

A Conference propos'd by the Biſhops.

But rejected.

At the Meeting of the Parliament the following Articles were preſented to the Queen Regent by the Congregation.

" Firſt, They deſir'd that all ſuch Acts of Parliament as impower'd Churchmen to proceed againſt Hereticks, might be repeal'd: Or at leaſt ſuſpended and diſpens'd with, till the Controverſies between the Papiſts and Proteſtants, ſhould be determin'd in a lawful General Council.

Articles touching Religion preſented to the Regent.

Secondly, That Hereſy and Miſbelief, might be tryed by the Temporal Judges: And that Prelates and their Officers might only be allow'd to proſecute.

" Thirdly, That legal Exception againſt " the Evidence, and all other fair Me- " thods of Defence, might be granted " the Parties Accus'd.

" Fourthly, That the Declaration of " the Perſon charg'd with Hereſy ſhould " be believ'd before the Counter Teſti- " mony of any other Witneſs whatſo- " ever.

" Fifthly, That none ſhould be Con- " demn'd for Hereſy, unleſs that Crime " could be prov'd upon them by the " Holy Scriptures.

The Queen diſmiſs'd the Addreſſers with a General Anſwer, which look'd favourably enough. She told them, 'twas neceſſary to keep on the Reſerve at preſent: That if ſhe ſhould diſcover her Mind, the Biſhops and Religious would croſs her Meaſures, and diſappoint her Buſineſs in Parliament. But when the publick Affairs were finiſh'd they ſhould be ſenſible how well ſhe ſtood affected.

The Congregation by this Anſwer underſtood their Articles would never paſs the Royal Aſſent, and for this Reaſon they declin'd preſenting them to the Parliament. However, reſolving to puſh the Matter as far as 'twould go, they made a Proteſtation, part of which I ſhall lay before the Reader.

The Congregations Proteſtation.

" Firſt, They proteſted, that ſince they " could not procure a Reformation agree- " able to God's Word, it might be law- " ful for them to be govern'd by their " own Conduct, and follow the Dire- " ction of their Conſcience, 'till ſuch " time as their Adverſaries could main- " tain their Character, prove their Com- " miſſion from Chriſt, and purge them- " ſelves from ſuch Crimes as were now " lay'd to their Charge; And which " the Reform'd were ready to make good " as ſoon as the Government would " pleaſe to hear them.

" Secondly, They proteſt that neither " themſelves, nor any of the Godly, " that think fit to join with them in " the Profeſſion of the true Faith, groun- " ded on the Word of God, ſhall in- " cur any Forfeiture of Life or Lands, " or any other Civil Penalties: That " no ſuch Perſons ſhall be liable to any " Dammage or Danger of this Kind, " for not keeping ſuch Acts, as have " formerly been made in favour of their " Adverſaries, or for diſuſing any Cere- " monies of humane Invention.

" Thirdly, They proteſt that if any " Inſurrection or Tumult ſhall happen " upon the Score of difference in Re- " ligion: Or if any Abuſes are Sup- " preſs'd by Dint of Force, they deſire " the Imputation may not lie upon them " who now humbly Intreat for a ſingular Remedy, but that whatever in- " convenience follows for want of ſea- " ſonable Redreſs, the Conſequences may " be charg'd upon thoſe who now re- " fuſe to give way to their Petition for " Reformation.

" And laſtly, They proteſt their Ap- " plication proceeds purely from Motives " of Conſcience, and that they have no " other Deſign but reforming Abuſes in " Religion: They humbly deſire there- " fore the Sacred Authority to look on " them as Loyal Subjects, and protect " them againſt Tyranny and Oppreſ- " ſion. (m)

This Proteſtation made before the Parliament they deſir'd might be entred on Record. But this Motion was gently refus'd by the Queen, who told them ſhe would remember the Contents, and take Care to bring things to a good Iſſue.

De reb. geſt. Scot.

Leſley reports, that ſome of the looſer Religious, who were either weary of the Cloyſter, or wanted Learning to ſupport their Character and Credit, deſerted to the Congregation, and declar'd ſtrongly againſt the Church of Rome. As for the Queen, ſhe continued firm to the old Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution: And therefore after ſhe had carried her Point in the Parliament, and the Seſſions was ended, ſhe diſcover'd her Inclination, and reſolv'd to declare for the Clergy. And ſome Diſorders having been Committed in the claſhing about Religion, ſhe thought it neceſſary to check theſe Sallies in the beginning, and call ſome of thoſe to an Account who had rais'd the Ferment, and given the Signal to fall on: For this purpoſe, Knox, Willock, John Dowglaſs, and Paul Methyn, all Congregation Miniſters, are ſummon'd to appear at Striveling, to anſwer to ſuch Miſdemeanors as ſhall be charg'd upon them.

Some of the Miniſters ſummon'd to appear at Striveling. May 10 1559.

The Earl of Glencairn, and Sir Hugh Campbell, Sheriff of Aire were ſent by the Congregation to ſolicit the Queen Regent not to put any Hardſhip upon the Miniſters, unleſs they could be convicted of falſe Doctrine, or ſeditious Behaviour. The Queen was diſguſted with their Application, return'd a harſh Anſwer, and declar'd thoſe Preachers ſhould be all Baniſh'd. The Noble-men, ſomewhat ſurpriz'd to find her thus diſconcerted, deſir'd her to recollect the Promiſes ſhe had made of kinder uſage. Her Paſſion growing warmer upon this Suggeſtion, ſhe told them Princes Promiſes were not to be ſtrein'd beyond Convenience. To this they replyed, that if her Majeſty was reſolv'd not to keep her Word with the Subjects, the Relation between them was diſcharg'd, and that that they ſhould own her Authority no longer. This formal Renouncing their Allegiance, frighted the Queen, and prevail'd to ſoften her Language. And thus, after a ſhort Pauſe, ſhe let them know ſhe would think farther, and apply to gentle Expedients.

But News being preſently brought of a Reformation begun at Perth, ſhe was much diſturb'd, and order'd the Lord Ruthen to put a ſtop to theſe Novelties. This Lord anſwer'd he could make himſelf Maſter of their Bodies and Eſtates, but as for their Conſciences no Power could reach them. When the time drew nigh for the Miniſters appearing at Striveling, great Numbers of their Perſwaſion made ready to go a long with them. The Queen receiving advice, the People were drawing together from all Parts, ſent Areskin of Dun to order them to diſperſe, promiſing, the Court at Sterling ſhould break up, and nothing be done to the Diſadvantage of the Miniſters. The principals of the Congregation ſuſpecting the Miniſters might ſuffer by not obeying the Summons, ſent home the Commons. As for themſelves with the Barons and Gentlemen they continued at Perth with the Preachers. Notwithſtanding the Regents promiſe, the Miniſters were proclaim'd Rebels for not appearing at Striveling.

Knox Preaches againſt Images &c.

Knox, who was now at Perth with the Lords of the Congregation, declaim'd ſtrongly in a Sermon againſt the Worſhip of Images: And maintain'd that ſuch marks of Idolatry and Superſtition, ought to be pull'd down. After Sermon, a Prieſt going to ſay Maſs, open'd a Caſe, and ſhew'd ſeveral fine figures of the Saints. For which being Reprimanded by a little Boy, he return'd him a Correction. The Boy receiving a Box of the Ear, threw a Stone at the Prieſt, and broke one of the Figures. Upon this the Mob roſe, Inſulted the Prieſt, broke the Images, and defac'd the Church. And now their numbers increaſing they attack'd the Monaſteries, pull'd down the Building, and made Prize and Plunder of what they found. Thus the Franciſcans, the Dominicans, and Carthuſians, were undone at a Heat. The Prior of the Order laſt mention'd had ſome Favour, being allow'd as much Gold and Silver Plate, as he could carry off. All this Booty was given to the Poor, for the Wealthy, it ſeems, were ſo ſcrupulous as not to take their ſhare in the Adventure. But after all did not this largeſs to the Mob look ſomething like a retaining Fee? Was it not like Impreſs Mony to liſt them in the Cauſe, and fleſh them for farther Enterprize? Their Zeal was ſurprizingly Expeditious in carrying off the Remains of Superſtition: For the Charter-houſe, a noble Structure both for Curioſity and Largeneſs, was demoliſh'd to that degree, that in leſs than Two Days there was nothing of the Materials left. When the News of this ſucceſs came to Couper in Fife, they carried on the Undertaking with the ſame Warmth and Fury, ruſh'd into the Church, deſtroy'd the Ornaments, and broke the Images and Altars.

The Monaſteries pull'd down at Perth. Hiſtory of the Reformation in Scotland.

And at Couper.

The Queen Regent was highly diſpleas'd with this Riot at Perth, and ſent to the Duke of Chattellerault, the Earls of Argyle and Athol, to come Immediately to Court. The French Forces were likewiſe order'd to March. The Burghers of Perth being ſenſible of what might follow, diſpatch'd their Agents to all Parts of the Kingdom. Upon this Alarm, they were quickly reinforc'd with a conſiderable Body. Thoſe of the beſt Quality, were the Earl of Glencairn, the Lords of Boyde, and Ochiltrie, the Sheriff of Aire, the Lairds of Craigie, Seſnock, Carnal, Bar, and Garthgirth.

The Burghers of Perth aſſiſted by great Numbers of the Nobility and Gentry.

The Queen underſtanding the Earl of Glencarn was at the Head of the Malcontents, and that there were Seven Thouſand ſtout Gentlemen, beſides Townſmen, in Perth; Her Majeſty having Intelligence of this formidable Preparation, ſent the Earl of Argyle, and Lord James, Prior of St. Andrews, to demand the Reaſon of their drawing together, and move for an Accommodation. By the way this Lord James was natural Son to King James the Fifth and bred a Religious: But having no Fancy for a Monaſtick Profeſſion, he deſir'd the Queen to make him Earl of Murray. The Queen, by the Advice of the Regent her Mother, endeavour'd to perſwade him to go on in the courſe of his Education, and maintain that Choice the King his Father had made for him. And for his Encouragement ſhe promis'd to prefer him to the beſt Poſt of Wealth and Honour, a Church Man could expect. But all this Proſpect of Favour was ſlighted by the Prior. By being denied the Earldom, he was diſoblig'd to the higheſt degree, and made it his Buſineſs to play his Revenge upon the Regent ever after.

Lesley.

To return, the Earl of Glencairn and the Laird of Dun being appointed to treat with the Earl of Argyle and Lord James, told them in Anſwer to their firſt Queſtion, that their Troops March'd to Perth to protect their Friends, and preſerve the Town. And as to the Accommodation propos'd by the Queen's Commiſſioners, they declar'd, that provided her Majeſty would forbear diſturbing the Profeſſors of the true Religion, and ſuffer the Reformation to proceed, they were ready to obey her Commands in all other things.

The Character of theſe Commiſſioners not being unacceptable to the Forces in Perth, made the Propoſals the better receiv'd: Eſpecially ſince they engag'd, that if either the Queen rejected reaſonable Terms, or made the leaſt Infraction upon the Accommodation, they would then immediately joyn the Congregation, and run the ſame Riſque with them. And thus at the Inſtance of theſe two Noble-men, the following Articles were ſign'd. Firſt, That both the Armies ſhould be disbanded, and the Town left open for the Queen. Secondly, That none of the Burghers ſhould be call'd to an Account, or any way diſturb'd for the late Alterations in Religion. Thirdly, That no French ſhould enter the Town, nor March within Three Miles of it. Fourthly, That all other Differences ſhould be referr'd to the next Parliament, or the meeting of the Eſtates.

May 29. 1559. A Treaty ſign'd between the Regent and the Congregation.

As ſoon as the Forces were disbanded, the Queen Regent March'd into the Town with ſome Scotch Troops in French Pay. Theſe were conſtrued French Forces, and complain'd of as a Breach of the Articles. Beſides, ſome of the Burghers were fin'd, and others Baniſh'd, the Magiſtracy was diſplac'd, a Garriſon left in the Town, and Orders given that none but the Roman Catholick Religion ſhould be allow'd.

When this unexpected Uſage was complain'd of, ſhe replied, as Spotſwood reports, that Promiſes were not to be kept with Hereticks: And that Princes ſhould not be preſs'd too cloſe upon their Words. She is likewiſe ſaid to drop ſome very hard Expreſſions againſt thoſe of the Congregation. And thus by indulging her Paſſion, by ſtreining her Honour, and diſcovering her Diſaffection, ſhe loſt her Intereſt, and made her Authority little conſider'd. (n)

The Second Covenant at Perth.

The Congregation ſuſpecting the Queen might forget the Capitulation, renew'd their Covenant or Confederacy at Perth. And here the Congregations of Fyfe, Perth, Dundee, Angus, Mearns, and Monroſſe, enter into a Solemn Engagement to aſſiſt each other, in doing all things requir'd of God in his Scripture, that may be to his Glory: And at their whole Powers to deſtroy and put away all things that doth Diſhonour to his Name; ſo that God may be truly and purely Worſhipp'd. And in Caſe any Perſon of the Congregation ſhould receive any Trouble or Dammage in proſecuting the Buſineſs abovemention'd, that then the whole Body ſhould ſtand by him with their Lives and Fortunes againſt all Perſons whatſoever, that ſhould diſturb them in the Exerciſe of Religion, or any thing relating to that Affair. This Second Covenant, as they call it, is in the Name of the whole Congregation Subſcrib'd by Two Earls, the Prior of St. Andrews, Two Lords and a Gentleman of Condition.

June 14.

The Queen failing in the Articles, the Earl of Argyle, and Lord James left her, and went over to the Congregation. And now things growing towards a Rupture, there was a Rendevouz of the Party appointed at St. Andrews. In the mean time, ſome of the principal Noblemen went to Craile, where they were join'd with conſiderable Numbers. And here Knox plaied his Rhetorick in the Pulpit, and endeavor'd to raiſe their Spirits for a Conteſt with the Government. “He put them in mind, how he had told them at Perth, that there was no clear dealing to be expected from the Queen, and that the Treaty would not be made good. That ſince this Prediction was now matter of Fact, he exhorted them not to rely upon deluſive Promiſes any longer: That where there was no regard to good Faith, 'twas in vain to expect any ſolid Peace. That 'till the Foreigners were expell'd the Kingdom, and one of the Parties had cruſh'd the other, there was no likelyhood of publick Repoſe: That there was nothing therefore left but to prepare for Extremities, to exert themſelves like Men, and reſolve either to die, or conquer. (o)

Knox Preaches up Reſiſtance againſt the Government in Defence of Religion.

(o) Spotſwood.

This Diſcourſe work'd ſo ſtrongly upon the Audience, that they fell immediately to pulling down Altars and Images, and proceeding with their Reformation in the ſame tumultuous manner they had done before. From Craile they march'd to Auſtruther, and from thence to St. Andrews. Here Knox mounted the Pulpit, and preaching upon the Text of our Saviour's purging the Temple, he applied the Corruption in the Jewiſh Church, to the preſent Caſe. And from thence went on to dilate upon the Duty of thoſe to whom God had given Authority; taking it for granted that thoſe who headed the Congregation were a legal Magiſtracy, and had their Commiſſion from Heaven. And thus by begging the Queſtion, and arguing from falſe Premiſes, the Concluſion paſs'd. The People being thus prepar'd, and Preach'd into a Ferment, immediately took the Signal, ravag'd the Churches, levell'd the Monaſteries, and in ſhort, Reform'd, like the Goths and Vandals, at the Sacking of Rome.

The Queen Regent receiving Advice of what was done, order'd the French Troops to march towards St. Andrews, and iſſued her Proclamation to the Liege Subjects to equip themſelves for the Field, and attend her at Couper.

The Lords of the Congregation endeavour'd to ſeize ſome Paſſes, and prevent the Regent in her Rendevouz. And now the Two Armies fac'd each other at Couper-moor, and nothing but a ſmall River was between. The French Part of the Regent's Army were commanded by Monſieur d'Oſell, and her Scotch Troops by the Duke of Chattelerault. The Queen diſtruſting the Affection of her Forces, offer'd a Peace, but that being not accepted upon the Conditions propos'd, a Truce was agreed to for Eight Days: During which Time, Commiſſioners were to be ſent to St. Andrews with ſufficient Powers for a full Accommodation. The Queen not ſending the Commiſſioners to St. Andrews within the Time expected, ſhe was deſir'd to withdraw the Garriſon from Perth, purſuant to the late Treaty, but returning no Anſwer to the Lords of the Congregation, they ſet down before the Town, and obliged the Garriſon to ſurrender. From hence they advanc'd to Schone, demoliſh'd the Monaſtery, and burn'd the Church. And receiving Intelligence the Queen intended to put a French Garriſon in Sterling, to ſecure that Paſs, and cut off their Communication with their Friends in the Southern Parts, they made a Night march thither: And here, according to their cuſtomary Zeal, they raz'd the Monaſteries, and defac'd the Churches. From hence they mov'd forward to Linthingow, which they entertain'd with the ſame Uſage. From Linthingow they come on to Edinborough: But before they arriv'd there, the Reforming Mobb roſe upon the Magiſtracy, plunder'd all the Monaſteries, and then pull'd them down.

Idem.

The Queen Regent being too weak to arreſt this Motion, publiſh'd a Proclamation to this Effect.

The Queen Regent's Proclamation.

She declares, That a ſeditious Party of the Leiges, calling themſelves the Congregation, had rais'd an Army, and cover'd their Proceedings with Religion: That to make all People eaſy in Matters of Conſcience, and to compoſe the preſent Differences, ſhe had offer'd to call a Parliament in January next, or ſooner; that their Religion was to be ſettled by the Advice of the Eſtates: And that in the mean Time, every one had the Liberty of enjoying his Perſwaſion. That theſe Overtures were granted by the Advice of the Lords of the Privy Council. But that all this Lenity and fair Propoſals had been diſregarded by the Congregation. 'Twas plain therefore, Religion was none of their Buſineſs: But that ſubverting the Government, and ſeizing the Crown was what they aim'd at. She commands therefore the Congregation to live like Subjects and diſperſe immediately, under the Penalties of High Treaſon.

The Defence of the Lords of the Congregation.

Againſt this Charge in the Proclamation, the Lords of the Congregation make a lame Defence. They declare their Intention was only to extirpate Idolatry, countenance the true Religion, and protect thoſe that preach'd it: And that, provided Liberty of Conſcience was allow'd them, they were ready to continue in all Duty towards their Sovereign, and her Mother the Regent. That is in other Language, unleſs they could pull down Monaſteries, diſfurniſh Churches, ſet ſet up what Religion they pleas'd, and enjoy it without Diſturbance, they were reſolv'd to take the Field, and defy the Government. But here 'tis ſomewhat ſuprizing, that Knox and the other Preachers, who inſiſted ſo much upon Scripture, ſhould forget to put their Audience in Mind of the Apoſtle's Command, Let every Soul be Subject to the higher Powers, for there is no Power but of God: Whoſoever therefore reſiſts the Power, reſiſts the Ordinance of God, and they that reſiſt ſhall receive to themſelves Damnation. And as for the Pretence of extirpating Idolatry, what Precedent have they in Scripture that this was ever done by the Jewiſh Mobb, or by any other Direction than that of the ſupreme Magiſtrate? The Brazen Serpent ſtood, the Groves were not cut down, nor the Idols deſtroy'd, till the Kings gave Order about it. (p) Beſides, how Criminal ſoever the Worſhip of Images, and the Adoration of the Hoſt may be, it certainly falls far ſhort of the Malignity of the Pagan Idolatry: For the Heathens addreſs'd ſcandalous Beings, and worſhip'd Devils: Their religious Rites were Savage and licentious, they ſacrific'd their Children to their pretended Deities, and Impurity and Debauch were Part of their Religion. Now ſince nothing of this kind can be objected to the Papiſts; they ought not to be blackn'd beyond Equity and Truth, rang'd with Heathen Idolaters, and made as bad as the Canaanites in the Old Teſtament.

(p) 1 Kings 15. 2 Kings 23.

To proceed; not long after the Lords Defence, a Truce was concluded upon theſe Articles.

Firſt, That all the Forces of the Congregation ſhould immediately quit Edinborough, but as to the Burghers, they might either ſtay, or remove at Pleaſure. Secondly, That the Congregation ſhall ſurrender the Palace of Edinborough, reſtore the Furniture, and return the Mint into the Queen's Hand. Thirdly, That the Lords and all other Members of the Congregation ſhould live in Obedience to the Government, and ſubmit to the Regent's Authority. Fourthly, That the Congregation ſhould not diſtreſs any of the Clergy in their Perſons, or Eſtates. Fifthly, That the Congregation ſhould not inſult any Religious Houſes, pull down Churches, nor rifle them. Sixthly, That the Burghers of Edinborough ſhould profeſs what Religion they pleas'd till the 10th of January next. Seventhly, And that in the mean Time, neither the Queen Regent, the Magiſtracy, nor the Biſhops, were to give any Manner of Diſturbance to the Preachers or to their Audience, upon the Score of Religion. (q) After the Signing theſe Articles, the French Troops march'd into Leith, and the Lords of Congregation retir'd towards the weſtern Counties.

Another Treaty concluded.

(q) Spotſwood, Leſley.

The Queen Regent, tho' inclin'd to make good the Treaty, was willing to re-eſtabliſh the Roman Catholick Worſhip as far as the Caſe would bear. To this Purpoſe ſhe ſent the Duke of Chatelerault, the Earl of Huntly, and Lord Seton, to acquaint the Magiſtracy and Common Council of Edinborough, that ſhe deſir'd St. Giles's Church for the Exerciſe of her Religion; and that the Miniſter, John Willock, might Preach in ſome other Pariſh. The Magiſtrates anſwer'd, That St. Giles's Church was ſecur'd them by an Article in the Truce, and that they could not part with it; the Earl of Huntly replied, That the Queen did not inſiſt on this Matter as a Right, but requeſted it as a Favour. And then going lower in his Application, he deſired, That if they would not quit the Pulpit at St. Giles's, they would permit, at leaſt, that Maſs might be ſaid, either before or after Sermon, in that Church: Their Anſwer was, The Queen Regent refuſ'd St. Giles's Church in Edinborough for the Exerciſe of her Religion.

they were now in Poſſeſſion of that Church, and would never conſent to the Return of Idolatry: Concluding with a menacing Expreſſion, that in Caſe any Violence was offer'd, they would apply to the next Remedy.

The French Officers thought the Magiſtrates of Edinborough much too ſtiff and uncourtly with the Queen: And being reſolv'd to take ſome Revenge for this Affront, they came into St. Giles's in Sermon-time, and talk'd ſo loud that the Preacher could not be heard. The Behaviour of theſe foreign Troops was no leſs diſagreeable at Leith: For here they cut the Preacher's Pulpit in Pieces, ſet up the Maſs, and ſuppreſs'd the Reform'd Common-Prayer. This Common-Prayer, as the learned Heylin obſerves, was the Service uſed in England. For the Scots, to recommend themſelves to Queen Elizabeth's Protection, had receiv'd the Engliſh Liturgy with the Rubrick annex'd: And for ſome Time the Kirk of Scotland us'd no other Form. About this Time, Monſieur Crook, a French Gentleman, was diſpatch'd from the King and Queen of France, to acquaint the Regent that a farther ſupply of Men and Money would quick arrive. By the Way, Henry the II. King of France, being lately killed at Tilting, he was ſucceeded by his Son Francis, who married the Queen of Scots. The Agent Crook brought Letters from theſe Two Princes to Lord James, Prior of St. Andrew's: I ſhall only mention that from the Queen.

The Queen of Scots Letter to the Lord James.

Couſin,

“I Am extremely ſurpriz'd that a Perſon ſo nearly related, and ſo much oblig'd, ſhould diſcover ſuch ill Temper and Preſumption, as at the ſame Time to diſhonour the divine Majeſty, and break in upon my Authority, and that of the King my Huſband. For 'tis an aſtoniſhing Thing to conſider, that you who had formerly charg'd the Duke of Chatelerault, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, with Incroachments upon my Prerogative, ſhould now appear at the Head of a Faction your ſelf, and give the laſt Inſtances of Diſregard and Diſloyalty. I am extremely afflicted to find my Expectation thus lamentably diſappointed, and could ſooner have ſuppos'd ſuch Miſbehaviour in any of my Subjects, than in you. Indeed, I am willing rather to queſtion my Intelligence, than believe you ſo far loſt to Principle and Senſe, as to fall into ſuch hideous Miſconduct.

“No Body is more willing to make the beſt Conſtruction, than my ſelf: I pray God enlighten your Mind that you may recover your wrong Steps, alter your Management, and prove your ſelf a Man of Honour and Loyalty. I earneſtly deſire you to make what Satisfaction you can for your former Miſbehaviour: This is your only expedient to abate our juſt Diſpleaſure, for without Recollection, and ſpeedy Return, you'll certainly find a very ſenſible Correction; I ſhould be extremely ſorry the King and my ſelf ſhould be forc'd upon this Method. I pray God protect you from all Danger, Leſley.

MARY.

The Lord James, inſtead of asking Pardon, made a bold Juſtification of his Conduct. “He told Monſieur Crook, he was not the leaſt Conſcious of failing in his Duty to his Sovereign. He own'd his joining the Reforming Nobility; but this he was far from reckning a Fault: That the late enterprize had no ſecular View: Nothing was intended but the Advancement of God's Honour, and the Purity of Religion. That to deſiſt from promoting ſuch worthy Ends, was in Effect to renounce his Saviour. That with Reſervation of Liberty as to this Point, himſelf, and the reſt charg'd with Rebellion, would give the utmoſt Obedience to their Majeſty's Commands.” This Anſwer he deliver'd in Writing to Monſieur Crook, who ſhew'd it to the Queen Regent: The Regent return'd it with this Cenſure: That ſuch a proud and rebellious Anſwer was never given to a King and Queen. (s)

His Apology.

(s) Spotſwood pag. 131.

John Knox, and the reſt of his Fraternity, had inſtructed Lord James in this conditional Loyalty, and furniſh'd the Congregation with Principles to turn Faith into Faction, and fly in the Face of the Government. To give the Reader ſome of their Doctrine in the Words of their own Hiſtorian. They make no Scruple to declare the Authority of Princes to be of God, and that they ought to be honour'd and obey'd, even for conſcience ſake, provided they command nothing expreſly repugning to God's Commandment, and plainly reveal'd Will. But, That if wicked Perſons move Princes to command Things manifeſtly wicked; in this Caſe they affirm, That ſuch as can, and do, bridle thoſe inordinate Appetites of ſuch miſled Princes, cannot be accus'd as Reſiſtaries of the Authority which is God's good Ordinance: To bridle the Rage and Fury of miſled Princes in free Kingdoms and Realms, appertains to the Nobility, and alſo to the Barons and People, whoſe Votes and Conſent are to be required in all great and weighty Matters of the Commonwealth; which if they do not, they declare themſelves criminal with their miſled Princes, and ſo ſubject to the ſame Vengeance of God which they deſerve, for that they pollute the Seat of Juſtice, and do as it were, make God the Author of Iniquity. (t)

The Opinion of the Scotch Miniſters, touching Obedience to Magiſtrates.

(t) Hiſt. Reformation of Religion in Scotland, pag. 184.

By this Doctrine, the Nobility and People have not only a Liberty to reſiſt upon the Score of Male-Adminiſtration; and when that happens, themſelves are the only Judges: So that in ſhort, they are to be govern'd no longer than they think fit. But this is not the hardeſt of the Caſe, for if the Prince falls into Male-Adminiſtration, if he preſſes upon Property, or countenances a Religion the People don't like, they are then under a Neceſſity of embroiling the Government, of fighting their Sovereign, and redreſſing their Grievances by Force. If the Nobility and Perſons of Condition don't head the Peaſantry, and go all this Length, they are ſaid to have a Share in their Prince's Guilt, they are falſe to their Truſt, they pollute the Seat of Juſtice, and make God, as it were, the Author of Iniquity.

The Regents receiving a ſmall Reinforcement from France, and fortifying the Port of Iſith, gave diſguſt to the Lords of the Congregation, who ſent her a remonſtrating Letter upon this Occaſion. 'Twas ſubſcrib'd by the Duke of Chatelerault, and the Earl of Arran his eldeſt Son, &c. I mention theſe Two noble Men, becauſe they had lately quitted the Court, and come into the Aſſociation.

The Queen Regent to leſſen the Credit of the confederate Lords, put out another Proclamation. Here amongſt other Things, ſhe declar'd, That Rebellion was the Meaning, and Religion only the Cover of their Enterprize: That this was plain by their taking Broughtre

Caſtle, and diſcharging the Governour; by the Duke of Chatelerault's Slighting her offer, with reference to an Accommodation: By that Duke's diſpatching Orders to the free Burroughs to chuſe ſuch Magiſtrates as the Congregation thought ſerviceable to their Cauſe: And farther, by their ſtopping the Conveyance of Proviſion to her Court: She likewiſe charg'd them with correſponding with England, and making the Earl of Arran a Promiſe of the Crown.

Spotſwood.

The Lords endeavour'd to purge themſelves by a Declaration, and drawing their Forces together, march to Edinborough; and at the ſame Time, the Queen with the French Troops, and ſome of the Scotch Nobility, entred Leith.

The Differences being kept on Foot, and growing wider, the Lords of the Congregation, with a conſiderable Number of Barons and Burgeſſes, met in Council to conſult upon farther Meaſures. And here the Lord Preſident Ruthen ſuggeſted, that ſince the Queen Regent had refus'd their Petition; ſince there was no likelihood the foreign Troops would be ſent home, and the Garriſon of Leith evacuated; ſince this was the Caſe, they were now to apply to another Expedient. The regard for the Regent's Authority was ſomewhat of a Reſtraint at firſt, and kept many of the Council from declaring their Opinion. After ſome Pauſe, they got over this Difficulty, and began to propoſe the diſplacing Her Majeſty: This lively Motion carried ſomething of Danger in't for Want of Precedents. They granted, ſuch a Method had ſometimes been uſed, but then 'twas always recommended with the Colour of Authority, and done in the Name of the Sovereign. But that the Nobility and Eſtates, ſhould venture thus far without, and which is more, againſt the Prince's Conſent, was altogether new, and would never paſs without Cenſure. Others were of Opinion, That ſince ſhe was only Regent, ſhe might have a Stop put to her Adminiſtration, and not be ſuff*e*r'd to uſe the King and Queen's Name, to the Ruin of the Kingdom. The Board being thus divided, 'twas thought proper to conſult the Preachers: And John Willock and John Knox being ſent for, gave in their Opinions to this Effect.

The Lords of the Congregation conſult about depoſing the Queen Regent.

Willock told them, That "notwithſtanding Magiſtracy was God's Ordinance, and that Governors have their Commiſſion from the divine Majeſty, yet their Power is not altogether Abſolute, and without Reſerve: Their Authority is convey'd with Reſtrictions, and has its Limitations in the Word of God. 'Tis granted, God has made Magiſtrates his Vicegerents, done them the Honour of his own Title, and call'd them Gods. But notwithſtanding this Privilege, he has never ſo unalterably fix'd any in their Stations, as not to allow their being ſet aſide when Juſtice requires. For as Subjects are commanded to obey their Magiſtrates, ſo Magiſtrates are not without Reſtraints and Obligations on their Part: And the Duties both of one and the other, are mark'd in Scripture. In depoſing Princes, God does not always exert his Omnipotency, and act by immediate Power, but ſometimes makes Uſe of humane Means for this Purpoſe. Thus by Aſah he remov'd Maacha that Prince's Mother from that Poſt of Honour and Authority ſhe had ſometime held: By Jehu God deſtroy'd Jehoram and all Ahab's Family: And by ſeveral others he depos'd even thoſe Princes who had been placed in the Throne by his ſpecial Appointment.

Willock and Knox's Opinion upon the Queſtion.

From theſe Precedents he inferr'd, "That ſince the Queen Regent had miſmanag'd her Character, and fail'd in the Main of her Duty, ſince ſhe had not perform'd the Functions of Juſtice, ſince ſhe had not protected her Subjects from foreign Invaſion, and refus'd to ſuffer the Word of God to have its free Courſe: In ſhort, ſince ſhe countenanc'd Superſtition, and diſregarded the Advice of the Nobility, he thought they might juſtly ſet her aſide, and cancel her Authority.

John Knox being deſir'd to ſpeak next, after he had approv'd his Brother Willock's Opinion in every Part, thought fit to throw in a Sentence or Two by Way of Moderation: "The Iniquity of the Queen Regent, ſays he, ought not to alienate the Affection of the Subjects, or make them withdraw their Obedience due to their Sovereign: He likewiſe wiſh'd there might be a Reſervation of Favour in the Sentence againſt the Regent: And that when ſhe recollected her Miſtakes, alter'd her Management, and reſign'd to good Council, ſhe might be re-admitted to the Adminiſtration of which ſhe was now juſtly depriv'd.

Upon this Reſolution of Knox and Willock, the learned Archbiſhop Spotſwood makes the following Remark: Firſt, He taxes them with Want of Diſcretion, for declaring themſelves at all upon the Queſtion. Secondly, He pronounces their Opinion faulty and unwarrantable. 'Tis true, the ſupreme Magiſtrate's Power is not without Limitation: They have Rules ſet them by God Almighty, and they may ſometimes fall into great Miſmanagement: But granting all this, as he continues, Subjects are no where permitted to riſe upon their Sovereigns, and call them to an Account: His Reaſon is, becauſe God has reſerv'd the Puniſhment of Princes to himſelf.

Spotſwood's Hiſt. pag. 137.

And as for their Precedents, they are nothing to the Purpoſe; for Aſah was King of Judah, and ſupreme Magiſtrate; and tho' Maacha was his Mother, ſhe was his Subject at the ſame Time: What ſhould hinder therefore but that the King her Son, might lawfully recal his Favour, and remove her from that Poſt of Authority in which ſhe had ſo remarkably misbehav'd herſelf? As to the Inſtance of Jehu, 'tis no leſs wide of the Point: For Jehu was anointed King by a Prophet, and had an expreſs Order to ſet up againſt Jehoram, and deſtroy Ahab's Family: And tho' God who gives Kingdoms may take them away at his Pleaſure; yet, to uſe the Archbiſhop's Words, No Man hath this Power, and they that preſume otherwiſe, go expreſly againſt the Commandment of God, and the Duty of Chriſtian Profeſſion.

Ibid.

Notwithſtanding the falſe Reaſoning upon which Willock and Knox form'd their Reſolution, the Council approv'd their Caſuiſtry: For the Queſtion being put to the Vote, all the Lords, Barons, and Burgeſſes, declar'd unanimouſly for the Regent's Deprivation. Thus an Inſtrument was drawn up, in which, making uſe of the King and Queen's Name, they ſuſpended her Commiſſion, and diſcharg'd her Authority till the next Parliament ſhould be ſummon'd by their Advice. This Ordinance order'd to be publiſh'd in all the great Towns of the Kingdom, was ſign'd in this Form; By us the Nobility and Commons of the Proteſtants of the Church of Scotland.

The Lords of the Congregation publiſh an Ordnance to diſcharge the Regent's Authority.

Octob. 23. 1559. Spotſwood.

The Lords of the Congregation ſent a Herauld to acquaint the Queen Regent with what was done, deſire her to quit Leith, and command the French Garriſon to march out. The

Regent refuſing to comply, the Lords reſolv'd to ſit down before the Town, and attempt to carry it by Scalado; but finding ſome of their Party go off, their Secrets diſcover'd to the Regent, and their Troops mutiny for Want of Pay, they grew jealous of each other, and drop'd the Deſign: To furniſh their Troops, the Noble-men agreed to coin their Plate, but they wanted the Tools of the Mint to make this Expedient practicable. Their only Remedy was a Remittance from England: But this, they were afraid, could not reach them till 'twas too late: And for farther Diſcouragement, they had ſome unfortunate Skirmiſhes with the French. In ſhort, they found themſelves oblig'd to quit Edinborough, and retire to Striveling: And now they were much perplex'd, and at a Stand which Way to manage, 'till Knox reliev'd them with his Rhetorick, and recover'd their Spirits. They had lately written to Secretary Cecill to ſolicite Queen Elizabeth for ſupplies: This Miniſter returning a cold and ambiguous Anſwer, the Lords almoſt deſpar'd of Succeſs at the Engliſh Court. They reſolv'd therefore to make no farther Application, but gave Knox the Liberty of purſuing that Affair as he thought fit. Knox having this general Commiſſion, ſent Cecill another Letter; told him 'twas evident the French deſign'd a Conqueſt of Scotland: That the Lords and their Party were extremely diſtreſs'd: And that unleſs they were ſpeedily aſſiſted with Money from England, they would be oblig'd to diſband their Forces, and leave the Country to the Enemy: That if the Engliſh ſtood neuter, and ſuffer'd the French to make a Province of Scotland, 'twas eaſy for them to foreſee the Conſequence: At laſt he preſſes Cecill for a poſitive and ſpeedy Anſwer. (u)

The Progreſs of the French Troops, and the Reſentment Queen Elizabeth had taken againſt the Courts of Scotland and France for quartering her Arms, claiming her Crown, and wearing her Title, prevail'd with her to conſider Knox's Letter, and engage with the Lords of the Congregation. Before this Reſolution was taken, the Matter was debated in Council, where ſome of the Board declar'd, That the ſupporting the Subjects of another Prince in their Rebellion, would be an ill Precedent, and might draw a dangerous War on her Majeſty: But by others 'twas argued, That to protect her Neighbours from the Oppreſſion of Strangers, and ſtop the French from fortifying themſelves in Scotland, was both defenſible and neceſſary.

The Queen going in with this laſt Opinion, an Anſwer was immediately return'd, and a Promiſe given of Aſſiſtance with Men and Money. And not long after the Duke of Norfolk came to Berwick, where being met by the Prior of St. Andrews, the Lord Ruthen, and ſome other Commiſſioners from the Congregation, a Treaty was ſign'd. By the laſt Article the Confederate Lords declar'd, 'Twas not their Intention by this Alliance to diſengage themſelves from their Allegiance to their Sovereign Lady the Queen, but to ſhew themſelves Obedient both to her Majeſty, and the French King her Husband, in every Thing not ſubverſive of the Liberties of their Country.

The English Exiles move for a Liberty of conforming to the Reformation in foreign Churches.

To look back a little, and return to England: Some of the Engliſh Exiles, who had been friendly entertain'd in Swizzerland and Geneva, came Home prepoſſeſs'd in Favour of the Model of thoſe Churches: And thus being diſaffected to our Common-Prayer, they would gladly have ſet up a foreign Eſtabliſhment. To this Purpoſe, they had prevail'd with ſome Perſons of Character abroad, to ſolicit the Queen to indulge them a Latitude, and leave them to their Inclination in theſe Matters. But the Queen, foreſeeing the Inconvenience of ſuch a Permiſſion, return'd theſe Strangers an Anſwer, that 'twas not conſiſtent with her Intereſt and Honour, to allow a Diverſity of Religious Practice: That in Germany the Princes and States owning a Dependance on the Pope or Emperor, were oblig'd to govern accordingly, to compound for their Quiet, and relax upon ſeveral Heads; but that in England, where none but herſelf and Council govern'd, the Caſe was different. The depriv'd Biſhops Addreſs to the Queen concerning Religion.

The Popiſh Biſhops, not long after their Deprivation, addreſs'd the Queen to return to their Communion: They put her in Mind Chriſtianity was firſt planted in England by the Church of Rome: They deſired her Majeſty to recollect the Supremacy of that See: And in Proof of this Privilege they mention Athanaſius's being Cenſur'd by Pope Liberius and a Roman Council: And that the Emperor reprimanded Athanaſius for oppoſing the Head of the Church. But in this laſt Inſtance they plainly miſreport the Caſe; for Athanaſius never received a Rebuke from the Emperor for Non-ſubmiſſion to the Papal Supremacy. Nothing of the Modern Pretenſions were challeng'd at that Time of Day: On the contrary, the Emperor Conſtantius gave Pope Liberius a Reprimand for refuſing to comply with the Arrian Biſhops, and ſign the Condemnation of Athanaſius. He told the Pope he was ſurprized to find him ſo hardy in his Incompliance: And that being but a ſingle Biſhop, he ſhould ſtand out againſt ſo great a Majority of the ſame Order. (x.)

Her Majeſty's Anſwer.

The Biſhops having ſuggeſted the Queen's being miſled by evil Counſellors, and reflected on her Father and Brother's Memory, put her upon returning a rugged Anſwer. I ſhall omit the Terms, and only mention ſome Part of the Matter. Her Letter written in the Council-Chamber replies, That the Chriſtian Faith was not firſt propagated in this Iſland by any Miſſionaries from Rome: And that Joſeph of Arimathea was the Britiſh Apoſtle. But here her Majeſty, or her Council, miſt the Matter of Fact, as the Reader may ſee in the firſt Part of this Work. *

Dec. the 6th.

As for Athanaſius being Cenſured by Liberius, her Majeſty turns that Inſtance upon them with Force enough. She takes Notice how noble a Champion this Biſhop was for the Catholick Faith: Do you not, ſays her Majeſty, own his Creed to this very Day? Dare any of ye affirm him a Schiſmatick? You are not, I conceive, arriv'd to ſuch a Pitch of Confidence. Now if Athanaſius was right, and the Pope was wrong in the Arrian Conteſt; if the Matter ſtands thus, Why mayn't other Chriſtians quit your Church without the Imputation of Schiſm?

The Conſecration of Archbiſhop Parker, and other Biſhops.

In the Middle of December, this Year, Doctor Parker was conſecrated Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And here none of the Cuſtomary Forms of Congè d'eſlire, (z) Certificate of the Dean and Chapter, (a) Confirmation at the Arches, the Archbiſhop's Homage to the Queen, (b) nor any requiſite Preliminary, was omitted. Now the Inſtruments for theſe Purpoſes not being commonly met with, I have put them in the Records. When the Ceremony of the Confirmation was over, the Vicar-General, the Dean of the Arches, and and other Officers of that Court, were entertain'd at the Nag's-Head Tavern in Cheapſide. This Treat gave Occaſion to the ſenſleſs Story of the Nag's Head-Conſecration. A full Diſproof of this Calumny may be ſeen in Parker's Regiſter, where both the Solemnities of the Conſecration, and every Thing præ-required, is enter'd at large. To throw in a Word or two: This Prelate was conſecrated in Lambeth-Chappel on Sunday the 17th of December. Pearſon, the Archbiſhop's Chaplain read the Service, and the Sermon was preached by Scory, Elect of Hereford, who was one of thoſe who officiated in the Conſecration. The other three were William Barlow, late Biſhop of Bath and Wells, Elect of Chicheſter, Miles Coverdale late Biſhop of Exeter, and John Hodſkins, Suffragan of Bedford. But ſince this whole Solemnity ſtands on Record both in Bennet-College and the Lambeth-Regiſter; ſince 'tis tranſcribed at length by Archbiſhop Bramhall, and other Writers of Character, there's no need of going farther in the Relation. The Reader, if he pleaſes, may ſee it in my Supplement to Morery's Dictionary. I ſhall only add, that having compared the printed Record with a Copy in the Paper-Office, I find them both agree.

To proceed; Though the Revenues of the Archbiſhoprick were not ſeculariz'd to that Degree, as to ſtand in need of a Commendam, yet ſince this Relief is ſometimes granted by the Crown to more Indigent Sees, I thought it might not be improper to give the Reader a View of the Form. (c)

Dec. 21. 1559.

After the See of Canterbury was thus fill'd, Thirteen other Biſhops were conſecrated within the Compaſs of a Year, and Eight of them before the End of January. Their Names are, Dr. Edmund Grindal, who was conſecrated Biſhop of London, Dr. Richard Cox was promoted to the See of Ely, Dr. Edwyn Sandys to Worceſter, and Dr. Rowland Merrick to that of Bangor. Dr. Nicholas Bullingham was conſecrated to Lincoln, Mr. John Jewel to Saliſbury, Dr. Thomas Young to St. Davids, and Mr. Richard Davis to St. Aſaph. To proceed; There were Three other Biſhops conſecrated on the 24th of March; that is, Mr. Thomas Bentham for Coventry and Litchfield, Mr. Gilbert Berkley for Bath and Wells, and Dr. Edmund Gueſt for Rocheſter: And not long after, William Alley was conſecrated Biſhop of Exeter, and Mr. John Parkhurſt of Norwich.

July 14.
Sept. 1.

Goodwin reckons the Death of Tonſtal, Biſhop of Durham, to this Year. He was born at Hatchford, in the County of Richmond, and deſcended from an Ancient and Conſiderable Family. As to his Learning, he was an exact Grecian, not unacquainted with Hebrew, an Eminent Mathematician, a Famous Orator, and no leſs Commendable for his Knowledge in Divinity and Law. For theſe Attainments he was recommended to Archbiſhop Warham, who made him his Vicar-General. This Archbiſhop preſented him to the King, who made him Maſter of the Rolls, Privy-Seal, and Biſhop of London, from whence he was tranſlated to Durham in the Year 1530. He diſcharg'd ſeveral Embaſſies to great Commendation. He was a very moderate Roman Catholick, diſown'd the Pope's Supremacy in the Reign of King Henry the VIIIth, and approv'd the Marriage of Prieſts. He was of an unproſecuting Temper, and managed with great Gentleneſs and Good-nature in Queen Mary's Reign. He was depriv'd, as hath been obſerved, in this Reign for refuſing the Oath of Supremacy, and committed to the Cuſtody of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who treated him Generouſly. He died in his 86th Year, was buried in Lambeth Church, and had the Reſpect of a Pompous Funeral.

Godwin de Præſul. Angl.

The next remarkable Occurrence is, Biſhop Jewel's Sermon at Paul's-Croſs: 'Twas preach'd in Lent this Year upon theſe Words of the Apoſtle St. Paul, I have received of the Lord that which alſo I deliver unto you. * From this Text he took Occaſion to make that remarkable Challenge in Defence of the Reformation. The Church of England was reproach'd with Novelty by the Papiſts, and charg'd with departing from Primitive Doctrine and Practice. To wipe off theſe Aſperſions, the Biſhop put the Cauſe upon a bold Iſſue, and declared in the Pulpit, “ That if any Learned Men of all our Adverſaries, or if all the Learned Men that are alive, are able to bring any one ſufficient Sentence out of any old Catholick Doctor or Father, or out of any old General Council, or out of the Holy Scriptures of God, or any one Example of the Primitive Church, whereby it may be clearly and plainly prov'd, that for the firſt Six hundred Years after Chriſt there was any private Maſs in the World: Or that there was then any Communion adminiſter'd under one Kind, or that the People had their Common-Prayer in a Language which they did not underſtand: Or that the Biſhop of Rome was then called Univerſal Biſhop, or Head of the Univerſal Church: Or that the People were then taught to believe, that Chriſt's Body is really, ſubſtantially, corporally, carnally, or naturally, in the Sacrament: Or that his Body is, or may be, in a Thouſand Places, or more, at one Time: Or that the Prieſt did then hold up the Sacrament over his Head: Or that the People did then fall down and worſhip it with Godly (that is Divine) Honour: Or that the Sacrament was then, or now ought to be, fix'd depending under a Canopy: Or that in the Sacrament, after the Words of Conſecration, there remains only the Accidents and Appearances, without the Subſtance, of Bread and Wine: Or that the Prieſt then divided the Sacrament in three Parts, and afterwards received himſelf all alone: Or that whoſoever had affirmed the Sacrament a Figure, a Pledge, a Token, or a Remembrance, of Chriſt's Body, had been condemn'd for a Heretick: Or that it was then lawful to have Thirty, Twenty, Fifteen, Ten or Five Maſſes to be ſaid in a Church in one Day: Or that Images were then ſet up in Churches for People to worſhip them: Or that the Laity were then forbid to read the Scriptures in the Language of the Country: Or that 'twas then lawful for the Prieſt to pronounce the Words of Conſecration ſo low, as to be heard by none but himſelf: Or that the Prieſt had then Authority to offer up Chriſt to his Father: Or to communicate and receive the Sacrament for another, as they do: Or to apply the Virtue of Chriſt's Death and Paſſion to any Man by the Means of the Maſs: Or that 'twas then thought ſound Doctrine to affirm that the Maſs ex opere Operato, that is, by the bare Force of the Adminiſtration, and without Regard to the Qualifications of the Perſon receiving, is able to diſcharge any Part of our Sins: Or that then any Chriſtian call'd the Sacrament his Lord, and his God: Or that the People were then taught to believe the Body of Chriſt remains in the Sacrament, as long as the Accidents of the “ Bread continue without Corruption: Or that when Chriſt ſaid, This is my Body, the Word [This] does not refer to the Bread, but to an Individuum Vagum, as ſome of them ſay: Or that the Accidents or Appearances of Bread and Wine are the Sacraments of Chriſt's Body and Blood, and not rather the very Bread and Wine it ſelf: Or that the Sacrament is a Sign of the Body of Chriſt that lies hidden under it: Or that Ignorance is the Mother of true Devotion.

“ If any one of his Adverſaries were able to make good but a ſingle Propoſition amongſt all theſe, either by ſufficient Declarations in Scripture, or by the Teſtimony of the Ancient Fathers and Councils, he was ready to give up the Conteſt, and ſubſcribe himſelf a Proſelyte. (d)

Several Roman Catholicks undertake the Controverſy.

This Challenge made a great Noiſe, and the Papiſts thought themſelves oblig'd to anſwer it. Dr. Cole, late Dean of St. Paul's, was the firſt who undertook the Conteſt: His Manner was ſmooth and friendly; and ſome Letters paſt between him and the Biſhop upon this Subject. Raſtall enter'd the Liſts, and engag'd with more Heat, but with as little Succeſs. Theſe were ſeconded by Dormer and Marſhall: The firſt was encounter'd by Nowel, and the other by Calfhill. Dr. John Harding, an Engliſh Divine, who retir'd to Lovain, was the moſt conſiderable Adverſary. This Harding had been a ſtrong Proteſtant in the Reign of King Edward, but relapſed to Popery when Queen Mary came to the Crown: And for this Inconſtancy, the Reader may remember he was ſharply reprimanded by the Lady Jane. Jewel was likewiſe overborn with Fear, and ſubſcribed a Recantation; but he quickly recover'd himſelf, and made a publick Confeſſion of his Infirmity. This Harding appear'd to the moſt Advantage, offer'd at a thorough Anſwer, and conſider'd the Challenge from Point to Point: But then his Teſtimonies don't all reach up to the Age and Authority for which they are cited: He makes uſe of counterfeit Records, and, for Inſtance, cites the Decretal Epiſtles as if they were written by the Popes whoſe Names they carry. The Biſhop firſt publiſh'd an Anſwer, and afterwards a Rejoinder to Harding's Performances. Which of theſe two Learned Men were the faireſt Repreſenters, came cloſeſt up to the Difficulties, and argued with moſt Learning and Strength, may eaſily be diſcover'd by peruſing what paſs'd between them. The Biſhop, to give him his Due, wrote with great Perſpicuity and Force, prov'd himſelf an Accompliſh'd Divine, and has, in a Manner, exhauſted the Controverſy. But theſe Polemical Tracts, though occaſion'd by Jewel's Challenge, did not appear in Print 'till ſome Years after.

About this Time a Parliament was held at Dublin in Ireland, in which ſeveral Acts were paſs'd relating to Church Affairs. The firſt is entituled, An Act for reſtoring to the Crown the ancient Juriſdiction over the Eſtate Eccleſiaſtical. By this Statute all Manner of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction for Viſiting and Reforming all Errors, Hereſies, Schiſms, Abuſes, &c. are granted to the Queen and her Commiſſioners. The Oath of Supremacy is enacted, and the Penalty for abetting any foreign Juriſdiction is Forfeiture of Goods and Chattels for the firſt, Præmunire for the ſecond, and High Treaſon for the third Offence. And here the Regale is farther preſs'd than in England: The determining Points of Faith are tranſlated from the Church upon the State: And the Parliament, without the Concurrence of the Convocation, is made the laſt Judge of Hereſy. *

* Iriſh Acts, 2 Eliz. cap. 1.

The next Statute eſtabliſhes the Engliſh Common-Prayer paſs'd by the Parliament at Weſtminſter in the Fifth and Sixth Year of Edward the Sixth. And here the Queen, with the Advice of the Lord Deputy and Privy-Council, is impower'd to Ordain and publiſh ſuch farther Ceremonies and Rites as may be moſt for the Advancement of God's Glory, the Edifying of this Church, and the due Reverence of Chriſt's Holy Myſteries and Sacraments. There is likewiſe a Proviſion for the Common-Prayer to be uſed in Latin in ſome Places of that Kingdom. The Paragraph runs thus: Foraſmuch as in moſt Places of this Realm there cannot be found English Miniſters to ſerve in the Churches or Places appointed for Common-Prayer, or to miniſter the Sacraments to the People; and that if ſome good Mean were provided that they might uſe the Prayer, Service, and Adminiſtration of Sacraments, ſet out and eſtabliſhed by this Act, in ſuch Language as they mought beſt underſtand; the due Honour of God ſhould be thereby much advanc'd: And for that alſo, that the ſame may not be in their native Language, as well for Difficulty to get it printed, as that few in the whole Realm can read the Iriſh Letters: We do therefore moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty that with your Highneſs's Favour and Royal Aſſent it may be enacted, ordain'd, eſtabliſh'd, and provided, by the Authority of this preſent Parliament, that in every ſuch Church or Place, where the common Miniſter or Prieſt hath not the Uſe and Knowledge of the Engliſh Tongue, it ſhall be lawful for the ſame common Miniſter or Prieſt to ſay and uſe the Mattens, Even-Song, Celebration of the Lord's Supper, and Adminiſtration of each of the Sacraments, and all their Common and Open Prayer, in the Latin Tongue, in ſuch Order and Form as they be mention'd and ſet forth in the ſaid Book eſtabliſh'd by this Act, and according to the Tenour of this Act, and none otherwiſe, nor in other Manner: Any Thing before expreſs'd and contain'd in this Act to the contrary notwithſtanding. *

* Id. 2 Eliz. cap. 2.

By the next printed Statute the Firſt Fruits, Tenths, and Impropriated Parſonages, return'd to the Church by Queen Mary, are now brought back to the ſame Condition they ſtood by 28*H.*8.*c.*14. and veſted in the Crown. By the Way; in Ireland the 20th Part of the annual Profit of Biſhopricks and Livings were only payable to the Crown in Lieu of the Tenths. There is a cuſtomary ſaving Clauſe in the Act for the Intereſt of Bodies Politick and Corporate: And thus great Care is taken, that no Body ſhould be a Loſer but the Church. *

* Id. 2 Eliz. cap. 3.

The next Statute, relating to the Conſecration of Biſhops, enacts, That for the future there ſhould be no Congè d'eſlire granted, nor any Election made by the Dean and Chapter: But that Biſhops ſhould be conſtituted by the Queen's Letters-Patents, or by the Lord Deputy by Vertue of Letters-Miſſive, or other Warrants ſign'd by the Queen, or her Succeſſors; and that after ſuch Collation by the Queen, or the Lord Deputy, the Archbiſhop or Biſhop to whom 'twas ſignified was obliged to conſecrate the Perſon preferr'd, under the Penalty of Præmunire. *

* Id. 2 Eliz. cap. 4.

The laſt Act, which I ſhall juſt mention, returns the Priory or Hoſpital of St. John's Jeruſalem in Ireland to the Crown. Several Mannors, &c. belonging to this Priory, and alienated in the Reign of King Henry the VIIIth, had been granted by King Philip and Queen Mary to the Prior Sir Oſwald Maſſingburgh Knight, at the Revival of the Foundation. * Theſe Eſtates are now all veſted in the Queen.

Aug. 1559.

Upon the Death of Pope Paul the IVth, the See, after a Vacancy of Four Months, was fill'd with John Angelo, Cardinal of Medicis, who took the Name of Pius the IVth. This Pope was not of ſo haughty and impetuous a Temper as his Predeceſſor: He wiſely conſider'd, that proceeding to Extremities without a proportionable Power, was a dangerous Experiment; that violent Meaſures had more than once prov'd unſucceſsful; and that ſeveral Kingdoms had been loſt by unſeaſonable Stiffneſs and Rigour. By this rough Treatment, for the Purpoſe, England went off from Clement the VIIth; and when 'twas afterwards recover'd, the imperious Demands of the late Pope diſguſted Queen Elizabeth to that Degree, that ſhe immediately gave in to the Reformation. However, this Pope did not deſpair of gaining her by ſmooth Applications. To this Purpoſe he diſpatched Parpalia, Abbot of St. Saviour's, with a Letter and private Inſtructions. I ſhall tranſlate the Letter from Cambden.

Pope Pius the IVth's Letter to Queen Elizabeth.

“ Deareſt Daughter in Chriſt, Health and Apoſtolical Benediction. How much the Salvation of your Soul, the Honour of your Reign, and the Intereſt of your Kingdom, is deſir'd by us, is known to God the Searcher of Hearts; and may be underſtood in ſome Meaſure by the Inſtructions which our Nuncio Vincentio Parpalia, a Perſon of Fidelity, and not unknown to your Majeſty, has Orders to lay before you. We earneſtly exhort your Highneſs, Deareſt Daughter, that you would be no longer govern'd by Unhappy Adviſers; By Men who love nothing but their own Intereſt and Pleaſures: We entreat you therefore to give the Fear of God the principal Sway in your Councils; to know the Time of your Viſitation, and to reſign to the Admonitions of us your Spiritual Father. Your Majeſty may promiſe your ſelf any reaſonable Length of Compliance which lies within the Compaſs of my Station, not only with Reference to your Spiritual Advantage, but likewiſe for the Service and Security of your Royal Dignity. And that when you return to the Communion of the Church, as we hope you will, you ſhall be receiv'd with the ſame Marks of Affection and Regard as the Father in the Goſpel entertain'd his Son with at his coming Home. Though our Satisfaction will be much greater than that mentioned in the Parable; for there the Joy was only for the Recovery of a ſingle Perſon; whereas your Highneſs's Return will draw your Subjects Happineſs along with you, and give a ſtrong Occaſion of Pleaſure to the Univerſal Church. And beſides, Heaven it ſelf will be, as it were, tranſported with the News, and you'll make an Addition to the Joys of the Bleſſed: Such a glorious Recollection will raiſe your Character, prove ſerviceable to your Memory, and give you a much brighter Crown than that you wear already. But concerning this Affair, my Agent Vincentio ſhall diſcourſe with your Highneſs more at large, and give you farther Proof of our Paternal Affection, &c. Dated at Rome May the 5th, 1560.

1560. The Common-Prayer turn'd into Latin.

Somewhat before this Time, the Queen order'd the Engliſh Common-Prayer to be turn'd into Latin. Dr. Walter Haddon, as ſome ſuppoſe, had a Share in this Verſion. The Queen in her Letters-Patents, of the 1ſt of April, recommends this Book to the Uſe of both Univerſities, and to the Colleges of Eaton and Wincheſter. There are likewiſe Occaſional Services added for the Commemoration of Benefactors, together with ſome Funeral Hymns. Theſe Additions not being provided for by the late Statute, were authoriz'd a with Nonobſtante. All this was probaby done to juſtify our Reformation to foreign Princes, and acquaint them with the publick Devotions. Whether the Pope could reconcile himſelf to theſe Alterations or not, is a Queſtion. For the learned Cambden affirms he could never learn the Certainty of Parpalia's Propoſals. However, he owns 'twas commonly reported the Pope had engaged to confirm the Engliſh Liturgy, to grant the Laity the Holy Euchariſts under both Kinds, and to reverſe the Sentence which had paſs'd in the Court of Rome againſt her Mother's Marriage. And that theſe Conceſſions were made upon the Condition of her returning to the Roman Communion, and owning the Primacy of that See. I mention Cambden's Reſervedneſs in reporting this Matter, becauſe ſome of our Hiſtorians have made him ſpeak in a more Categorical Manner, and mention it as undoubted Matter of Fact. (e)

About this Time a Form of Belief, digeſted into Eleven Articles, was ſet forth by the Biſhops, and order'd to be read publickly by all the Clergy at their firſt Entring upon their Cures. 'Twas printed the next Year by Richard Jugg, the Queen's Printer, and entituled, A Declaration of certain Principal Articles of Religion of both the Archbiſhops Metropolitans, and the reſt of the Biſhops; for the Unity of Doctrines to be taught and holden of all Parſons, Vicars, and Curates, as well in Teſtification of their common Conſent in the ſaid Doctrine, to the ſtopping the Mouths of them that go about to ſlander the Miniſtry of the Church for Diverſity of Judgment, as neceſſary for the Inſtruction of their People. To be read by the ſaid Parſons, Vicars, and Curates, at their firſt Poſſeſſion-taking, or firſt Entry into their Cures. As alſo after that, yearly at two ſeveral Times; that is to ſay, the Sundays next following Eaſter-Day, or St. Michael the Archangel. (f)

Articles to be owned by the Clergy.

The Articles being drawn upon a very near Reſemblance with thoſe publiſh'd in 1552, and two Years forward in the preſent Reign, I ſhall paſs them moſtly over. However, to obſerve ſomething. The ſecond Article declares, that all Errors and Hereſies may be ſufficiently confuted by Scripture. The fifth affirms the Queen's Prerogative and Superiority in all Cauſes, as well Eccleſiaſtical as Temporal, to be agreeable to God's Word, and rightfully belonging to her Highneſs in the ſame Senſe and Extent, as 'tis declar'd in the late Act of Parliament, and explain'd in her Majeſty's Injunctions.

The eighth affirms, that the Diſuſe of Exorciſm, Oil, Salt, Spittle, or hallowing of the Water in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, is no exceptionable Omiſſion. The Reaſon is, becauſe theſe Ceremonies are no Part of the Subſtance of the Sacrament.

The laſt diſallows the uſual Flouriſhing upon Images, Relicks, and counterfeit Miracles. And here, all Repreſentations of the inviſible God in the Figure of an Old Man, or of the Holy Ghoſt in that of a Dove, and all other Modes of divine Worſhip unwarranted by Scripture, ſuch as Pilgrimages, ſetting up Candles, and praying upon Beads, are directly cenſur'd.

(f) Biblioth. Coll. Cor. Chriſt. Cant.

Tho' this laſt Article is capable of a favourable Conſtruction with reſpect to Images, yet moſt of the Biſhops ſeem to have gone towards an Extremity in this Point. They had ſollicited the Queen more than once for their Removal out of Churches: But had hitherto fail'd of Succeſs. The Queen was not without a Regard for the ancient Appearances of Religion: She thought Ornament and Repreſentation no unſerviceable Circumſtances: She was of Opinion the Service of God in her Brother's Reign wanted ſomething of Beauty and Magnificence to recommend it. In ſhort, her Aim was to ſettle both Ceremonies and Doctrine upon a Temper, that there might be a due Latitude for general Approbation and Belief. This ſhe apprehended the beſt Expedient to unite the Nation, and preſerve a great Part of her Subjects from going off to the Church of Rome.

The Biſhops addreſs the Queen againſt Images.

As to the Buſineſs of Images, the Biſhops were ſtrongly prejudiced againſt the Uſe of them. They were reſolv'd therefore to repeat their Requeſt, and try their Fortune once more in a formal Addreſs.

And here they begin with the Neceſſity of the Occaſion: And that 'twas no Spirit of Oppoſition, no conteſting Humour, which put them upon this Application: That 'twas purely a Regard to the Majeſty of God: 'Twas for Fear of giving Offence to the little Ones; and digging a Pit for the Blind to fall in, that they took this Liberty. And as they had ſeveral Times already petition'd her Majeſty upon this Head, without repreſenting their Reaſons, ſo now they thought themſelves oblig'd to mention the Grounds they went upon, and recommend them to her Majeſty's Conſideration.

Deut. 27.

“Their Arguments are drawn from Scripture, and ſome Authorities of the ancient Fathers. I ſhall only report the Subſtance of what they alledge. They take Notice the Second Commandment forbids the Making any Images as the Reſemblance of God. And that there was a Curſe denounc'd againſt thoſe who made an Image, an Abomination to the Lord, and put it in a ſecret Place: This they expounded of ſome Chappels in private Houſes; and among the Cautions given the Iſraelites to guard againſt Idolatry, 'tis particularly forbidden them, not to make an Image. For the Uſe of theſe, as they argue, does naturally advance to Idolatry. Of this ill Conſequence the Jews were ſo ſenſible after the Captivity, that they would rather die, than ſuffer an Image to be put in their Temple. The Book of Wiſdom calls an Image, a Snare for the Feet of the Ignorant. And St. John commands us, to beware of Idols. To this purpoſe Tertullian affirms, 'twas not enough to ſtand clear of the Worſhip, but of the very Figures: That laying a ſtumbling Block in the Way of the Blind, was forbidden among great Crimes in the Old Teſtament: But to leave ſuch an Occaſion of Miſcarriage before the undiſcerning Multitude, was a Breach of Duty of worſe Conſequence. That there could be nothing of Edification in the Caſe, ſince it ſerv'd only to fortify the Ignorant in their Superſtition, and fix them in their former Dotage. That others would diſlike the publick Worſhip upon this Account: So that if the Numbers of thoſe who would ſtand off from Communion if they were continued, and the reſt that would abuſe them were computed, the Remainder that would uſe them rightly, would not be conſiderable: The Luſtre of their Appearance would be apt to make too ſtrong an Impreſſion: And thus the People, if not carried to direct Idolatry, might have their Thoughts too much engag'd: Both Origen and Arnobius report, the Primitive Chriſtians had no Images, and Irenæus blam'd the Gnosticks for carrying the Figure of our Saviour about with them. St. Auſtin commends Varro for affirming the Old Romans for ſome Time made no uſe of Images in their religious Worſhip: And that this Reſerve in Ceremony was better ſuited to the Nature of the Deity. Epiphanius pull'd a Piece of Hanging in Pieces, and order'd it to be taken out of the Church, becauſe there was a Figure upon it: And Serenus another Biſhop broke the Images in Gregory the Great's Time. They obſerve farther, That the Emperors Valens and Theodoſius made a Law againſt Painting or Engraving the Picture of our Saviour. And laſtly, That the Uſe of Images in the Eaſtern Church embroil'd that Empire, and expos'd it to the Arms of the Infidels.

After theſe Reaſons, “They entreat the Queen not to preſs the Uſe of Images upon them, nor be offended with the Plaineſs of their Application. That ſuch Freedoms in Diſcharge of Conſcience, had always been favourably conſtrued by religious Princes. And to this Purpoſe, they cite a Paſſage of St. Ambroſe to Theodoſius the Great, That 'twas not the Part of an Emperor to deny Freedom of Speech, neither did it become a Prieſt to ſtifle his Thoughts, and decline delivering his Judgment. (g)

“They deſire her to conſider, That her Permiſſion of Images in Churches, would make the reform'd Prelates look Inconſiſtent with themſelves, and weaken their Character: That 'twould ſtick a Blemiſh upon the Reign of her pious Brother King Edward the Sixth, and diſſerve the Memory of thoſe eminent Clergymen who had loſt their Lives in Defence of the Truth. And to conclude, they intreat her that both this, and other religious Controverſies, might be referr'd to the Deciſion of a Synod: That this was the Method taken by Conſtantine the Great, and other Chriſtian Emperors. (h)

Some of the Reaſons examin'd.

Notwithſtanding the Zeal and good Meaning of theſe Biſhops, 'tis plain their Reaſons are not altogether cogent. For firſt, The Diſpenſations of the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Religion, are different in many Points, and therefore there is no arguing from the one to the other: There's no arguing, I ſay, either from Precept or Preſident, unleſs where the Grounds are the ſame; but this cannot be affirm'd in the preſent Caſe. For becauſe a corporeal Repreſentation of the unincarnate Deity was forbidden, we can't by any Parity of Reaſon infer the Unlawfulneſs of making a Figure of our bleſſed Saviour, who was Man as well as God. And that the Worſhip, and not the Uſe of Images, was altogether forbidden the Jews, may be collected from Solomon's carving Cherubims upon the Walls of the Temple, and embelliſhing the molten Sea with Oxen and Lions. (i) Their Citation from the Book of Wiſdom is an Apocryphal Teſtimony, and therefore can amount to no Proof upon the Principles of theſe Prelates: And St. John's charging the Chriſtians to keep themſelves from Idols, concludes as little. Neither can Tertullian's Caution againſt having any Thing to do with Images of the Pagan Deities, be ſtrain'd to a Parallel. As for

for what they mention of laying a ſtumbling Block before the Blind, the Argument might poſſibly be turn'd upon them. For ſome People would take Check at the Removal of the Images, and conſtrue it a Diſregard to our Saviour and the Saints: Thus the pulling down the Emperors Statues was always look'd on as a Mutiny againſt the Government, and an Affront to the Prince himſelf. Farther, theſe Prelates, confeſs ſome People, would ſtand clear of Superſtition, and ſuffer nothing from Images in Churches: From whence it follows, they did not believe there was any Neceſſity of going too far upon ſuch a Permiſſion. Now to argue againſt the Uſe from the Abuſe, unleſs where the Miſchief is inſeparable, is to make Art and Nature unſerviceable, and reaſon us out of the Significancy of our Senſes: For what Convenience of Life, what Part of the Bounty of Providence, what Furniture either of Mind or Body is there, which has not been abus'd? As for the Luſtre and Pomp in Things of Religion, 'tis far from any dangerous Amuſement. Had this been an exceptionable Circumſtance, the Temple-Service at Jeruſalem of God's Inſtitution, would not have been carried on with ſo much Magnificence and Expence. But my Buſineſs being not to debate the Controverſy at length, I ſhall wave conſidering the reſt of their Authorities, and refer the Reader to what has been obſerv'd upon this Head in the former Part of my Hiſtory. (k)

One of our learned Hiſtorians (l) obſerves, "That theſe Reaſons of the Biſhops prevail'd "with the Queen to put it in her Injunctions to "remove all Images out of Churches: But with Submiſſion, this Remark is wide of Matter of Fact: For a ſuperſtitious Regard to Images, and thoſe Figures which repreſented counterfeit Miracles, are only ſtruck at, as the Reader may ſee by Peruſing the 2d and 23d Articles of the Injunctions. To which I may add, That the Injunctions were publiſhed in the firſt Year of the Queen's Reign, whereas this Addreſs of the Biſhops was not made till the Second.

This Year Archbiſhop Parker ſet forth his Admonition or Table, to point out the prohibited Degrees in Marriage: But this being every where to be ſeen in Churches, I ſhall paſs it over. 'Twas printed by Reginald Wolfe: And at the End of the firſt Edition, there's an Order annex'd relating to the Clergy. Here none under the Degree of a Maſter of Arts are allow'd to preach or expound the Scriptures: They are only to read the Homilies: They are likewiſe injoin'd not to make any Omiſſions, nor uſe any unauthoriz'd Rites in divine Service.

It has been already obſerv'd, That upon the Roman Catholick Clergy's throwing up their Preferment, the Neceſſities of the Church requir'd the admitting ſome Mechanicks into Orders. The Diſadvantage of this Expedient was ſoon obſerv'd: The Ignorance and improper Behaviour of theſe Men made them diſregarded and inſignificant: To prevent this Inconvenience, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſent his Mandate to the Biſhop of London, to be communicated to the other Suffragans of the Province, not to ordain any Mechanicks, or other Perſons unqualified by their Education: That the Matter ſhould reſt in this Condition till the Meeting of a Convocation.

The Archbiſhop's Letter takes Notice that theſe Men by the Uncreditableneſs of their former Buſineſs, and their Converſing out of Character, made them deſpicable with the People: That Religion ſuffer'd under their Management, and that they did much more Harm than Good. *

Elizabeth Q.

The Courſe of the Hiſtory will now lead me to ſay ſomething of the Affairs in Scotland. Soon after the Signing the Alliance between Queen Elizabeth and the Lords of the Congregation, the Engliſh Troops commanded by the Lord Gray, march'd and ſate down before Leith. And being join'd by the confederate Lords, bore hard upon the Garriſon. The French King receiving Advice his Forces were diſtreſs'd at Leith, and being too much embarraſs'd to furniſh a Reinforcement, diſpatch'd Count Randan and Monluck Biſhop of Valence with a publick Character to the Engliſh Court. Their Inſtructions were to deſire the Queen to withdraw her Army out of Scotland, with Propoſals of the Reſtitution of Calais upon that Condition. Her Anſwer was, She did not value that Fiſher-Town ſo much, as to hazard the Repoſe of Britain upon that Account. The French perceiving the Peace would be made upon no other Terms than recalling their Troops out of Scotland, and looking upon it as diſhonourable for their King and Queen to capitulate with their own Subjects: Upon theſe Conſiderations they ſollicited Queen Elizabeth to ſend her Ambaſſadors to mediate an Accommodation. This Motion being agreed to, Secretary Cecil and Dr. Wotton Dean of Canterbury were order'd to accompany Randan and Monluck into Scotland, and endeavour compoſing the publick Diſturbances.

The French Ambaſſadors move for an Accommodation of the Diſferences in Scotland.

June 10. 1560.

The Queen Regent dies.

While theſe Ambaſſadours were on their Journey, the Queen Regent fell ſick, and died in the Caſtle of Edinborough. During her Sickneſs ſhe ſent for the Duke of Chatelerault, the Earls of Argyle, Glencayrn, Marſhal, and Lord James. To theſe Noble-men ſhe declar'd herſelf much afflicted for the preſent Diſturbances, preſs'd them to make for Peace, adviſ'd the ſending both the French and Engliſh out of the Country, ſuggeſted Loyalty to the Queen their Sovereign, and deſir'd the ancient good Correſpondence with France, might be kept on. After this, ſhe ask'd Pardon of thoſe ſhe had any Ways offended, and declar'd ſhe forgave all Injuries againſt herſelf. And then ſaluting the Noble-men on the Cheek, and giving her Hand to thoſe of inferior Rank, ſhe bid them farewel. When the Company had taken their Leave, ſhe turn'd her Thoughts wholly to the other World, and at the Recommendation of the Lords, ſent for John Willock the Preacher, diſcours'd with him for ſome Time, and publickly declar'd, That ſhe relied only on the Death and Merits of Jeſus Chriſt: And thus ſhe departed this Life in a moſt Chriſtian manner. (m)

Her Character.

This Princeſs was furniſh'd with very honourable Qualities. She had a Genius for Government: Her Judgment was good, and her Humour condeſcenſive and obliging: She had a great Regard for Juſtice, was remarkably Compaſſionate to the Poor, and beſtow'd her Charities with great Tenderneſs and Diſcretion: Her Court was unuſually regular: She would endure nothing of Indecency and Licenſe: The Ladies of her Attendance were always commendably employ'd; and in this they did no more than follow the Example of their Miſtreſs, who was eminently unexceptionable in her private Life. Her quieting the Tumults in the North, and the Iſles, were ſufficient Proof of her Talent for Governing.

As to the Civil Commotions which harraſs'd the Kingdom in the latter End of her Regency, they were by no Means any Part of her Inclination. She was overborn into theſe unacceptable Meaſures by foreign Direction. Leſley, an Hiſtorian of her Communion, reports, That if ſhe had manag'd by her own Judgment, the Miſunderſtandings between the Court, and ſome of the Nobility had never happen'd. But Monſieur D'Oſſell, Bonot, and other Frenchmen overrul'd her Fancy, prevail'd with her to exclude the Natives of Quality, and promote themſelves to the higheſt Poſts in the Adminiſtration: This diſguſted the People, and provok'd them to Sedition, To which they were farther puſh'd when they found their Liberties affected, and new Burthens laid upon them. Tho' after all, the real Grievances were heightned by Miſreports and magnifying the Miſcarriages of the Government. (n) To which may be added, that this Princeſs was barbarouſly us'd by the hot headed Preachers, and by no Means well, by the Lords of the Congregation. (o)

Soon after the Death of the Regent, the Engliſh and French Ambaſſadors came to Edinborough, and entred upon a Treaty; which after ſome Days debate, was concluded: I ſhall mention only ſome of the Articles. Firſt, The Town of Leith was to be evacuated, and the French Forces ſent home again within Twenty Days. Secondly, An Act of Oblivion was to be made for extinguiſhing the Memory of all Injuries, and indemnifying the Subjects from Proſecution for all Miſdemeanors and Practiſe againſt the State, from the 6th of March 1558, to the 1ſt of Auguſt 1560. Thirdly, That all Biſhops, Abbots, or other Churchmen that could prove themſelves damnified, either in their Perſons or Eſtates, ſhould have their Grievances redreſs'd in the next Parliament. And that in the mean Time no Body ſhould inſult their Perſons, or diſturb them in the Enjoyment of their Revenues. Fourthly, That the Eſtates of the Realm ſhould hold a Parliament in Auguſt next: And that for this Purpoſe a Commiſſion ſhould be ſent them from the King and Queen of Scotland: That a Committee of Noble-men nominated by the next Parliament ſhould be ſent to their Majeſties to report what farther Alterations 'twas neceſſary to make in Religion: And that the Articles then agreed ſhould be preſented with the Ratification of the Eſtates, and return'd with their Majeſties Confirmation. And laſtly, That for the Future, the Queen of Scotland and the King of France ſhould not carry the Titles of England and Ireland, nor quarter the Arms of thoſe Crowns upon their Plate and Furniture. This Treaty was to be ratified within Sixty Days, and an Oath taken by the reſpective Sovereigns for farther Security.

A Treaty ſign'd at Edinborough.

Spotſwood, Cambden.

Before the Time expir'd, Queen Elizabeth ratified the Treaty with all the Solemnity requir'd, and order'd her Ambaſſadors Throgmorton and Mewtas to move the Queen of Scots and the French King to the ſame Compliance. But theſe Princes, notwithſtanding they had promis'd in the Biſhop of Valence's Credentials, to ſign what was done; notwithſtanding this Engagement, as Cambden reports, they refus'd to ratify the Treaty. (p) The Reaſons of their Refuſal were, becauſe the Scots had, contrary to their Duty, entred into an Alliance with the Engliſh at Berwick, without any Authority from their Sovereigns: That none but Rebels were concern'd in the Negotiation. And that to make the better Shew of a general Concurrence, they had counterfeited the Hands and Seals of ſeveral Loyal Subjects: And laſtly, That they had not perform'd, that Duty to the Crown, which was promis'd in the Treaty. While theſe Things were debating at the French Court, King Francis the II. died in the 18th Year of his Age, and left the Queen of Scots a Widow.

The French King and the Queen of Scots refuſe to ratify it, and why.

(p) Cambden, Eliz. pag. 60.

Notwithſtanding this Diſappointment, a Summons was ſent by the Scotch Lords of the Congregation for the Meeting of a Parliament: When the Day came, there was a numerous Appearance: But all the Members had not the ſame Senſe of the Legality of the Proceedings. Some urg'd, That ſince they had no Commiſſion from their Sovereigns, nor any Authority to repreſent their Perſons, there could be no ſuch Thing as a Parliament. To this the other Party replied, That by an Article of the late Treaty, a Parliament was to be held in Auguſt following: And that this Meeting ſhould be as legal in all Reſpects, as if it had been expreſly order'd by their Majeſties. But to this it might be replied, that the Treaty not being ratified by the Queen of Scots, was not binding upon the Crown: And by Conſequence their convening without the Royal Warrant, muſt be a Breach upon the Conſtitution. However, this latter Opinion, ſupported by a Majority, prevail'd. After a Week had been ſpent in this Conteſt, and the Point carried not without great Struggle, they began to enter upon Buſineſs. But having no Commiſſion from the Queen, the cuſtomary Solemnities of carrying the Crown, Sceptre, and Sword, were omitted. Of the ſpiritual Eſtate there appear'd the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, the Biſhops of Dunkeld, Dumblaine, Galloway, Argyle, and Iſles, the Prior of St. Andrews, the Abbots of Couper, Landers, Culroſs, St. Colms-Inch, Newbottle, Haly-rood Houſe, Kinloſe, Deire, and New-abbey, with the Priors of Coldingham, and St. Mary-Iſle: Thoſe of the Nobility were the Duke of Chatelerault, the Earls of Arran, Argyle, Marſhall, Caſſils, Kathneſs, Athol, Glencayrn, Morton, and Rothes; the Lords Ruthen, Glammies, Ereskin, Boyde, Ochiltre, Carliſle, Levingſton, Ogilvy, and Sommervile. Many of the Barons were likewiſe there, and all the Commiſſioners of Burroughs. By this ſlender Liſt the Reader may collect, a great Party of the Nobility look'd upon the Meeting as illegal, and therefore declin'd appearing. And 'tis plain, the Government when ſettled, gave it no better Conſideration. For nothing that paſt in this Convention was touch'd by the Scepter, a neceſſary Circumſtance to make the Bills Law. Neither are their Proceedings entred amongſt the printed, or unprinted Acts of this Reign. And thus the Parliament held in the Year 1563, ſtands regiſtred immediately after that held in 1558.

The Parliament conven'd in Scotland without any Authority from the Crown.

Spotſwood.

The Authority of this Meeting defective.

And having premis'd this concerning the Authority of the Meeting, I ſhall proceed to other Particulars.

In the Choice of the Lords of the Articles, the Noble-men who were to nominate thoſe of the Clergy, paſs'd by the diſaffected Biſhops, and elected their Friends, tho' ſomewhat out of Form. The Perſons pitch'd on were the Biſhops of Galloway and Argyle, the Prior of St. Andrews, the Abbots of Abberbrothock, Kilwining, Lundor, Newbottle, and Kulroſs: The Prelates remonſtrated loudly againſt this Election, objecting that ſome of them were Lay-men, and that all of them had deſerted the Church: But theſe Allegations not being reckoned any reaſonable Exceptions, their Complaint was overrul'd. And becauſe the general Reader may not be acquainted with the Meaning of the Lords of the Articles, a Word or Two concerning them may not be amiſs. By the ancient Conſtitution of Scotland, the Parliament conſiſts of Three Eſtates, the Biſhops, Abbots and Priors, the Temporal Nobility, and the Commiſſioners for the Shires, and Royal Burroughs. The Lords and Com-

The Lords of the Articles what, and how elected.

Commons ſit together in one Houſe. When the Members are all plac'd, the King, or Commiſſioner makes a Speech; and then their firſt Buſineſs is chuſing the Lords of the Articles. There are Eight of theſe choſen for each of the Three Eſtates. The Manner of their Election has been ſomewhat different: Sometimes the Biſhops and temporal Nobility elected their reſpective Numbers out of their own Body: But commonly the Biſhops made choice of Eight Lords of the Temporalty; and the Nobility choſe the ſame Number of Biſhops or Abbots, to repreſent the ſpiritual Eſtate. And thus the Conſtitution ſtood in the Year before us. Theſe Sixteen chuſe Eight Commiſſioners for the Shires, and the ſame Number out of the Commiſſioners for the Burroughs. Theſe Two and thirty are a ſtanding Committee to prepare Matters, and draw all the Bills for the Parliament. (q)

This laſt mention'd Method of chuſing the Lords of the Articles was paſt into an Act in the Reign of King Charles II.

A Petition for Reformation of Religion.

To return; the firſt Thing brought into the Houſe was a Petition of the Barons, Gentlemen, Burgeſſes, and others concerning Religion. This conſiſted of Three Branches. Firſt, That the Doctrine of the Roman Church ſhould be condemn'd and ſuppreſs'd by Act of Parliament: The exceptionable Doctrines ſpecified were, Tranſubſtantiation, Adoration of the Hoſt, Merit of Works, Indulgences, Purgatory, Pilgrimages, and Invocation of Saints. Theſe they accounted all damnable Errors, and deſir'd the maintaining of them might be made Penal. “ Secondly, They petition'd for a Revival of the Diſcipline of the ancient Church, and that the Profanation of the holy Sacraments might be puniſh'd. And thirdly, That the Pope's uſurp'd Authority may be diſcharg'd, and the Patrimony of the Church converted to the Maintenance of the Miniſtry, the Endowment of publick Schools, and the Support of the Poor.

Auguſt 17. 1560.

This laſt Clauſe diſguſted ſeveral of the Nobility. They were willing enough to be rid of the Pope and his Doctrine, but the giving back the Patrimony of the Church, which they had ſeiz'd during the late Diſturbances, was an unacceptable Motion. To this therefore making no Anſwer, they deſir'd the Miniſters to draw up a Syſtem of Belief: This was done accordingly, and Four Days after preſented to the Eſtates under the Title of the Confeſſion of the Faith and Doctrine believ'd and profeſs'd by the Proteſtants of Scotland. The whole is rang'd under Five and twenty Articles, concerning ſome of which, a Word or Two may be ſufficient.

The Confeſſion of Faith paſſes the Houſe.

Part of the Ninth Article ſeems ſomewhat crudely digeſted. They affirm, That our bleſſed Saviour in his Agony on the Croſs, ſuffer'd for a Seaſon the Wrath of his Father, which Sinners had deſerv'd: But that notwithſtanding this, he remain'd the only well beloved Son of his Father, even in the midſt of his Anguiſh and Torment. Now if our Saviour ſuffer'd the Wrath of God the Father, which is due to Sinners, then God the Father was certainly diſpleaſed with him during that Time: And if ſo, how can this be reconcil'd to the other Part of their Propoſition, that our Saviour was even then the well Beloved of his Father. This laſt Aſſertion is true, but then 'tis wholly Inconſiſtent with what was affirm'd before; for which Way is it conceiveable, that God ſhould be intirely pleaſ'd and diſpleaſ'd with the ſame Perſon at the ſame Time? Can any Thing be altogether an object of Hatred and Love, of Favour and Averſion? Beſides, our bleſſed Saviour's ſuffering upon the Croſs was an Act of the higheſt Obedience to the Will of God the Father, and the moſt meritorious that was ever perform'd in humane Nature: And can we imagine that God the Father ſhould be diſpleas'd with ſo great a Submiſſion upon ſo glorious an Account?

Their Sixteenth Article makes the Church conſiſt of none but the Elect: That the Members are inviſible, and only known to God. (r)

They aſſign Three Notes of the true Church; true Preaching of the Word of God; the right Adminiſtration of the Sacraments: And Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline uprightly miniſtred, as God's Word preſcribes: But as for Succeſſion, and uninterrupted Conveyance of Authority from the Apoſtles, there is no mention of that. The Nineteenth Article concerning the Authority of the Scriptures is ſomewhat ſingularly worded. They declare the Authority of the inſpired Writings to be of God, and neither to depend on Men or Angels. From hence they advance to cenſure thoſe as guilty of Blaſphemy who affirm the Scriptures have no Authority, but that which is receiv'd from the Church. But here if their Meaning is ſound, 'tis myſteriouſly expreſs'd. 'Tis granted, the Authority of the Scriptures is founded on the Infallibility of the Holy Ghoſt by whom they were dictated: But how to diſtinguiſh divine Revelations, from humane Compoſitions, muſt be known by ancient Records, by the Evidence of Tradition, and the Conſentient Teſtimony of the Church. And this was the Reaſon why St. Auſtin affirm'd he ſhould not have believ'd the New Teſtament the Word of God, had it not all along been handed down under that Character by the Catholick Church. In their Twenty firſt Article, they deſcribe the Myſtery and Benefits of the holy Euchariſt with great Reverence and Solemnity of Expreſſion. To uſe their own Words, In the Supper rightly us'd, Chriſt Jeſus is ſo join'd with us, that he becomes the very Nouriſhment and Food of our Souls. Then after declaring againſt Tranſubſtantiation, they add, this Union and Communion which we have with the Body and Bloud of Chriſt Jeſus in the right Uſe of the Sacraments, is wrought by the Operation of the Holy Ghoſt. And notwithſtanding the Diſtance of Place between our Saviour's Body in Heaven, and Us upon Earth, we moſt aſſuredly believe, That the Bread which we break is the Communion of Chriſt's Body, and the Cup which we bleſs is the Communion of his Bloud. And that the Faithful in the right Uſe of the Lord's Table, ſo do eat the Body, and drink the Blood of the Lord Jeſus, that he remains in them, and they in him.

From hence they proceed to dilate upon the Privileges and Myſteriouſneſs of the Operation, much in the ſame Language made Uſe of by Calvin in his Confeſſion already mention'd.

The Twenty fourth Article ſpeaks very honourably of Civil Government, owns it the Ordinance of God, and condemns thoſe who reſiſt the ſupreme Powers, doing that which appertains to their Charge. This Clauſe was added to ſecure the Doctrine of Reſiſtance, and juſtify the late Practice againſt the Crown. And thus by throwing theſe dead Flies into the Ointment, the Perfume is loſt, and the Ingredients made good for nothing. Eccleſ. 10.

This Confeſſion being read in the Houſe, and put to the Vote, none of the Nobility, excepting the Earl of Athol, the Lord Sommervile, and Bothwick, diſſented. The Popiſh Prelates offering nothing in Defence of their Religion, the Earl-

Marſhal inferr'd they were conſcious of the Orthodoxy of the Proteſtant Confeſſion: And that all the Cenſures of the Roman Catholick Religion contain'd in the Articles were well founded. And thus the Confeſſion paſs'd the Houſe.

Hearing or ſaying Maſs capitally puniſh'd at the third Offence.

There were Two other Acts carried in Favour of the Reformation. By one of theſe Statutes 'tis ordain'd, that for the future the Pope ſhall have no Juriſdiction or Authority in the Realm; and that thoſe who abet his Supremacy ſhall ſuffer Proſcription and Baniſhment, and incur the Forfeiture of all Offices and Honours. The other Act directed againſt the Maſs, ordains that if any Perſon ſhall either ſay Maſs, or be preſent at it, he ſhall for the firſt Fault forfeit all his Goods, and undergo ſuch corporal Puniſhment as the Magiſtrate ſhall think fit to put upon him: The ſecond Fault is Baniſhment, and the third Death.

And here by puniſhing the Saying or Hearing Maſs with Death, they ſeem to have fall'n into thoſe Exceſſes of Rigour againſt which they had ſo ſtrongly declar'd: They complain'd of the Papiſts, and that juſtly, for making Miſperſwaſions in Religion capital Crimes, and yet do the ſame Things themſelves. To affirm they are in the Right, and the other in the Wrong, as to Matters of Belief, is foreign to the Point: For every one that ſuffers for Religion thinks himſelf in the Right, and therefore ought not to be deſtroy'd for his Sincerity, for the Prejudices of Education, or the Want of a better Underſtanding. I ſay, he ought not to be thus ſeverely dealt with, unleſs his Opinions have Mutiny and Treaſon in them, and ſhake the Foundations of Civil Society.

A Book of Church Diſcipline laid before the Convention.

Upon the Receſs of the Eſtates, a Conſultation was held for eſtabliſhing a Form of Eccleſiaſtical Polity. For this Purpoſe a Commiſſion was directed to Maſter John Winrame Sub-prior of St. Andrews, Maſter John Spotiſwood, John Willock, Maſter John Dowglaſs Rector of St. Andrews, Maſter John Rew, and Maſter John Knox, to draw a Scheme of Diſcipline for the Church. (s) Theſe Miniſters executed their Orders, and preſented their Draught to the Convention held at Edinburgh. This Diſcipline was moſtly form'd upon the Geneva Plan, ſomething of which has been related already. I ſhall therefore preſent the Reader with only ſome ſmall Part of it.

Jan. 1560.

The Election of Miniſters.

They reject Impoſition of Hands, and why?

Under the 4th Head, concerning Miniſters and their lawful Election, 'tis laid down for an unqueſtionable Propoſition, That none ought to preſume to preach or adminiſter the Sacraments unleſs they are orderly call'd. And to an ordinary Vocation, Election, Examination, and Admiſſion, are requir'd. Every diſtinct Congregation has a Right to chuſe their Miniſter: But in caſe they omit the Election Forty Days, the Superintendent and his Council may preſent them a Perſon, who is to be admitted after due Examination. And here they lay it down for a general Rule, that the Conſent of the Congregation, and the Approbation of the Examiners, muſt concur to the Admiſſion of a Miniſter. Theſe Examiners, by the Way, were always to be ſome Learned Divines. This Conſtitution ſeems ſomewhat embarraſs'd and defective: For in caſe the Congregation and the Examiners ſhould happen to diſagree about the Perſon, there is no Appeal elſewhere to decide the Difference. They have no Ordination-Ceremonies for conveying the Character: They grant the Apoſtles uſed Impoſition of Hands; but refuſed to be govern'd by that Precedent, becauſe the Miracles are ceas'd which accompanied that ſolemn Circumſtance. But this Inference of theirs is not well drawn: For how do they prove, that in they Times of the Apoſtles all Perſons ordain'd work'd Miracles? To make this out by any Text or Implication of Scripture, is a difficult Undertaking. Nay, the contrary ſeems pretty plainly inſinuated by St. Paul; for mentioning thoſe who could change the Courſe of Nature, amongſt the Governors of the Church, he immediately puts the Queſtion, Are all Workers of Miracles? Plainly intimating they were not. (t) Beſides, if they muſt not uſe Impoſition of Hands becauſe they can't work Miracles like the Apoſtles, or thoſe ordain'd by them, why do they venture to preach, or adminiſter the Sacraments, without this Supernatural Qualification?

Readers for the Common-Prayers.

The next Proviſion under this Head orders, That where the Pariſh can't be furniſh'd with Preaching-Miniſters, Readers may be appointed for officiating in the Common-Prayers, and reading the Scriptures. What Common-Prayers theſe were, has been already obſerv'd.

The 5th Head ſettles the Office of Superintendents, limits the Number to Ten or Twelve, and deſcribes the Extent of their Juriſdiction. Theſe Superintendents are obliged to preach thrice a Week, to viſit their whole Precinct, and not to reſide above three or four Months in one Place. 'Twas part of their Buſineſs to inſpect the Conduct of the Miniſters, and the Behaviour of the People: To ſee the Maintenance of the Poor, and the Education of young People, well managed. They are likewiſe to admoniſh where Occaſion requires, and to take Notice of all ſcandalous Practice in order to farther Cenſure by the Church.

The Choice and Office of Superintendents.

As to the Election of Superintendents, 'tis at preſent in regard to the Exigency of the Juncture referr'd to the Council, who may either nominate the Perſons themſelves, or give Commiſſion to others for that Purpoſe. And here 'tis added, that the Gentlemen and Burgeſſes within the Dioceſe ſhould be always preacquainted with the Election. But this was only a Temporary Proviſion; for afterwards, upon the Death or Depoſing any Superintendent all the Churches of the Dioceſe were to have an Intereſt in the Election, which was to be made in the Capital Town. And here the Candidate was to paſs the Teſt of the Miniſters of the Province, and the neighbouring Superintendent: By theſe he was to be examin'd upon the Points of Learning, Probity, and Diſcretion. And here no cuſtomary Solemnities were thought neceſſary: Nothing farther than the Approbation of the Miniſters and Superintendent, together with the publick Conſent of the Elders and People, were requir'd to compleat his Character.

And to conclude this Head, the Superintendent is ſubjected to the Cenſure and Correction of the Elders and Miniſters of his Province: And in caſe of Remiſſneſs, Male-adminiſtration, or Immorality, may be depos'd.

The Regulation and Privileges of Univerſities.

Their Proviſion for Scools and Univerſities are not uncommendable: St. Andrews, Glaſcow, and Aberdeen, are named for Univerſities; the Faculties, Profeſſors, and Principals, are named; the Exerciſes, Salaries, Officers, and Servants, ſettled. As to Matter of Privilege, they ſeem rather willing to rely upon inoffenſive Behaviour, than legal Advantage: And therefore, when any Member of the Univerſity is ſued by any Perſon foreign to their Body, they would have him appear in the Provoſt's, or Bailiff's Court; but then they move the Rector of the Univerſity may ſit upon the Bench, and be join'd as an Aſſeſſor with the Magiſtrates: But if a Diſpute happen'd between any of the Students, the Cauſe was only to be tried by the Rector and his Aſſeſſors.

(s) Hiſt. Reform. of Scotland, p. 283.

(t) 1 Cor. 12. v. 28, & 29.

The Rector, and all other Members of the Univerſity are exempted from all Taxes, and other publick Contributions to the Government. They are likewiſe privileg'd from all Offices which are likely to interrupt their Studies, and take up too much of their Time; ſuch as the Buſineſs of Truſtees, Guardians, Executors, &c.

A Complaint of the Alienations of the Revenues of the Church.

The 6th Head complains loudly of the Alienation of the Patrimony of the Church. And here, to uſe their own Words, they take Notice, "That ſome Gentlemen are now more rigorous in exacting the Tythes, and other Duties paid before to the Church, than ever the Papiſts were; and ſo the Tyranny of Prieſts is turned into the Tyranny of Lords and Lairds. For this we require, ſay they, that the Gentlemen, Barons, Lords, Earls, and others, be content to live upon their own Rents, and ſuffer the Church to be reſtor'd to her Right and Liberty. (u)

Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, for what Crimes, and under what Direction.

The 7th Head takes in Church Cenſures. Blaſphemy, Adultery, Murder, Perjury, and ſuch capital Crimes, are ſaid not to fall properly under Eccleſiaſtical Correction; for thoſe who are guilty of ſuch raging Diſorders, ought to be cut off by the Sword of Juſtice: But Intemperance in Eating and Drinking, Fornication, Exceſſes in Clothes, Oppreſſion of the Poor, Circumvention in Commerce, licentious Diſcourſe, and unguarded Behaviour; theſe Inſtances of Miſconduct lie within the Diſcipline of the Church.

If the Miſbehaviour is not publickly known, or can be reach'd rather by violent Preſumption than direct Proof, the Offender ought to receive a private Reprimand; and upon Promiſe of Amendment the Diſcipline was to proceed no farther. If the Reproof is contemn'd, the Promiſe broken, and the former Negligences and Indiſcretion continue, the Miniſter's Buſineſs is to reprove him; and in caſe of Diſobedience, to report the Matter to the Church, and go farther in the Diſcipline, according to our Saviour's Direction.

Where the Crimes are publick and heinous, ſuch as Fornication, Drunkeneſs, Swearing, &c. the Offender muſt be convented before the Miniſter, Elders, and Deacons; and here the Quality and Aggravation of the Sin muſt be ſet forth: If he ſhews himſelf penitent, and deſires to give publick Satisfaction, a Day muſt be aſſign'd him to appear before the Congregation, and own his Repentance. If theſe Conditions are accepted, and perform'd, he ought be received and treated as formerly.

If the Offender continues obſtinate and unmanageable, he muſt be diſmiſs'd with an Exhortation to conſider the Danger of his Condition, and menac'd with a ſharper Proceſs. If he recovers himſelf within a proper Time, and acquaints the Miniſter with his Recollection, he may be preſented to the Congregation, and admitted to Church Communion: But if there are no Signs of Reformation, the Fault and Impenitence, but not the Name of the Perſon, muſt be notified to the Congregation. And here the Miniſter is to deſire the People to call upon God that the Conſcience of the Criminal may be awaken'd, and brought to Remorſe and Compunction. If his Stubborneſs holds on, his Name muſt be publiſh'd the next Sunday to the Congregation, and his Friends requeſted to uſe their Intereſt to make him ſenſible of his Fault: And now ſolemn Prayers are to be made for his Converſion. The third Sunday the Miniſter is to demand whether the Offender has made any Step towards a Recovery, and ſhewn himſelf ſorry for his Miſbehaviour. If no Body can teſtify thus far in his Behalf, the Miniſter with the Conſent of the Elders and Deacons, and by the Order of the Church, is to pronounce the Criminal excommunicated. When this Sentence is paſs'd, no Body, excepting his Wife and Family, is allow'd to eat and drink, to trade, to converſe, or ſo much as ſalute him, without a Licence from the Miniſtry; that by ſeeing himſelf thus abandon'd and abhorr'd, he may be ſham'd into Repentance. His Children born after he ſtands excommunicated are not admitted to Baptiſm 'till they are either adult, and deſire it, or elſe are preſented by the Mother, or ſome other Friends, who at the ſame Time muſt declare their Abhorrence of the Father's Incorrigibleneſs. *

Thoſe guilty of capital Crimes, tho' pardon'd by the State, are excommunicated by the Church.

Thoſe guilty of Murder, Manſlaughter, Adultery, and other Crimes which deſerve Death by the Law of the Country, ſuch Perſons, though pardon'd by the Civil Magiſtrate, are not to be receiv'd to Church Communion without offering themſelves to Penance: However, notwithſtanding this commendable Diſcipline, they are permitted to hear the Sermon. When a Perſon under theſe Circumſtances petitions for Communion, a Day is ſet him to appear before the Congregation; and here he is to make a publick Acknowledgment of his Crime, and intreat being receiv'd into their Society. When the Miniſter has examin'd his Diſpoſition, put his Sincerity to a proper Teſt, and inſtructed him in the principal Points of Religion, he is to ask the Congregation whether they are willing to readmit him. Upon their anſwering in the Affirmative, Prayer is made for the Penitent; after which the Elders, and one or two of the Congregation, take him by the Hand, and embrace him in Behalf of the whole Church. In the Cloſe, the Miniſter recommends Circumſpection, and precautions him againſt a Relapſe; and after this Exhortation, publick Thanks are return'd to God for the Converſion of their Brother. All Perſons whatever are to be ſubject to theſe Spiritual Cenſures; and no Quality, or publick Office either in Church or State, muſt be pleaded for an Exemption.

The 8th Head relating to Elders and Deacons ſhall be paſs'd over, ſomething of this Kind having been already mention'd upon another Occaſion.

Common-Prayer not to be at Sermon, and why.

The 9th Head goes upon the Polity of the Church, as they call it. In Villages when there is no Sermon, certain Portions of Scripture are order'd to be read, and Pſalms ſung, though not without a Latitude for Omiſſion in ſome Caſes as to the latter Appointment. In great Towns they think it proper that either Sermon, or Common-Prayer with the Leſſons ſhould be had every Day. When a Sermon is preached, they don't think the Common-Prayer neceſſary: The Reaſon of this odd Opinion is, for fear the People ſhould be encourag'd to Superſtition, and come to the Prayers as they do to the Maſs; or imagine at leaſt, that the Pulpit-Prayers before and after Sermon ſignify nothing. However, they have ſome Reſerve of Regard for the Liturgical Miniſtrations; for where there is neither Preaching nor Catechiſing on Sundays in the Afternoon, they order the Reading the Common-Prayer.

(u) Spotſwood, p. 152. & dein.

* Knox's Liturgy, or the whole Form of Diſcipline and Prayers, according to the Church of Scotland.

As to Baptiſm, tho' they conclude this Sacrament may be adminiſter'd whenever there is a Sermon, they give notwithſtanding a Preference to the Sunday. On Week Days they would have this Office perform'd only after Sermon: They aſſign Two Reaſons for this Settlement; Firſt, This is done, ſay they, to diſcountenance the groſs Error of thoſe who affirm that Children dying without Baptiſm are damn'd. And Secondly, To retrieve the Honour of the Solemnity, that People may recover a right Notion of the Dignity of the Sacrament, and behave themſelves with more Devotion than commonly they do.

The Holy Euchariſt adminiſtred four Times a Year.

They conceive four Times a Year may be ſufficient for adminiſtring the Holy Eucharist. And here, as to the Circumſtance of Time, their overſcrupulous Apprehenſion of Superſtition runs them upon Singularity, and diſconforming with the ancient Church: And thus inſtead of the Feſtivals of Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Whitſuntide, the firſt Sundays of December, March, and June, are fix'd for this Purpoſe; to which, to compleat the Number of the Regulation, the firſt Sunday of September is added.

They don't deny but that the Church may change the Time, and increaſe the Frequency. They are wholly of Opinion the Holy Euchariſt ought not to be given without previous Examination, eſpecially where the Ignorance of the Perſon is either known or ſuſpected; and that none who can't repeat the Lord's-Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, none that do not underſtand the End and Efficacy of the Inſtitution, ſhould be admitted to this Holy Myſtery. They order an Engliſh Bible for every Church, and recommend the reading Common-Prayer Morning and Evening in private Families by the beſt qualified Perſon.

Liberty of Propheſying.

They proceed to determine for the Exerciſe of Prophecy, or interpreting the Scriptures in publick Aſſemblies: They ground this Practice upon the Precedent of the Church at Corinth; (w) though by the Way, there's a great Diſparity in the Caſe; for theſe Corinthians were furniſh'd with miraculous Aſſiſtance, and govern'd by ſupernatural Impulſe. Thoſe who drew the Diſcipline ſeem'd ſomething ſenſible of this comparative Diſadvantage, and therefore confine the Exerciſe within ſeveral Rules. 1*ſt*, All curious and unſerviceable Enquiries were to be avoided. 2*dly*, They were to decline all Expoſitions inconſiſtent with the Analogy of Faith, or the Practice of Charity: And under this Reſtraint, all Interpretations which ſeem to imply a Contradiction to other plain Texts of Scripture are comprehended. 3*dly*, The Expoſitor muſt keep cloſe to his Text, and not run out into Digreſſion and common Place, nor form his Diſcourſe to the Air and Amplification of a Sermon. 4*thly*, He muſt not take the Freedom of Invectives, unleſs in the Confutation of Hereſies. 5*thly*, He muſt be brief in his Exhortation, and ſpend the Time moſtly in explaining the Senſe of the Text, ſhewing the Connexion, and making ſuch Remarks as may be moſt ſerviceable to the Audience. 6*thly*, There muſt be no Squabbling nor School Diſputes; but every one that puts a Queſtion muſt reſolve it himſelf. 7*thly*, After thoſe concern'd in this Exerciſe have deliver'd their Opinions, and finiſh'd their Diſcourſe, they are to withdraw, that the Miniſters and the reſt of the Aſſembly may examine their Performance. When this is done, the Perſons were to be called in, and gently advertis'd of their Miſtakes, if they made any; and now all intervening Queſtions and Difficulties were to be ſatisfied and diſentangled.

(w) 1 Cor. 14.

The Judgment of thoſe who drew the Diſcipline concerning ſome Caſes about Marriage.

Under this Head of Polity they prohibit all Clandeſtine Marriages, without Exception of Privilege for the beſt Quality whatever: And here they injoin the publiſhing the Banns three Sundays, unleſs where the Perſons are well known; in which Caſe the Notice may be ſhorten'd at the Diſcretion of the Miniſter. They allow of no Divorce unleſs upon the Proof of Adultery: When this Charge is made good, they would have the injur'd Party declar'd free to engage elſewhere, and the Criminal executed. If the Government is ſo merciful as to give the Offender his Life, the Church muſt notwithſtanding proceed to Excommunication. If the Party ſubmits to Penance, and recovers Communion, he may be allow'd to marry again upon his Requeſt; but with this Condition, that provided the injur'd Perſon ſhould be willing to paſs by the Breach of Faith, and renew the Relation; when this happens, the Criminal muſt not be permitted to engage with any other. But after all, they think it moſt adviſable to be govern'd by God Almighty's Command in the Old-Teſtament, to puniſh Adultery with Death, and not give Occaſion for the Reſolution of ſo difficult a Queſtion.

The Articles concerning Burial, having been touch'd already in the Diſcipline at Frankfort, ſhall be omitted.

Thoſe who officiate in the Maſs, adore the Hoſt, and carry it in Proceſſion, they would have ſeverely corrected: And though they don't venture ſo far as to preſcribe the Penalty, yet they make no Scruple to affirm the Practice deſerves Death; and that thoſe Perſons deſerve the ſame Puniſhment, who preſume to adminiſter the Sacraments in publick Aſſemblies without either Reverence or Spiritual Character.

And laſtly, They don't ſtick to declare, that the Clergy in the Roman Communion have no Authority to adminiſter the Sacraments. Their Reaſon is very ſingular; 'Tis becauſe, ſay they, God has not put the Word of Exhortation in their Mouths. From hence, after ſome hard Language, they proceed to affirm, that the paſſing through the Requiſites and Teſts above mentioned, are the only lawful Methods for making Miniſters. But here they throw in a Proviſion for privileg'd Caſes: They ſuppoſe, there is ſometimes an extraordinary Call to the Miniſtry, and then the cuſtomary Forms are diſpens'd with. *

(x) Spotſwood, p. 152, ad 174.

The Diſcipline not paſt by the Eſtates.

This Church Diſcipline was laid before the Nobility, who took ſeveral Days to peruſe it. Some were willing to acquieſce in the Regulation, and paſs it into a Law; but the Majority diſſented: And thus the Matter was poſtpon'd, as Felix diſmiſs'd St. Paul, to a more convenient Seaſon. There were ſome Articles which call'd loudly for Reſtitution, wreſted the late gain'd Juriſdiction out of the Hand of the rich Laity, and ſate hard upon Intereſt and Pleaſure. (y) The Eſtates therefore let this Scheme lie by, and went upon a more acceptable Proviſion; and that was an Act for demoliſhing Cloiſters and Abbey-Churches. The Execution of this Order was intruſted with four of the Nobility, and ſeveral Barons, well affected to the Service. (z) They had their ſeveral Ranges, and the Kingdom was divided amongſt them: This was done that no Corner might eſcape a thorough Reformation. The Cauſe having thus the Countenance of the Eſtates, and ſome of the Quality giving the Onſet, the leſſer People came in amain. And now the Churches were every where either pull'd down down or defac'd: For though the Ordinance of the Eſtates was pointed only againſt Religious Houſes, the Populace thought their Zeal defective, and their Commiſſion too ſhort; and therefore, not to do the Work by Halves, they fell on with undiſtinguiſhing Rage, and like a Torrent carried all before them. The Preachers had inflam'd their Ignorance, puſh'd them to Sacrilege and Fury, and blown them up to this Pitch of Diſtraction. Theſe Pulpit-Incendiaries cried out, That the Places where Idols had been worſhipp'd ought to be deſtroyed by the Law of God; and that the ſparing them was reſerving the Accurſed Thing. And thus every Building with a Steeple was a Mark of the Beaſt, a Seat of Idolatry deſcrib'd by Moſes, and a Houſe of Devotion for the Amorites. By the Help of this Divinity, the Churches were all raz'd or batter'd, the Beauty of the great Towns ſcandalouſly blemiſh'd, and the publick Ornaments of the Kingdom laid in Rubbiſh: The Communion Plate was made Prize, and the Bells, Timber, and Lead, ſet to Sale in the Market. Regiſters and Libraries were deſtroy'd, and the Remains of Learning and Antiquity thrown into the Fire. The Grave was no Protection againſt theſe Zealots: They rifled Monuments and Tombs, did what they could to extinguiſh the Name of thoſe in the other World, and murder them in their Memory. Thus what eſcap'd the Fury of the Mob in the late Commotions, was now ſeized and ſacrific'd.

To ſee noble Structures conſecrated to the Honour of the Ever Bleſſed Trinity, where all the Articles of the Apoſtles Creed were profeſs'd, the Chriſtian Sacraments adminiſter'd, and all the Inſpir'd Writings receiv'd as ſuch; Places, where there was no Polytheiſm, no Addreſſing Devils, no Roaſting of Children, no Licentious Worſhip ſo much as pretended; in ſhort, where there was no Reſemblance of a Parallel with the Heathen Idolatry mentioned in the Old and New-Teſtament: I ſay, to ſee the Houſes of God thus ravag'd and raz'd, the Holy Furniture made Plunder, and the Church Eſtates ſeiz'd, gives a frightfull Idea of ſome of theſe Reformers: And to conſider the Fact without knowing the whole Hiſtory, would almoſt make a Man believe ſome rough unconverted Nation had made an Invaſion, and carried the Country. 'Tis true, theſe extraordinary Proceedings had ſomething of the Face of Authority; but when the Matter is a little examin'd, the Reader will find there is nothing but Colour and Varniſh in this Appearance; for theſe Undertakers in Religion had neither the Concurrence of the Spiritual Eſtate, nor any Commiſſion from the Crown. They could not ſo much as preſume upon their Queen's Conſent: They well knew ſuch Methods muſt be highly affrontive to her Majeſty. So that upon the Whole, this Part of their Reformation was a plain Violation of the Conſtitution.

After the Receſs of the Convention, ſeveral Noblemen and Barons met at the Inſtance of John Knox, and ſign'd the Diſcipline. Thoſe who ſubſcribed this Draught were, beſides the Duke of Chatelerault, Seven Earls, Six Lords, the Biſhop of Galloway, and the Dean of Murray, Four Lairds, and ſeveral Burgeſſes. The Diſcipline had this Proviſo annex'd, That the Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and other benefic'd Men who had join'd themſelves to the Religion, ſhould enjoy the Rents of their Benefices during their Lives, they ſuſtaining the Miniſters for their Parts as was preſcrib'd in the ſaid Book. (a) But this Security turn'd to no Account, for moſt of thoſe who ſubſcrib'd, ſeiz'd the Eſtates of the Clergy, and could never be prevail'd with to part with them. In ſhort, theſe Men, as Spotſwood obſerves, were moſt averſe to Reſtitution, and greater Enemies to the Patrimony of the Church, than thoſe of any other Perſwaſion whatever.

Ibid.

The Geneva Bible publiſhed.

To return to England: This Year the Engliſh Tranſlation of the Scriptures, commonly called the Geneva Bible, was publiſh'd at Geneva. There are two Epiſtles prefix'd to the Work, one to the Queen, and another to the Reader. Theſe Addreſſes charg'd the Engliſh Reformation with Remains of Popery, and endeavour'd to prevail with the Queen to ſtrike off ſeveral Ceremonies. This offenſive Application, to ſpeak ſoftly, might probably be the Reaſon why theſe Epiſtles were omitted in the next Impreſſion.

The Queen's Proclamation for Anabaptiſts, and other foreign Sectaries, to depart the Realm.

The Queen's indulging a French Presbyterian Church in England, as has been already obſerv'd, encourag'd great Numbers of that Nation, and of the Dutch, to come over, and plant themſelves in Maritime Towns. And here, under the Shelter of the Reformed Religion, they maintain'd ſeveral groſs Errors and Hereſies. Some of theſe were German Anabaptiſts, and others propagated Opinions of a very dangerous Tendency; And thus Misbelief gain'd Ground, and ſome of the ignorant Natives were miſerably miſled. To ſtop the ſpreading of this Infection, the Queen by a Proclamation order'd theſe Hereticks, both Aliens and natural-born Engliſh, to depart the Kingdom within One and twenty Days: The Penalty of ſtaying longer was Impriſonment, and forfeiting their Goods. Notwithſtanding this Order, ſeveral ſcreen'd themſelves with their Proteſtancy, and join'd the French and Dutch Congregations both in London and the Coaſt-Towns. And here by venting ſome of their Dotages they occaſion'd ſuch warm Conteſts, that Peter Martyr found it neceſſary to interpoſe his Intereſt for bringing them to more Temper. To this Purpoſe he wrote a Letter ſuperſcrib'd To the Church of Strangers in the City of London. *

Another Proclamation to prohibit the defacing of Churches.

About this Time another Proclamation was ſet forth relating to the Church. It has been already obſerv'd, the Queen by her Injunctions had order'd the removing all Paintings and other Monuments of Counterfeit Miracles and Idolatry, both from Churches and private Houſes. Some People either out of Avarice or Puritaniſm, or both, had miſapply'd the Execution of this Order, and carried it much farther than her Majeſty intended. Thus under the Colour of theſe Injunctions they defac'd the Images of our Bleſſed Saviour and his Apoſtles, and deſtroy'd the Hiſtorical Repreſentations of Scripture in the Church-Windows: And which is more, their Zeal carried them to the pulling away Coats of Arms, and Monumental Inſcriptions, where they found any Pictures in their Neighbourhood. And becauſe the Bells had been conſecrated, and the Churches abus'd to Superſtition and Idolatrous Worſhip, they took down the Bells, and made Money of them, turn'd the Steeples to Pigeon-houſes, and ſtripp'd the Roof for the Lead. “All this Sacrilegious Ravage and Diſorder was “forbidden by the Proclamation, under Pain “of Impriſonment during her Majeſty's Plea-“ſure, and ſuch farther Fine for the Contempt “as ſhall be thought meet. A Charge was “likewiſe given to Biſhops, and all other Or-“dinaries, to enquire of all ſuch Contempts “done from the Beginning of her Majeſty's “Reign, and to enjoin the Perſons offending to

The collegiate Church of Weſtminſter new founded.

To proceed, the collegiate Church of St. Peter's Weſtminſter, which had frequently chang'd its Foundation, and ſuffer'd ſo many Revolutions in Figure and Fortune within Twenty Years, had now a more laſting Settlement. Flecknam the laſt Abbot and his Convent, as Sanders reports, had an offer to keep their Preferment, upon Condition of Swearing the Supremacy, and officiating by the Engliſh Liturgy: But theſe Conditions being refus'd, the Abbey was diſſolv'd by Act of Parliament. And now the Queen having made Choice of Parcel of the beſt Lands, convey'd the reſt to that Church. By Her Majeſty's Letters Patents bearing Date the Second Year of her Reign, the Foundation is ſettled for a Dean, Twelve Secular Canons, Two Schoolmaſters, Forty Scholars, petty Canons, and others belonging to the Choir, to the Number of Thirty, and Twelve Alms-Men: To which may be added Stewards, Receivers, and Servants belonging to the College. The Dean has the Cuſtody of the Regalia, aſſiſts at Coronation Solemnities, and is conſtituted Juſtice of Peace within Weſtminſter and the Liberties, by Act of Parliament. The Dean and Chapter have the Privilege of great Juriſdiction both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil within the City, and Liberties of Weſtminſter, the Precincts of St. Martins le Grand, and ſome Pariſhes in the County of Eſſex. (b)

Towards the latter End of this Year, Robert Horn Dr. of Divinity, formerly Dean of Durham, and who had lately ſignaliz'd himſelf in maintaining the Engliſh Liturgy at Franckfort, was preſerr'd to the See of Wincheſter, and conſecrated in Form on the 16th of February. At the ſame Time Edmund Scambler, Batchelor of Divinity, and Prebendary of Weſtminſter, was conſecrated Biſhop of Peterborough. During the Vacancy of this See, and whilſt Scambler was Biſhop, Secretary Cecil carried off the beſt Manours in the Soke belonging to the Biſhoprick. 'Tis to be ſuſpected Scambler's Promotion was owing to this criminal Compliance. For by the Intereſt of this Miniſter he was afterwards tranſlated to Norwich, to which See he proved no leſs Unfortunate than to the Former. * The ſame Month Dr. Young was tranſlated from St. Davids to York: And in March following Dr. James Pilkington was conſecrated Biſhop of Durham, and Dr. John Beſt, Biſhop of Carliſle, in January.

Anno 156$\frac{0}{1}$.

This Year the Queen wrote to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; to the Biſhop of London, and the reſt of her Commiſſioners for Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, to review the Kalendar for the Common-Prayer, to ſtrike out ſome of the Leſſons, and appoint others which they ſhould judge more ſerviceable and inſtructive. The Letter complains, many Churches were unrepair'd to a ſcandalous Degree: That they were Unornamented and very negligently kept: This indecency and diſregard is order'd to be rectified. Towards the latter End, the Queen takes Notice of her Permiſſion of the Common-Prayer in Latin to collegiate Churches, and Commands theſe Commiſſioners to take Care that this Allowance of hers may not be diſappointed or miſmanag'd. * That there was Occaſion for ſome Alterations in the Kalendar appears by the Defectiveneſs of the laſt Common-Prayer ſet forth in the Reign of King Edward the VIth, where there was no Direction for proper Leſſons on Sundays: But in a 4*to* Common-Prayer, printed in the Year 1560, there is a Kalendar of Firſt Leſſons for Morning and Evening Prayer on Sundays throughout the Year: And for ſome Sundays the Second Leſſons are appointed. This Common-Prayer was printed before the Queen ſent her Letter to the Commiſſioners above-mention'd, as may be collected from the Dates: 'Tis likely therefore the Archbiſhop and the reſt might ſettle the Second Leſſons for Sundays, then unappointed; and make ſome farther Alterations in the reſt of the Kalendar.

Ann. Dom. 156$\frac{0}{1}$.

On the Firſt of January, this Year the Queen came to St. Paul's, and was diſpleas'd with Dean Noell, for preſenting her with a Common-Prayer Book with Cuts. Her Majeſty gave him a ſevere Reprimand for this intended Reſpect. The Reader may poſſibly fancy the Queen's Diſpleaſure was ſomewhat myſterious upon this Occaſion, for 'twas not long ſince ſhe had diſcover'd herſelf in Favour of Images, and was difficultly prevail'd with to conſent to their Removal: Beſides, both now and ſeveral Years forward, ſhe had a Crucifix in her Chappel. Now if an ornamental Figure, or a religious Repreſentation was ſo dangerous, why did her Majeſty ſet the Example? If any one, I ſay, asks this Queſtion, I muſt leave him to anſwer it himſelf. *

This Summer the Queen went a Progreſs into Eſſex and Suffolk. It ſeems the Figure and Behaviour of the Clergy did not pleaſe her: She did not find them every where ſo conformable in their Habit, ſo perfect in their Office, nor ſo diſcreet in their Management, as ſhe expected. She was particularly diſconcerted at ſeeing their Wives in Cathedrals and Colleges. She iſſued out an Order therefore to forbid all Heads and Members of any College, or cathedral Church, within the Realm, having their Wives, or any other Woman within the Precinct of ſuch Places; the Penalty was forfeiting all Eccleſiaſtical Promotions belonging to any Cathedral, or collegiate Church.

Auguſt 9. 1561.

Secretary Cecil ſent this unacceptable Order to Archbiſhop Parker. And to explain himſelf the better to Parker's Satisfaction, he told him in a Letter, that the Queen ſtood ſtrongly diſaffected to Matrimony in the Clergy. That had it not been for ſomething of Courage and Dexterity in himſelf, ſhe had abſolutely forbidden Churchmen that State: That he was glad to compound with her Majeſty, and propoſe this Expedient to prevent her going farther. However, he had taken Care to ſend Copies of the Injunction only to his Grace, to the Archbiſhop of York, and to the Chancellors of each Univerſity: And that he recommended this Method to hinder the Inſtruments coming out in a more publick Manner. *

The Archbiſhop's Letter to Secretary Cecil.

Archbiſhop Parker ſent this Injunction thro' his Province purſuant to her Majeſty's Order, but was very much diſſatisfied with the Contents. And afterwards upon his waiting on the Queen, he was ſurpriz'd with her Majeſty's Diſcourſe upon this Subject, as appears by his Letter to Secretary Cecil: “ He acquaints this Miniſter, he “ was aſtoniſh'd to the laſt Degree to hear ſo “ learned and conſcientious a Princeſs, treat “ the holy Inſtitution of Matrimony with ſo “ much Satyr and Contempt: Such unexpected “ Language put him in a Horror, as he ſpeaks; “ I wonder, ſays he, that State ſhould be made “ a Crime in the Clergy, which will ſtand the “ Teſt of the laſt Day: And that an Engage- “ ment which pleaſes God Almighty, ſhould

“not pleaſe her Majeſty: I am at a Loſs to underſtand why her Highneſs ſhould gratify our Adverſaries ſo far, as to put us under Diſfavour upon this Account. If our Reputation is thus diſabled, we ſhall be thrown out of Capacity of doing God and her Majeſty Service. As far as my Reading and Information reaches, it has been the Cuſtom of all Princes both Chriſtian and Pagan, to Countenance the Miniſters of Religion: They thought this a neceſſary Expedient to recommend the Rules of Duty, to preſerve the Force of Conſcience, and Support the Government; but now 'tis our Misfortune to be ſingled out from the reſt of Mankind for Infamy and Averſion: To be expos'd to the Ignorant and Malicious, with Marks of the laſt Diſadvantage: To be cenſured as if we had no Regard to the Circumſtances of our Profeſſion: As if we were wholly reſign'd to Appetite, without the leaſt Check of Diſcretion. The Queen was ſo poſſeſs'd with the Senſe of our Miſmanagement in this Matter, that ſhe repented our being truſted with the Function, and wiſh'd it had been otherwiſe. This Diſcovery muſt be Sport to the Clergy of the late Reign. It muſt be Diverſion to ſuch People to ſee in what manner we are handled, and with what diſtinguiſhing Hardſhip we are treated by the Government. But this we ſhall paſs over with Patience, and reſt the Event with God Almighty. However, I muſt needs ſay, we have all of us great Reaſon to be much diſcourag'd.

“Her Majeſty, continues the Archbiſhop, talk'd of ſetting forth Injunctions of another Nature; but I hope God will ſtop this Motion, and alter her Purpoſe: And that as by the divine Aſſiſtance ſhe has begun a good Work, ſhe will hold on the ſame Courſe: I don't queſtion but theſe Æſtus humani, theſe Sallies of Paſſion, were occaſion'd by Miſreports, and that her Majeſty will acquit herſelf to Advantage, and like Theodoſius the Great, take Time for a mature Deliberation: And not proceed to a ſudden Reſolution in Things of the laſt Importance. It would trouble me if the Clergy ſhould be forc'd upon any Incompliance, and declare with the Apoſtles, that we muſt Obey God, rather than Men: But let thoſe who ſuggeſt theſe Thoughts be never ſo Conſiderable, we have no ſmall Numbers in our contemptible Party, that have Courage and Conſcience enough to Sacrifice their Lives in Defence of their Religion.

By this laſt Paragraph, 'tis plain the Archbiſhop was Apprehenſive the Queen had ſome Intentions of returning Popery upon them. From hence he proceeds to complain of her forbidding the married Clergy to live with their Families in Cathedrals. “What Policy, ſays he, can this be, to drive Hoſpitality out of ſuch Quarters. To drive away the Preachers from the beſt Towns in the Kingdom? And yet when ſuch Places are well inſtructed, the Example reaches the Country, and the Villages are kept in Order the better: But on the other Side, for the dignified Clergy to ſtay at their Cathedrals upon ſuch Terms of publick Diſgrace, which Way is it to be endur'd? What Perſon that has any Regard for his Credit, will live under Affronts, and continue in a Place where his Character is maim'd and murder'd? To ſee the Clergy thus particularly diſcourag'd, when all other People have their Liberty, is a melancholy Reflection. Beſides, this Injunction might have had its Force in preventing Abuſes, without raking upon the Reputation of the Clergy. For my Part, I wiſh I had never engag'd in this Station, ſince her Majeſty has been pleas'd to diſcover her Diſeſteem in ſo remarkable a Manner. I have endeavour'd to ſerve her Majeſty to my Power, and I humbly conceive, have done it in no contemptible Inſtances. By the punctual Execution of her Orders, I have gain'd the ill Will both of Papiſts and Proteſtants: But my being conſcious of ſerving God and her Highneſs, made me eaſy under Obloquy and Cenſure. But the Reception I had yeſterday from her Majeſty, and the earneſt forcing that Progreſs-Hunting-Injunction upon the Clergy; an Order drawn up without adviſing with any Eccleſiaſtick: This, has put me quite under Hatches, and indiſpos'd me for all other Buſineſs; ſo that I can only mourn to God Almighty in Amaritudine Animæ meæ, ut dicam cum Sara, peto Dominum, ut de Vinculo Improperii hujus abſolvas me, aut certè deſuper terram eripias me. *

Whether the Secretary acquainted the Queen with this Letter, or what Succeſs it had with her, does not appear. However, it ſhews the Archbiſhop was a plain Dealer, and well furniſh'd with Courage.

The Queen of Scots deſires a ſafe Conduct to paſs thro' the Chanel, and is refus'd.

Upon the Death of Francis the Second, the Queen of Scots diſpatch'd Monſieur D'Oyſſell to deſire Queen Elizabeth to grant her a ſafe Paſſage by Sea into Scotland, and that D'Oyſell might have leave to travel through England into that Kingdom. Queen Elizabeth, before a numerous Attendance, denied both Parts of this Requeſt: Her Reaſon was, becauſe the Queen of Scots had not ratified the Treaty at Edinborough, purſuant to her Promiſe: Adding withal, that provided this was done, ſhe might have a ſafe Conduct to make her Voyage either by Sea or Land, and be treated like a Neighbour and Relation. The Queen of Scots diſconcerted with this Refuſal, ſends for Sir Nicholas Throgmorton Queen Elizabeth's Ambaſſadour at Paris, and having order'd the Company to withdraw, expoſtulated with him to this Effect: “She told him ſhe did not know how far the Diſadvantage of her Sex, and the Warmth of her Temper might carry her: However, ſhe was reſolv'd not to have ſo many Witneſſes of her Weakneſs, as his Miſtreſs furniſh'd herſelf with when ſhe gave Audience to the Ambaſſador D'Oyſell. That nothing troubled her ſo much as her making an unneceſſary Requeſt: That with God's Aſſiſtance, ſhe could as eaſily return into her Kingdom without Queen Elizabeth's Leave, as ſhe arriv'd in France againſt the Inclination of her Brother Edward. 'Tis true, ſhe had a Mind to try Queen Elizabeth's Friendſhip in the Firſt Place, and to maintain a fair Correſpondence with her: But it ſeems his Miſtreſs was not diſpos'd to take her by the Hand; otherwiſe ſhe would never have denied ſo ſlender a Favour: But it may be ſhe had rather engage with the Scottiſh Male-Contents, than with their Queen, a Perſon of equal Quality with her Highneſs, nearly related to her, and Heir to the Engliſh Crown.

She expoſtulates with the Ambaſſador Throgmorton.

And thus, after ſome length of Complaint, and Juſtification, ſhe concludes with ſaying, ſhe had fail'd in no kind Offices to her Siſter of England. But notwithſtanding ſhe had omitted nothing to oblige her, her Profeſſions of Friendſhip were either ſlighted, or diſbeliev'd: And being at a Loſs to account for her Siſter's Coldneſs and Diſaffection, ſhe deſired the Ambaſſador to acquaint her with the Cauſe.

Sir Nicholas anſwer'd, That tho' he had no Inſtructions to diſcourſe upon that Head, yet if her Majeſty pleas'd, he would lay aſide his Character, and inform her of the Grounds of his Miſtreſſes Diſguſt. At the Queen my Miſtreſſes Acceſſion to the Throne, ſays he, your Majeſty quarter'd her Arms, and ſnatch'd her Title, which was not done by you in the Reign of Queen Mary: Now I refer it to your Majeſty's Wiſdom to judge, whether a greater Provocation than this could poſſibly be given to a Prince?

Her defence for uſing the Arms and Title of England.

To this the Queen of Scots replied, That ſhe was over-ruled by her Husband, and his Father King Henry: That ſince the Death of thoſe Princes, ſince ſhe was at her own Diſpoſal, ſhe had wholly declin'd making uſe of the Arms and Title of England: Tho' after all, ſhe did not know what Injury 'twould be to Queen Elizabeth, if ſhe ſhould quarter thoſe Arms upon the Score of her Grandmothers being eldeſt Siſter to King Henry the Eighth; for ſhe was well inform'd that ſome who ſtood more diſtant upon the Royal Line, had been allow'd the ſame Privilege. (c)

(c) Cambden Eliz. pag 64. & deinc.

The Precedents this Princeſs meant, were Courtney Marquiſs of Exeter, and the Dutcheſs of Suffolk, King Henry the Eighth's Niece by his younger Siſter, who gave the Arms of England with the Difference of a Border: But then this, as Cambden reports, was rather ſpecial Favour, than Matter of Right.

She makes a farther endeavour to ſatisfy Q. Elizabeth, but without Effect.

This Anſwer not ſatisfying Queen Elizabeth, the Queen of Scots, who was now upon her Journey to embark, ſent for Throgmorton to Abbeville, and ask'd him if he could ſuggeſt any Thing which he thought might prove acceptable to his Miſtreſs? He told her the only Expedient would be for her Majeſty to ratify the Treaty at Edinborough. She replied, "That Buſineſs was over and ſatisfied as to the Main: That all hoſtile Preparations were ceas'd, the French Garriſons evacuated, their Troops recall'd, the Fortification of Aymouth raz'd, and the Arms and Title of England laid down: And as for the Article touching her ſeditious Subjects, ſhe hop'd they would have no Reaſon to complain of Rigour: But your Queen, continues this Princeſs, by endeavouring to ſtop me in my Return, is willing, I perceive, to hinder the Proof of my Clemency. As to any unexecuted Part of the Treaty, I can't imagine which Way it can be prejudicial to your Miſtreſs. However, to ſatisfy her farther, I intend to write to her more at large my ſelf; tho' it has been her Cuſtom to correſpond with me only in the Hand of her Secretary. As for your Part, I deſire you would anſwer the Character of an Ambaſſador, and make your Report in a friendly Manner.

Idem.

She arrives in Scotland.

But nothing ſhort of ratifying the Edinborough-Treaty would content Queen Elizabeth. In the mean Time the Queen of Scots embark'd at Calais, and by Advantage of a Miſt paſs'd undiſcover'd by the Men of War, which lay to intercept her; for notwithſtanding it was given out the Engliſh Fleet was cruſing to clear the Channel of Pirates, or as others pretended, to wait on the Queen of Scots to her own Dominions; yet 'tis much more probable there was no ſmooth Meaning at the Bottom. For to heighten the Jealouſies of the Engliſh Court, the Lord James, who had lately been there, in his Return to Scotland, told our Queen, that the Intercepting the Queen of Scots was the only Expedient to ſecure her Crown and Religion. The ſame Advice was ſuggeſted by Lethington a Scotch Gentleman: He acquainted Queen Elizabeth in a Letter, That it was to be fear'd the Arrival of their Queen would prove fatal to Scotland: That the former Commotions would be reviv'd: That all Intercourſe between the Two Nations, either by Writing or Meſſages, would be impracticable: That the Party which favour'd the Engliſh Intereſt would be cruſh'd, and the Scotch Proteſtants treated like Traitors and Hereticks: And in ſhort, That Mary of Scotland would Reign like Mary of England. Notwithſtanding this uncharitable Conjecture, the Queen of Scots at her Arrival manag'd very gently, allow'd her Subjects their Reformation, ſettled the Kingdom, and govern'd to great Commendation. She diſpatch'd Secretary Lethington to Queen Elizabeth to court her Friendſhip. Our Queen ſtill inſiſted upon the Ratification of the Treaty at Edinborough: This was not denied by the Queen of Scots. However, ſhe deſir'd the Matter might be poſtpon'd till the Affairs of her Kingdom were better ſettled. In the mean Time, her Uncles the Duke D'Aumale, the Grand Prior, the Marquiſs D'Albeuf, and ſeveral other Frenchmen of Quality who attended her to Scotland, had the Liberty to return through England, and were very honourably entertain'd by Queen Elizabeth. This Courteſy was not anſwer'd at the French Court: For by the Duke of Guiſe's Order, ſeveral Engliſh Merchant Men were made Prize on the Coaſt of Bretagne: He likewiſe privately endeavour'd to get Queen Elizabeth excommunicated at Rome: But Pius the Fourth was a more moderate Prelate, and declin'd Extremities. He renew'd his Attempt to gain the Queen, gave her an Invitation with other Proteſtant Princes to the Council of Trent, and diſpatch'd Abbot Martinengo into England with Letters of a very ſmooth Contents. Amongſt other Things, he acquainted her, that if ſhe would pleaſe to ſend either Biſhops, or Ambaſſadors to the Council, he did not queſtion giving them ſuch Satisfaction as might open a Way to a farther Accommodation.

The Pope ſends another Nuncio to Queen Elizabeth.

The Council debates the Receiving him, and reſolves in the Negative.

The Nuncio ſtopping in Flanders, ſent to the Queen for Leave to come forward. Upon this a Council was call'd, and the Matter argued on both Sides. Thoſe who deſir'd the Nuncio, ſuggeſted that the preſent Pope was by no Means of ſo rugged a Temper as his Predeceſſor: That he had addreſs'd the Queen very ceremoniouſly the laſt Year; that 'twas apparent the Repoſe of Chriſtendom lay ſtrongly at his Heart: That the Admitting the Nuncio would draw no Reſtraint: That 'twould ſtill be at her Majeſty's Choice to engage or not. That the Refuſing him an Audience would Diſoblige the Princes of the Roman Communion, and diſturb the Harmony between them and her Majeſty.

On the other Side the Precedent of King Henry the Eighth was urg'd againſt this Latitude: That this Prince, who had a hearty Regard for the Peace of Chriſtendom, proteſted notwithſtanding againſt the Council conven'd by Paul the 3d. That a Perſon with the Character of a Nuncio implied an Acknowledgment of the Papal Supremacy, diſcharg'd by Act of Parliament: That the Popes have always made their Advantage of ſlender Conceſſions, and therefore 'twas moſt prudential to guard againſt ſurprize, and ſtand off at the remoteſt Diſtance: That even the late Queen Mary, in Favour of Poole, forbid Cardinal Peyto's coming a-ſhore, tho' recommended with the Diſtinction of Legate à Latere. That a great Part of the Nation were uneaſy at the Change of Religion, and wanted nothing but ſuch an Opportunity to diſcover themſelves farther, and break out into Diſturbance. Theſe Reaſons were thought to have moſt Weight, and the Board was govern'd accordingly. The Queen and Council were brought to this Reſolution by the Indiſcretion of ſome Engliſh Papiſts, and the hoſtile Proceedings of the Pope's Agents in Ireland. In England, the Noiſe of the Nuncio's coming over had made ſome Roman Catholicks troubleſome and overhardy: They made no Scruple to break the Statutes againſt Papal Encroachments, and ſpread Reports that the Queen was diſpos'd to change her Religion. Some of them are ſaid to have calculated her Nativity, and enter'd into a Confederacy with evil Spirits to be inform'd of the Length of her Reign. In Ireland the Pope's Legate gave the higheſt Provocation by abetting ſome Rebels there, and pronouncing againſt her Majeſty's Right to that Kingdom. (d)

The Biſhop of Viterbo ſolicites the Engliſh Ambaſſador, but to no Purpoſe.

The Nuncio Martinengo being refuſed to come into England, the Biſhop of Viterbo, another Agent of the ſame Character in France, ſolicited Throgmorton to perſwade Queen Elizabeth to ſend Ambaſſadors to the Council of Trent: She was likewiſe importun'd by ſeveral Princes and great Men; by the Kings of France and Spain, the King and Cardinal of Portugal, and more eſpecially by the Duke of Alva; importun'd, I ſay, to rely upon ſo ſolemn a Repreſentation of the Biſhops of Chriſtendom, rather than reſign to the Judgment of a few private Perſons, tho' never ſo well qualified with Learning. The Queen's Anſwer was, That though ſhe heartily deſir'd a General Council, ſhe would ſend no Body to Trent: That the Pope's Authority had been renounc'd in England by Act of Parliament, and therefore ſhe would have no farther Correſpondence with that See: That 'twas not the Pope's, but the Emperor's Privilege, to call a Council: And that ſhe did not underſtand that Prelate had any Advantage of Authority above another Biſhop.

About the Time of this Nuncio's being refuſed, who was the laſt that was ſent to Queen Elizabeth, Sir Edward Cairne departed this Life at Rome. This Gentleman, who was a learned Civilian, and well qualified for Buſineſs, was Knighted by the Emperor Charles the Vth, and had for ſeveral Reigns ſerv'd the Crown of England under a publick Character at Rome. (e)

St. Paul's burnt.

In June this Year a terrible Fire happen'd in the Cathedral of St. Paul's London: It broke out near the Top of the Steeple, burnt down the Spire to the Stone-work, and in four Hours conſum'd the Timber and Lead of the whole Church. This Church was one of the largeſt in all Chriſtendom: 'Twas Seven hundred and twenty Foot in Length, a Hundred and Thirty in Breadth, and in Heigth, from the Floor to the Roof, a Hundred and fifty. The Steeple, from the Ground to the Croſs or Weathercock, amounted to Five hundred and twenty Foot, of which the ſquare Tower made Two hundred and ſixty, and the Spire by Conſequence as many more. (f)

The Cathedral was generally ſuppos'd to have been ſet on Fire by Light'ning: But the Learned Doctor Heylin informs us, That within thirty Years of the Writing his Church Hiſtory, an old Plummer confeſs'd on his Death Bed, that the Church was burnt through his Negligence. 'Twas by leaving a Pan of Coals careleſly in the Steeple when he went to Dinner. *

Soon after this Calamitous Accident the Queen wrote to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to conſult the Biſhops of his Province, and principal Clergy, to fix upon a Method of Contribution for the Re-edifying St. Paul's: And here her Majeſty leaves the Proportion and Method of raiſing the Money to the Direction of the Biſhops. By Archbiſhop Parker's Letter to the Archdeacon of Canterbury, (b) the Clergy of that Dioceſs, thoſe who had paid their Firſt-Fruits were to be charg'd in the Thirtieth Part of their Spiritual Promotion, and thoſe who had not paid their Firſt-Fruits were let down to the Fortieth: Theſe reſpective Valuations were to be made by the Rate enter'd in the Queen's Books. Farther, ſuch Stipendiary Prieſts, who received Twelve Pounds per Annum for ſupplying the Cure, were to pay the Fortieth Part of their Annual Stipend. With Submiſſion, I humbly conceive thoſe of the Laity, to whom ſome of the beſt Manors belonging to St. Paul's had been granted, ought to have been charg'd with the Reparation of that Church: For to take away the Lands which were ſettled for the Maintenance of the Cathedral, and then throw the Burthen upon the impoveriſh'd Clergy, and ſet a Tax upon the Province, looks ſomewhat myſterious.

The Clergy of the Province charg'd with rebuilding it.

About this Time Calvin wrote a Reſolution of ſome Queſtions put to him by the Engliſh Preciſians. One of the Queſtions was concerning the Expediency of Abſolution after the publick Confeſſion. Calvin determin'd this Point in Favour of the Eſtabliſhment of the Church of England. He was ſo frank as to declare that it was always his Inclination to bring this Practice into the Geneva Office; but being afraid 'twould be complain'd of as a Novelty, he complied too eaſily with the Omiſſion. Their next Queſtion was concerning the Significancy of repeating a Form of Words to every Communicant at the Lord's-Supper. To this he anſwer'd, that in adminiſtring the Holy Euchariſt he ſometimes pronounc'd St. Paul's Words; but becauſe the going through with the Repetition would take up too much Time, he commonly diſus'd it.

The third Queſtion was, How often the Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper ought to be adminiſter'd? Whether every Month, or only three Times a Year? And here he floated at firſt in his Opinion, but at laſt declar'd for a Monthly Celebration, though he could not bring up the Church of Geneva to this Frequency; for there, as he relates, the Holy Euchariſt was only received at Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Whitſuntide.

August 12. 1561.

Their laſt Queſtion was, Whether 'twas convenient to communicate the Sick? And if ſo, with what Number? Whether the Publick Office ſhould be us'd upon this Occaſion? And whether the Conſecrated Bread was to be brought from the Church? To the ſeveral Branches of this Quære Calvin anſwer'd, That the Sick ought not to be denied the Aſſiſtance of the Holy Sacrament: That ſome of his Friends and Neighbours ſhould communicate with him to make the Action the more ſolemn, and bring it up to the Face of the firſt Inſtitution; and that the Myſtery and Benefits ſhould likewiſe be explained at the ſame Time: That the Cuſtomary Form of the Office ſhould be obſerv'd: And laſtly, He thought it more guarding againſt Superſtition, to conſecrate at the Sick-Man's Houſe, than bring the Holy Elements from the Church. (i)

How far thoſe who put the Queſtions acquieſc'd in the Anſwer, I ſhall not examine: But that theſe Heads did not take in all their Scruples is pretty plain. Some of the Exiles and their Proſelytes quarrell'd the Church of England much farther. Nothing would pleaſe theſe People but the Modes and Diſcipline of Frankfort and Geneva. This Fondneſs for Novelties and foreign Uſage, made them break through the Conſtitution, exceed a private Character, and uſurp the Authority of their Governors. Thus, for Inſtance, they began to throw Things into a new Form, and make Alterations at Diſcretion: In ſome Places they took down the Steps where the Altars ſtood, and brought the Holy Table into the Middle of the Church. Inſtead of the ancient Cuſtom of Godfathers and Godmothers, they left the Father to anſwer at the Font for the Child. Keeping Lent, and other Faſts commanded by the Church, they diſlik'd as ſuperſtitious Practice. Nothing of this Kind would paſs but Occaſional Abſtinence, and Humiliations of their own Appointment. The Feſtivals fell under the ſame Cenſure and Neglect. And to fortify theſe Fancies with Arguments and Appearances of Reaſon, they prevail'd with ſome of the inferior Ordinaries to recommend Calviniſtical Sermons and Expoſitions of Scripture to ſeveral Pariſhes.

To ſtop the Progreſs of theſe Innovations, the Archbiſhop, with Advice of ſome of the Biſhops, ſet forth a Book of Orders for his Province: And in this Regulation all the Singularities above mention'd were directly forbidden. *

* Heylin's Hiſt. Ref.

The Queen concurr'd with the Archbiſhop, for this Year there was a ſtrict Proclamation for the Keeping Lent, which was likewiſe the conſtant Cuſtom of this Reign.

This Year the Archbiſhops and Biſhops publiſh'd a Regulation, call'd, Reſolutions and Orders to be obſerv'd in both Provinces. The Contents are as follows; " That Licenſes for Preaching, " granted by the late general Viſitors, ſhould " be recall'd: That none ſhould be admitted to " preach without a previous Examination of " their Doctrine: That Preachers ſhould be " admoniſh'd to be careful and reſerv'd in their " Diſcourſes, and not ſpend themſelves upon " Points of Controverſy: That they ſhould " frequently inculcate the Dignity and Benefits " of both the Sacraments, and preſs Conformi" ty to the Common-Prayer and the Queen's " Injunctions: That publick Baptiſm ſhould be " adminiſter'd in the Font, and not in Baſons: " And that private Baptiſm ſhould be given " when the Perſon was in Danger of dying.

To go back a little to the Affairs of Scotland: Moſt of the Nobility, after the Convention was over, continued at Edinborough during the Winter, and were very intent upon ſettling the Reformation. To this Purpoſe, they ſummon'd ſeveral People from the chief Towns to appear before them, and account for their Belief. Amongſt other Learned Men of the Clergy, John Leſley, Doctor of Canon and Civil Law, Patrick Mirton, James Stracquin, and Alexander Anderſon, Doctor of Divinity, were ſent for from Aberdeen to Edinborough, where they diſputed in the Toll-Booth with John Knox, John Willock, and Chriſtopher Goodman. After theſe Roman Catholicks had made a Profeſſion of their Faith, and declar'd their Reſolution of abiding by it, Anderſon engag'd the Proteſtant Preachers upon the Articles of the Holy Euchariſt, and the Sacrifice of the Altar. Upon theſe Heads, if Leſley's Teſtimony may be taken, who was a Party, the Proteſtants were ſo remarkably baffled, that they declin'd venturing themſelves in a publick Conteſt ever after. (k) However, the Nobility had a different Senſe of the Iſſue: They order'd theſe Roman Catholicks not to ſtir from Edinborough, nor abſent themſelves from the Miniſters Sermons. Notwithſtanding the Diſadvantage the Proteſtants came off with at the laſt Conference, they were not it ſeems all of them ſo far diſhearten'd, as to avoid another Engagement; for, as the ſame Hiſtorian relates, Willock, who had formerly been a Dominican, diſputed publickly at Edinborough with John Black, a Monk of the ſame Order. The Controverſy held two Days upon the Articles laſt mentioned: They parted without yielding on either Side. The common People hearing the Cauſe debated pro and Con, and the Learned ſo remote from each other, were more and more unhing'd in their Religion, and almoſt at a Loſs what to believe.

When Lethington was diſpatch'd to the Engliſh Court, he was charged with a very friendly Letter from his Miſtreſs to our Queen, as hath been obſerv'd: The Scotch Nobility likewiſe wrote by this Agent in the ſame Strein of Regard; adding withal, that the beſt Expedient to keep on an inviolable Friendſhip between the two Princeſſes, was for Queen Elizabeth to declare the Queen of Scots Heir to the Crown of England, in caſe ſhe ſhould leave no Iſſue. This Point being ſtrongly urg'd by Lethington purſuant to his Commiſſion, Queen Elizabeth replied, She was pleaſed to find the Scotch Nobility ſo forward in promoting the Intereſt of their Queen, in Cultivating a laſting Friendſhip, and guarding againſt the Effuſion of Chriſtian Blood, which would follow in all likelihood upon a diſputable Title to the Crown: But notwithſtanding this, ſhe had a great many weighty Reaſons to keep her ſelf upon the Reſerve. Amongſt other Things, the declaring her Succeſſor might draw off the Affection of her Subjects, and weaken her Government. However, ſhe ſhould always prove juſt to her Siſter of Scotland, and do nothing in Prejudice of her Title. Lethington at his next Audience put the Queſtion again, in hopes of a more favourable Anſwer: But the Queen told him, She could explain her ſelf no farther upon that Head 'till his Miſtreſs had made good her Promiſe touching the Edinborough-Treaty. To this Lethington replied, He had no Commiſſion to ſpeak to that Buſineſs; neither would he examine at preſent into the Managers of that Treaty, the Time when 'twas ſet on Foot, the Manner of the Proceedings, the Authority to enter upon it, or the Ends projected: Plainly intimating all theſe Circumſtances were liable to Exception. At laſt Queen Elizabeth was prevail'd with to agree that the Treaty ſhould paſs under a Review, and be ſettled upon the following Amendments: That the Queen of Scots ſhould forbear the Engliſh Arms and Title; and that the Queen of England ſhould oblige her ſelf and her Iſſue to do nothing in Prejudice of her Siſter's Succeſſion. (l)

The Queen of England engages not to do any Thing to the Prejudice of the Queen of Scots*'s Succeſſion.*

(l) Spotſwood.

About this Time Jewel, Biſhop of Salisbury, return'd an Anſwer to an expoſtulatory Letter, written by Seignior Scipio, a Noble Venetian. This Nobleman had formerly made an Acquaintance with Jewel at Padua. The Letter goes upon the Subject of Religion.

Biſhop Jewel*'s Anſwer to Seignior* Scipio.

" Scipio tells him, That himſelf and a great " many others were extremely ſurpriz'd at the " Singularities of the Engliſh Nation: That they " took no Notice of the Council of Trent: That " they neither ſent any Repreſentatives, nor ex" cus'd their Abſence by Agents or Letters: That " they had made a ſudden Alteration in Religion, “and taken Leave in a Manner of every Thing that had been for ſo many Ages eſtabliſh'd: That, as far as he could judge, this look'd like Pride in the Management, and Schiſm in the Iſſue: That 'twas a moſt unwarrantable Neglect to ſet aſide his Holineſs's Authority, and not appear at the Council upon his Summons: That 'twas not lawful to diſcuſs Matters of Religion elſewhere: That at ſuch general Aſſemblies the Patriarchs and Biſhops might be conſulted. Here the Learning of Chriſtendom, and the Flower of the Church, was to be met with: This was the Place where People might expect the Oracles of Truth, and the Reſolutions of the Holy Ghoſt: That when any Controverſy happen'd about the Worſhip of God, it had been the Cuſtom of Pious Princes to refer the Matter to a publick Aſſembly of the Biſhops: That the Apoſtles and Primitive Fathers held Councils as the beſt Expedient for diſcovering Truth, and ſettling Controverſies. By this Means the Hereſies of Arrius and Eunomius, of Eutyches, of Macedonius and Pelagius, were ſuppreſs'd. And thus the modern Differences may be agreed, and the Breaches in the Church made up, if the Parties would lay down their Animoſities, and apply to this Remedy: But to go about the adjuſting theſe Matters without the Deciſion of a Council, is an irreligious Attempt.

This being the Subſtance of Scipio's Letter, the Biſhop replies, “That his Buſineſs was not to undertake the giving an Account of the Proceedings of the Engliſh Government: That Princes often times kept the Motives they went upon to themſelves. But though he did not pretend to look into the Cabinet, he ſhould endeavour to ſatisfy his Requeſt, and diſcover his own Thoughts upon the Subject.

I ſhall juſt touch upon his Anſwer to Scipio's Charge.

“Firſt, He takes Notice the Engliſh were not the only Nation which declin'd coming to Trent: That the Patriarchs of Conſtantinople, Antioch, and Alexandria, ſtood off: That the Church of the Abyſſines, the Greeks and Armenians, the Chriſtians in Egypt and Barbary, in Perſia and India, ſent no Body to appear at the Council.

“And to inſtance in Europe: Did the Crowns of Sweden and Denmark, ſays he, the Princes of Germany, the Republicks of Switzerland, the Kingdom of Scotland, to mention no more, comply with the Summons? And ſince ſo many other Countries are unrepreſented at Trent, 'tis ſomewhat odd to wonder at the Engliſh. And beſides, the Pope himſelf does not appear at a Synod of his own convening: This Jewel thinks his Friend ought to reckon a ſtrange Omiſſion.

“The Biſhop goes on in his Objections, and remonſtrates againſt the Council becauſe 'twas conven'd by the Pope, and not by the Emperor. He ſuppoſes Trent was not large enough to accommodate ſuch Numbers as were neceſſary: That the Engliſh Biſhops were imploy'd in inſtructing and governing their Charge, and could not be abſent from their Dioceſſes without deſerting their Function in ſome Meaſure: That the preſent Pope Pius the IVth made his Way to the Chair by Symony, and bribing the Cardinals: That inſtead of paying his Debts to Cardinal Caraffa, who procur'd him a Majority, he confin'd that Prelate, and diſpatch'd him in Priſon.

Theſe Exceptions are not of the ſtrongeſt Kind: What comes next preſſes cloſer.

“Jewel obſerves, That the ancient Fathers declin'd coming to Councils, when they had Reaſon to believe them pack'd and prejudic'd againſt them. Thus St. Athanaſius refuſed to come to the Council of Sirmium: Thus St. Chryſoſtome took no Notice of the Synod ſub quercu: Neither would Paulinus, Biſhop of Triers appear at the Council of Milan, where he foreſaw every Thing would be carried in Favour of the Arrians. To make this bear in the Application, he obſerves the Fathers of Trent had preingag'd themſelves to the Pope, and ſworn away their Freedom in Voting.

“And laſtly, He wonders the Pope ſhould ſummon the Engliſh to the Council, who had been already pronounc'd Hereticks by his Predeceſſors. What Character could they appear under? 'Tis not likely the Council would allow them the common Privilege, conſidering the Cenſure paſs'd upon their Doctrine. What then muſt they take ſo long a Journey to be ſet to the Bar, and plead as Criminals? By this Method, they could expect nothing more but either to recant, or have the Cenſure repeated upon them. But to ſtand to the Pope's Juſtice when they have ſuch weighty Exceptions to his Authority, is more than they can ſubmit to. *

An Order againſt Papiſts reſiding in Edinborough.

The latter End of this Summer the Queen of Scots went a Progreſs to Sterling, from thence to Perth, Dundee, St. Andrews, and other Places: She was every where receiv'd with all imaginable Marks of Loyalty and Regard. She returned to Edinborough about Michaelmas. At this Time the Burghers chuſe their Magiſtracy for the enſuing Year, and make By-Laws for the Government of the Corporation. Amongſt other Regulations they paſs'd an Order, That no Adulterer, Fornicator, Drunkard, Maſs-Prieſt, or obſtinate Papiſt, ſhould live or be entertain'd in the Town, under Penalties appointed.

The Queen, as ſhe had Reaſon, interpreting this Ordinance as an Incroachment upon Sovereignty, and affrontive to her Religion, committed the Provoſt, Archibald Dowglaſs, to the Caſtle of Edinborough, and commanded the Common-Council to proceed to a new Election, which was done accordingly. A Proclamation was likewiſe publiſh'd for granting Liberty to all good Subjects to come to Edinborough, and continue there as long as their Buſineſs ſhould require.

Theſe Things, which were far from Arbitrary Stretches, gave great Offence. Theſe Diſcontents were heighten'd by the Queen's Exerciſing her Religion in a more publick Manner, and performing the Ceremonies with the cuſtomary Solemnities. And now the Preachers kindled againſt the Government, and declaim'd with much more Warmth than Diſcretion upon this Occaſion. The Nobility manag'd themſelves with more Decency and Temper. It muſt be ſaid, the Queen had ſhewn her ſelf inclined to give them Satisfaction; for her Privy-Council conſiſted moſtly of the Lords of the Congregation.

Books publiſh'd againſt the Scottiſh Confeſſion of Faith

About this Time Nynian Wyniet, a Schoolmaſter of Linlithgow, publiſh'd a Book of Quæries againſt the late Confeſſion of Faith. Wyniet was a Man of Learning, and the Performance, it ſeems, was not heavily manag'd. He was cited to a Conference, and appear'd; but proving too Stiff to lay down his Miſtakes, the Reformed-Church proceeded to Cenſure. Upon this he retir'd to Germany, and was made Abbot of the Scotch Monaſtery at Ratiſbon. Much about the ſame Time the Abbot of Corſragnel, of the Houſe of Caſſils, publiſh'd a Counter-Confeſſion of Faith. To this John Knox made a Reply; but with what Succeſs is more than I can acquaint the Reader. However if this Adverſary's Management did the Abbot no Service, his Age and Quality cover'd him from Proſecution.

The Scotch Clergy ſurrender the Thirds of their Revenue to the Crown.

The Lords at Edinborough were now imploy'd about Ways and Means for the Civil-Liſt, and furniſhing of Funds for the Expences of the Court. The Revenues of the Church were thought the moſt practicable Expedient; for the Clergy having now loſt their Intereſt, might be forc'd upon any Compliance. To this Purpoſe the Prelates and other Churchmen of Diſtinction were order'd to appear before the Council. And now being ſenſible of the Niceneſs of the Juncture, and the ill Poſture of their Affairs, they were glad to compound and come to the Terms of the Board. Thus after a Defence of their Property for ſome Time, they ſurrender'd a Third of their Profits to the Queen's Diſpoſal: But then 'twas upon this Condition, that the remaining two Thirds ſhould be ſecur'd them during their Lives, and that they ſhould be diſcharg'd from ſubſiſting the Miniſters.

An Interview propos'd between the Queens of England and Scotland.

An. Dom. 1562.

In the Beginning of the next Summer, an Interview between the two Queens was much diſcours'd. The Motion coming from the Queen of Scots, the Expediency of it was debated by the Engliſh Court. Some of the Board were of Opinion this Princeſs had her own Advantage too much in View; and that ſhe expected the Papiſts in England, and her Relations, the Guiſes in France, would find their Account in this Buſineſs. Others were of a different Sentiment: They believ'd ſuch a perſonal Correſpondence was the Way to cultivate their Friendſhip, to looſen the Engagement between France and Scotland, and to reconcile that Queen by Degrees to the Proteſtant Religion. To this 'twas objected, that Interviews oftentimes ſpoil Friendſhip, rather than make it: The Diſadvantages in Magnificence or Perſon, are apt to diſoblige, and awaken a Spirit of Envy. Beſides, at laſt the Queen of Scots began to ſcruple the putting her ſelf in Queen Elizabeth's Power, conſidering the Claim ſhe had formerly ſet up, and the Miſunderſtandings which had paſs'd betwixt them. She was likewiſe apprehenſive her Uncles the Cardinal and Duke of Guiſe might be diſoblig'd by ſo cloſe a Correſpondence with Queen Elizabeth; and that by ſuch a ſeeming Preference of the Engliſh, ſhe might loſe her Dower, and ſtand ill at the French Court. And thus after the Interview had been treated ſeveral Months, and moſt of the Conditions ſettled, it fell and came to nothing. (m)

The Commiſſioners of the Kirk Petition the Queen againſt the tolerating Popery.

And now the Queen of Scots, inſtead of a Journey to York, where Queen Elizabeth was to meet her, went a Progreſs into the North of her own Kingdom. While ſhe was at Sterling ſome Commiſſioners of the Church addreſs'd her to ſuppreſs the Maſs, and other ſuperſtitious Ceremonies of the Romiſh Religion: That Matters of Divorce might be referr'd to the Deciſion of the Church, (meaning the Reformed) or at leaſt put in the Hands of Men of Sufficiency, and regular Behaviour: And that the Popiſh Clergy might be excluded the College of Juſtice and Privy-Council. They likewiſe mov'd the Profanation of the Sacraments might he puniſh'd; meaning that thoſe who adminiſter'd them according to the Cuſtom of the Church of Rome, were guilty of that Crime. There were ſeveral other Things; but theſe were the moſt Shocking. When the Queen had read their Petition, ſhe was diſturb'd at the Ruggedneſs of the Application: And thus being off her Guard by her Reſentment, ſhe told them ſhe would do nothing in Prejudice of the Religion ſhe profeſs'd, and hop'd before the Year was ended to reſtore the Catholick Profeſſion thro' the whole Kingdom. (n)

Queen Elizabeth concludes an Alliance with the French Proteſtants.

To return to England: This Year the Queen concluded an Alliance with the Proteſtants in France. To give a brief Account of this Matter: The Reform'd Religion had made ſome Progreſs in that Kingdom in the Reign of Francis the Firſt. And notwithſtanding the Sanguinary Methods taken to ſuppreſs them, the Reform'd gain'd Ground againſt Fire and Sword thro' the ſucceeding Reigns of Henry the Second, and his Son Francis. The Neighbourhood and Character of Calvin, and their allowing the Laity a Share in the Government of the Church, were Circumſtances of Advantage. But nothing was more ſerviceable to theſe Hugonots, as they are call'd, than their being join'd by the Princes of the Bloud. The Guiſes, who had treated them with great Barbarity, practis'd upon the Minority of Charles the Ninth, and engroſs'd the Government. The King of Navarre, the Prince of Condé, and the Duke of Montpenſier, finding themſelves neglected, and thrown out of the Adminiſtration by the Queen Mother, and the Guiſes; theſe Princes of the Bloud, I ſay, upon this Uſage, retir'd from the Court, and headed the Hugonot-Party. (o) The Duke of Roan, Admiral Coligni, and ſeveral other Perſons of Diſtinction were in the ſame Intereſt.

Queen Elizabeth was apprehenſive, that unleſs the Power of the Guiſians was broken, and their Affairs ſomewhat perplex'd, they might probably invade her from Normandy. Upon this View ſhe form'd an Alliance with the French Proteſtants, and for the Conſideration of a Hundred thouſand Crowns, and Six thouſand Men, with which ſhe furniſh'd the Confederates, ſhe had Havre de Grace put into her Hands; which ſhe was to keep as a cautionary Town till the Reſtitution of Calais. (p)

(p) Cambden Eliz.

She publiſhes a Manifeſto to juſtify this Engagement.

The Day the Treaty was ſign'd, the Queen publiſh'd a Manifeſto to juſtify her Meaſures, and prevent Miſconſtruction. And here ſhe declares her Forces were not ſent into Normandy to revive an ancient Claim, and ſeize that Province: Her Expedition had a quite different View: 'Twas to preſerve the French King in his Minority, and retrieve him from the Tyranny of the Guiſes. The Guiſes who had perſecuted the Reform'd in a moſt inhumane Manner, injuriouſly detain'd her Town of Calais, and now were fortifying themſelves in the Ports of Normandy to fall upon England. That ſhe could do no leſs than endeavour the putting a Stop to their Incroachments: That without an Attempt of this Kind, ſhe muſt fail in her Friendſhip to the young King, her Brother and Confederate; abandon his diſtreſs'd Subjects, envy the Repoſe of Chriſtendom: And which was moſt to be regarded, betray her own Intereſt and Religion.

Idem.

By this Declaration, 'tis plain, the Queen took Care to guard againſt Cenſure: Her Manifeſto ſets forth 'twas not her Intention to ſupport the Subjects againſt the Government, or to engage in a War purely upon the Score of Religion. No, her Deſign was, as ſhe expreſſes herſelf, to reſcue the King from a Court-Faction, who kept him under Reſtraint, and abus'd his Authority; and that her Majeſty might be underſtood in this Senſe, there was a farther Proviſion in the publick Devotions. For in the Prayer which was drawn up by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury for the Succeſs of this Expedition, the Guiſes are charg'd with Diſloyalty, and call'd Enemies to their own natural Prince, no leſs than to the true Religion. Biſhop Jewel's Apology publiſh'd.

This Year Biſhop Jewel's Apology was publiſh'd in Latin: 'Twas approv'd by the Queen, and ſet forth with the Conſent of the Biſhops. 'Tis a Defence of the Engliſh Reformation, with a brief Declaration of the Religion profeſs'd in our Church. The Papiſts had drawn up a high Charge of Novelty and Heterodoxy againſt the Engliſh Reformers. "They declaim'd loudly againſt them as a Company of Hereticks, that they had deſerted the Faith, and made a Breach in the Unity of the Church. That they had reviv'd the old cenſur'd Hereſies, propagated new Sects, and embroil'd Chriſtendom to ſuch a Degree, as was never heard of: That they had no good Underſtanding amongſt themſelves: That they were ſplit into Parties, oppos'd each other, and could by no Means ſettle in any uniform Belief. (r) That they were a curſed Race of Mankind, that they attack'd Heaven like the old Giants, and lived without any Regard to divine Worſhip: That they endeavour'd to ſubvert Monarchy and civil Government, and referr'd every Thing to the Deciſion of the Ignorant, and giddy Multitude: That they had fallen off from the Catholick Church, made a wicked Schiſm, and diſturb'd the Repoſe of the Univerſe. And that as Dathan and Abiram made an Inſurrection againſt Moſes and Aaron, ſo theſe Reformers have renounc'd the Biſhop of Rome without any warrantable Motive: That they have ſet aſide the Authority of the ancient Fathers and Councils: That they have thrown out the old Ceremonies with unparallell'd Preſumption; Ceremonies approv'd by our Anceſtors for many hundred Years laſt paſt, and introduced in Times of unexceptionable Credit: And that without the Authority of any general Council, they have made new Regulations for the Church: And that all this was done only for the ſake of Singularity and Squabbling. But as for themſelves (the Papiſts) on the other Side, they had innovated in nothing, but kept cloſe to Apoſtolical Tradition, and the Uſages of the beſt Antiquity."

(r) Defence of the Apology of the Church of England, pag. 10. & deinc.

The Reaſon of the Publication.

Idem.

The Deſign of the Apology was to take off theſe Imputations, and juſtify the Doctrine and Eſtabliſhment of the Engliſh Church. This Tract was penn'd with great Learning, Clearneſs, and Strength: The Biſhop, to do him right, was a nice Maſter of Style, both in Latin and Engliſh. The Papiſts finding themſelves ſenſibly touch'd, appear'd in Print againſt him: Cope, Sanders, Stapleton, Raſtal, Dorman, Heskins, and Harding, undertook the Controverſy. This laſt, who lived at Louvain, was the moſt conſiderable Champion. He publiſh'd a Book, entitled, a Confutation of Jewel's Apology. And tho' the Character of a learned Perſon cannot be denied him, yet it muſt be ſaid, his Zeal is remarkably imbitter'd, and diſcovers a great Deal of unfriendly Paſſion: He treats the Biſhop with coarſe Language, and fails much in Decency and Temper. Beſides, he ſometimes Miſtakes in his Authors,and writes without any Taſt of Antiquity. For inſtance, he cites the decretal Epiſtles, the counterfeit Dionyſius, and other ſpurious Records. (s) In maintaining the Pope's Supremacy, nothing can be more Unorthodox and Extravagant; nothing a greater Contradiction to the Belief and Practice of the Firſt Ages. To give the Reader a Sample of theſe Singularities.

Harding's heterodox and extravagant Aſſertions.

Harding aſſerts the Biſhop of Rome is always infallible in his Determinations: That he is under the conſtant Direction of the holy Spirit: That we are to learn God Almighty's Pleaſure only from him: That he is the Centre of Unity, and the main Support of the Church: That whoever ſeparates from his Communion, is an Heretick of Courſe: And that there is no hopes of Salvation without Submiſſion to the Apoſtolick See. That the Pope has a regal, no leſs than a ſacerdotal Authority: That the Managing of both Swords, Temporal and Spiritual, belongs to his Juriſdiction: That all Kings and Emperors receive their Authority from his Hand, and ought to ſwear Homage and Fealty to him: For in his Book which he dedicates to Queen Elizabeth, he has the Aſſurance to expreſs himſelf in theſe Words, 'Tis a great Eyeſore, ſays he, to the Miniſters of Antichriſt, to ſee the Vicar of Chriſt above the Lords and Kings of this World, and to ſee Princes and Emperors promiſe and ſwear Obedience to him: And in mentioning the Inſtance of Pope Zachary's Concurring with the rebellious Nobleſs of France, depoſing Chilperick the rightful Sovereign, and ſetting the Crown on the Head of the Uſurper Pepin, he makes this extraordinary Remark; Lo, ſays he, you muſt needs confeſs that this was a divine Power in the Pope; for elſe he could never have done it. Thus to varniſh over a Revolt, and give his Benediction to Treaſon, are, in ſome Mens Opinion, unqueſtionable Marks of a divine Power! (t)

(t) Jewel's Works Epiſt. Ded. to Queen Elizabeth.

General Objections againſt the Apology.

As to Jewel's Performance, 'twas objected in General by Harding, that 'twas publiſh'd in the Name of the Church of England, without the Privity of that Society: That 'twas neither addreſs'd to Pope, Emperor, or any other Prince; not to the Church, nor to the general Council then conven'd: That 'twas an Anonymous Tract, and printed without Royal Privilege, which was a Breach upon the Conſtitution: That 'twas neither allow'd by Parliament, nor Proclamation, nor Synodically agreed in a Convocation: And therefore that 'twas to be look'd on as no better than a ſcandalous Libel.

To this Charge, the Biſhop replied, That the Doctrine defended in the Apology was laid before the whole Catholick Church, and by Conſequence before the Pope and Council, if they were any Part of that Body: That if Authorities were ſo Neceſſary, he had the Concurrence of the whole Engliſh Clergy; and that Harding himſelf was of the ſame Opinion in the Reign of King Edward: That the Printer could inform him the Book was not Unfurniſh'd with the Queen's Licenſe: That the Objection of its being ſuch an obſcure Libel might eaſily be diſprov'd by its being printed in Latin at Paris, and afterwards tranſlated into French, Italian, Spaniſh and Dutch: That 'twas afterwards ſent into France and Flanders, into Germany and Spain, into Poland and Hungary, into Scotland, Denmark and Sweden, into Italy, and particularly to Naples and Rome it ſelf: That it was throughly examin'd by the Council at Trent: That 'twas menac'd with an Anſwer, and the Buſineſs undertaken by Two learned Biſhops; but that neither of them made any Progreſs in the Enterprize. And Laſtly, That ſeveral Engliſh Papiſts had tried their Strength upon it, but to little Effect.

Idem.

It was well receiv'd by the Proteſtants abroad.

That the Apology was well receiv'd by the Proteſtants beyond-Sea, appears by Peter Martyr's Letter to Biſhop Jewel. He acquaints the Biſhop, ſhop, that himſelf, Bullinger, and other Divines read his Apology with great Satisfaction. He congratulates him upon his Learning and Elocution: He ſeems tranſported with the Strength of the Argument, and the Beauty of the Style; And that the Reformation was furniſh'd with a Perſon ſo admirably qualified to defend it.

Depredations upon the Church.

This Year Richard Cheyney Archdeacon of Hereford and Prebendary of Weſtminſter, was conſecrated to the See of Glouceſter: He held Briſtol in Commendam, and ſo did Bullingham his Succeſſor; that is, they had the Juriſdiction with the Fees annex'd. But as for the Lands, they were ſeiz'd by the Courtiers, which was much the Cuſtom of theſe Times: Particularly, the Biſhoprick of Oxford was in a Manner quite ſtrip'd by the Earls of Leiceſter and Eſſex; and for that Purpoſe, as may reaſonably be conjectur'd, kept void the greateſt Part of this Reign. In ſhort, all the Biſhopricks of King Henry the Eighth's Erection were ſo lamentably impoveriſh'd, that the new Biſhops at their Firſt Promotion were forc'd to beg for their Living, and ſubſiſt on the Benevolence of their Clergy. (u)

A Parliament call'd.

My Lord Keeper's Speech touching Religion.

On the 12th of January a new Parliament met at Weſtminſter. "The Lord Keeper, Sir Nicholas Bacon in his Speech pointed out the Buſineſs of the Seſſion, under Two general Heads; the one relates to Religion, and the other to Civil Government. I ſhall only mention what concerns the Firſt. And here he lays it down for an undoubted Principle, that without a Deference to Religion, and a due Acknowledgment of God Almighty, nothing could proſper: That Perſons in eminent Stations, when they fail of their Duty, do the greateſt Diſſervice, becauſe they draw Example, and make a Faſhion of their Miſbehaviour. And here he can neither Excuſe the Spiritualty, nor the Laity: For as the Firſt don't execute their Function, and preach with that Application it were to be wiſh'd; ſo neither are the Laity ſo commendable in Hearing, and Practice, as they ought. He complains of the great Want of Paſtors, and that ſome of them are much underqualified. This Defect ought to be born with conſidering the Juncture; and he refers making the moſt of that Matter to the Biſhop's Conduct. He takes Notice of great Nonconformity in the Kingdom, and that the Churches were much unfrequented. This he imputes to the Relaxation of Diſcipline: If the Statute for Uniformity, ſays he, in the late Parliament, is too gentle, let the Penalties be ſet higher: For Want of Diſcipline is a great Calamity, and encourages to obſtinacy, looſe Tenents, and Contempt of Religion. (w)

The Speaker of the Houſe of Commons's Speech upon the ſame Subject.

The Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, Thomas Williams Eſquire, has ſomething upon the ſame Argument, which he deliver'd at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, the Queen being then preſent. He takes Notice in General of Abuſes in the Kingdom, but ſpeaks only to Three, Neceſſity, Ignorance, and Error: Theſe he calls notable Monſters. "As for Neceſſity, 'tis lately, ſays he, grown to a prodigious Size: Deſire is ſtrangely ſo diſproportion'd to Merit and reaſonable Expectation: No body is contented with their Circumſtances and Station: For let People's Fortunes be never ſo large, their Fancy and their Ambition reaches beyond it. Theſe extravagant Wiſhes, this over-rating of our own Worth, draws a Senſe of Neceſſity: Now Neceſſity, as the Proverb ſays, has no Law, nor Scruples any Method of Proviſion. This falſe Appetite puſhes Men upon Avarice and Raking: Thus many of the Schools and Benefices are ſeiz'd, the Education of Youth diſappointed, and the Succours for Knowledge cut off. For I dare aver the Schools in England are fewer than formerly by a Hundred; and thoſe which remain, are many of them but ſlenderly ſtock'd: And this is one Reaſon the Number of learned Men is ſo remarkably diminiſh'd.

"The Second Monſter, as he calls it, is Ignorance, the Iſſue of Neceſſity: But then theſe Misfortunes are occaſion'd for Want of Livings and Preferments: For Covetouſneſs has laid her Hands upon the Impropriations; and thus the Encouragements of Learning are ſtop'd in their Courſe, and turn'd into a new Channel. Thus the Tree of Knowledge grows downward to the Diſhonour of God, and the Common-Wealth: The Univerſities are decayed, and great Market Towns without either School or Preacher: For the poor Vicar is turn'd off with Twenty Pounds, and the Bulk of the Churches Patrimony is impropriated, and diverted to foreign Uſe. Thus the Pariſh has no Preacher: And thus for Want of a Fund for Inſtruction, the People are bred to Ignorance and Obſtinacy. The Impropriations therefore which are ſo Fundamental to our Misfortune, ought to be reſtor'd to the Church, and the Laws repeal'd which lie Croſs to the Redreſſing this Grievance.

"The Third Monſter is Error, a Hydra with many Heads: He means ill Principles and ill Practice: And here he Inſtances in Pelagians, Libertines, and Papiſts, and ſuch others who ſet up their own Traditions, their Appetites and Miſtakes for a Rule of Life. And ſpeaking to the Queen, he puts her in Mind of the Spreading of Immorality and Profaneneſs: That in walking the Streets of London he had often heard Oaths the greateſt Part of People's Language: He obſerves that this Contempt of the Deity was puniſh'd with Loſs of Limbs, and ſometimes with Death, amongſt the Pagans: And is there, ſays he, to be no Puniſhment for this Miſbehaviour amongſt Chriſtians? Does Baptiſm give us a Liberty to affront our Maker? And muſt the Creed be a Protection for Wickedneſs? 'Tis true, we have God's Word very near us: 'Tis much in our Mouths, but never leſs in our Practice: For tho' we talk like Chriſtians, we live like Infidels: And here he moves in the Name of the Commons, that her Majeſty would put a Stop to this lamentable Diſſolution of Manners.

"And Laſtly, he takes the honeſt Freedom to ſuggeſt to her Majeſty, That the Fear of God is the only firm Baſis, for the Happineſs of Prince and Subject. He Inſtances in Saul and David, in Jehoſaphat and Joſiah, in Hezekiah and Ahaz: Theſe Princes, ſays he, as long as Religion had the Aſcendant, were great and ſucceſsful: But when they fail'd in their Duty to God Almighty, they grew little, and miſcarried: Let therefore the Honour of God be your Majeſty's main Concern, and then your other Motions will be graceful and ſtrong, and you will have no Reaſon to diſtruſt the Security of your Government. The Act of Aſſurance.

The Firſt Statute made this Seſſions, as it ſtands in the Print, is the Act of Aſſurance of the Queen's Power over all Eſtates. 'Tis pointed againſt thoſe who maintain'd the Juriſdiction of the See of Rome, formerly unjuſtly claim'd and uſurp'd within this Realm.

To prevent the ill Conſequences ariſing from hence, thoſe who maintain or defend by Printing, Preaching, or Teaching, the Pope's Authority or Juriſdiction upon any Part of her Majeſty's Dominions, as alſo their Aiders, Aſſiſtants, and Comforters, ſhall for the Firſt Offence incur the Penalties provided by the Statute of Præmunire.

“ 'Tis likewiſe enacted, That all Perſons mention'd in the Act made in the Firſt Year of the preſent Reign, (a) for reſtoring the ancient Juriſdiction over the State Eccleſiaſtical; that all ſuch Perſons there nam'd ſhall take the Oath appointed by that Statute. But now there is a farther Proviſion for all Perſons that have been, or ſhall be promoted to holy Orders, or admitted to any Degree in the Univerſities, all publick and private Schoolmaſters, all utter Barriſters, Benchers, Readers, and Ancients, in any Inns of Court, all principal Treaſurers, and ſuch as are of the grand Company of every Inn of Chancery, all Attorneys, Prothonotaries, and Philizers, all Sheriffs, Eſcheaters, and Feodaries; and in general, any that have or ſhall be admitted to any Office belonging to the Common Law, or any other Laws allowed within this Realm: 'Tis now provided, That all theſe Perſons ſhall take the Oath of Supremacy, appointed by the Act made in the Firſt Year of this Reign. (b) And here the Firſt Refuſal of the Oath is made Præmunire. The Second Offence both for Abetting the Pope's Authority, and refuſing the Oath, is High Treaſon. However, there's a Clauſe thrown in to prevent ſome of the Conſequences of High Treaſon. For 'tis expreſly provided, that nothing in this Act ſhall extend to the working any Corruption of Bloud, the Diſheriting any Heir, or any Forfeiture of Dower. 'Tis farther enacted, That all Knights, Citizens, Burgeſſes, or Barons of the Cinque-Ports, elected to ſerve in Parliament, ſhall take the ſaid Oath: And that without this Qualification, their Election is declar'd void, neither ſhall they be allow'd to enter the Parliament Houſe, or vote in it.

“ It is provided, that none ſhall be compell'd to take this Oath at the Second Time 'tis offer'd, unleſs the Perſon has been or ſhall be an Eccleſiaſtick in one of the Reigns of King Henry the VIIIth, King Edward the VIth, Queen Mary, or the preſent Queen Elizabeth, her Heirs or Succeſſors: Or unleſs ſuch Perſon or Perſons has had, or ſhall have ſome Office or Miniſtry in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts of this Realm: Or unleſs they ſhall refuſe to obſerve the Orders and Rights for divine Service us'd in the Church of England, or ſhall deprave the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, or ſhall ſay, or hear private Maſs: Thoſe who come under any of theſe Exceptions, are oblig'd to take the Oath at the Second Tender, under the Penalties above-mention'd.

The Oath of Supremacy to be taken no farther than requir'd by the Queen's Injunctions.

“ And to aſcertain the Senſe, and ſet forth the Extent of this ſolemn Engagement, 'tis provided that the Oath of Supremacy made in the Firſt Year of this Reign ſhall be taken and expounded in ſuch Form as is ſet forth in an Admonition annex'd to the Queen's Majeſty's Injunctions, publiſhed in the Firſt Year of her Majeſty's Reign: That is to ſay, to confeſs and acknowledge in her Majeſty, her Heirs and Succeſſors, none other Authority than that was challeng'd and lately uſed by the noble King Henry the VIIIth, and King Edward the VIth, as in the ſaid Admonition more plainly may appear.

By the laſt Proviſo which I ſhall mention, 'tis enacted, That no Perſon of, or above the Degree of a Baron, ſhall be oblig'd to take this Oath. (c)

When this Bill was brought into the Houſe of Lords, Anthony Brown, Vicount Mountague, made a Speech againſt it to this Senſe.

The Lord Mountague's Speech againſt the Bill.

“ Upon the making any Law, Three Things ought to be conſider'd by the Legiſlature. Firſt, Whether the Law is Neceſſary; Secondly, Whether it is juſt; And Thirdly, Whether 'tis likely to be ſmooth and eaſy in the Execution: Under theſe Three Things all the Qualities eſſential to a good Law may be comprehended. To apply theſe general Rules to the preſent Caſe. And here this Noble-man throws in a Preliminary Caution againſt Miſconſtruction. He declares it is not his Intention to charge the preſent Church of England either with Error, or Schiſm: His Buſineſs is only to examine, whether 'tis defenſible to make a Law with a capital Penalty, by virtue of which the Papiſts ſhall be oblig'd to ſwear the Orthodoxy of the Religion now eſtabliſhed. In ſpeaking to this Matter, he endeavours to prove in the Firſt Place, that ſuch a Law is by no Means Neceſſary: His Reaſon is, becauſe the Roman Catholicks give no Diſturbance, check no publick Motions, hinder not the Adminiſtration of any Affairs, either Spiritual or Temporal: They neither Diſpute nor Preach. The Queen is not diſobey'd by them, neither can they be charg'd with making any Ferments, or awakening ill Humour amongſt the People. They have brought in no religious Novelties, neither can it be ſaid the Kingdom ſuffers by them: And ſince there's both Truth and Evidence in this Apology, what Neceſſity can there be for making new Laws againſt them? Where there is no Diſeaſe, Phyſick is altogether Unſeaſonable: To put a ſound Conſtitution to ſuch Penance, is both needleſs and dangerous.

From hence he proceeds to the Second Requiſite, and argues againſt the Juſtice of the Bill. “ And here he thinks it extremely Unreaſonable that the Papiſts ſhould be thus ſolemnly oblig'd to profeſs their Belief of the Proteſtant Perſwaſion: And that under the Forfeitures of Life and Fortune. This he conceives implies a ſtrong Repugnancy to the Laws of Nature. It ties up the Freedom of the Will, forces People upon a moral Impoſſibility, and makes our reaſonable Faculties a Miſfortune. To compel a Man to ſwear the Certainty of that which he believes uncertain, is very hard Uſage of the Conſcience, and the heavieſt Oppreſſion of natural Liberty Arguments may work, and alter the Opinion, but to drive the Underſtanding by Terror and Violence, is to treat a Man like a Creature below his Kind.

Parker (Matthew) Archbiſhop of Cant.

Elizabeth Q.

“ The Doctrine of the Proteſtants, continues this Nobleman, was oppos'd by the Lords Spiritual and Convocation, at the laſt Parliament; neither has it any better Agreement with the major Part of Chriſtendom: 'Tis a Contradiction to what has been determin'd by General Councils, and former Parliaments: And is not this Preſcription of Time, this Overbalance of Authorities and Numbers, ſufficient to keep on Doubts, and make Proteſtancy uncertain? If the Proteſtant pretends his Belief is Catholick, the Queſtion will be, how this Term is to be underſtood? And are not the Learned divided here, and broken into ſeveral Opinions? Now till we are all of the ſame Sentiment, and come up to an Uniformity of Notion, we can't pretend to perſpicuity, nor pronounce infallibly upon Things.

But this is a wrong Inference. For general Agreement is not always Neceſſary to the Proof of a Truth. To reſolve our Faith into ſuch Principles, and ſet Certainty upon ſuch a precarious Foot, is the Way to reaſon our ſelves out of all Religion. Beſides, this Lord argues againſt the Maxims of his own Communion, and deſtroys the pretended Infallibility of the Roman Church. For by his Logick the Proteſtant's Denial of this Claim is ſufficient to deſtroy the Right, and make the Doctrine uncertain.

To go on with the Lord Mountague, who taking his Premiſſes for granted, forms his Concluſion accordingly. “ Conſidering the Uncertainty of the Proteſtant Perſwaſion, ſays he, there's no Juſtice in forcing People to affirm it true. To make them ſwear Counter to their Conſcience, is to enact Hypocriſy or Ruin; Death, or Perjury. Since therefore the Proteſtants have the Poſſeſſion of the Churches and Revenues, ſince they have an Authority for Preaching and Excommunication, they ought to be contented, and preſs no farther. As for the Catholicks, they give them no Diſturbance in their Function: They hinder them not in haranguing the People, and propagating their Doctrine.

From hence this Lord proceeds to ſpeak to the Third Head: That is, the Conveniency and “ Practicableneſs of the Law; this, ſays he, will depend very much upon what has been remark'd under the Second Requiſite. Now 'tis eaſy to imagine, that a Law which claſhes ſo apparently with Reaſon, and bears ſo hard upon the Liberty of Mankind, cannot be executed without great Difficulty and Struggle. For what Man is there ſo abandon'd to cowardice, ſo loſt to all Conſcience and Honour, as to ſuffer himſelf to be drag'd into a new Religion, and to ſwear a Contradiction to his Belief? To lie quiet, and keep their Perſwaſion to themſelves, is intelligible Caution, and Things which People may reconcile themſelves to. But to be forc'd either to forſwear one's ſelf, or die, is an Alternative which no Body can digeſt. 'Tis to be fear'd, therefore, that rather than ſubmit to the Practice, or the Penalty, the Subject may be provok'd to extremities, and apply to Methods of Defence. Now theſe Sallies of Deſparation are Conſequences which the Prudence of a Government ought to prevent. (d)

Mr. Adkinſon's Speech againſt the Bill of Aſſurance.

One Mr. Adkinſon, a Member of the Houſe of Commons, made a Speech againſt the Bill in that Houſe. I ſhall mention ſome Part of it, where he offers ſomething not touch'd on by the Lord Mountague. “ After having complain'd the Refuſal of the Oath is charg'd with too deep a Penalty, he proceeds to anſwer an Objection: It had been affirm'd in the Houſe, That the Maintaining a foreign Juriſdiction was Treaſon by the Common Law: That it implied a Transferring of the Crown from the King to the Pope: Were this true, he thinks no Puniſhment too great, and that the Firſt Offence ought to be Death. To give the Objection its full Strength, he puts the Caſe of the King's bringing a Quare Impedit againſt a Spiritual Perſon: This, ſays he, is a Plea merely Temporal, and belongs to the Cognizance of the Temporal Courts. Suppoſe the Biſhop had appeal'd to Rome in Arreſt of Judgment, would this foreign Application have been Treaſon? Not at all; it would not have been ſo much as Præmunire, had the Appeal been made before the 27th of Edward the Third: However, 'tis an Offence againſt the King's Crown and Dignity, and ſo are a great many other Miſdemeanors, which fall far ſhort of Treaſon.

“ And ſince the Owning the Pope's Juriſdiction in a Caſe where Property and Prerogative are concern'd, was no Treaſon, which Way could the Affirming his Authority in Matters purely Spiritual, mount to ſo high a Crime? For Inſtance, that the Conſecration of Archbiſhops belongs to his Holineſs, or that the Adminiſtration of the divine Service ſhould be under his Direction. How could the Aſſerting the Supremacy of the Apoſtolick See in this Senſe be Treaſon by the Common Law, when our Kings and Parliaments were all Papiſts, and own'd the Pope for their Spiritual Father? But notwithſtanding this Deference the Lords and Commons, both Spiritual and Temporal took Care to defend the Prerogative, and maintain the Conſtitution againſt Papal Encroachments. And for this he gives Inſtances in the Reigns of Edward the Firſt, Richard the Second, and Henry the Sixth; which the Reader may find remark'd in the Firſt Part of this Hiſtory.

“ He argues for an Abatement of the Penalty from the Doctrine of the Engliſh Proteſtants. I have heard, ſays he, ſome of theſe Preachers affirm, that Religion ought to be propagated by Perſwaſion, and not by Force and Terror. For this Reaſon they call the Act of the Six Articles made in the Reign of Henry the VIIIth, the Whip with Six Laſhes. And as for the Proſecutions in the late Reign, they declaim'd loudly againſt them. They call'd the Biſhops Bloud-ſuckers, Men that made it their Diverſion to deſtroy innocent People, and that they were worſe than Caiaphas and Judas; He is ſurpriz'd therefore to find theſe Men preſs for ſanguinary Laws, and abet thoſe Rigours they declar'd ſo ſtrongly againſt.

“ He argues againſt the Severity of the Bill from the Authority of the Fathers, who diſlik'd proceeding to Extremities for Matters of Belief. He obſerves, That when the Emperors made any penal Laws againſt Hereticks, they ſeldom went any farther than Fining, Impriſonment, and Baniſhment. And here, unleſs the Party was convicted by Witneſs, the Penalty could not take Place. But by this Bill, tho' a Man intends to acquieſce, and makes no Complaint or Remonſtrance: Tho' he behaves himſelf never ſo inoffenſively, and keeps his Conſcience to himſelf, yet we are reſolv'd to purſue him to his Thoughts, and ſee what lies within him; And to drive him

(d) Foxii MSS.

“out of all Shelter, we offer him an inſnaring Oath. If he can't paſs this Teſt, he falls immediately under Præmunire; that is, his Lands and Goods are forfeited, and his Perſon impriſon'd during the Queen's Pleaſure. And which is more; after all this, his Life has but a ſlender Security; for a Man attainted of Præmunire is out of the Protection of the Laws: And thus any Body may kill him, without being call'd to an Account for it.

The Statute declares it not lawful to kill a Man under Præmunire.

Mr. Atkinſon's urging this Point, 'tis likely, occaſion'd an Amendment in the Bill, and brought in the Clauſe; by which 'tis enacted, It ſhall not be lawful to kill any Perſon attainted upon Premunire, any Law or Statute, or Opinion or Expoſition of any Law or Statute to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding. (e)

“To proceed, this Member conceives the Penalties for refuſing the Oath, already enacted, (f) are ſufficient to anſwer the Ends, and ſecure the Government: For is it not a more likely Expedient to gain People, and reconcile them to the Oath? Is it not more likely to do this by tempting their Compliance with Profit and Preferment, than by menacing them with Ruin, in Caſe they refuſe? On the other Hand, Is it not Puniſhment heavy enough for a Man to be thrown out of the common Privileges of his Birthright? To have his Parts and Learning lie dead upon his Hands, and receive no Countenance from the Government?

“But ſuppoſe, ſays he, the Bill was paſs'd, what publick Benefit can be expected from it? You'll ſay, We ſhould be diſencumber'd from the obſtinate Papiſts, who if they are ſuffer'd to live amongſt us, would be buſy in diſturbing the State. To this he anſwers, That if every Body who ſcruples the Oath ſhould refuſe it, and be executed for their Non-Compliance, the Kingdom would be extreamly weaken'd, and in a much worſe Condition to defend it ſelf. This may in ſome Meaſure be collected by the Declenſion of the Univerſities: For here the Conteſts about Religion, the diſcouraging of Opinions, the diſplacing of Members, has brought Senſe and Learning to a very low Ebb; and without timely Proviſion, we are all in Danger of falling back to a remarkable Ignorance.

“But ſuppoſe the Bulk of the People ſhould not decline the Oath, can you imagine all that take it will change their Opinion: No; Menacing and Terror may command the Practice, but not the Perſwaſion. Violence may make a Coward, but never a Convert. And thus many a Man will lay his Hand upon the Book, when his Heart keeps off at a Diſtance. Beſides, the frighting People out of their Sentiment, and ſtarving them into Perjury, does but heighten their Diſaffection, and puſh them forward to Revenge at the firſt Opportunity.

“Let us therefore, continues this Gentleman, not be lean temper'd: Let not Difference in Religion put us upon Proſecution and harſh Uſage. To love one another is much more becoming our Profeſſion: For I am ſure 'tis far from Chriſtianity, to hate our Neighbour: Let us lay down our Animoſities and Squabbling. Such Miſunderſtandings, beſides the Miſchief they do at Home, give our Enemies an Advantage, and invite them to fall upon us. And whatever we may think on't at preſent, we ſhall come to this Remedy at laſt; For tho' the ſuffering Part will have the Worſt on't, the Proſecutors won't always be eaſy: And thus both Sides at laſt will make for Repoſe. For is not this the Iſſue of the Controverſy in Germany? That Country has been miſerably harraſs'd with religious Diſputes: But now they are ſenſible of their Error, and ſeem tir'd into Charity and Good-nature. Now, Papiſts and Proteſtants can converſe together like Friends, and never fall out about Difference in Belief. And ſince the Lords and Gentlemen of theſe two Houſes have the Sword in their Hands, I hope they will be cautious how they uſe it: For if you ſtrike, your Countrymen and Fellow-Chriſtians, and ſome of your near Friends and Relations, muſt feel the Smart. I deſire it may be remember'd, that People who ſuffer for refuſing this Oath, are not to be conſider'd as common Malefactors, as Thieves or Murderers: They don't offend from wicked Intention, and Malice prepenſe: No, 'tis Conſcience and good Meaning which makes them claſh with the Law. I don't deny but they may be miſtaken; but when this happens, the Caſe is ſtill harder; for if we let the Penalty looſe upon them under ſuch Miſperſwaſion, we bar Recollection, and deſtroy both Body and Soul. 'Tis poſſible ſome of this Religion may have given Offence: Granting this, I hope you won't draw a Puniſhment upon the Innocent on their Account. You will rather incline to the gentler Side: You'll forgive the Obnoxious for the Sake of the much greater Number, who have done no Harm. (g)

There was another Speech of a Member of the Lower Houſe in Anſwer to this laſt mention'd. 'Twas made by one learned in the Law; but does not ſeem to diſentangle the Caſe. His Arguments are ſome of them wide of the Queſtion; and where his Reaſonings are ſtrongeſt, they conclude but for an Oath of Allegiance. He pretends the Oath touches no ſpiritual Thing, but only binds the Subject to recognize the Sovereignty in his Prince: (h) But this is a great Miſtake, as the Reader may perceive by the Form; for here the Subject ſwears two Things, in which Religion is materially concern'd: Firſt, That the Queen's Highneſs is the only ſupreme Governour of this Realm in all Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Things or Cauſes. And Secondly, That no foreign Prelate or Potentate has, or ought to have, any Juriſdiction or Authority Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual within this Realm. Now no Perſon, who believes the Pope the Principle of Unity, and the Spiritual Head of the Catholick Church, can poſſibly take this Oath, with a good Conſcience. But notwithſtanding the Error of this Perſwaſion, if the Papal Supremacy is thus reſtrained to Matters purely ſpiritual, thoſe who maintain it have Room enough for their Allegiance, and may be loyal Subjects to their Prince.

All Lords of Parliament to be tried by their Peers.

To go on to ſome other Statutes of this Parliament: By the Act which makes Clipping the Coin High-Treaſon, 'tis provided, That if any Lords of Parliament, or Peers of the Realm, ſhall happen to be indicted of any Offence made Treaſon by this Act: That then they, and every of them, ſhall have their Trial by their Peers. (i) From hence I infer, that Biſhops ought to be tried by their Peers in Caſes of Treaſon, becauſe no Body queſtions their being Lords of Parliament: Sir Edward Coke himſelf makes no Scruple to confeſs thus much. The next Act I ſhall mention puniſhes the publiſhing any Fantaſtical Propheſy upon Arms, Fields, Badges, &c.

An Act againſt Fantaſtical Prophecies.

The Statute ſets forth, it had been the Practice of ſome Malecontents to prognoſticate Fortunes and Events from Colours, and Charges, and Creſts, belonging to Perſons of Quality; and that this conjectural Preſumption had made bold with the Queen her ſelf. The Penalty of doing this with an Intention of raiſing any Inſurrection or publick Diſturbance, is the Forfeiture of ten Pounds, and a Year's Impriſonment, for the firſt; and Impriſonment during Life, and the Forfeiture of all Goods and Chattels, for the ſecond Offence. (l)

(l.) 5 El. c. 15.

The next Statute is levell'd againſt Witchcraft.

The Preamble takes Notice, That ſince the Statute made in the 23d Year of King Henry the VIIIth was repealed in the 1ſt Year of King Edward the Sixth, Many Fantaſtical and Deviliſh Perſons have deviſed and practiſed Invocations and Conjurations of evil Spirits, and have uſed and practiſed Witchcrafts, Enchantments, Charms, and Sorceries, to the Deſtruction of the Perſons and Goods of their Neighbours, and other Subjects of this Realm, and for other lewd Intents and Purpoſes, contrary to the Laws of Almighty God, to the Peril of their own Souls, and to the great Infamy and Diſquietneſs of this Realm.

An Act againſt Witchcraft.

The Body of the Statute enacts, That in caſe any Perſon practiſes Witchcraft, or uſes Charms, whereby any Body happens to be kill'd or deſtroy'd, the Puniſhment for ſuch Offenders, their Aiders and Counſellers, is Death upon legal Conviction, without Benefit of the Clergy.

“ And if any Perſon happens to be diſabled in his Limbs, or brought to a Conſumption, by the Practice of Witchcraft upon him, that then the Criminal, his Aiders, and Counſellors, ſhall ſuffer a Year's Impriſonment for the firſt Offence, and ſtand in the Pillory once a Quarter in ſome Market-Town, and there make publick Confeſſion of his Offence. And in caſe of a Relapſe into the ſame Crime, to ſuffer Death as a Felon, without Privilege of Clergy or Sanctuary.

“ And farther, If any Perſon by Witchcraft or Divination pretends to diſcover any hid Treaſure of Gold or Silver, to tell where Things loſt or ſtoll'n may be found, to excite any unlawful Affection, or to prejudice any Body in Perſon or Goods, the Penalty is a Year's Impriſonment, and ſtanding once a Quarter in the Pillory, for the firſt Offence; and for the ſecond, he was to incur the Forfeiture of all his Goods and Chattels, and ſuffer Impriſonment during Life. (m)

(m) 5 El. c. 16.

An Act for the better Execution of the Writ de Excommunicato capiendo.

The Biſhops, 'tis likely, having complain'd that the Writs de Excommunicato capiendo were oftentimes ſunk with the Sheriff, and the Cenſures of the Church baffled by ſuch Prevarication, there was a Bill paſs'd this Parliament for preventing this Abuſe. 'Tis enacted, That in caſe the Sheriff makes a falſe Return, he was to forfeit Forty Pounds: And if he returns a Non eſt Inventus out of his Bailiwick, that then a Capias was to be awarded with the Forfeiture of Ten Pounds for not appearing upon the firſt Capias, Twenty Pounds upon the ſecond, and the ſame Forfeiture to continue upon every Capias, 'till the Perſon excommunicated makes his Appearance. (n)

(n) 5 El. c. 23.

By another Statute relating to Religion, 'tis enacted, That the whole Bible both Old and New-Teſtament, with the Book of Common-Prayer and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, as now uſed within the Realm in Engliſh, ſhould be tranſlated into the Welch Language. The Act puts the Direction of this Work into the Hands of the Biſhops of Hereford, St. David's, St. Aſaph, Bangor, and Landaff, who were to inſpect the Tranſlation, and take Care for the printing of ſuch a Number, that every Cathedral, Collegiate, and Pariſh Church, and Chappel of Eaſe, within their reſpective Dioceſſes, where Welch was commonly ſpoken, might be furniſh'd with one. The Price of the Books was to be ſet by the Biſhops, the Incumbents to pay one half of the Charge, and the Pariſh the other.

An Act for tranſlating the Bible and Common-Pray*er into* Welch.

And to take Leave of this Parliament, there was a Confirmation of a Subſidy of Six Shillings in the Pound granted by the Clergy. (o)

(o) 5 El. c. 29.

This Year the Lady Katherine Grey, Daughter to the Duke of Suffolk, and Siſter to the Lady Jane Grey, was committed to the Tower. This Lady had, ſoon after her Marriage, been legally divorc'd from Henry Lord Herbert, Eldeſt Son to the Lord Pembroke. She was ready to lie in when impriſoned: She declar'd her ſelf married to Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford. This was publickly own'd by the Earl himſelf at his Return from France, who notwithſtanding was ſent to the Tower. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and ſome other Commiſſioners, were delegated to try the Cauſe, and give final Sentence. The Parties not being able to produce any Witneſs of their Marriage within the Time aſſign'd, the Archbiſhop pronounc'd the Correſpondence between them unlawful, and that they ought to do Penance for Fornication. Tho' there was no appealing from this Sentence, one John Hales, a Man of Learning, but much given to Singularities, ventur'd to cenſure it for a Nullity; and that the Conſent of the Earl and Lady was ſufficient for a lawful Marriage. For this Paradox Hales was committed. The Lady had two Sons by this Nobleman, Edward and Thomas. The Earl was proſecuted in the Star-Chamber, fin'd Five thouſand Pound, and ſuffer'd Nine Years Impriſonment. He ſtill inſiſted on his Marriage, and by the Advice of ſeveral Civilians, threw in an Appeal againſt the Archbiſhop's Sentence, which was withdrawn by him publickly afterwards. The Lady thought her ſelf harſhly uſed, and fell into a deep Melancholy, which put an End to her Life about Six Years after. (p) Notwithſtanding the Sentence, her eldeſt Son Edward carried the Title of Lord Beauchamp, and dying in his Father's Life-time left Iſſue William, who by Letters-Patents was created Earl of Hertford by King James the Firſt. By the Act of Aſſurance the Archbiſhops and Biſhops were impower'd to tender the Oath of Supremacy to their Clergy. Archbiſhop Parker was ſenſible of the Severity of the Statute, and that the Execution of it would draw an Imputation of Cruelty upon the Biſhops. For would not preſſing this ſanguinary Law look like a Spirit of Revenge? Would it not look like Repriſals for what had been ſuffer'd by the Proteſtants in the late Reign? And beſides, 'tis likely that Parker being a good-natur'd Prelate, might think the Penalty over-charg'd: And therefore to ſcreen the Papiſts from ſuffering, and the Biſhops from Cenſure, he wrote to his Suffragans to manage themſelves with great Caution and Reſerve in executing the Act of Aſſurance. And in caſe the Stubbornneſs and Misbehaviour of ſome People ſhould force them to offer the Oath; if ſuch Perſons refuſed to ſwear the Supremacy, the Biſhop concern'd ſhould immediately inform the Archbiſhop of their Refuſal, and not tender the Oath a ſecond Time 'till an Anſwer was return'd in Writing. He deſires theſe Suggeſtions may not be interpreted as if he was a Favourer of ſuch obſtinate Recuſants. "My Deſign, ſays "he, is only to recommend the Governing our "Flocks with a Paſtoral Care; it being Part of "our Character not to be ſway'd by Reſentment and private Regards, but to proceed by "gentle Motions, and endeavour to gain the "Miſled by Methods of Lenity. In the Cloſe, he deſires the Biſhops to believe this Advice was ſent them upon weighty Conſiderations. However, for ſeveral Reaſons he thought it beſt to keep it to themſelves, and doubted not their being of the ſame Mind. (r)

Parker ſent a Copy of theſe Directions to Secretary Cecil. He likewiſe gave this Miniſter an Account of his ſending this Advice to the Biſhops in his own Name, and not in the Queen's. He lets him know her Majeſty approv'd the Expedient, and was willing the Rigour of the Law might be diverted. He thought the Writing in the Queen's Name might affect the Reputation of the Legiſlature, diſhearten the Proteſtants, and give the Papiſts too much Encouragement. He owns he had no Warrant in Writing to halt in the Execution of the Act: However, ſince he knew the Queen's Mind, he was willing to ſtand a Cenſure, and hazard his Credit for her Majeſty's Service. He concludes with referring the Matter to the Secretary, who approv'd his Method. (s)

By this Temper none of the Popiſh Biſhops or Clergy had the Oath of Supremacy offer'd them, excepting Bonner. (t)

Having done with what related to the Church in the Parliament, I ſhall proceed to the Convocation, which was held at the ſame Time.

A Convocation at St. Paul's.

Upon the 13th of January * the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and his Suffragans met at St. Paul's: And being all in their Habits, the Archbiſhop went into the Dean's Stall, and the Biſhops into thoſe of the Prebendaries on each Side of the Choir. After this the Litany and the Veni Creator were ſolemnly ſung in Engliſh. Then Day, Provoſt of Eaton, made a Sermon in Latin. After Sermon the firſt Pſalm was ſung in Engliſh, and the Archbiſhop and Biſhops receiv'd the Holy Euchariſt at the Hands of the Biſhop of London. After the Communion, the Archbiſhop and Biſhops went into the Chapter-Houſe. The Archbiſhop had a Seat in the Middle, the Suffragans ſitting on each Side. Their Names were as follow; Edmund London, Robert Winton, William Chicheſter, John Hereford, Richard Ely, Edwyn Wigorn, Rowland Bangor, Nicholas Lincoln, John Sarum, Richard Meneven, Edmund Roff, Gilbert Bath and Wells, Thomas Coventry and Litchfield, William Exon, John Norwich, Edmund Peterborough, Thomas St. Aſaph, Richard Glouceſter, and Commendatory of Briſtol. The Clergy of the Lower Houſe were likewiſe in the Chapter-Houſe, attending the Archbiſhop.

The Preliminary Ceremonies.

And now the Biſhop of London made a Return of his Certificate for ſummoning the Suffragans. The Certificate being read by the Archbiſhops Chancellor, and the Biſhops called, their Appearance was enter'd by the Regiſtrary. When this was done, the Archbiſhop made a ſhort Speech, acquainting them they had now a fair Opportunity for giving the laſt Hand to the Reformation: That the Queen was favourably diſpos'd for ſuch an Undertaking. Then he ſuggeſted the Choice of a Prolocutor to the Clergy of the Lower Houſe, and recommended Alexander Nowel, Dean of St. Paul's. After this he order'd his Chancellor to receive the Biſhops Certificates, to take an Account of the Proxies of the Abſentees, and examine the Reaſons of their Abſence. And thoſe who neither appear'd in Perſon nor Proxy were pronounced Contumacious, and a Puniſhment referr'd to the next Seſſions. (u)

At which Time the Archbiſhop, with the reſt of the Biſhops came to St. Paul's. His Grace officiated in the Chapter-houſe in Latin, a new Prayer being made for the Occaſion. When the Service was over, the Laity were diſmiſs'd, and the lower Clergy withdrew to their Houſe. Soon after being ſent for by the Archbiſhop, they came and preſented Nowel for their Prolocutor, who was introduc'd between the Deans of Weſtminſter and Chriſt-Church. The Firſt made a Speech upon the Merit and Qualifications of the Elect: Nowel on the other Side, in a modeſt Application, endeavour'd to throw off the Panegyrick, to diſclaim the Character, and diſable himſelf. However, at laſt he was contented to conſtrain his Inclination, and reſign to their Choice. The Archbiſhop diſcourſing this Matter with the Biſhops, they unanimouſly agreed upon his Fitneſs for the Employment. Then the Archbiſhop made a Speech, and with ſome touches of Commendation, confirm'd the Election. The Clergy of the Lower Houſe now diſmiſs'd, the Archbiſhop deſir'd the Biſhops to recollect the Defects and imperfect Regulations in their reſpective Dioceſes, and propound them at the next Seſſion.

Having now given the Reader a View of the preliminary Ceremonies, I ſhall proceed to the Buſineſs of this Meeting. There were ſeveral Things aim'd at: But excepting a Subſidy, together with ſome Additions, Omiſſions, and Alterations in the doctrinal Articles, nothing paſs'd. There was a Project amongſt other Things, for making an Alteration in the Ceremonies. To this Purpoſe, Sandys Biſhop of Worceſter brought in a Paper conſiſting of Three Heads.

A Motion for the Ateration of ſome Rites and Habits.

Firſt, That by her Majeſty's Authority, and the Aſſiſtance of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Rubrick in the Common-Prayer which gives Women a Liberty to Baptize in Caſe of Neceſſity, might be alter'd.* This Matter the Biſhop would have govern'd by the Direction of an Act of Parliament to be made for that Purpoſe. His Reaſon for an Alteration is, becauſe the holy Scriptures declare Women uncapable of Adminiſtring the Sacraments. Grindal Biſhop of London was of Sandys's Opinion as to the Thing, but differ'd as to the Manner of Settling it. He thought a Synod was the propereſt Authority to regulate this Point.

Secondly, Sandys mov'd, That the making a Croſs in the Child's Forehead might be raz'd out of the Office, and the Raſure confirm'd by the ſecular Authority above-mention'd. It ſeems he thought this Ceremony unneceſſary and Superſtitious.

Thirdly, That purſuant to the Preſidents of King Henry the VIIIth, and King Edward the VIth, a Committee of Biſhops and other learned Men may be appointed by her Majeſty to draw a Scheme for Church Diſcipline and Government: And that the Regulations agreed by them might be confirm'd this Seſſion by the Parliament. Another Attempt of this Kind.

There was another Paper laid down before the Convocation, and ſubſcrib'd by Three and thirty of the Lower Houſe: 'Twas digeſted into Seven Articles.

I. That the Pſalms appointed by the Common-Prayer might be ſung diſtinctly by the whole Congregation, or elſe read wholly by the Miniſter: And that all Streins of Skill, Muſical Performances, and playing on the Organs, ſhould be diſcharg'd.

II. That none of the Laity may be allow'd to Baptize, upon any Pretence whatſoever, and that the Sign of the Croſs may be diſus'd in the Adminiſtration of that Sacrament.

III. That Kneeling at the holy Euchariſt may be left to the Diſcretion of the Ordinary. Their Objection is, becauſe ſome don't only knock in Kneeling, but behave themſelves ſuperſtitiouſly. It ſeems theſe Men had forgotten that knocking on the Breaſt was a Geſture commended by our Saviour in the Publican.

IV. That the Copes and Surplices may be laid aſide, and that the Habit of the Deſk and the Pulpit may be the ſame.

V. That the Miniſters of the Word and Sacraments may not be forc'd to wear ſuch Gowns and Caps as the Enemies of the Goſpel have made the diſtinguiſhing Habit of their Function.

VI. That in the 33d Article of Doctrine concerning Ceremonies, the Cenſure of thoſe who diſconform may be ſoften'd, and let down to a gentler Diſlike. They refer to the Articles paſs'd in the Year 1552; And the Clauſe they would have reform'd is this: Whoſoever thro' private Judgment willingly and purpoſely doth openly break the Traditions and Ceremonies of the Church, which be not repugnant to the Word of God, and be ordain'd and approv'd by common Authority, ought to be rebuked openly (that other may fear to do the like) as one that offendeth againſt the common Order of the Church, and hurteth the Authority of the Magiſtrate, and woundeth the Conſciences of weak Brethren.

Idem.

VII. That all Feſtivals kept in Honour of the Saints, might be abrogated, or at leaſt kept on with ſome Circumſtances of Abatement: That the Memory of the Saints might be only retain'd in Sermons, Homilies, or the publick Liturgy: And that after the People had been thus inſtructed in their Hiſtory, and done their Devotions, they might have the Liberty of working the reſt of the Day. The Prolocutor Nowel ſubſcrib'd this Paper.

Feb. 13th.

The Articles, excepting the Sixth, were ſtrongly debated in the Lower Houſe, and put to the Scrutiny. But being couch'd in Terms explanatory, and in ſome Things different from others, I ſhall mention Part of them. The Firſt ſtands thus,

“That all Sundays and principal Feaſts of Chriſt be kept Holy-Days, and all other Feſtivals abrogated.

“Secondly, That in all Pariſh Churches, the Miniſter in Common-Prayer, turn his Face towards the People.

“The 3d and 4th Are the ſame with thoſe of that Number already related: Only the latter Cenſures knocking on the Breaſt more plainly than the other.

“The 5th is more moderate than the 4th of the former Seven: It allows the Uſe of the Surplice in the Deſk, and only ſtrikes off the Cope, and other ſacerdotal Diſtinctions. (x)

Six Articles debated in the Lower Houſe.

Theſe Six Articles were warmly conteſted: And dividing upon the Queſtion, ſome of the Members were willing to refer the Controverſy to the Upper Houſe: Others proteſted againſt this Com-promiſe, and declar'd themſelves reſolv'd againſt any Alteration in the preſent Eſtabliſhment. When they went to the Suffrage, they found the Innovators a conſiderable Number: But notwithſtanding the Struggle, the Proteſting Party carried it. And thus the Ceremonies and religious Decorations continued in their former Condition. However, 'tis plain by the Conteſt, the Franckfort and Geneva Preciſians, had no ſmall Intereſt. Many of the Engliſh Exiles were willing to Reform away the Ornaments and Solemnity of divine Worſhip; and thought Calvin's Platform a much better Regulation than that of the Primitive Church. But God be thank'd, the Majority of our Reformers had a different Senſe of theſe Matters: And had more Learning and Judgment, more Steadineſs and Reſolution, than to be over-rul'd with Noiſe and Novelty.

The Church Eſtabliſhment continues.

Feb. 19.

The Archbiſhop ſends ſome Articles of Enquiry to the Lower Houſe.

Some few Days after, the Archbiſhop ſent for the Prolocutor, and delivering him certain Articles, order'd him to communicate them to the lower Houſe: That thoſe Members ſhould examine the Heads, and return their Opinion in Writing. The Articles were, whether, if the Writ de melius Inquirendo was iſſued out upon the Eſtates of the Clergy, the Queen would find her Account in that Enquiry. Item, Whether ſome Benefices are not already over-rated. Thirdly, They were to enquire into Dilapidations, and other Waſtes upon Livings, and by whom they were done. Fourthly, They were to make their Report how they had been us'd in the levying Arrearages of Tenths and Subſidies. Fifthly, How many Benefices they find charg'd with Penſions for religious Perſons: And Laſtly, they were to certify how many Livings were void in every Dioceſe. (y)

Theſe Enquiries were directed by the Archbiſhop to diſcover the Poverty of the Clergy, and how lamentably they had ſuffer'd in their Revenues: And when the lower Houſe had purſued the Archbiſhop's Inſtructions, and made their Report upon the Queries, 'twas to be hoped ſuch Proof of the Indigence of the parochial Clergy, might move the Court to Compaſſion, and put a Stop at leaſt to any farther Oppreſſion. But it does not appear the Archbiſhop's Intention was anſwer'd, or that any Progreſs was made in this Matter by the Lower Houſe.

The main Buſineſs of this Synod, was the Settling the doctrinal Part of the Reformation. That the Number of the Articles paſs'd in 1552, was retrench'd, and ſome Amendments made upon the reſt, has been already related. That which remains to be done, is to vindicate the Church from the Charge of Forgery, in the Head of the 20th Article paſs'd in this Synod. The pretended Interpolation ſtands thus; The Church has Power to decree Rites, or Ceremonies, and Authority in Controverſies of Faith.

The Prelates of the Church of England charg'd with forging a Clauſe in the 20th Article.

In the Reign of King Charles the Firſt, one Burton a puritanical Clergyman, charg'd Archbiſhop Laud, and the Prelates of that Reign, with this foul Practice. In his Letter to the Temporal Lords of the Privy Council, he complains in this Language: That the Prelates to juſtify their Proceedings, had forg'd a new Article of Religion, brought from Rome, (which gave them full Power to alter the Doctrine and Diſcipline of our Church at a Blow,) and had foiſted it into the Beginning of the 20th Article of our Church; and that this was in the then laſt Edition of the Articles, viz. That of the Year 1628, in Affront of his Majeſty's Declaration before them, &c. That to forge an Article, either in whole or in Part, and then thruſt it upon the Church, is a moſt heinous Crime, and far worſe than forging a Deed. (z) Burton endeavours to ſupport the Charge, by alledging, this Clauſe was not to be found in the Latin or Engliſh Articles of Edward VI. or Queen Elizabeth, ratified by Parliament: Nor (as the Archbiſhop underſtood him) in any Copies before that printed Anno 1628, with the King's Declaration before it. And Fuller, to ſet Burton's Objection in its full Strength, obſerves this Clauſe concerning the Authority of the Church was omitted in the Engliſh and Latin Edition of the Articles ſet forth in the Year 1571, when, as this Hiſtorian pretends, they were firſt confirm'd by Parliament. He takes Notice likewiſe, that Dr. Mocket, Chaplain to Archbiſhop Abbot, omitted this Clauſe in his Latin Tranſlation of the Articles. (z)

Archbiſhop Laud diſproves the Charge in his Speech in the Star-Chamber.

To return to Burton: This was charging home, and touching the Reputation of the Church in a very ſenſible Part. To wipe off this Aſperſion, Archbiſhop Laud replies, That the Articles of Edward the VIth, and thoſe made under Queen Elizabeth, differ'd very much: That by Conſequence thoſe of Edward the VIth, were not then binding: And that therefore, whether the controverted Clauſe were in or out of them, was not material. But as to the Articles of Queen Elizabeth, he had Four ſeveral Copies by him: In all theſe Editions printed before the Year 1628, the conteſted Clauſe was to be ſeen. Three of theſe Editions were in Engliſh, and printed in the Years 1593, 1605, 1612; The Fourth Edition, which was in Latin, was publiſh'd in the Year 1563: This ſays the Archbiſhop, was one of the Firſt printed Copies, if not the Firſt of all, for the Articles were agreed on but the 29th of January, Anno 1563. Or as we write, 156$\frac{2}{3}$. This the Archbiſhop thought was a ſufficient Diſproof of the Imputation of Forgery.

He produces a Copy of the Original atteſted by a Publick Notary.

But to make the Matter plainer, for 'tis not fit, (as he ſpeaks to the Lords of the Star-Chamber) concerning an Article of Religion, and an Article of ſuch Conſequence for the Order, Truth, and Peace of this Church, you ſhould rely upon my Copies, be they never ſo many, or never ſo ancient; therefore I ſent to the publick Records in my Office, and here, under my Officer's Hand, who is a publick Notary, is return'd me, the 20th Article, with this Affirmative Clauſe in it, and there is alſo the whole Body of Articles to be ſeen. By this your Lordſhips ſee, how free the Prelates are from forging this Part of the Article. And now let theſe Men (meaning Burton and his Party) quit themſelves and their Faction as they can, for their Index expurgatorius, and their foul Raſure in leaving out this Part of the Article. For to leave out of an Article, is as great a Crime as to put in; And a main Raſure, is as cenſurable in this Court, as a Forgery. (b) This producing an atteſted Copy of the original Record, knock'd down the Diſpute, expos'd the Calumny, and was Evidence beyond Contradiction.

(b) Archbiſhop Laud's Speech, Id. p. 83.

Heylin perus'd the original Record, which is now deſtroy'd by the great Fire of London in the Year 1666.

But to add a Word or Two farther: The learned Heylin not only takes Notice of the Archbiſhop's Shewing the Lords an exemplified Copy of the Original, but adds from his own Knowledge, that having Occaſion to conſult the Records of Convocation, he found the controverted Clauſe Verbatim in theſe Words; Habet Eccleſia Ritus Statuendi jus, & in fidei Controverſiis Authoritatem. And therefore he has reaſon for Wondering at Fuller, who had the Liberty of peruſing theſe Records, and tranſcrib'd them frequently into his Hiſtory; he had reaſon, I ſay, to wonder at this Hiſtorian, for pretending himſelf unfurniſh'd with Proof to decide the Point: And that he was at a Loſs to pronounce whether the Biſhops were Faulty in their Addition, or their Oppoſites in their Subſtraction. *

* Heylin's Examen Hiſtoricum, p. 144. Fuller, Church Hiſt. Book 9. p. 74.

And turns the foul Practice upon the Puritans.

To proceed: Since the Fraud was thus demonſtrably turn'd upon the Accuſers, it may not be amiſs to acquaint the Reader how the Archbiſhop endeavour'd to trace this ſcandalous Practice: And to give the Relation in the Words of this famous Prelate: If the Explaining this Myſtery of Iniquity was demanded, he anſwers, truly, my Lords, I cannot certainly tell; but as far as I can, I'le tell ye. The Articles you ſee were fully and fairly agreed to, and ſubſcrib'd in the Year 1562: But after this, in the Year 1571, the Articles were printed both in Latin and Engliſh, and this Clauſe of the Church left out of both. And certainly this could not be done, but by the malicious Cunning of the oppoſite Faction. And tho' I ſhall ſpare dead Mens Names, where I have not Certainty, yet if you be pleas'd to look back, and conſider who they were that govern'd Buſineſſes in 1571, and rid the Church almoſt at their Pleaſure; and how potent the Anceſtors of theſe Libellers began then to grow, you will think it no hard Matter to have the Articles printed, and this Clauſe left out. And yet 'tis plain, That after the Stir about Subſcription in the Year 1571, the Articles were ſettled and ſubſcrib'd unto at laſt, as in the Year 1562, with this Clauſe in them for the Church. For looking farther into the Records which are in my own Hand, I have found the Book of 156$\frac{2}{3}$, ſubſcrib'd by all the Lower Houſe of Convocation in this very Year of Contradiction 1571; Dr. John Ailmer (who was afterwards Lord Biſhop of London) being their Prolocutor: Alexander Nowel, Dean of St. Paul's having been Prolocutor in 1562, and yet living, and preſent, and ſubſcribing in 1571. Therefore I do openly here in the Star-Chamber, charge upon that pure Sect, this foul Corruption of falſifying the Articles of the Church of England: Let them take it off as they can.

(c) Prieſtcraft in Perfection.

The Two Mſs. of the Articles in Bennet-College Library no Authentick Records.

Notwithſtanding this Evidence of clear Dealing in the Church, the Charge of Forgery has lately been renew'd againſt her. (c) The Author engag'd in this Service, lays the main Streſs upon Two Manuſcripts in Bennet College Library in Cambridge. Theſe are Parcel of Archbiſhop Parker's Papers which he gave that College. Theſe Manuſcripts are a Body of the Articles of the Church of England, and ſubſcrib'd by Two Convocations: The Firſt by the Convocation held in the Year 1562. And here we have a Liſt of both Houſes of the Province of Canterbury, together with ſome Biſhops of the Province of York. The other Manuſcript bears date 1571: This is ſubſcrib'd by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Ten of his Suffragans: And that both theſe Manuſcripts are Originals, is endeavour'd to be prov'd by the Hands of the Subſcribers. Now the controverted Clauſe concerning the Power of the Church, is wanting in both theſe Manuſcripts: And for this, the Author refers to Biſhop Burnet's Expoſition on the 39 Articles, and Mr. Strype's Annals.

This prov'd with Reſpect to both of them.

That the conteſted Clauſe is to be found in neither of theſe Manuſcripts, is granted: But that they are Originals, and the laſt authentick Acts of thoſe Convocations, is more than this Author has prov'd. On the other Side, That they have nothing of this Authority, has been lately evinc'd by a learned and judicous Writer. (d) What I ſhall obſerve farther upon this Argument, ſhall be moſtly extracted from this Author. To begin, That theſe Manuſcripts are not Originals, may be prov'd by Evidence, which will affect them both together; and likewiſe by other Reaſonings which will diſable them, ſingly conſider'd.

Firſt, becauſe not engroſſed on Parchment.

Firſt, With Reſpect to them both, it may be obſerv'd, that finiſh'd Records are generally engroſs'd on Parchment in black large Characters; but theſe Two Manuſcripts are on Paper, neither of them engroſs'd, and the latter in a pale ſmall Hand, not very correctly written. (e)

(e) Vindication of the Church of England, &c. pag. 79.

Secondly, Becauſe not ratified under the Broad Seal.

Secondly, Neither of theſe Manuſcripts have the Royal Authority annex'd; but this Circumſtance was abſolutely Neceſſary to make them Authentick: Of this the Reader may be ſatisfied from the Act of Submiſſion. (f) By this Statute the Clergy can execute nothing paſs'd in Convocation, unleſs their Ordinances and Conſtitutions are confirm'd by the Crown, under the Broad Seal. Now the Records of ſuch Eccleſiaſtical Acts or Conſtitutions being the laſt Inſtruments, and executed as the Acts of the Body, either by Voting or Subſcription; ſuch Records, I ſay, having the laſt Hand thus put to them, and made the final Reſolution of the Convocation, muſt of Neceſſity be fortified with the Broad Seal to give them a legal Paſs, and cover the Houſes from the Statute of Præmunire: The Inference is, That the Manuſcripts of both theſe Articles, had they been finiſh'd Originals, muſt have been confirm'd by the Queen's Aſſent, and that Aſſent teſtified by affixing the Broad Seal. And that the 39 Articles were thus ratified by Queen Elizabeth, the Reader may ſee in Coke's Inſtitutes. (g) And thus after the Poſtſcript in Wolfe's Edition of the Articles printed in the Year 1563, we have theſe Words, Quibus omnibus Articulis Sereniſſima Princeps Elizabetha —— per ſeipſam diligenter prius lectis & examinatis, Regium ſuum Aſſenſum præbuit: Now this Poſtſcript being a Copy of the Certificate of the Regiſter annex'd to the original Record of the Articles, it evidently follows, that the Royal Aſſent was given to that Record: The next Conſequence is, That theſe Two Manuſcripts which want this Royal Ratification, were only rough Draughts, and preparatory Inſtruments; but neither of them paſs'd the laſt concluding Forms, nor had the Strength and Atteſtation of authentick Records.

(f) 25 H. 8. c. 19.

(g) Part 4. cap. 74. fol. 323.

Thirdly, Becauſe not lodg'd in the proper Repoſitory.

Thirdly, Theſe Two Manuſcripts being given by Parker to Bennet College, is another good Argument againſt their Authority: For the Archbiſhops Regiſtry, as 'tis well known, is the Repoſitary for Convocation-Records. Theſe Inſtruments are not at the Archbiſhop's Diſpoſal; He has no more Propriety in them, than in any other Records belonging to his Offices. All ſuch Inſtruments are to remain in the Places aſſign'd, for publick Uſe and Inſpection. Had theſe Manuſcripts therefore been original Records, they would never have been lodg'd in the College: For we can't imagine that either the Archbiſhop would have been capable of ſo great an Injuſtice, as to remove ſuch valuable Inſtruments from the proper and cuſtomary Place, or that the College would have been allow'd the Poſſeſſion of them by his Succeſſors. 'Tis granted, all imperfect Papers leading to Buſineſs belong to the Archbiſhop as Preſident of the Convocation: And thus a preparatory Subſcription to Articles or Canons being a conſiderable Advance towards a final Agreement, might be afterwards lodg'd in the Hand above-mention'd. Thus for Inſtance, when theſe Articles of 1562 were ſubſcrib'd by both Houſes of Convocation in the Year 1604, the Book thus ſubſcrib'd, was order'd to be put into the Cuſtody of the Biſhop of London then Preſident. (h) And thus in the very next Paper to theſe Manuſcripts of Archbiſhop Parker, there is a reſembling preparatory Subſcription of the Canons of the Convocation held in the Year 1571. * But as to finiſh'd Records, they are no private Property: They are the Right and Intereſt of the Community. And thus, as the Originals of Acts of Parliament are lodged either in the Tower, or at the Rolles; ſo Convocation-Records are always kept in a publick Office.

A farther Diſproof of them ſingly conſider'd.

And thus much may ſuffice to diſprove the Authority of theſe Manuſcripts taken together: From hence I ſhall proceed briefly to the Proofs which diſable them ſingly conſider'd: And Firſt with Reference to the Manuſcripts ſign'd by the Convocation held in the Year 1562. And here it may be obſerv'd Firſt: That,

The Daſhes diſprove the MSS. ſubſcrib'd Anno 1562.

The Argument advanc'd to prove it an original Record (i) proves the Contrary. For, as the Author of Prieſtcraft, &c. obſerves from Mr Strype, this Manuſcript is only a fair Draught of King Edward the VIth's Articles accurately written out for the ſerious Conſideration of the Archbiſhop: That there were Strokes drawn in many Places by a Red-Lead Pen, which was the Archbiſhop's cuſtomary Way of making Remarks in reading a Book: That theſe Strokes were ſometimes drawn thro' ſingle Words, and ſometimes thro' whole Lines. That ſome of theſe Articles are wholly ſuperſeded by the Archbiſhop's Minium, and divers of them ſhorten'd; daſhing that thorough which he was minded to have omitted. And of this he gives ſeveral Inſtances: And in ſome Places takes Notice of ſomething interlin'd in the Archbiſhop's own Hand. And which is very remarkable in the Sixteenth Article, where the Title was de Peccato in Spiritum ſanctum, the Three laſt Words are daſh'd out, and over them After Baptiſm is interlin'd in the Archbiſhop's Hand. Now to make an Engliſh Correction in a Latin Draught, is a very ill Sign of a finiſh'd Record. Are not theſe Strokes and Interlineations, this mixture of different Languages, indiſputable Proofs of a foul Draught? Is an Inſtrument thus maim'd and undreſs'd, proper to ſtand upon Record? To ſtand upon Record, I ſay, as the Senſe of a Convocation in Matters of the laſt Importance? Is it imaginable the Convocation ſhould make their Corrections upon a fair Draught, and paſs the Articles upon a foul one? Or were they ever actually paſs'd upon theſe Corrections? What Copy of theſe Articles is there, either Manuſcript or Printed, in which the Engliſh and Latin De Peccato After-baptiſm ſtand jumbled together?

(i) Prieſtcraft, &c.

This MSS. wants the Subſcriptions of Two Biſhops.

Secondly, Notwithſtanding the Number of Subſcriptions of both Houſes is urg'd to ſupport the Manuſcript, yet 'tis plain the Liſt is imperfect; for the Names of the Biſhops of Rocheſter and Glouceſter are wanting: And yet 'tis evident from the Journals of the Convocation that both theſe Biſhops ſubſcrib'd the Articles. (k) Now ſince theſe Biſhops Names are not to be found in Bennet College Manuſcripts, nothing can be a plainer Diſproof of that Paper's being no authentick Record.

(k) Extracts of the Journal of Convocation, fol. 114.

Seſs. 8.

Ann. Dom. 1562.

The conteſted Clauſe in the Extract of the Journal of the Upper Houſe.

And having mention'd the Journal of Convocation, I ſhall tranſcribe the Words of the Extract, where the Paſſing the conteſted Clauſe is mention'd at Length. “ Friday Jan. the 29th at Eight in the Morning, the Archbiſhop and Biſhops being met in the Chapter-Houſe of St. Paul's, Poſt Tractatum aliquem inter eos habitum, tandem ſuper quibuſdam Articulis Orthodoxæ fidei inter Epiſcopos quorum Nomina iis ſubſcribuntur unanimiter Convenit; quorum quidem Articulorum Tenor ſequitur, & ſunt Tales.

And here the Beginning of the Firſt Article is juſt mention'd thus in the Extract. Unus eſt verus & vivus Deus, &c. ut in Syntagmate Confeſſionum.

The 20th Article, with the Title and conteſted Clauſe at length, ſtands thus, “De Eccleſiæ Authoritate. Habet Eccleſia ritus ſtatuendi Jus, & in Fidei Controverſiis Authoritatem, quamvis Eccleſiæ non licet quicquam inſtituere, quod verbo Dei adverſatur.

After which the next Paragraph informs us theſe Articles were paſs'd and ſubſcrib'd, not only by the Biſhops of both Provinces, but by the whole repreſenting Clergy: The Words run thus,

Extract of the Journal of the Convocation, ibid.

Thirdly, As the learned Vindicator obſerves, the Strokes and Alterations made by Archbiſhop Parker in the Bennet College Manuſcripts abovemention'd, muſt be either Prior or Poſterior to the Subſcription: If theſe Animadverſions paſs'd upon them before the Signing, then the Subſcription cannot belong to the 39 Articles now in Force. No, all theſe Hands of the Members of both Houſes muſt upon this Suppoſition, be given to a different Set of Forty two Articles: For to this Number, the Manuſcripts, daſh'd with the Archbiſhops Red-Lead Pencil, reaches: And if ſo, they are nothing to the Point; neither is any Member of the Church of England concern'd in them.

The Omiſſion of a Memorandum deſtroys the Credit of this MS.

But if theſe Daſhes and Alterations were Prior to the Subſcription, and made for finiſhing Strokes, and the laſt Regulation: If this was the Caſe, there muſt have been ſome atteſted Memorandum of the Time, when ſuch Alterations were made; this was neceſſary and a cuſtomary Practice. For without this it would be impoſſible to diſcover whether ſuch Alterations were Prior, or Poſterior to the Subſcription. * And beſides, ſuch a Memorandum was particularly Neceſſary in the preſent Caſe, becauſe the Strokes of Red-Lead are finely drawn, and not full enough to deface the Original. And therefore, without ſuch a Memorandum, it might be a Queſtion whether ſome of the Words were daſh'd for Deletion, or mark'd for greater Streſs and Conſideration. Now this undiſtinguiſhing Management, this Omiſſion of ſo neceſſary a Memorandum to make the Inſtrument intelligible, and inform the Reader whether the Subſcription was made to our 39 Articles, or to a different Set conſiſting of 42; this grand Defect, I ſay, is a plain Proof that this Manuſcript of 1562, cannot be an original Record of the 39 Articles now receiv'd.

* Vindication of the Church, &c. pag. 86, 7.

Another Argument againſt the Credit of this MS.

Fourthly, The Manuſcript it ſelf, by the Form juſt before the Subſcription, is ſufficient to diſprove its being the authentick Original. At the End of the Articles, the Words written by Archbiſhop Parker's Direction are theſe: Hos Articulos Fidei Chriſtianæ continentes in Univerſum novendecim Paginas in Autographo quod aſſervatur apud Reverendiſſimum in Chriſto patrem Dom. Mathæum Cantuar. Archiepiſcopum totius Angliæ Primatem & Metropolitanum: Et in prima Pagina quatuor Articulos, & lineas triginta quatuor, &c. (Naming alſo how many Articles and Lines are contain'd in all the following Pages) Nos Archiepiſcopi & Epiſcopi utriuſque Provinciæ Regni Angliæ in ſacra Synodo Provinciali legitimè congregati, recipimus & profitemur, & ut veros atque Orthodoxos manuum noſtrarum Subſcriptionibus approbamus, viceſimo nono die Menſis Januarii, anno Dom. ſecundum Computationem Anglicanæ Eccleſiæ, Milleſimo quingenteſimo, ſexageſimo ſecundo, & Illuſtriſſimæ Princip. Elizabethæ D. G. Angliæ, Franciæ & Hiberniæ, Reginæ, Fidei Defenſ. &c. Dominæ noſtræ Clementiſſimæ anno quinto. (m)

(m) Strype's Annal, pag. 289.

The MS. refers to it ſelf, which is an Argument of its not being an Original.

After theſe Remarks upon the Manuſcript, the Liſt of the Subſcription follows. Theſe Directions at the End of the Manuſcript refer to an Autegraphum; from whence it may be reaſonably inferr'd this Manuſcript cannot be the Original, unleſs we can ſuppoſe it ſhould refer to it ſelf, which is very unuſual. And if this had been the Caſe, why was not the Language more clear and deciſive? Why was it not ſaid In hoc Autographo, as well as Hos Articulos? Why was not Aſſervabitur, or Aſſervandum eſt, made Uſe of, inſtead of Aſſervatur apud Reverendiſſimum, &c? Farther, what Occaſion was there of mentioning either the Autographum, or where 'twas kept, ſince without the Sight of the Manuſcript, the Directions could ſignify nothing. 'Tis granted, the Poſtſcript of the Firſt Latin Edition printed by Wolfe in the Year 1563, is couch'd in the ſame Terms: Now this Poſtſcript is without Queſtion, a true Certificate of the Regiſter, tranſcrib'd in all Probability from the Record it ſelf; but then, if that Record was the ſubſcrib'd Original, theſe Words, In Autographo quod Aſſervatur, tho' neceſſary in the Certificate to direct where to find the Autographum, yet ſuch a Direction was of no Service in the Autographum, and therefore may be ſuppos'd not to have been inſerted. (n)

(n) Vindication, pag. 89.

To proceed, the learned Vindicator argues againſt the Authority of the other Bennet College Manuſcript ſubſcrib'd, Ann. 1571.

The other MS. diſprov'd firſt from the imperfect Liſt.

Firſt, From the Incompleatneſs of the Liſt. This Manuſcript is ſo far from being an authentick Record, that it falls ſhort of the preparatory Advances of that above-mention'd. For tho' 'twas deſign'd, as appears by the Form, to be ſubſcrib'd by the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of both Provinces, (o) yet, as it happen'd, there are no more Hands to it, than that of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Ten of his Suffragans. This Manuſcript therefore receiving a Check in the Progreſs, and failing in the Execution, can paſs for no more than an imperfect Memoir.

(o) Biſhop Burnet's Expoſition of the 39 Articles, pag. 15.

Secondly, From the Number of the Articles.

Secondly, As this Subſcription is Defective with Reſpect to the Liſt, 'tis likewiſe no leſs with Regard to the Articles: For here the Number falls ſhort: The Form of the Subſcription reckons them no more than 38 Articles: Tho' thro' all the Impreſſions from that Year downwards, they have always reach'd to 39. And here the earlieſt Editions of the Articles, with Numbers annex'd, are thoſe of this Year 1571: All which Editions were printed after the Articles had been ſubſcrib'd by this Convocation, as appears from the expreſs Mention of that Subſcription in the Ratification. Is it therefore at all likely, that the Firſt Impreſſion after this Subſcription ſhould differ ſo remarkably from the Original? Is it likely they ſhould be publiſh'd with the additional Diviſion, if the Record had made no ſuch Diſtinction? Or can we imagine they would have outſtretch'd the Number fix'd by the Convocation, and printed them 39, if they had found no more than 38 in the Original? From hence it appears this Manuſcript is a Paper of no Authority, and has not ſo much as the Face of an authentick Record.

Ibid.

Several Copies ſtill remaining of the Articles, with the conteſted Clauſe printed in the Year 1563.

To go on in the Year 1563, the Articles were printed by Renault Wolfe in Latin: This in all likelihood was the Firſt Impreſſion, and publiſh'd ſoon after the Articles were agreed in the Convocation: For the Printers are particularly early in their Dates, and reckon the Year from Michaelmas-Term. Now according to this Computation, the Articles were both paſs'd, and printed in the Year 1563. There are Three Copies of this Latin Impreſſion ſtill remaining in our Univerſities: One in Bennet College, Cambridge, and Two in the Bodleian Library. (p) This Impreſſion of Wolfe was, as the Author of Prieſt-craft obſerves, cited by Archbiſhop Laud in the Star-Chamber, and has the controverted Clauſe of the 20th Article in it. One of theſe printed Copies in the Bodleian Library has a Parchment-Roll tack'd to it, ſubſcrib'd by the Lower Houſe of Convocation. This Subſcription the Author of Prieſt-craft endeavours to prove a Forgery, becauſe the Liſt of the Subſcribers are not the ſame with thoſe in Mr. Strype's Annals.

(p) Vindication, &c. pag. 152.

But this Objection has no Weight: For what Wonder is it if the Names and Titles are not the ſame, ſince the Liſt belongs to Two diſtinct Convocations? To Two Convocations which ſate at Nine Years diſtance from each other. That in Mr. Strype's Annals belongs to the Convocation of 1562. But the other with a Roll tack'd, is a Liſt of the Convocation which ſate in the Year 1571. Nowel was Prolocutor in the Firſt, and Ailmer in the latter.

Id. pag. 44, 5.

The Credit of the Copy in the Bodleian Library vindicated.

This original Subſcription tack'd to the printed Articles, was preſerv'd by the famous Selden, a Man whom the Reader has no reaſon to ſuſpect of Partiality to the Church. This learned Antiquary, when the Queſtion was put whether the conteſted Clauſe was fraudulently thrown into the 20th Article, anſwers categorically, That 'tis moſt certain they (that is thoſe Words diſputed) were in the Book of Articles that was confirm'd, tho' in ſome Editions they have been left out. (q) That this Subſcription-Roll was Authentick, and tack'd to the Book confirm'd by the Convocation of 1571, Selden was well aſſur'd, by finding the Copy carefully reviſ'd, and all the Errors of the Preſs corrected by a Hand of that Age. Which nice Correction was no more than Neceſſary to prepare it for the Subſcription of a Synod. Selden likewiſe had farther Evidence of the Genuineneſs of this Roll, by comparing the Hands of this Liſt, with thoſe Members of the ſame Name who ſate in the Convocation of 1562. This was no difficult Task to ſo great an Antiquary, conſidering many of the Members of both theſe Convocations were Men of Character, and publick Buſineſs. And thus their Hands ſtanding upon Record on the Regiſters of Colleges, or Chapters, the comparing them with the Labell above-mention'd, was very practicable. And as the Undertaking was feiſable, we have no Reaſon to queſtion Selden's Inclination and Induſtry: Selden, I ſay, to whom a Proof of Forgery in this Matter, would have been a very acceptable Diſcovery. But the Caſe being ſo clear, this learned Adverſary makes no Scruple to vouch the Copy in the moſt determining Language. And for the Reader's farther Satiſfaction, the learned Vindicator has carried his Enquiry to the utmoſt Nicety, procur'd the Hands compar'd, and receiv'd Satiſfaction of their being exactly the ſame.

(q) Selden's Table Talk, pag. 54. Vindication, &c. pag. 179.

This Copy atteſted by Selden.

Id. pag. 180.

Farther, we may imagine a Perſon of Selden's Curioſity and Temper, would fly the Game home, bring the Point to the ſtricteſt Teſt, and Conſult the Records themſelves. That this was Matter of Fact, we are aſſur'd by an Author the Prieſt-craft writer has no Reaſon to queſtion. (r) This Gentleman affirms, That during the long Parliament and ſitting of the Aſſembly at Weſtminſter, Mr. Selden was employ'd to ſearch the Archbiſhop's Office. But here was no ſerviceable Matter for the Faction: No Report made upon Enquiry, to prove foul Play upon the Archbiſhop. Neither was any Thing of this Kind attempted in a long Anſwer to Laud's Speech, publiſh'd a Year after it was ſpoke in the Star-Chamber: To which may be added Archbiſhop William's ſhort Notes upon the Margin of a Print of this Speech. In theſe Remarks, where tho' Warmth of Temper and Miſunderſtanding between this Prelate and Laud, makes him exceed in his Cenſure, yet he advances nothing to blaſt Laud's Credit, with Reſpect to the conteſted Clauſe.

Id. 186.

As to Selden's Search, 'twas probably made at the ſame Time that a Committee of the Houſe of Commons ſent to the Archbiſhop then in the Tower, to give them an Account under his Hand what Originals of the Articles were in his Cuſtody. The Archbiſhop believ'd the Deſign of this Meſſage was to make a Search about the controverted Clauſe of the 20th Article. Upon this, he thought it proper to repeat ſomething of what he had deliver'd in the Star-Chamber, and declares expreſly, That the conteſted Paſſage (tho' left out in divers printed Copies, yet) in the original Articles of 1562, the Words are plain, and manifeſt without any interlining at all. (s) And which is ſtill more remarkable, this pretended Forgery was never objected againſt the Archbiſhop at his Tryal. This we may be aſſur'd was not overlook'd out of Tenderneſs: This, could it have been made good, would have ſtuck the moſt indelible Blemiſh upon his Memory: And would have been one of the worſt complexion'd Articles of the Impeachment: To which may be added, neither did the Aſſembly attempt to purge the Article, or venture upon a Cenſure of the Archbiſhop for conveying in the ſpurious Clauſe.

Archbiſhop Laud not charg'd with any Forgery of this Kind at his Tryal.

Beſides Wolfe's Latin Edition of the Year 1562, there's an Engliſh Impreſſion of the ſame Year, with the conteſted Clauſe in it. This is expreſly affirm'd by the learned Heylin, and may likewiſe be fairly collected from Sir Simon D'Ewes's Journal of Parliament. (t)

(t) Heylin's Hiſtory of Preſbytery, pag. 248. Sir Simon D'Ewes's Journal, pag. 132, 3.

And laſtly, the controverted Clauſe is to be ſeen in Day's Latin Edition, Anno 1571, and in Three Engliſh Editions of Jugg and Caw-wood printed the ſame Year.

And to conclude this Matter, if we had no other Evidence, the Unreaſonableneſs of this Charge might be collected from the Silence of thoſe Times when the Articles were firſt publiſh'd. A Forgery of this Kind lay open to Detection, and could never have been practis'd without being obſerv'd. In Caſe the Imputation could have been prov'd, what Clamours would there have been when Wolfe's Edition appear'd? What Entertainment would ſuch groſs Inſincerity have been to Papiſts and Preciſians? And what Advantage would they have made of ſuch a Diſcovery? What a ſenſeleſs Piece of Confidence would it have been to have ventur'd on ſo Clumſey a Falſification, when the Cheat lay expos'd to View, when the Articles were lately paſs'd, and the Convocation probably ſtill ſitting? For this Aſſembly did not riſe 'till the 14th of April, 1563, (u) before which Time the Articles were printed and diſpers'd. Had not the Honour and Authority of the Church been conſiderably engag'd, I ſhould have wav'd the Report of this Controverſy: And now having obſerv'd enough to diſprove the Calumny, I ſhall diſmiſs the Subject. If the Reader is deſirous to ſee the Author of Prieſt-craft farther detected and expos'd, he may conſult the Learned Vindicator of the Church of England, &c.

(u) Extract of the Journal of the Upper Houſe of Convocation, Fo. 126.

Some Heads of projected Diſcipline.

There was a Draught of Diſcipline drawn for the View of this Convocation. Had it paſs'd, 'twas to be offer'd to the Queen and Parliament for the Civil Sanction. The firſt Paper having William Exon on the Top, to ſhew it was either pen'd or approv'd by the Biſhop of Exeter, is ſomething of an Argument 'twas not the ſame Scheme of Diſcipline which the Lower Houſe deliver'd to the Biſhops.

Id. Fo. 123.

I ſhall mention ſome of the more remarkable Heads of this Diſcipline. 'Tis directed that the Juriſdiction of Biſhops may be farther extended: That they may be authoriz'd to reform all Diſorders in Peculiars, and Places exempt: That the Privileges of theſe latter were no better than Sanctuaries for Licence and Schiſm.

That Witchcraft may be capitally puniſh'd.

That if any one gains his Preferment by Simony he may be diſabled from holding any Benefice during Life: And that the Patron may loſe the Preſentation of that Turn, and the next Avoidance.

In another Paper for this Purpoſe, drawn by the Archbiſhop's Secretary, with ſome Corrections and Additions in Parker and Grindal's Hand, there are ſome Things worth obſerving.

The Second Paper.

'Tis mov'd, that as there is one Grammar appointed for all Schools, ſo there may be one Catechiſm authoriz'd for the ſame publick Uſe, and for Univerſities and private Families. The Paper takes Notice this Catechiſm, was almoſt finiſh'd by Nowel, Dean of Paul's; but before 'twas thus recommended to the Kingdom, it was to paſs in Convocation.

This Paper, which was to be preſented to the Queen, and moſt probably to the Parliament, ſuggeſts the making ſharper Laws againſt Fornication, Adultery, and Inceſt, Crimes committed with great Frequency and Boldneſs.

That the Ordinaries may not be check'd in their Correction of ſuch ſcandalous Practice by Prohibitions from the Temporal Courts.

That in impropriated Pariſhes, the Impropriators may be obliged to augment the Livings to a competent Subſiſtence: That the People may not be furniſhed with an unqualified Paſtor; nor depriv'd of the Benefits of Common-Prayer and Sacraments: That this Calamity was very common in a great many Towns where the Patrimony of the Church was alienated, and carried off by Impropriations.

That a farther Proviſion may be made for the Recovery of Tythes.

That ſome Regulation may be ſettled to prevent Diſpenſations for Pluralities, Non-reſidence, and marrying without Banes. There are ſeveral Things in both theſe Papers which I have left unmention'd.

Id. Fo. 123.

What Reſemblance there was between this Draught and that of the Lower Houſe, laid before the Biſhops, is uncertain.* However, this latter, as the Prolocutor reports, was paſs'd by the Lower Houſe: Upon which the Archbiſhop and his Suffragans return the Book with their Conſent for the inſerting ſome Additions deſir'd by the Prolocutor. Theſe Additions were inſerted, and brought up to the Biſhops. But here, for what Reaſon is not mention'd, the Matter ſlept, and nothing was done.

Nowel's Latin Catechiſm paſs'd in Convocation.

The Acts of the Upper Houſe, printed in the Synodus Anglicana, take Notice only of its being paſs'd in the Lower Houſe.

The Latin Catechiſm, drawn up for the Uſe of Schools, was paſs'd in this Convocation. Nowel, Dean of St. Paul's, at the Inſtance of Secretary Cecil, was the Author of this Performance. He form'd it pretty much upon the Model of the Catechiſm publiſh'd in the latter End of the Reign of King Edward the VIth. Being finiſh'd and dedicated to Cecil, the Convocation perus'd it before 'twas printed; and having made ſome Corrections, put their own Authority upon it, and recommended it to publick Uſe. Nowel having received it blotted and interlin'd, tranſcrib'd the Alterations, and ſent the corrected Copy to Cecil, not as his own private Compoſition, but as the Work of the Convocation. He deſir'd him to give his Opinion at his Leiſure, whether the Book might not deſerve being made publick with the Queen's Authority prefix'd. He conceiv'd ſome ſhort comprehenſive Treatiſe of Religion with a publick Character, was no more than neceſſary: And that the Learned beyond-Sea thought the Engliſh defective for want of ſomething of this Kind. This Catechiſm lay unpubliſh'd 'till the Year 1570, when, at the Inſtance of the two Archbiſhops, 'twas printed with a Dedication to them and their Suffragans. 'Twas afterwards by the Dean's Order, tranſlated into Engliſh and Greek. Though for the Main, 'twas much the ſame with that ſet forth in the Reign of King Edward the VIth, yet, as was obſerv'd, there were ſeveral material Alterations. To mention one: In the Expoſition upon the Petition in the Lord's-Prayer, Thy Kingdom come, King Edward's Catechiſm aſſerts our Saviour's Reign upon Earth after the Deſtruction of Antichriſt, and declares in Favour of the Millenary Doctrine: And with this Teſtimony Mede fortifies his Opinion in one of his Letters to Twiſſe. And now, excepting the granting a Subſidy, all that was done by this Synod has been related.

Hooper's Apology printed.

This Year an Apology, written by Hooper late Biſhop of Glouceſter, was publiſh'd. The Deſign of it is to wipe off ſome Aſperſions of Diſloyalty; and to purge himſelf from the Imputation of encouraging ſome People, who had uſed Unchriſtian Expreſſions in their Prayers againſt Queen Mary. "The Biſhop denies his Countenancing any ſuch intemperate Devotions: "And for a farther Defence, declares he had "always been true to the Conſtitution: That "when Queen Mary's Intereſt was at the loweſt "Ebb, when the Face of the Government was "againſt her, and her Rival Jane proclaimed "Queen; when the Tide run thus ſtrong againſt "her Highneſs, he rode from Place to Place to "ſtop the Revolt, and recover the People to "their Duty: And that at this unpromiſing Juncture he ſent Horſes and Men into her Ser-"vice. The Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's committed for hearing Maſs.

June.

To ſay ſomething of Scotland: About this Time John Hamilton, Archbiſhop of St. Andrew's, was committed to the Caſtle of Edinborough for ſaying and hearing Maſs. The Abbot of Coſragnel and the Prior of Withern had the ſame Uſage; and ſeveral Prieſts and Monks were ruggedly treated upon this Account. Theſe Rigours againſt the Papiſts gave ſomething of an Expectation of the Queen's coming over to the Reformation: Theſe Hopes were farther confirm'd by her paſſing ſeveral Acts in Favour of the Proteſtant Church in her Parliament held this Summer. This Parliament there was an Act of Oblivion paſs'd, to indemnify the Subjects from all Proſecutions, either by the Crown or Biſhops, for any Thing done from the Sixth of March in the Year 1558, to the Firſt of September 1561. (w) But this Act of Indemnity, how gracious ſoever, did not extend to the Ratification of the Treaty at Leith. This Accommodation being made without the Privity and Conſent of the Crown, the Queen would never acknowledge. (x)

Holyrood-House insulted.

An. 1563.

When the Queen was upon her Progreſs there happen'd an unfortunate Diſturbance at Edinborough. Some of her Majeſty's Family, who ſtaid behind at Holyrood-Houſe, had the Aſſiſtance of a Roman Catholick Prieſt, who officiated in the Chappel. Several of the Burghers of Edinborough frequenting the Service, the Preachers were much diſconcerted, and complained of the Liberty. The Proteſtant Townſmen thus harangued to a Ferment, went in a Body to Holyrood-Houſe, and being denied Entrance, forc'd the Gates. Some of the People at Maſs were ſeiz'd, and dragg'd to Priſon; the reſt with the Prieſt making their Eſcape the Back-way. When the Queen receiv'd Advice her Palace was thus inſulted, her Family hurried to Gaol, and that the Mob had ſeiz'd her Authority, and turn'd it upon her; when the Queen receiv'd Advice of this Misbehaviour, ſhe was very angry, as may be eaſily imagin'd. She declar'd her ſelf reſolv'd never to come to Edinborough 'till ſome exemplary Juſtice was done upon this outragious Riot: However, at the Inſtance of the Earls of Murray and Glencayrn ſhe dropp'd the Reſentment. In ſhort, the Matter was in a Manner paſs'd over, and none but John Knox call'd to an Account. This Preacher was ſummon'd before the Council, charg'd with raiſing the Sedition, and drawing the People together by ſending out his Circular Letters. To this his Anſwer was, That he never preached Rebellion, nor affected ſtirring up Tumults: On the contrary, he taught all the People to obey their Magiſtrates and Princes in God. By this Term [in God] he had an Evaſion for limiting the Subjects Obedience at Pleaſure: By this Diſtinction, whenever the Prince fail'd in his Duty, and bore hard upon Religion, Knox had a Warrant to preach Reſiſtance: And thus, notwithſtanding the Bar of the Conſtitution, the Subjects might fight the Government without Rebellion. To go on with Knox's Defence in his own Language: As to the Convocation of the Subjects, he ſaid, he had receiv'd a Command from the Church to advertiſe his Brethren when he ſaw a Neceſſity of their Meeting, eſpecially if he ſaw Religion to be in Peril; and had often craved to be exonerated of that Burthen, but was ſtill refuſed. Then addreſſing the Queen with a ſurpriſing Aſſurance, He charg'd her in the Name of Almighty God, and as ſhe deſir'd to eſcape his heavy Wrath and Indignation, to forſake that Idolatrous Religion which ſhe profeſſed, and by her Power maintain'd againſt the Statutes of the Realm. To what length he would have have gone on in this extraordinary Manner is uncertain; for he was check'd in his Application, and order'd by the Earl of Morton, Lord Chancellor, to hold his Peace, and be gone. This Way of haranguing the Mob to ſuppreſs Miſperſwaſion, to out-rage the Government, and do Juſtice without Authority, was not the Method of the Primitive Chriſtians. Tertullian acquaints us that the Chriſtians were very numerous in his Time: That the Court and Camp, the Towns and Countries, were fill'd with them: But notwithſtanding this Advantage of Strength, 'twas not their Way to raiſe their Poſſe, to attack the Temples, and ſtorm their Emperor's Religion. And if they did not think it lawful to manage in this Manner againſt a Pagan Belief, we may be well aſſur'd they would never have allow'd the bringing Force and Tumults upon Chriſtian Princes.

Adultery Death by Act of Parliament.

Q. Elizabeth entertain'd at Cambridge.

This belongs to the Year 1564.

To return to England: This Summer Queen Elizabeth made a Progreſs through Cambridge. She was honourably receiv'd by the Univerſity. She was lodg'd in King's-College, and during her Stay entertain'd her ſelf at the Philoſophy, Phyſick, and Divinity Acts. She had likewiſe the Diverſion of Plays for the Evening. At the Philoſopy Act Cartwright and Preſton were two of the Opponents: The firſt of Trinity, and the other of King's-College. Preſton was a graceful Perſon, ſpoke handſomely, and manag'd with Addreſs: Theſe Advantages gave him the Queen's Favour, and a ſenſible Preference to the other. Cartwright, who was not ſo well poliſh'd, coming off with a comparative Abatement, is ſaid to have been very uneaſy: And ſtanding well in his own Opinion, projected the retrieving his Credit. For this Purpoſe he travell'd to Geneva, inform'd himſelf thoroughly in the Doctrine and Diſcipline of that Church; and at his Return made it his Buſineſs to eſtabliſh that Model in England, was the Champion of the Cauſe, and appear'd at the Head of the Diſſenting Party. But whether the Mortification he met with at Cambridge was the Occaſion of his Diſaffection to the Church of England, is more than I ſhall affirm.

The Oath of Supremacy offer'd Bonner by Horn, Biſhop of Wincheſter.

The Biſhops, as hath been obſerv'd, being impowr'd by Act of Parliament to tender the Oath of Supremacy, Horn Biſhop of Wincheſter put it to Bonner, late Biſhop of London, who was now Priſoner in the Marſhalſea in Horn's Dioceſe. Bonner refus'd the Oath, which being return'd into the King's-Bench, he was indicted for his Recuſancy. Bonner at his Appearing confeſs'd the Fact, and travers'd the Indictment: And at his Motion for

Council

Parker (Matthew) Archbiſhop of Cant.

Council, the famous Ployden, and Wray, afterwards Chief Juſtice, were aſſign'd him. 'Twas pleaded, Bonner traverſes the Indictment for refuſing the Oath.

Firſt, That Bonner was indicted with the Addition of Doctor of Law, and one in Holy Orders; but that his being either Clerk or Biſhop were omitted. For this Omiſſion the Certificate was challeng'd, but the Court would not allow it.

Secondly, 'Twas argued that the Certificate was thus enter'd upon Record: That 'twas brought into the Court tali Die & Ann' per A. B. Cancellarium dicti Epiſcopi Winton', & non dicit per Mandatum Epiſcopi. The Want of which Clauſe [per Mandatum Epiſcopi] was excepted againſt by Bonner's Council: But the Exception would not paſs, becauſe the Record of it by the Court is not neceſſary.

But the main Streſs of the Matter which was debated in the Chief Juſtice's Chamber by all the Judges, was this: Whether Bonner could give in Evidence, upon the Iſſue of his not being guilty, that Horn was not Biſhop at the Time when he offer'd the Oath? Upon this Queſtion the Judges unanimouſly reſolv'd, that upon Suppoſition of the Truth of the Fact Bonner might give it in Evidence upon that Iſſue: And whether the Fact was ſo or not, was to be tried by the Jury; that is, the Jury was to try whether Horn was a Biſhop or not when he tender'd the Oath to Bonner. This was a nice Point, and the Reader will be apt to imagine, the Jury and Bench too ought to be well furniſh'd with Eccleſiaſtical Learning to pronounce upon the Caſe. (b)

(b) Dyer's Reports, fo. 234.

Before the Cauſe came on, Bonner drew up a Plea againſt Horn's Character, in his own Hand. I ſhall mention ſome of the Heads of his Exceptions.

His Plea.

He pretends Mr. Robert Horn, as he ſtiles him, was no better than an Intruder into the See of Wincheſter: That he was neither elected nor conſecrated purſuant to the Canons of the Catholick Church, nor the Laws and Statutes of this Realm. Againſt the Legality of his Conſecration he cites 25 H. 8. cap. 20. by which Statute, as Bonner underſtands it, he that is to be conſecrated muſt have one Archbiſhop and two Biſhops, or elſe four Biſhops, to perform the Ceremony; which Circumſtance was wanting at Horn's Conſecration.

He likewiſe urg'd, That the Form for conſecrating Archbiſhops and Biſhops, confirm'd in Parliament in the Reign of King Edward, was repeal'd in the firſt Year of Queen Mary, and remain'd in that Condition at Horn's pretended Conſecration.

Farther, he ſets forth, That the Statute 5 Eliz. provides that the Oath ſhall be offer'd in a publick Place, where there ſhall be a convenient Aſſembly to atteſt its being tender'd: But in the Indictment there's no mention made of the Oath's being offer'd before any Aſſembly.

The Defendant complains, That the ſaid Horn made a falſe Certificate into the Queen's-Bench: In which Certificate it is ſuggeſted Bonner peremptorily and obſtinately refuſed to take the ſaid Oath requir'd by the Statutes of Anno primo & Anno quinto Eliz. whereas Bonner gave no ſuch poſitive Refuſal, but only that he was not bound to ſwear the ſaid Oath for reaſonable Cauſes then expreſs'd.

Bonner objects farther, which is the laſt Exception I ſhall mention againſt taking this Oath, That the Defendant can't ſwear with the three neceſſary Requiſites of Truth, Judgment, and Juſtice: Firſt, In caſe he ſhould take the Oath of Supremacy, 'twould be ſwearing that which he believes falſe, and by Conſequence falling foul upon the firſt Qualification of Truth. And Secondly, It cannot be reconciled to the next Circumſtance of Judgment or Diſcretion. And in the Third Place, 'Twould force him to fail in the Point of Juſtice; becauſe by this Virtue we are bound to give God, and every one elſe their Due. (b)

(b) Foxii Mſs. Strype Annal. p. 340.

Some Part of this Argument might poſſibly have embarraſs'd Horn, and puzzled the Cauſe, had not the Suit been kept depending 'till the next Parliament: Then an Act paſs'd, which made a kind of Compromiſe, put the Legality of the Plaintiff's Title more out of Queſtion, and ſcreen'd the Defendant from Proſecution.

Cranmer's Mſs. recovered.

'Twas this Year that Archbiſhop Parker recover'd Cranmer's, his Predeceſſor's Manuſcripts. They were in the Hands of Dr. Nevinſon, Prebendary of Canterbury. Nevinſon denying their being in his Cuſtody, the Archbiſhop procur'd a Letter from the Privy-Council to ſearch Nevinſon's Study, where they were found. They are two Volumes in Folio, collected from the Scriptures, Fathers, Councils, and Schoolmen, and digeſted into common Places. The Deſign of them was to juſtify the Engliſh Reformation, and ſhew how far the modern Church of Rome had deſerted the Primitive Doctrine, and gone off from the Plan of Antiquity. Theſe Volumes were tranſcribed by Parker, and are now lodg'd in the Library of the Lord Biſhop of London. (c)

A Conteſt about the Habit of the Clergy.

The next Year is remarkable for a Conteſt about the Eccleſiaſtical Habit: The ſquare Cap, the Surplice, and the Tippet, would by no Means paſs with ſome of the late Exiles: They made it their Buſineſs to cry down theſe cuſtomary Decencies, and proſelyte the People to their Singularities. Theſe ill ſupported Scruples, this Miſapplication of Zeal, made the Church look ſtrangely ununiform and particolour'd. How much the Clergy were divided in this Point, may be collected from a remonſtrating Paper ſent up to Secretary Cecil. The Particulars are theſe:

An. Dom. 1564.

Service and Prayer.

Different Cuſtoms in officiating.

“Some ſay the Service and Prayers in the Chancel; others in the Body of the Church: Some officiate in a Seat, ſome in the Pulpit with their Faces to the People: Some keep cloſe to the Rubrick; others entertain the People with ſinging Pſalms between the Service: Some read with a Surplice, and others without it.

Table.

“In ſome Places the Communion-Table ſtands in the Body of the Church; in ſome Places it ſtands Altar-wiſe, at a little Diſtance from the Wall; in others in the Middle of the Chancel.

Adminiſtration of the Communion.

“Some adminiſter with a Surplice, and others with none: Some with a Communion-Cup, and others with a common one.

Receiving.

“Some receive kneeling, ſome ſtanding, and others ſitting.

Baptizing.

“Some baptize in a Font, and others in a Baſon: Some ſign with a Croſs, and others omit it: Some adminiſter this Sacrament in a Surplice, and others appear without it.

Apparel.

“ Some of the Clergy wear ſquare Caps, ſome round ones, and ſome Hats: Some appear in the Habit of Scholars, and others without this Diſtinction. (d) Thus far this Paper.

Theſe Diſputes about the Habit, and Uſages of the Church, were manag'd with Heat and Indecency by ſome of the Diſſenters. They were not contented with bare Nonconformity: Some of them took the Liberty to expoſe the Ceremonies, and run out into Raillery and Satyr. This Variety of Judgment and Practice, together with the Indiſcretions of ſome Zealots, broke the People into Parties, created Miſunderſtandings, and weaken'd the Authority of the Government both in Church and State.

The Queen writes to Archbiſhop Parker to preſs Conformity.

To put a Stop to theſe Diſorders, the Queen wrote to the Archbiſhop, requiring him, and the other Biſhops in the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, together with all other Ordinaries, Heads of Colleges, and Perſons of Juriſdiction in Collegiate Churches, to aſſert the Conſtitution of the Church, and manage their Authority with more Vigilance and Vigour. She complains of their Remiſſneſs, and commands them to preſs Conformity, and execute the Laws without any unſeaſonable Connivance: That ſuch Variety of Practice, ſuch Diſagreement in Religion, ſuch Diſregard of the Eſtabliſhment, was productive of very ill Conſequences, diſturb'd the publick Harmony, and diſſerv'd the Government. By a Progreſs in theſe Differences and Diſputes Charity muſt be deſtroy'd, the Bleſſings of Peace and Union loſt, and the Nation made unworthy the divine Protection. In ſhort, ſhe requires the Archbiſhop, and the reſt, to exert themſelves in their Poſts, to make Uſe of their Diſcipline, and recover the People from their Miſtakes: That ſhe was reſolv'd to bring her Subjects to Conformity, not to indulge Peeviſhneſs and Clamour, nor ſuffer any Man's Obſtinacy to ſerve for his Protection: And that in caſe the Biſhops ſhould manage languidly, and fail of Succeſs, ſhe threaten'd to reduce the Diſſenters by ſharper Methods. (e)

Pilkington, Biſhop of Durham, writes to the Earl of Leiceſter in Favour of the Diſſenters, with reſpect to the Habit.

The Diſſenters being apprehenſive of Rigour, applied to their Patrons to ſoften the Queen. By the Way, they had ſeveral great Men, who favour'd their Intereſt both in Church and State. Amongſt the Eccleſiaſticks Pilkington, Biſhop of Durham, wrote to the Earl of Leiceſter, another of their Friends, in their Behalf. This Prelate was one of the Engliſh Refugees, and had brought ſome Calviniſtical Fancies home with him. He ſtuck in the Scruples of the Habit, diſlik'd the Cap and Surplice, though not to that Degree, as to refuſe the wearing them: However, he was by no Means for forcing Compliance upon other People. “ In his Letter to the Earl of Leiceſter, he deſires that Nobleman to conſider that in all Reform'd Countries the Belief and Habit of the Roman Church are diſmiſs'd together: He wonders therefore the Engliſh, who pretend to be the beſt Part of the Reformation, ſhould be fond of the Pope's Equipage, and keep it as a Relick: That there are a great many Miniſters in all Parts of the Kingdom, who will chuſe rather to reſign their Livings and their Function, than appear in the Figure of Popiſh Prieſts, or make uſe of their Ceremonies: That by ſtraining the Point of Conformity, a great many worthy Men would be loſt for Trifles, and many Pariſhes, diſfurniſhed of a Preacher: That the Godly in other Countries would break off their Correſpondence, and be ſtrangely ſhock'd with theſe Rigours. Shall we, continues the Biſhop, be ſmitten with thoſe Things which are accounted ſcandalous by the reſt of the Reformed? God forbid. St. Paul commands Women to dreſs themſelves like Perſons who profeſs Godlineſs. This Rule holds ſtronger in Men, and eſpecially in Preachers: For if Popery is a bad Religion, how can we reconcile the Habit of that Church to the Character of Saints, and a holy Profeſſion? The Apoſtle commands us to abſtain from all Appearance of Evil: But if Popery is evil, and we affect the Figure and Ornaments of it, which Way can we be ſaid to ſtand off from the Appearance of what is ill? And as People of Condition are diſtinguiſh'd in their Clothes from the Vulgar; ſo 'tis neceſſary we ſhould keep this Diſtance from an oppoſite Communion, and neither believe Popery, nor wear it. That in this Caſe we are not to rack our Inventions to apply to nice Diſtinctions, and carry our Liberty to the utmoſt Stretch: We are rather to conſider what are the moſt edifying Expedients; what is moſt likely to maintain Charity, and advance the Purity of Religion: That our Borrowing of the Adverſaries, and ſtanding up ſo ſtiffly for their Cuſtoms, gave them too much Pleaſure, and was Matter of Sport and Triumph: That Siſinius, an Heretick Novatian Biſhop, was the firſt Precedent for white Rochets; and that other Ceremonies were handed down from as uncreditable an Original.

This Biſhop was ſenſible his Practice lay ſomewhat unguarded: That it might be objected the wearing theſe diſputed Habits was either lawful, or not? If they were not, why did Pilkington comply, and ſhew ſo dangerous an Example? If they were lawful, why did he ſolicit the Earl of Leiceſter againſt them? What made him encourage the Diſſenters in their unreaſonable Scruples? Why did he endeavour to diſable the Rubrick, and plead againſt the publick Settlement. To this Dilemma his Anſwer, like the reſt of his Letter, is not very convincing: He replies, “ That though ſome Things may be complied with for a Time for the Sake of Chriſtian Liberty; though this may be done for a Time to open Peoples Underſtandings, to diſentangle their Ignorance, and gain them to a farther Improvement; yet when Things that are indifferent in themſelves are bound upon Practice, and turn'd to Neceſſity, then the Matter has a new Face; the Quality of the Action is chang'd, and the Liberty is loſt. And thus that which had a temporary Permiſſion for recovering the Weak, has now a contrary Effect, and confirms the Perverſe in their Obſtinacy. To make this bear in the Application, he obſerves Saint Paul, though he ſometimes countenanced Circumciſion; yet when 'twas urg'd as a neceſſary Qualification, he refus'd to give Way to it. (f)

(f) Life of Archbiſhop Parker, Append. Num. XXV.

This is the Subſtance of the Biſhop's Letter. By this Diſcourſe his Genius does not ſeem to lie towards Controverſy; his Inclination appears more than his Argument, and his Compaſſion is much ſtronger than his Logick. Whittingham Dean of Durham, wrote to the Earl of Leiceſter upon this Subject. He goes partly upon the ſame Topicks, but then he argues from more Authorities, works the Point with more Heat, and makes the Colours more glowing. This Dean by his Repreſentation ſeems not to have comply'd himſelf in this Circumſtance. “ He pre-

Whittingham, Dean of Durham, writes to this Earl upon the ſame Subject.

"pretends the only Thing which makes the wearing the Habit look warrantable, is the Opinion of its Indifferency. But before we can argue from this Ground, it muſt be prov'd the Thing tends to the Glory of God, the Edification of his Church, the Maintenance of Chriſtian Liberty, and agrees with what is deliver'd in holy Writ. But can God's Glory be promoted by the Equipage of idolatrous Worſhip? What Agreement is there between ſuperſtitious Invention, and the inſpired Writings? What Edification can there be where the Spirit of God is griev'd, Chriſt's Little ones offended, the Faith of the weak Brethren ſhaken, and the Papiſts confirm'd in their Errors? Can this be call'd Chriſtian Liberty which lays a Yoke on the Neck of the Diſciples, Clogs the Conſcience, Menaces the Preachers, lays an embargo upon the Pulpit, leaves the Congregation without their Guides, and ties the Sacraments to an idolatrous Appearance.

He goes on, and cites ſeveral of the Fathers, tho' wide of his Purpoſe. "He obſerves from St. Auſtin, that Faſting on the Sunday was a ſcandalous Cuſtom, eſpecially ſince the Manichees made it a ſtated Day of Abſtinence. (g) He refers the Application of this Teſtimony to the Earl's Judgment: He argues from the Authority of Tertullian, from his Book de Coronâ Militis, where this Father juſtifies the Soldier, who choſe rather to be caſhier'd, and venture the Emperor's Diſpleaſure, than wear a Garland on his Head, and comply with a Pagan Ceremony. Thus the Biſhops in Spain order'd the Perſon baptiz'd ſhould be but once immerg'd to avoid Reſemblance with the Hereticks, who dipp'd thrice. (h) From hence he inferrs, that to imitate the Cuſtoms of an heretical or dangerous Communion, is to approve their falſe Doctrine.

From hence he goes on to anſwer an Objection, "That this Habit had no Affinity with Popery: And that 'twas only kept on for Decency, Order and publick Advantage. This he declaims againſt as a lamentable Expedient. He thinks it impracticable to purge off the Nature of Superſtition, and refine the Uſage by any ſuch Conſideration. And here he falls into Vehemence and coarſe Language, which I ſhall omit. "He argues God Almighty would not allow the Jews to take up the Cuſtoms of their Heathen Neighbours, but commanded them to ſtand off from all Reſemblance, and deſtroy the Appendages of Idolatry and Superſtition. That Reaſons of State and publick Convenience, was Jeroboam's Argument for his Calfes in Dan and Bethel. That if Religion muſt give Way to politick Views, then Images and Candles, Tonſures and Croſſes, Oil and Criſm, Palmes and Beads, and all that Luggage of Superſtition may be reviv'd, and thrown upon us. That what St. Auſtin affirm'd of the Jewiſh Ceremonies is applicable to the Popiſh Veſtments: That whoever wears them either out of Principle, or prudential Conſideration, Antichriſti Mancipium eſt. (i) That neither Tertullian would bath in the Morning of the Saturnalia, becauſe 'twas a Pagan Uſage, nor St. John ſtay in the ſame Houſe with the Heretick Cerinthus, nor the Fathers allow the Chriſtians the Diverſion of the Cirque and Theatre. That St. Ambroſe has ſhewn his diſlike of Richneſs of Habit in a Biſhop; and that Pope Cæleſtine writing to the Biſhops of Gaul, puts them in Mind he was inform'd that ſome of our Saviour's Prieſts were more concern'd for their Dreſs, than their Belief.

And then this Admonition follows: "That the Clergy ought to be diſtinguiſh'd from the Laity more by their Learning than their Habit, and ſhould rather ſtrive to mark their Character by their Piety, than their Equipage.

He returns to the Old Teſtament, and urges, "That when Hezekiah, Joſiah, and other Princes of famous Memory, reform'd Religion, they did not oblige the Miniſters of God to wear the Habit of Baal's Prieſts. On the contrary, Hezekiah order'd the Remains of Idolatry to be thrown into the Brook Kidron, Joſiah burn'd all the Decorations and Veſtments for Baal's Service; and Jehu commanded the Prieſts of that Idol to put on their Habits for Execution.

And thus by Miſapplication, and not diſtinguiſhing between Heathens and Chriſtians, he falls into very uncharitable Miſtakes, and makes his reaſoning Barbarous and Sanguinary. However, the Application being well receiv'd by the Earl of Leiceſter, was not without its Effect. (k) For now the Queen ſeem'd not unwilling to relax in the Diſcipline of the Church, and come towards an Indulgence for the Diſſenters. But the Biſhops receiving no countermand to their former Directions, drew up ſeveral Articles, entitled Advertiſements. They were firſt ſtiled Ordinances, accorded by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, &c. in his Province. But the Queen's Zeal growing cool, and refuſing to inforce the Book with the Authority of the Privy Council; for this Reaſon, I ſay, 'tis probable the Title was alter'd from Ordinances to Advertiſements.

Advertiſements for Conformity in Habits, &c. Anno Dom. 1564.

In theſe Advertiſements, amongſt other Things, 'tis enjoin'd that all Archbiſhops and Biſhops ſhould appear in the cuſtomary Habit; that all Deans, Archdeacons, Maſters of Colleges, Dignitaries in Cathedral Churches, Doctors, Batchelors of Divinity and Law, ſhould wear, (when they went abroad,) a Side Gown with Sleeves, ſtreight at the Hand, without any Cutts or falling Cape: And that they ſhould wear Tippets of Sarſenet, as 'twas lawful for them by Act of Parliament, 24 H. 8. That all Doctors of Phyſick or any other Faculty having any Living Eccleſiaſtical, or any others that may diſpend by the Church an hundred Mark ſo to be eſteem'd by the Fruits or Tenths of their Promotions, and all Prebendaries whoſe Promotions are valued at 20 Pounds or upwards, wear the ſame Apparel. That they and all Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, or others having any Eccleſiaſtical Living, do wear the Cap appointed by the Injunctions, and not Hats, excepting on Journeys. That in their Journeys they wear Cloaks with Sleeves. That all inferior Eccleſiaſtical Perſons ſhall wear Gowns and Caps of the ſame Faſhion: And that all Eccleſiaſtical Perſons who give over the Exerciſe of their Function, and refuſe to take the Oath of Obedience to the Queen, ſhall not be allow'd to diſtinguiſh themſelves in the Habit abovementioned, but appear like Lay-men. (l)

There are other Regulations for the Pulpit, touching the Habit in which the Clergy were to officiate; and how often the Holy Euchariſt was to be adminiſtred in Cathedrals and Colleges. "Such Societies were to Receive upon the Firſt or Second Sunday of every Month at leaſt: That in the Adminiſtration of the Holy Euchariſt, the chief Perſon that Officiates in Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, ſhall wear a Cope; and that thoſe who read the Goſpel and the Epiſtle ſhall appear in the ſame Habit: But at the reſt of the Service read at "the

That all Communicants receive Kneeling: That when any Sick Perſon is ready to expire, the Bell ſhould be knell'd, and the Curate ſent for to give his Aſſiſtance: That in Rogation Days of Proceſſion, Two Pſalms, beginning Benedic Anima mea, &c. ſhould be ſung or ſaid in Engliſh. A Proteſtation.

That theſe Advertiſements might paſs with a better Regard, there's a Preface prefix'd to them. And here the Queen's Letter directed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and other Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, is mention'd. And to prevent the Return of different Uſages, and the Diſorders conſequent upon it, there's a Proteſtation to be taken by all Parſons, Vicars, and Curates, annex'd. By this Engagement they promiſe, "That they would only read what was appointed by publick Authority, and neither preach nor expound without the Biſhop's ſpecial Licence under his Seal: That they would read the Service plainly, diſtinctly, and audibly: That they would keep the Regiſter purſuant to her Majeſty's Injunctions: That they would conform in their Habit to the Order appointed, and eſpecially when they officiated. That they would exhort their Pariſhioners to good Correſpondence, and do their Utmoſt to put an end to the Miſunderſtandings between them. That they would at leaſt read one Chapter of the Old, and another of the New Teſtament every Day. That they would execute their Office in Perſon, maintain Uniformity, and keep Cloſe to the eſtabliſh'd Rites and Ceremonies of the Church: And laſtly, That they would not employ themſelves in any mechanick Buſineſs, provided their Living amounted to the annual Revenue of 20 Nobles."

Theſe Advertiſements were agreed and ſubſcrib'd by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhops of London, Ely, Rocheſter, Wincheſter, and Lincoln, Commiſſioners in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical.

The Queen impower'd by Act of Parliament to appoint new Ceremonies.

The Queen, as was obſerv'd, refus'd to confirm theſe Advertiſements, tho' drawn at her Direction: Her Majeſty's Ratification would have given them a conſiderable Strength from the Statute of Uniformity: By which 'tis provided, That in Caſe of Contempt of the Ceremonies or Rites of the Church, by Miſuſing the Order appointed in the Book of Common-Prayer, the Queen's Majeſty may by the Advice of the Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, or the Metropolitan, ordain and publiſh ſuch farther Ceremonies and Rites as may be moſt for the Advancement of God's Glory, the Edifying his Church, and the due Reverence of Chriſt's holy Myſteries and Sacraments. (m)

The Advertiſements were check'd at preſent by the Interpoſing of the Earl of Leiceſter, of Knolles, and ſome other Court Patrons of the Diſſenters: However, afterwards they recover'd their Firſt Title of Ordinances, and were given in Charge at a metropolitical Viſitation in the Year 1576. (o) See Records Num. LXXXIII.

To return; the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners not being countenanc'd by the Court, met with great Difficulties. The Diſſenters having ſome of the Favourites in their Intereſt, refus'd to pay that Submiſſion, which might have been expected; the Archbiſhop, who was prompted to publiſh the Advertiſements by Secretary Cecil, complains to this Miniſter of the Diſcouragements the Biſhops lay under: And that it had been much better to have attempted nothing, than to be thus underfurniſh'd to carry the Point. That the Diſſenters were rather provok'd, than reform'd by a weak Proviſion. That now they run off to farther Diſtances, and their Scruples encreas'd upon them. However, himſelf, and the reſt of the Commiſſioners, were reſolv'd to exert their Authority, and do their own Part. To this Purpoſe, Thomas Sampſon, Dean of Chriſt-Church, and Lawrence Humphrey, Preſident of Magdalen College in Oxford, were ſummon'd to appear before them. Theſe Men were Exiles in the late Reign, and Perſons of Character and Learning, but ſcrupled wearing the Habit. The Archbiſhop endeavour'd to diſentangle their Conſcience, and amongſt other Things, preſs'd them with the Authorities of Bucer and Peter Martyr. But their Prejudices were ſtrong, and no Arguments could reach them. They deſir'd Leave to return to Oxford, but being denied, and not meeting with all the Favour they expected, they drew up a Petition in Latin to the Archbiſhop, and the reſt of the Commiſſioners. In this Addreſs they ſet forth the Reaſons of their Non-Compliance, and plead their Cauſe at Length. And tho' their Topicks are much the ſame with thoſe already related, yet conſidering the Men are particularly diſtinguiſh'd for their Abilities, and were look'd on as the Principals of their Party, it may not be improper to give the Reader their Letter in the Language 'twas penn'd. (o) And to finiſh this Subject, I ſhall ſubjoin a Paper written this Year, in which are Six Reaſons alledg'd againſt wearing the ſacerdotal Habit. I ſhall mention them as they ſtand, together with the Subſtance of Gueſt's Biſhop of Rocheſter's Anſwer.

Firſt, 'Tis argued that Cloaths ought to be worn, as Meat ought to be eaten. But according to St. Paul, Meat offer'd to Idols ought not to be eaten. Therefore Prieſts Apparel, which has been ſuperſtitiouſly us'd, ought not to be worn.

Reaſons againſt wearing the Prieſt's Habit.

The Biſhop of Rocheſter's Anſwer to the Firſt Reaſon.

1 Cor. 10.

To this the Biſhop of Rocheſter replies, That the making new Habits is ſufficient to diſable this Objection. For if they have never been worn, they can't be ſaid to have any of this pretended Infection about them. If 'tis alledg'd theſe Diſtinctions in Cloaths are of the ſame Kind and Figure with thoſe which have been worn out of ſuperſtitious Motives: To this it may be return'd, that this Argument proves too much, and leads to the ſame Abſurdity as this which follows. Meat not offer'd to Idols, is of the ſame Kind with that which is offer'd to Idols; the Concluſion is therefore, we muſt eat no Meat at all: And thus by this ſtrait-lac'd Principle, we bring our ſelves to a Pythagorean Abſtinence. Beſides, the Apoſtle is miſreported in this Argument. For he does not abſolutely forbid eating Things thus groſly miſapplied. He tells us expreſly that he that eats it only as a Bleſſing of Providence, is diſcharg'd from Blame. That the Chriſtians of thoſe Times were not to deny themſelves this Liberty upon the Score of their own Conſcience; but for the Sake of their weak Brethren. Of their weak Brethren who might be diſturb'd, or miſled by ſuch Practice. Who might think the Eating what was offer'd in Sacrifice, imply'd the Lawfulneſs of Pagan Worſhip; and by this Means be encourag'd to Idolatry. And if this was not their Inference, they might conclude the Perſon who took this Freedom, went too far: Now this Cenſure muſt of Conſequence alienate Affection, and draw to different Communions.

munions. The ſame Apoſtle writes thus to the Coloſſians, Let no Man judge you in Meat or Drink, or in Reſpect of a Holiday: And yet the Obſervation of theſe Jewiſh Ceremonies, upon the Perſwaſion of their being Neceſſary, was unwarrantable Practice: From hence the Biſhop infers, That no Man ought to cenſure the Engliſh Clergy for wearing the ſacerdotal Habit, notwithſtanding it had been worn upon Motives of Superſtition.

1 Cor. 8.

'Tis objected farther, That St. Paul forbids eating Meat offer'd to Idols where this Liberty can't be taken without Offending our Brethren. And from hence the Preciſians conclude the Unlawfulneſs of Wearing the Prieſts Habit, becauſe this can't be done without giving Scandal.

To this the Biſhop anſwers, 1ſt. That by this Argument it follows, That where no Offence is given, which is the Caſe of many Places, the Habit may be worn without any Enquiry touching the Superſtition which may formerly have hung about it.

Rom. 14.

Secondly, St. Paul terms thoſe who were offended with the eating Meat offer'd to Idols, Weak in Faith: That is their Informations touching the Privilege of their Religion were ſhort, and their Notion of the Goſpel-Liberty too narrow. The ſame Cenſure may be paſs'd upon thoſe who condemn the Habit. And therefore being under theſe imperfect Attainments, they ought not to preſcribe: Inſtead of pronouncing upon the Point, they ought to ſubmit to Inſtruction, and get their Underſtanding farther improv'd.

Thirdly, Thoſe that are weak in Faith, tho' they may be born with for a Time, tho' they ought to have Leiſure for full Inſtruction, yet if theſe Opportunities are loſt upon them; if they hang about their Errors, and refuſe to part with their old Opinion: In this Caſe weakneſs can be no longer their Excuſe. Now, 'tis plain there's Affectation and Pride, and Obſtinacy at the Bottom. This, ſays the Biſhop, is the Caſe of the Diſſenters: They have been conniv'd at a long Time, and indulg'd almoſt Six Years to diſentangle their Scruples. If they ſtill continue to take Check, we are to regard their Diſlike, no more than our Saviour did that of the Phariſees.

S. Mat. 15. v. 2.

The Diſſenters Second Reaſon goes much upon the former, againſt giving Offence: But becauſe the Anſwer is ſomewhat different, I ſhall touch upon it.

The 2d Reaſon anſwer'd.

The Biſhop replies, 'tis well known to the whole Kingdom both Proteſtants and Roman Catholicks, that the Habit is not worn upon the Score of Neceſſity: And that 'tis only Decency, Order, and Obedience to Authority, which governs the Practice. From hence it follows the ſcrupling Party are only to blame; and that the Scandal is taken, not given. Theſe Men by pronouncing ſuch Circumſtantials unlawful, condemn the reſt of the Proteſtants, who either wear theſe ſacerdotal Diſtinctions, or at leaſt allow them. Thus theſe Diſſenters by their weak Exceptions bring an Imputation of Diſagreement upon the Reformation: As if the Proteſtants differ'd in Matters of Subſtance and Moment. Thus Truth is miſreported, the Majeſty of Religion ſuffers, and the Progreſs of the Reformation is diſſerv'd. From hence the Biſhop turns their own Argument upon them. Miniſters muſt wear no Apparel that gives Offence to others; but their appearing in a Habit different from that of Prieſts, offends others; therefore they muſt appear in no other than the ſacerdotal Habit.

An Anſwer to the 3d Reaſon.

Their 3d Reaſon ſtands thus: Durand, Rabanus Maurus, and other Ritualiſts, inform us, That the Veſtments of Prieſts have many ſuperſtitious Significations: That they are, as it were, conſecrated by Ceremonies appointed for that Purpoſe. That theſe Things are reckn'd Neceſſary, and that the Clergy can't officiate to the beſt Advantage without them. This Objection the Biſhop anſwers upon the Ground above-mention'd, and therefore I ſhall paſs it over.

1 Theſ. 5.

Their 4th Reaſon urges, That the Apoſtle commands us to abſtain from all Appearance of Evil: But to go habited like a Popiſh-Prieſt, carries an Appearance of Evil: Therefore,

The 4th Reaſon anſwer'd.

The Biſhop denies that any Sort of Cloaths has an Appearance of Evil. He gives an Inſtance to the preſent Caſe, and obſerves that Lawyers wear Tippets and Gowns like Popiſh Prieſts, and yet no Body Cenſures them for this Faſhion, or reckons them Papiſts. If 'tis ſaid that the ſacerdotal Habit has an Appearance of Evil becauſe 'tis a diſcriminating Mark, and diſtinguiſhes a Prieſt from another Perſon. To this the Biſhop anſwers, That ſuch Circumſtances of Diſtinction have no ill Face. On the other Hand, ſince the Function of a Prieſt is different from that of the Laity, 'tis reaſonable his Character ſhould be mark'd, and his Commiſſion made legible, by ſome outward and obvious Diſtinction. If 'tis objected the Prieſt's Habit was invented to point out a Perſon ordain'd for the Support of ſuperſtitious Worſhip: To this 'tis anſwer'd, That the Prieſts of the Church of England ſerve for no ſuch Purpoſe, therefore the Conſequence won't hold.

The Biſhop's Reply to the 5th Reaſon.

Fifthly, That Things indifferent when commanded, change their Nature and become Neceſſary, and therefore are not to be us'd. Therefore ſince the Prieſt's Habit is commanded, the Liberty of wearing it is altogether loſt.

To this the Biſhop anſwers Firſt, That if the Indifferency of the Habit is deſtroy'd, and becomes Neceſſary by being commanded, he would gladly know why the Diſſenters make the Caſe neceſſary, abſtracting from ſuch a Command. For by refuſing to uſe it, declaiming againſt the Lawfulneſs of it, and bringing Conſcience into the Queſtion, they make the Refuſal no leſs than Neceſſary. Farther, if we are not to comply with indifferent Things when injoin'd by Authority, becauſe their being commanded makes the Practice neceſſary, then we are not to Obey the Laws of the Civil Magiſtrate, becauſe the Matter of theſe conſiſts of Things indifferent. For as to Things of a moral and unchangeable Nature, the Lines are already chalk'd out, and our Duty fix'd prior to any humane Legiſlature. The Being and Bounds of Virtue and Vice, are ſettled by natural Religion, and the Holy Scriptures: From hence it follows, the Civil Magiſtrate's Authority lies wholly within the Compaſs of Indifferency. If therefore the bare Command of Superiors Changes the Quality of the Thing, and makes that ſinful which was lawful before; if the Caſe ſtands thus, the Authority of Princes is lamentably diſabled, and they have no Power to form Regulations upon general Principles, nor provide for the Exigencies of Government. This, beſides other Abſurdities, is a direct Contradiction to the Apoſtle's Command, who bids us be Subject to the higher Powers, not only for Wrath, but for Conſcience ſake. The Biſhop preſſes the Objection farther, and replies, That if we are not allow'd to comply with Things indifferent when commanded, becauſe the Command makes them Neceſſary, then then Obedience to the Apoſtle's Command muſt be impracticable. To the Apoſtle's Command where he charges the Romans neither to eat controverted Meat, nor break a Jewiſh Holiday, provided ſuch Liberty ſhould give Offence to our weak Brethren. For by the Apoſtle's Commanding the Keeping a Jewiſh Holiday, and forbearing ſome Meats, that which was indifferent before, was made Neceſſary in the Caſe of giving Offence; and therefore by the Diſſenters Reaſoning ought not to have been comply'd with. But whether this will hold, ad Hominem, or not, I ſhall leave with the Reader.

Laſtly, The Biſhop obſerves there is a double Senſe in the Term Neceſſary; Things may come under this Denomination for moral Reſpects, or ſome neceſſary Relation to divine Worſhip: And thus Things are ſaid to be Neceſſary, becauſe they are appointed by Revelation, or contain'd within the Precepts of natural Religion. Other Things are neceſſary only on the Score of political Order, and humane Appointment: Now the Habit conteſted comes under this laſt Diviſion. (o)

(o) Life of Archbiſhop Parker, Appendix Num. XXXI.

The Diſſenters Sixth Reaſon being too ſlender to be mention'd, I ſhall proceed to the Biſhop's Reſolution of the Caſe, who after having examin'd the Objections, and debated the Queſtion, ſubſcrib'd the Lawfulneſs in theſe Terms.

Miniſtri in Eccleſiâ Anglicanâ, in quâ Dei Beneficio pura Chriſti Doctrina, & fidei Evangelicæ Prædicatio jam viget, quæque Manifeſtum Deteſtationem Antichriſtianiſmi publicè profitetur, ſine Impietate uti poſſunt Veſtium Diſcrimine publica Authoritate jam preſcripto, tum in Adminiſtratione ſacra, tum in uſu externo modo omnis Cultus, & Neceſſitatis Opinio amoveatur.

A Reſolution ſubſcrib'd by the Biſhops and other Divines.

This Determination was ſubſcrib'd by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter and Ely, by Dr. Robinſon Chaplain to Parker, and afterwards Biſhop of Bangor; by Bickley another of the Archbiſhop's Chaplains, afterwards Biſhop of Chicheſter, and one Hill. Two other Divines who ſeem willing to conceal their Names under the Letters N. N. ſubſcrib'd with this qualifying Clauſe; Modo omnis Cultus Opinio & Neceſſitas amoveatur, eorumque quibus perſuaſum non eſt, Ratio, juxta Charitatis Regulam à Divo Paulo preſcriptam, habeatur.

Nowel's Exceptions.

Nowel, Dean of St. Paul's, went farther towards the Diſſenters: He granted the Lawfulneſs of the Habit, but mov'd againſt the wearing it, for Fear it might open a Way to farther Abuſes. His Second Reaſon was for a ſtronger Declaration againſt Superſtition. Thirdly, That the Liberty of the Chriſtian Religon might be more fully aſſerted; And Fourthly, To put an End to the Diſputes with their Brethren. The relaxing Part of his Opinion begins with theſe Words, Optamus tamen hoc Veſtium Diſcrimen propter has cauſas tolli; and then his Four Reaſons already related, follow: In ſhort, he refus'd to ſubſcribe, unleſs his Opinion might ſtand at Length without Alteration.

Humphrey's and Sampſon's equivocating Subſcription.

Humphreys and Sampſon ſubſcrib'd the Biſhop's Determination, but in an equivocating, or rather diſſenting Manner. They ſeem to allow the Lawfulneſs of wearing the Habit: But then believing it wanted the Recommendation of Expediency, they declin'd uſing it. Their Subſcription ſtands thus,

Omnia mihi licent, ſed non omnia Expediunt. Omnia mihi licent, ſed non omnia Edificant. (p)

(p) Life of Archbiſhop Parker, pag. 173.

October the Second, the Funeral of Ferdinand the Second, Emperor of Germany, was celebrated with great Solemnity in St. Paul's, London. The Marqueſs of Wincheſter was chief Mourner, and repreſented the Queen: The Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of London, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, the Dean of St. Paul's, together with the whole Chapter, made Part of the Appearance. Beſides theſe, there was a conſiderable Number of Quality belonging to the Court.

The Sermon was preach'd by Grindal Biſhop of London. In his Diſcourſe he touch'd firſt upon this Prince's Royal Anceſtors, and the Luſtre of his Genealogy. "He mentions his Advances from Archduke of Auſtria, to King of Bohemia and the Romans; from thence to the Crown of Hungary; and at laſt to the German Empire: From hence he proceeds to commend him for his Abilities and moral Qualifications. He repreſents him as a Lover of Juſtice and Truth, that he was remarkable for Clemency, Temper and Condeſcenſion: That he was well ſkill'd in Latin, and moſt other Languages of Chriſtendom: That he was particularly eminent for Three Virtues; Firſt for his martial Fortitude, and ſupporting the War againſt the Ottoman Infidels, thoſe ſworn Enemies of the Chriſtian Name. Secondly, For his peaceable Diſpoſition towards the Princes of Chriſtendom. 'Twas not his Method to project the Enlarging his Empire with the Effuſion of Chriſtian Blood. He brought no Armies into the Field, nor embroil'd the Empire upon Pretence of Religion: He made it his endeavour to keep a good Underſtanding amongſt the Princes of the Empire, and ſettled the publick Repoſe. And thus he left Germany in a better Condition both for Men and Money, than it had been for 100 Years before. Thirdly, He dilates upon the Sobriety of his private Life, and his Keeping true to the Engagements of Marriage. And for this he declares God had bleſs'd him with a numerous and promiſing Iſſue. At laſt, he commends him for Moderation of Principle, and being far from a Bigot to the Court of Rome. He takes Notice, this Emperor promis'd the Electors never to be crown'd by the Pope: That he made his Word good, and reign'd all along with this Liberty: That his Ambaſſador made a Speech in the Council of Trent, for granting the Laity the Communion under both Kinds. And to conclude, the Biſhop added, that in Auguſt laſt paſt, he ſaw a Letter from a good Hand, that this Emperor Ferdinand, not long before his Death, gave all the Subjects of his Hereditary Dominions, the Liberty of Receiving the Cup. *

From this honourable Character of a Roman Catholick Emperor, and from the Part manag'd by him in this Solemnity, 'tis plain Grindal was no Preciſian, no Proteſtant of Knox's Complexion.

To go back a little and ſay ſomething of Scotland.

The Queen of Scots had now reſolv'd to marry the Lord Darnly, Son to the Earl of Lenox. This young Noble-man was recommended from ſeveral Regards. He was of the Royal Blood, and ſtood next the Queen on the Line. This, beſide the Advantage of his Perſon, and Temper, was look'd on as a Conſideration of Weight: For if he ſhould happen to match into one of the greateſt Families of England, 'twas to be fear'd the Queen of Scotts's Succeſſion to that Kingdom might might be ſomewhat embarraſs'd. Beſides, Her marrying the Lord Darnly, born in England, would be a Compliance with Queen Elizabeth's Motion, who adviſ'd her to marry ſome Engliſhman. That a Buſineſs of this Nature might be concluded with general Satisfaction, a Convention was ſummon'd to Sterling. The Majority of the Eſtates voted for the Marriage without making any Exception to the Queen's Choice. None made any Oppoſition, excepting Andrew, Lord Ochiltrey, who took the Freedom to proteſt he would never Conſent to admit a King of the Popiſh Religion.

The Aſſent of the Eſtates being publiſh'd, the Duke of Chatelerault, the Earl of Murray, and Three other Noble-men of the ſame Quality, form'd an Aſſociation to prevent the Marriage, pretending danger and publick Inconvenience might follow upon it. The Burghers of Edinborough broke out in a Mutiny, and ran to Arms. The Queen proclaim'd the chief Incendiaries Rebels. But afterwards reſtor'd their Effects, and gave them her Pardon. (q)

An Aſſembly at Edinborough, An. 1564.

At this Time there was an Aſſembly of the Church at Edinborough. Secretary Lethington open'd the Meeting with a Speech. He told them the Liberty of Conſcience they enjoy'd ought to be reckn'd a great Bleſſing, and that the Queen's Allowing them their Religion, tho' different from her own, was a Proof of a gracious Adminiſtration. That this Favour call'd for a Return, and that the Miniſters, eſpecially, were oblig'd to promote her Majeſty's Intereſt, and recommend themſelves to her good Opinion. And laſtly, that their Diſagreeing in the Form of Prayer for her Majeſty, was a Thing of ill Conſequence. He deſir'd them all to be very careful and inoffenſive upon theſe Heads, and particularly John Knox was requeſted to ſoften his Prayer for the Queen, and make his Doctrine touching Obedience to Sovereigns more Unexceptionable: As for his Prayer 'twas extremely ſhocking and coarſe. To give the Reader a little of it.

O Lord, if thy good Pleaſure be, purge the Heart of the Queen's Majeſty from the Venom of Idolatry, and deliver her from the Bondage and Thraldom of Satan, into the which ſhe has been brought up, and yet remains for the Lack of true Doctrine.—— And that this Realm may alſo eſcape that Plague and Vengeance which inevitably follows Idolatry.

Knox's lame Defence of his Prayer and Doctrine.

Knox maintaining his Practice and Opinion, Lethington argues with him upon this Subject. Knox juſtifies his coarſe Uſage of the Queen, by reſembling Freedoms taken by the Prophets in the Old Teſtament. Now unleſs Knox was a Prophet, he had no Privilege for that Liberty, by his own Reaſoning. If he was a Prophet, he ought to prove his Miſſion by Prediction and Miracles. But this was a Teſt, I preſume, he had not Aſſurance enough to be tried by. (r)

Knox's Three treaſonable Aſſertions.

After Knox had argued with Lethington to a conſiderable Length, and endeavour'd to prove from ſeveral Inſtances in the Old Teſtament, that Princes may be treated with the laſt Degree of Freedom upon Occaſion; and more than that, call'd to an Account and puniſh'd for Male-Adminiſtration; after he had miſconſtrued and miſapplied ſeveral Texts, he concludes with the utmoſt Aſſurance, that he had made good theſe Five Things, which I ſhall ſet down in his own Words. 1ſt. That Subjects have deliver'd an Innocent from the Hands of their King, and therefore (or in doing ſo) offended not God. 2dly. That Subjects have refus'd to ſtrike Innocents when the King commanded, and in ſo doing, denied no juſt Obedience. 3dly. That ſuch as ſtruck at the Commandment of the King, were reputed Murtherers. 4thly. That God has not only of a Subject made a King, but alſo he arm'd Subjects againſt their natural King, and commanded them to take Vengeance upon him according to his Law. 5thly. And laſtly, That God's People have executed God's Law againſt their King, having no farther Regard to him in that Behalf than if he had been the moſt ſimple Subject in the Realm. To which he adds, That God's People not only may take the Liberty of ſuch Executions, but they are bound to it, where the ſame Crimes are committed, and when God has given them the ſame Power. The Second and Third of Knox's Propoſitions may hold in ſome Caſes, but the other Three are ſcandalous and ſubverſive of all Government.

After Knox had deliver'd himſelf in this extraordinary Manner, Mr. John Dowglaſs, Rector of St. Andrews, being requir'd to declare his Opinion, referr'd himſelf to the Superintendent of Fyfe, as being of the ſame Sentiment. They both agreed, That in Caſe the Queen oppos'd the Reformation, the Nobility and Eſtates might lawfully reſiſt her; but as to her Religion, tho' they knew there was Idolatry in it, yet whether her Highneſs might be barr'd the Exerciſe of it by Force, was farther than they could affirm at preſent. Some of the Nobility concurr'd with this Suſpenſion of Judgment. But others were bolder in their Reſolution, and declar'd without Heſitancy or Reſerve, that the Maſs ought to be every where ſuppreſs'd, and that to deny the Queen the Liberty of ſuch Devotions, was no more Injury to her Majeſty, than if they ſhould ſnatch a Glaſs of Poiſon from her, againſt her Will. When Maſter John Craig, a Preacher at Edinborough, was call'd upon to give his Judgment, he premis'd a Proteſtation, that nothing deliver'd ſhould affect the Freedom of the General Aſſembly: After this he made a Report of a Determination in the Univerſity of Bononia, upon a ſolemn Occaſion: 'Twas made at a general Chapter of the Black-fryers in the Year 1554, Craig being then preſent. The Propoſition maintain'd and determin'd for, was this; All Rulers, be they Supreme or Inferior, may and ought to be reform'd, or bridled (to ſpeak moderately) by them by whom they are choſen, confirm'd, or admitted to their Office, ſo oft as they break that Promiſe made by Oath to their Subjects; becauſe that the Prince is no leſs bound by Oath to the Subjects, than are the Subjects to the Prince. And therefore it ought to be kept and reform'd equally according to Law and Condition of the Oath that is made of either Party. (s) And here to make the Application ſerviceable, Knox and his Brethren muſt take it for granted, that the Kingdom of Scotland is elective, and that in the Coronation-Oath there's a plain Clauſe for Reſiſtance in Caſe of Male-Adminiſtration.

A Determination at Bononia.

To proceed to the Aſſembly, who by their Commiſſioners addreſs'd the Queen with the following Petitions.

The Aſſembly's Petition to the Queen.

Firſt, That the Maſs with all the Appurtenances of Popiſh Idolatry, ſhould be ſuppreſs'd thro' the whole Kingdom: That the Queen's Perſon and Family ſhould be included in this Reformation, and that Offenders upon Conviction, ſhould be puniſh'd according to Law.

Secondly, That the true Religion ſhould be profeſs'd by the Queen as well as by the Subject: And that People of all Ranks ſhould be oblig'd to come to Church upon Sundays at leaſt, to join in the Prayers, and hear Sermons.

Thirdly, That a ſettled Proviſion ſhould be made for a competent and independent Maintenance of the Miniſtry; and that vacant Benefices ſhould be diſpos'd of to qualified Perſons, that is, to ſuch as have paſs'd the Teſt of the Superintendent.

(q) Spotſwood.

(r) Hiſtory of the Reformation of Scotland, pag. 382. & deinc.

(s) Id. p. 397. & deinc.

Fourthly, That no Biſhoprick, Abbey, Priory, Deanery, or other Benefice having more Churches than one annex'd, ſhould be beſtow'd for the future on any ſingle Perſon; but that the Plurality of the Foundation being diſincorporated and diſſolv'd, the Incumbents might equal the Number of the Pariſhes. And that Glebes and Manſes, or Parſonage-Houſes, might be aſſign'd for the Miniſters, and for repairing the Churches: And that an Act of Parliament might be made for that Purpoſe.

Fifthly, That none ſhould be permitted to teach in publick Schools, to be Heads of Colleges and Univerſities, or to have the Care of the Education of young Children in private Houſes, 'till they had been tried and paſs'd by the Superintendents.

Sixthly, That all Lands founded for Hoſpitality ſhould be reſtor'd, and applied to the Benefit of the Poor: And that the Lands, Rent-Charges, and other Revenues, formerly belonging to the Monks of what Order ſoever, and likewiſe the Annuities, Obits, and other Perquiſites, ſettled upon Prieſts, ſhould be employ'd to the ſame Uſes, and for the Support and Encouragement of Schoolers within their Situation.

Seventhly, That Idolatry, Blaſphemy, Witchcraft, Adultery, Murder, Theft, Oppreſſion, &c. may be ſeverely puniſh'd.

Eighthly, That ſome Remedy may be thought on for the Eaſe of poor Husbandmen.

Her Majeſty's Anſwer.

To theſe Petitions the Queen return'd them an Anſwer in Writing: "Firſt, As to the pulling down Maſs with reſpect to her own Perſon and Family, ſhe told them ſhe was not at all convinc'd there was any Impiety in that Service: And ſhe hop'd her Subjects would not ſollicit her to act againſt her Conſcience. And to deal plainly with them, ſhe was reſolv'd not to quit the Religion in which ſhe was bred, being well aſſur'd 'twas founded on the Word of God. And that as 'twas her Duty, ſo 'twas no leſs her Intereſt to keep firm to her preſent Belief: That by throwing up her Religion, the King of France, and other great Princes and Confederates, would break with her; and that no new Alliance could come up to an Equivalent. She therefore deſir'd her loving Subjects to recollect her Indulgence, and treat her at leaſt upon the Level; and that as ſhe had always reſign'd her People to their own Perſwaſion, that as ſhe never intends to force any Body's Conſcience, ſo they would not grudge their Sovereign the ſame Privilege, nor preſs her to any Thing ſhe could not underſtand.

"As for the Eſtabliſhment of their Religion amongſt the Subjects, ſhe told them that could only be effected by the Conſent of the three Eſtates in Parliament; and that when the Parliament met, ſhe ſhould be ready to ſign the Bills, and concur with the Reſolutions of the Houſe. And in the mean Time, they might be aſſur'd no Body ſhould be diſturb'd for their Conſcience, or diſtreſs'd in their Fortunes.

To the Third and Fourth Articles 'twas anſwer'd, Her Majeſty did not think it reaſonable to quit ſo conſiderable a Branch of the Patrimony of the Crown, as the Patronage of Benefices: That the Exigencies of Government requir'd that a great Part of the Revenues of ſpiritual Promotions ſhould remain in her Hands. However, when her own neceſſary Occaſions were anſwer'd, ſhe was willing a competent Aſſignment ſhould be made to the Miniſters, and that upon ſuch Places and Revenues as might be moſt commodious for them.

Spotſwood's Hiſt. p. 190. MS Acts of the Aſſembly. An. Dom. 1564.

As to the Proviſion ſuggeſted for the Poor, ſhe promis'd to be as kind to them as could be reaſonably expected.

For the reſt of the Articles, ſhe engag'd to comply with the Meaſures agreed in Parliament.

July. The Queen marries the Lord Darnly.

The Queen being related to the Lord Darnly within the prohibited Degrees, ſent to Rome for a Diſpenſation. When ſhe receiv'd this Inſtrument, ſhe was ſolemnly married in the Chappel of Holyrood-Houſe, the Dean of Reſthalrig performing the Ceremony. The next Day the Lord Darnly was proclaimed King by ſound of Trumpet, and join'd with her Majeſty in the Government.

The diſcontented Lords declar'd againſt the Marriage, but found no Account in their Remonſtrance. The King, to ingratiate himſelf with the People, to unmask the Faction, and take off the Objection of a Counter-Religion, went to St. Giles's Church in Edinborough, and heard a Sermon. John Knox, whether out of Diſtruſt of his Majeſty's Sincerity, or Friendſhip to the Faction, is uncertain; whatever his Motive was, he fell upon the King with his uſual Warmth and Coarſeneſs. For this he was cited before the Queen and Council, where he juſtified his Miſbehaviour, and ventur'd to ſay over and above, That as the King for her Pleaſure had gone to Maſs, and diſhonour'd the Lord God, ſo ſhould he in his Juſtice make her the Inſtrument of his Ruin. But upon what Grounds Knox could affirm the King went to Maſs for the Queen's Pleaſure, is hard to conjecture, ſince he was bred in the Communion of the Church of Rome, and had all along profeſs'd that Religion. The Queen was much diſturb'd with this raſh unmannerly Anſwer. And Knox, to bring him to better Temper and Decency, was ſilenc'd for ſome Months by the Council.

Knox's Miſbehaviour.

The Aſſembly's Reply to her Majeſty's Anſwer.

The General Aſſembly, now conven'd again at Edinborough, receiving the Queen's Anſwer to their Addreſs, replied to this Effect. After a Commendation of the Reformed Doctrine, they take the Liberty to tell her Majeſty that Turciſm ſtood upon as good a Bottom as Popery, and Judaiſm upon a better: That Antiquity, Countenance of Princes, Number of Proſelytes, or any other Pretences, made uſe of to recommend the Communion of the Church of Rome, might with equal Advantage be urg'd by Jews and Mahometans: Wherefore they require her, in the Name of the Eternal God, to make uſe of the ordinary Means for better Information; ſuch as frequenting their Sermons, and Conferences with Learned Men. And here they offer to diſpute with their Adverſaries when and where her Majeſty ſhall appoint them.

Touching the Queen's Anſwer to the Article for maintaining the Miniſtry, they declare 'twas never their Intention that her Majeſty, or any other Patron, ſhould ſuffer in their Right. They only deſir'd, that upon the Avoidance of any Benefice, a qualified Perſon ſhould be preſented to the Superintendent, in order to be examin'd: For as preſenting a Perſon is the Patron's Privilege, ſo the collating and inſtituting belongs to the Church. Without this Check upon Preſentations, there could be no Security for the Fitneſs of the Incumbent; for if the Patron's Choice was to ſtand without Trial or Inquiry into the Merits, all Places might be fill'd with Ignorance and Confuſion.

As to what her Majeſty mention'd concerning keeping a great Part of the Benefices in her own Hands, they replied, That ſuch Meaſures were inconſiſtent with good Conſcience, and a Breach upon the Laws of God and Man: That if this Courſe was purſued, a great many poor People muſt periſh for want of Inſtruction.

And as to her Majeſty's Offer for making Aſſignments to the Church when her own Neceſſities were ſatisfied, their Anſwer was, That this was inverting Order, and beginning at the wrong End: That the Miniſters ought to have a Proviſion in the firſt Place: That the Schools and the Poor ſhould be ſupported, and the Churches repair'd: That the Tythes being the proper Patrimony of the Church, ought to be applied for theſe Purpoſes: That when all this was done, if there was any Remainder, it might be diſpos'd of as her Majeſty and the Council ſhould think fit. They conclude with Thanks to her Majeſty for the Offer of Aſſignments, and humbly deſire ſhe would pleaſe to alter her Anſwer in the reſt of the Articles to farther Satisfaction.

To return to England: Sampſon and Humphreys, above mentioned, being ſummon'd, and refuſing to comply with the Habit, were both confin'd; and Sampſon was turn'd out of his Deanery of Chriſt-Church, the Archbiſhop, and the other Commiſſioners, having receiv'd a ſpecial Order from the Queen for that Purpoſe. Humphreys was enlarg'd, and ſuffer'd to keep his Preferment: And after Ten or Eleven Years Recollection broke through his Scruples, and complied.

Some of the common Lawyers diſputed the Legality of Sampſon's Deprivation, and would have brought a Præmunire upon the Commiſſioners. They argued, That Barlow, Biſhop of Bath and Wells incurr'd a Præmunire in the Reign of Edward the VIth, and was obliged to ſue out his Pardon for depriving the Dean. The Reaſon of his falling under this Penalty was becauſe the Deanery of that Church was a Donative. From hence the Caſe is brought to a Parallel, and the Queſtion is asked, By what Authority Sampſon was deprived of the Donative Deanery of Chriſt-Church? Of a Preferment which he had pro termino Vitæ, under the Broad-Seal? If the Deanry of Chriſt-Church is a Lay-Fee, and the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion reaches only to Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, in Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, it muſt follow, the Stretch in the one Caſe, is as great as that in the other. (s) Thus far the Argument.

Notwithſtanding theſe Proſecutions upon Sampſon and Humphreys, the Queen and her Commiſſioners conniv'd in many Inſtances, and ſuffer'd ſeveral Non-complying Divines to hold Dignities in the Church. Upon this Indulgence John Fox, the Martyrologiſt, ſent her a Panegyrick in Latin.

Fox's Panegyrick upon the Queen.

"In the Beginning of his Addreſs he mentions her Majeſty's recalling the Exiles, and retrieving the Kingdom from the laſt Degree of Miſery and Declenſion: That ſhe had reform'd Religion and the Statute-Book: That ſhe had corrected Idleneſs, ſuppreſs'd Robbing, and made the Country Orthodox and quiet: That ſhe had recover'd the Mint to the old Standard: And that the Manners of her Subjects were no leſs refin'd and brighten'd than the Coin. That theſe State-Regulations, tho' very valuable in their Kind, came ſhort of the Bleſſings in Religion: That now Truth was no longer perſecuted, Conſcience had its juſt Liberty, and Superſtition gave Way to the Goſpel. And of this, ſays he, we have a remarkable Inſtance in your Majeſty's Anſwer to the Petition of ſome Divines concerning the Eccleſiaſtical Habit. What Satisfaction this gracious Indulgence gave the Univerſal Church, what an Advantage After-ages would receive by it, and what an immortal Honour would deſcend upon her Memory, is ſcarcely to be imagin'd. From hence he proceeds to commend her for her Encouragment of Learning, and the Expectations of Favour ſhe had given to the Univerſity of Cambridge.

Where, by the Way, when ſhe took her Leave of that Univerſity in a Latin Speech, ſhe promis'd them not to come ſhort of her Anceſtors in ſome publick Benefaction. (t)

Fox in the Cloſe acquaints her Majeſty he "deſign'd to write her Hiſtory, and had prepar'd ſome Materials for that Purpoſe: But that theſe Advances would be imperfect without farther Information from her Majeſty: And after all, he thought her own Genius nobly furniſh'd to deſcribe her Reign; and that no Body could do her Juſtice better than her ſelf. (u)

To return to the Controverſy about the Habit: Notwithſtanding Sampſon preferr'd Deprivation to Compliance, he was not always of this narrow Opinion; for upon his retiring to Strasbourg in the late Reign, he wrote to his Pariſhioners of All-Hallows Bread-Street, London, to conform to the Ceremonies ſettled in the Reign of King Edward. He told them, That theſe Things not being Matters of Faith, might be alter'd at the Diſcretion of their ſpiritual Governors: And that provided nothing prejudicial to Piety and Edification was injoin'd, they ought to comply. This laſt Condition was thrown in to diſtinguiſh the Reform'd Common-Prayer Book from the Miſſals and Breviaries then us'd under Queen Mary.

Gualter and Bullinger's Anſwer to the Queſtion concerning the Habit.

But Sampſon's Travelling made him ſuffer in the Compaſs of his Judgment, and fill'd him with unſerviceable Scruples. Humphreys and himſelf conſulted Gualter and Bullinger, two eminent Divines of Zurich upon this Queſtion. The Anſwers they receiv'd were in Favour of Conformity. Gualter declar'd that for ſuch Circumſtantials they ought not to perplex their Conſcience, and throw up their Function: And that the Church might probably ſuffer very much for ſuch Non-compliance.

In their Letter to Bullinger they broke the Controverſy into ſeveral Heads; that by this Means all their Objections might be conſider'd, and the Anſwer made more diſtinct and ſatisfactory.

Humphreys's Quæries.

Bullinger gratifies them in their Method, and replies in the firſt Place to the Quæries propos'd by Humphreys. The firſt Queſtion is, Whether a particular Habit ought to be impos'd on Eccleſiaſticks to diſtinguiſh them from the Laity? Bullinger anſwers, That the Term [ought] is capable of two Senſes: If we take it for a Buſineſs of Neceſſity, and that 'tis eſſential to Salvation, he believes the Impoſers never intended to be underſtood in this Senſe. But if there's no more meant than that this ought to be done for the Sake of Decency, Diſtinction, and Regard; in this Caſe, he can't conceive which Way either thoſe that command the Habit, or thoſe that comply, are guilty of any Fault.

In the next Place 'tis enquir'd, Whether 'tis lawful to bring the Ceremonial Worſhip of the Levitical Prieſthood into the Chriſtian Church?

To

(s) Biblioth. Cott. Life of Archbiſhop Parker.

(t) Cambden Eliz.

(u) Foxii MS.

To this Bullinger anſwers, “That the Cap, Gown, and Surplice, is no manner of Revival of Judaiſm. To this he adds ſomething of Peter Martyr's Reply to this Objection. He owns the Sacraments of the Moſaic Law ought not to be continued in Chriſtianity: But notwithſtanding this Reſtraint, he believes there were ſeveral Cuſtoms in the Jewiſh Oeconomy which may be ſerviceably retain'd. For Inſtance, the Apoſtles, for the better Coalition of the Jewiſh and Gentile Converts, commanded the latter to abſtain from Things ſtrangled, and from Blood: But theſe were plainly legal Obſervances. Beſides, in many Places the Tythes are aſſign'd for the Support of the Miniſtry, and ſinging of Pſalms is cuſtomary in Religious Aſſemblies. Theſe are plainly Levitical Uſages taken into the Church. Now who can affirm this Practice ought to be cenſur'd, and ſet aſide upon the Score of it's being a Remainder and Imitation of the Old Law? From whence it follows, that all Levitical Obſervances are not forbidden under the Goſpel.

“To the Queſtion, Whether we may comply with the Papiſts as far as the Circumſtance of Habit? He anſwers, It does not appear this Diſtinction of Dreſs was any Papal Order: He affirms this Diſcrimination was long before the Encroachments of the Church of Rome. Beſides, he can't apprehend why we mayn't correſpond with the Papiſts in Matters of Decency and civil Regard. If we are bound from all Reſemblance and Conformity with them, 'twill follow we muſt be oblig'd to quit our Churches, to receive no ſettled Maintenance, to forbear the Sacrament of Baptiſm; neither to repeat the Apoſtles nor the Nicene Creed, and diſcharge the Lord's-Prayer. And over and above, he puts them in Mind they do not borrow their Ceremonies from the Papiſts. The Diſtinction of Habit was all along kept on from the firſt of the Reformation; and is ſtill continued, not by any Papal Conſtitution, but in Vertue of her Majeſty's Injunctions.

“If therefore this Habit is worn only as a Civil-Regulation, and a Mark of Character, there is neither Judaiſm nor Monkery in it. Thus Euſtachius, Biſhop of Sebaſtia, was not condemn'd for the Peculiarity of his Habit, but for tacking ſomething of Merit and Religion to it. And here he refers them to the Canons of the Synods of Gangra, of Laodicea, and the Quiniſex Council. The Laity who make Judaiſm or Popery of theſe Matters, muſt be better inſtructed: But as for thoſe who clamour upon this Head, and harangue the Vulgar to Scruple and Diſcontent, let them take Care they don't drag more Weight upon their Shoulders, provoke her Majeſty, and involve a great many of the Miniſtry in inextricable Difficulties.

The reſt of Humphreys's Queſtions have been mention'd already, I ſhall therefore proceed to ſome of thoſe put by Sampſon.

Sampſon's Queries.

And Firſt, Whether any particular Habit, diſtinct from the Laity, was ever appointed the Miniſtry? And whether any ſuch Conſtitution is lawful in a Reform'd Church. To this Bullinger anſwers, “That in the ancient Church the Clergy were diſtinguiſh'd from the Laity in their Dreſs; and for this he cites Socrates and Theodoret. (w) He takes Notice from Euſebius, that the Apoſtle St. John wore a Gold Plate at Epheſus in Reſemblance of that on the High Prieſt's Forehead: That St. Cyprian appear'd in a Clerical Dreſs at his Martyrdom: (x) And that St. Chryſoſtom makes mention of a white Garment belonging to the Hierarchy.

Sampſon deſir'd to know, Whether the preſcribing a Habit was conſiſtent with Chriſtian Liberty? Bullinger anſwers, “That indifferent Things lie within the Limits of Authority, and may fairly come under Command: For Inſtance, Times and Places for Religious Aſſemblies may be rang'd amongſt Things indifferent; and yet unleſs theſe Circumſtances were ſetled, what Diſorder and Confuſion muſt follow?

To the Queſtion, Whether any new Ceremonies uncommanded in holy Writ may be put upon the Church? “He anſwers in the Affirmative, provided the Appointment is made only for the Sake of Order and Diſcipline. To maintain his Reſolution, he ſuggeſts, that our Saviour kept the Dedication Feaſt, though unpreſcrib'd by the Law. In ſhort, he would by no Means have the Controverſy about theſe Matters indulg'd ſo far as to make Miſunderſtandings, and break the Union of the Church.

Sampſon demands farther, Whether thoſe Ceremonies which give Offence, and draw Scandal along with them, may be retain'd? The Anſwer is, “Giving Offence ought to be avoided; but then they ought to take Care not to cover their Paſſions under this Pretence. Beſides, 'tis one Thing to give Scandal, and another to be paſſive under it without juſt Occaſion: And whether out of Diſguſt to an indifferent Circumſtance they can throw up their Commiſſion, and deſert the Flock without great Scandal, he leaves to their Conſideration.

To the Query, Whether any Conſtitutions which have no Tendency to Edification are to be tolerated in the Church? To this he replies, “That Appointments of this Kind, when impos'd by ſovereign Authority, ſhould be born with rather than quit the Miniſtry: That the Church will ſuffer much more by being disfurniſh'd with Paſtors, than by Conformity to the Habit: That where there's nothing impious in the Command, we ought to give Way to Authority, and acquieſce under ſomething of Oppreſſion. Though by the Way, this does not ſeem to be the preſent Caſe: For what Servitude is there in a Cap or Surplice? In wearing a Habit deſign'd only for Ornament and Diſtinction?

The laſt Queſtion I ſhall mention is, Whether the Prince has Power to preſcribe any Church Ceremonies, without the Conſent of the Eccleſiaſticks. To this he replies, “That if the Conſent of the Hierarchy had been always neceſſary, Jehoſaphat and Hezekiah, Aſah and Joſiah, and other good Princes, could never have reform'd the Jewiſh, or Chriſtian Clergy. However, he would by no Means have the Biſhops ſhut out from Conſultations relating to the Church. On the other Hand, he won't allow them to ſtrein their Character upon the State, encroach upon Princes, and carry their Claim to a Reſemblance of Popiſh Pretenſions. And to prevent being over paſſive, and reſigning too far, he adds, Biſhops ought not to be ſilent under Rigours upon Conſcience, nor give their Conſent to the unrighteous Conſtitutions of Princes. (y)

This Controverſy about the Habit diſturbed the Univerſity of Cambridge, and made no ſmall Impreſſion amongſt the young People. Secretary Cecil, their Chancellor, being inform'd of the Diſorder, wrote to the Vice-Chancellor to diſ-diſcountenance this Claſhing, and preſs Conformity. He likewiſe wrote to St. John's-College, which was particularly remarkable for Non-compliance. He reprimanded them ſharply for their Singularities; told them their Scruples had nothing but Vanity and Affectation, Popularity and Contempt of Government, at the Bottom. He admoniſh'd them to acquieſce, to recover their former Practice, and return to the Uſe of the Ceremony. (z) On the other Hand, they appeal'd to God for their Sincerity; and told the Secretary, that nothing but Motives of Duty, and Dint of Conſcience made them diſſent.

Some of the Univerſity of Cambridge ſcruple the Habit.

Theſe Diſſenters in the Univerſity growing warm and unmanageable in the Cauſe, were ſo hardy as to draw up two Letters, one to the Queen, and the other to the Chancellor, in unexpected Language. And here they are ſaid to have fail'd both in Truth and Diſcretion. But this raſh Application was ſtopp'd; and a third Letter ſent to the Chancellor in Terms of more Decency and Reſpect. 'Tis ſubſcrib'd by Robert Beaumont, Roger Kelk, Matthew Hutton, Richard Longworth, and John Whitgift. Some of theſe were Heads of Colleges, and all of them Perſons of Character. In their Addreſs they acquaint the Chancellor, that a great many Perſons of Piety and Learning in their Society were fully perſwaded of the Unlawfulneſs of the Habit; and therefore if Conformity was urged upon them, they would be forc'd to diſengage: And thus the Univerſity would be in a Manner deſerted. They intreat him to uſe his Intereſt with the Queen: That in their humble Opinion, Indulgence in this Matter could be attended with no Inconvenience. But on the other Hand, they were afraid Religion and Learning would ſuffer very much by Rigour and Impoſition. (a)

(a) Archbiſhop Parker's Life, Append. Nu. XXXIX.

But notwithſtanding this Countenance from ſome Perſons of Diſtinction, the Majority of the Heads and Seniors were of a different Sentiment. For the Purpoſe, one Bartholomew Clerk, a Doctor of Law of King's-College, and afterwards Official in the Arches: This Gentleman, in a Letter to the Chancellor, endeavour'd to vindicate the Main of the Univerſity, and throw off the Scandal to a ſmall Party. He calls theſe Diſſenters, Fanatici Superpelliceani & Galleriani: That they ſquabbled about Trifles: That had they not over-valued their own Notions, and been ſmitten with themſelves, they would have reſign'd to Authority, and dropp'd the Conteſt. That this Wrangling de lana Caprina had taken off People from uſeful Reſearches, and diſturb'd the Courſe of their Studies: That thoſe who firſt injected theſe Scruples, tho' commendable in ſome Reſpects, were certainly to blame for laying ſo much Weight upon their Singularities, for drawing Conſcience into the Diſpute, and poiſoning young People with Anabaptiſtical Dotages: That by this Management they had diſſerved the Reputation of the Univerſity, and brought a Scandal upon it: And that ſome People made uſe of the Pretence of Conſcience to cover their Miſbehaviour. And here he tells a Story of a Sophiſter, who being chid by the Dean for appearing in the Choir without a Surplice, excuſed himſelf by ſaying his Conſcience would not give him Leave; whereas the Truth was, the Scholar had indulg'd his Palate too far, and pawn'd his Surplice to the Cook for Commons extraordinary.

Some London Divines publiſh a Book to the ſame Purpoſe.

This ſuperſtitious Fancy of ſcrupling the Habit had reach'd ſome of the London Clergy. I call it a ſuperſtitious Fancy: For to ſtand off from Things indifferent is no leſs Superſtition, than to lay too great Streſs upon them, and over-charge them with Neceſſity and Merit. However, ſome of the London Miniſters were ſo entangled in theſe Cobwebs, that the Church thought it requiſite to ſet them aſide. Thoſe deprived upon this Non-compliance publiſh'd a Book entituled, A Brief Diſcourſe againſt the outward Apparel and Miniſtring Garments of the Popiſh Church. One of the moſt plauſible Arguments they made uſe of to juſtify their Non-conformity was, that ſuch Compliance would carry an Appearance of Idolizing the State, and reſolving all Religion into the Prince's Pleaſure.

I ſhall cloſe the Relation of this Diſpute with a Letter of Beza's to Bullinger: For the Diſſenters it ſeems had conſulted Beza upon this Subject. I ſhall tranſlate Part of his Letter to acquaint the Reader with the Temper of this Divine, and how much he was diſaffected to the Engliſh Reformation.

Beza's Remonſtrance againſt the Church of England.

He gives Bullinger to underſtand, That the Engliſh Church was in a lamentable Condition: That as he was inform'd from ſome of the Brethren there, Popery was never thrown out, but rather tranſferr'd from his Holineſs to her Majeſty. He formerly hop'd the Diſpute had only been about Caps and Surplices; but now, to his great Grief, he finds the Controverſy goes much farther. In the firſt Place he makes the Peoples Choice of their Paſtor's Fundamental to their Calling. And here he complains againſt the Biſhops for giving them Orders by their ſole Authority, and after they have ſworn the Queen's ſpiritual Supremacy, and promiſed Conformity to the Laws, and the Common-Prayer, preferring them to any Cures without Diſtinction.

As to Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, he makes Deans, Chancellors, Archdeacons, and Officials, no better than Appendages of Popery. Excommunication for Money-Matters, and Abſolution upon Satisfaction, is another of his Exceptions. He falls foul upon the Archbiſhop for granting Diſpenſations for Non-reſidence, for Pluralities, for eating Fleſh in Lent, for marrying at prohibited Times, and for inſtituting or collating Perſons under Age by the Canons: That there's nothing of more Blemiſh and Scandal than this Practice in Rome it ſelf: That Women are allow'd to baptize in Caſe of Neceſſity: That thoſe few Miniſters who come up to the Purity of the Goſpel are either thrown in Gaol, or depriv'd, or both, unleſs they ſolemnly engage to go the utmoſt Lengths of Conformity, and reſemble Baal's Prieſts in their ſquare Caps, Tippets, Surplices, and ſuch Sort of Equipage. Neither is it poſſible to know how far theſe Impoſitions may reach. For by their Act of Parliament the Queen, without adviſing with any excepting the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, is impower'd to innovate and alter the Church Ceremonies at Diſcretion: For theſe Reaſons he concludes the Church of England in a miſerable and intolerable Condition. Afterwards, he takes Notice that Queen Elizabeth had ſo ſtrong an Averſion for the Geneva Church, that ſhe received the Preſent of his Annotations without the leaſt Sign of its being welcome: That one Reaſon of her Diſguſt is the Rigour and Cenſoriouſneſs of the Genevians; for thus they are repreſented by thoſe who are apprehenſive of juſt Reproof. The other Ground, ſays he, of the Queen's Diſaffection, was becauſe in her Siſter's Reign there were two Books printed in Engliſh with us, one againſt the Government of Women by Knox, and the other concerning the Power of the Magiſtrate by Goodman. The Doctrine of both theſe Books were upon Peruſal diſlik'd by us, and the Sale of them prohibited. However, the Queen not thinking this Diſcouragement enough, continues diſſatisfied. (b)

Withers's Indiſcreet Diſcourſes againſt the Paintings in Glaſs Windows.

The Diſpute about the Habit, and other Uſages of the Church, were ſtill kept on Foot at Cambridge. One George Withers a warm Puritan, (for ſo the Diſſenters were now call'd) and one who had a tolerable Talent for the Pulpit, declaim'd ſtrongly againſt the ſuperſtitious Figures in Glaſs Windows. And thus being ſeconded by ſome Zealots, a great many fine Paintings were deſtroy'd. This Withers, notwithſtanding his intemperate Holding-forth, was countenanced by Parkhurſt, Biſhop of Norwich. The Archbiſhop being inform'd of the ill Effects of his Preaching, order'd him to appear before himſelf, and the reſt of the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners. His Licence to preach being demanded at his Appearance, he produc'd the Letters of the Univerſity, ſign'd by Dr. Hawford Vice-Chancellor. The Archbiſhop, upon the Peruſal of the Inſtrument, found it defectively pen'd: 'Twas drawn only in the Name of the Vice-Chancellor, Maſters, and Scholars, whereas the Chancellor's Name ought to have been inſerted. Chancellor Cecil being acquainted with this Omiſſion, ſent for his Vice-Chancellor to juſtifie the Form: And that Cecil might be the better prepar'd to argue the Point, the Archbiſhop furniſh'd him with ſome Records upon which this Univerſity Privilege of granting Licences was originally founded. The firſt Precedent reaches no higher than King Henry the VIIth: In this Reign, at the Inſtance of Thomas Habold, the Pope's Pænitentiary, Julian, Biſhop of Oſtia, by Commiſſion from Alexander the VIth, granted Fiſher, Biſhop of Rocheſter, then Chancellor of the Univerſity of Cambridge, and his Succeſſors, Leave to chuſe every Year twelve Doctors, Maſters, and Graduates in Prieſts Orders, to preach through the Kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland. There were ſome Limitations in the Bull or Charter, which the Reader may ſee in the Records. (c)

Univerſity Licences for preaching firſt granted by the Pope.

(c) See Records, Numb. LXXXIV.

That the Omiſſion of the Chancellor's Name was a material Defect, may be farther collected by obſerving that the Incorporation of that Society is made to the Chancellor, Maſters, and Scholars: And beſides, the Chancellor's Name is expreſly mention'd in Queen Elizabeth's Letters Patents for this Purpoſe. (d) Farther, the Term in Withers's Inſtrument ran durante Vita, which was look'd on as a Stretch; for in Authorities of this Kind granted by Ordinaries, the Style is quamdiu nobis placuerit, & dum laudabiliter te geſſeris. But after all, whether Withers's Inſtrument was recall'd upon theſe Exceptions, is more than appears. 'Tis probable the Reformation of the Univerſity Statutes, ſent down by the Chancellor, and receiv'd by that Body, might provide againſt Inconveniencies of this Kind.

(d) See Records, Numb. LXXXV.

This Year there was a Deſign for reprinting the Geneva Bible, already mention'd; and ſome Time had been ſpent in Review and Correction. John Bodleigh, one of the principal Undertakers, applied to Secretary Cecil for the Grant of a longer Term in the Property of the Copy. The Secretary refuſed to aſſiſt them 'till he had conſulted Archbiſhop Parker, and Grindal, Biſhop of London. 'Tis probable Cecil might demur to the encouraging another Impreſſion, becauſe the Biſhops intended ſhortly to publiſh a Tranſlation of their own. However, the Archbiſhop and Grindal wrote to him in Behalf of the Undertakers: But this was not done without ſome Conditions for Security. They aſſur'd the Secretary to bring the Undertakers under an Engagement, that the Impreſſion ſhould paſs under their Regulation, and not be publiſh'd without their Conſent and Advice. This Caution, 'tis probable, was thrown in that the Biſhops might have it in their Power to alter ſome miſtranſlated Paſſages, and expunge ſome exceptionable Annotations relating to civil Government. The Undertakers, it ſeems, not being willing to come under theſe Reſtraints, deferr'd the Impreſſion 'till after Parker's Death. That the Buſineſs ſlept thus long appears by the Author of a Tract call'd, The Troubles of Frankfort, printed in the Year 1575. This Writer complains, “ That if the “ Geneva Bible be ſuch as no Enemy of God “ could juſtly find Fault with, then may Men “ marvel that ſuch a Work, being ſo profitable, “ ſhould find ſo ſmall Favour as not to be printed again. (e)

(e) Troubles at Frankfort, pag. 164.

To proceed, Fecknam late Abbot of Weſtminſter had been put in the Cuſtody of Horn Biſhop of Wincheſter, partly for a gentler Confinement, and partly to give him an Opportunity of Diſengaging from his Miſtakes. Fecknam had lately written ſomething in Defence of his Belief, to which Horn publiſh'd an Anſwer this Year. The Abbot ſtuck very much in the Point of the Queen's Supremacy, as the Parliaments in this Reign had explain'd, and ſettled it. He offer'd to put the Cauſe upon this Iſſue, that provided the Biſhop could prove that any Prince or Emperor had any ſuch Authority as the Queen claim'd in Spiritual Matters, either by Commiſſion from our Saviour in the New Teſtament; or that the Fathers and Eccleſiaſtical Writers from the Firſt Ages downwards, had aſſerted any ſuch Privilege in the Civil Magiſtrate; or that the Point had been ſettled in Favour of them by general Councils; or that the Eccleſiaſtical Government had been lodg'd in the Crown in any one Church, or that any Part of Chriſtendom had practis'd upon the Principle of the Regale: Provided theſe Things could be made good, he promis'd to acquieſce, and give up the Conteſt. (f)

(f) Strype's Annal. p. 460.

The Biſhop in his Anſwer, amongſt other Things, puts Fecknam in Mind, that this Opinion touching the Regale was formerly his own. That he ſurrendred his Abbey of Eveſham into King Henry the VIIIth's Hands, and preach'd up the Civil Supremacy during that Reign, and the next. And to finiſh what belongs to Fecknam, this Abbot, about Fifteen Years forward, made a nearer Approach to the Reformation, as appears by a Confeſſion under his Hand, and atteſted by the Biſhop of Ely, the Dean, and one of the Biſhop's Chaplains.

Dr. Fecknam's Confeſſion.

“ Firſt, He declares before God, that he firmly “ believes the Fourteenth Chapter of the Firſt Epiſtle “ to the Corinthians is to be underſtood of Common-Prayer in the Vulgar Tongue, no leſs “ than of Preaching or Propheſying.

“ Secondly, That he finds no Fault with any “ Thing in the Common-Prayer Book now us'd “ in the Church of England: But then he conceives it ſhort in the Matter. He deſires “ therefore, the Old Service thrown out, may be “ reſtor'd. And here he Inſtances in Invocation of Saints, Praying for the Dead, the Seven Sacraments, and external Sacrifice as he “ calls it; provided this Book was return'd to “ this Form, he ſhould willingly join in the Offices. As for the Adminiſtring the Holy Euchariſt under both Kinds to the Laity, he likes

“ it very well: But with the Condition that this Practice was ſettled by the Authority of the Church.

“ Thirdly, He can eaſily reconcile his Opinion to the Queen's Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy, as it ſtands explain'd in her Highneſſes's Injunctions: That is, that the Queen under God is Sovereign over all Perſons, whether Eccleſiaſtical, or Temporal, born in her Majeſty's Dominions: And that he is always ready to take the Oath in this Senſe, whenever it ſhall be tender'd by Authority.

Fourthly, Being aſk'd why he refus'd to join in the Engliſh Liturgy, ſince he has no Exceptions to any Part of it, and grants the Lawfulneſs of having Common-Prayer in the Mother-Tongue: To this his Anſwer is, “That he thinks himſelf oblig'd to ſtand off from our Communion upon the Score of the Diviſions amongſt us; for as he goes on, ſome of the Engliſh are Proteſtants, ſome Puritans, and ſome of the Family of Love. He objected farther, that our Common-Prayer is not ſet forth or confirm'd by a general Council.

“ Laſtly, The Rapine and Sacrilege of the Reformers was another Reaſon againſt his communicating with them. And unleſs an effectual ſtop be put to theſe Depredations, Ignorance in the Clergy, General Diſſolution of Manners, and the Subverſion of Chriſtianity, muſt inevitably follow. (g)

This Year Malta in the Mediterranean was beſieg'd by a formidable Army of the Turks. While the Town and Iſland was thus preſs'd, a publick Prayer was appointed to be ſaid every Wedneſday and Friday for the Deliverance of the Chriſtians. “The Preface to this Prayer, which was to be uſed thro' the whole Dioceſe of London, ſets forth, That the Iſle of Malta or Melite where St. Paul arriv'd in his Voyage to Rome, lay near Sicily and Italy; and was as it were the Key of that Part of Chriſtendom. That 'twas now attack'd with a great Army and Fleet of Turks, of Infidels, and ſworn Enemies of the Chriſtian Religion. That the Danger did not only Point upon the Beſieg'd, but menac'd the adjacent Countries of Chriſtendom. That ſince the Diſtance would not give us Leave to ſuccour them with our Arms, we ought to aſſiſt them with our Prayers.

A publick Thankſgiving for raiſing the Siege of Malta.

Afterwards, when News arriv'd of the Turks being beaten off, and gone home, there was a Form of Thankſgiving for the raiſing the Siege. 'Twas ſet forth, and probably drawn by Archbiſhop Parker. 'Twas to be us'd Six Weeks thro' the Province of Canterbury on Sundays, Wedneſdays, and Fridays. The Office conſiſted of a Hymn extracted from ſeveral Pſalms, and a Collect which ſtands thus.

The Collect.

O Heavenly and moſt merciful Father, the Defender of thoſe who put their Truſt in thee, the ſure Fortreſs of all them that fly to thee for Succour: Who of thy moſt juſt Judgments for our Diſobedience againſt thy holy Word, and for our ſinful and wicked Living, nothing anſwering to our holy Profeſſion, (which hath been an Occaſion, that thy holy Name hath been blaſphem'd among the Heathen) haſt of late moſt ſharply corrected and ſcourg'd our Chriſtian Brethren thy Servants, with terrible Wars and dreadful Invaſions of moſt deadly and cruel Enemies Turks, and Infidels: But now of thy fatherly Pity and merciful Goodneſs, without any Deſert of ours, even for thine own Name's Sake, haſt, by thy Aſſiſtance, given to divers Chriſtian Princes and Potentates, at length, when all our hope was almoſt paſt, diſpers'd and put to Confuſion thoſe Infidels, being thine and our mortal Enemies, and graciouſly deliver'd thy afflicted and diſtreſſed Chriſtians in the Iſle of Malta, and ſundry other Places in Chriſtendom, to the Glory and Praiſe of thy Name, and to the exceeding Comfort of all ſorrowful Chriſtian Hearts. We render unto thee moſt humble and hearty Thanks for theſe thy great Mercies ſhew'd unto them that were thus afflicted and in Danger: We laud and praiſe thee; moſt humbly beſeeching thee to grant unto all thoſe that profeſs thy holy Name, that we may ſhew our ſelves in our Living, thankful to thee for theſe and all other thy Benefits. Endue us, O Lord, and all other Chriſtian People with thy heavenly Grace, that we may truly know thee, and obediently walk in thy holy Commandments; leſt we again provoke thy juſt Wrath againſt us. Continue thy great Mercies towards us; and as in this, ſo in all other Invaſions of Turks and Infidels ſave and defend thy holy Church, that all Poſterities enſuing, may continually confeſs thy holy Name, praiſing and magnifying thee with thine own Son Jeſus Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt, to whom be all Laud, Praiſe, Glory, and Empire, for ever and ever, Amen. (h)

I have tranſcrib'd this Collect as an Inſtance of the Charity and Chriſtian Temper of our Church. Theſe Malteſe were all Roman Catholicks. But this was no Bar to the good Wiſhes, and Prayers of our Biſhops. The Collect expreſſes a Sympathy for the calamitous Condition of the Garriſon and Inhabitants of Malta. They call them the Servants of God, and their Chriſtian Brethren: They diſcover a generous Concern for their Welfare, and return ſolemn Thanks for their Deliverance. Was this Preſident imitated by the different Communions: Did they forbear Invectives, and treat each other with ſmooth recommending Language: Was there more Prayers, and leſs Heat and Satyr upon each other: Was this healing Method purſued, 'tis probable they might come to a good Underſtanding at laſt. Thus their Differences might leſſen with their Diſaffection, and the Breaches in the Church be made up.

This Year Cecilia, Siſter to the King of Sweden, with her Huſband the Marqueſs of Baden, arriv'd at Dover: They were honourably convey'd to London, where after Four Days the Princeſs was deliver'd of a Son. The Child was chriſtned in the Queen's Chapel, her Majeſty being God-Mother, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Duke of Norfolk God-Fathers.

The Queen's Proclamation for Conformity to the Habit.

Archbiſhop Parker having lately mov'd the Queen and Secretary Cecil to aſſiſt him in the Exerciſe of Diſcipline, her Majeſty iſſued out her Proclamation, requiring Conformity to the Habit: And thus the Biſhops Articles or Advertiſements, were in ſome Meaſure ratified. The Penalty of Diſobeying the Order, was Deprivation, and Diſability for Preaching. And ſince the Archbiſhop complain'd the London Clergy had ſhewn themſelves more ſtiff in their Nonconformity, and that their Practice made an Impreſſion upon the Country, the Secretary acquainted him, the Queen was willing the Reformation ſhould begin there; and that in Caſe of Non-compliance, it would be expedient to preſs their Authority, and proceed with Reſolution: And to countenance their Proceedings, and take off the Imputation of Rigour, her Majeſty deſign'd to join ſome ſecular Perſons of Quality, in Commiſſion with them.

Parker (Matthew) Archbiſhop of Cant.

March 20. 156$\frac{5}{6}$.

Upon this Encouragement, Parker and Grindal having conſulted ſome Perſons learned in the Law, reſolv'd to call all the London Rectors and Curates before them at Lambeth. And here 'twas agreed, to ſuggeſt the Reaſons why they ought to conform, with Intimation of the Penalty for Recuſancy. After they had thus endeavour'd to prevail with them all together, they intended to deal with them apart, and bring them to a Promiſe of Compliance under their Hands. That if they continued obſtinate, Suſpenſion and Sequeſtration was to follow: And if this Correction prov'd too feeble, they were to be depriv'd within Three Months.

March 26. An. Dom. 1566.

The Twenty ſixth of March was appointed for this Tryal, and Cecil ſent the Archbiſhop Word, that the Lord Keeper Bacon, the Marqueſs of Northampton, and himſelf, intended to be there: But none of them came: It ſeems they recollected themſelves, and declin'd having a Share in ſuch unacceptable Buſineſs. The City Clergy appear'd at Lambeth, and ſeveral of them were perſwaded to quit their Prejudices and preſerve themſelves. The Archbiſhop ſent the Secretary a particular Account of the Proceedings. The Iſſue was this, Sixty one of them promis'd Conformity, Nine or Ten refus'd to appear, and Thirty ſeven could not be brought to Compliance. Some of this laſt Number were Preachers, and Men otherwiſe not ill diſtinguiſh'd. But ſeveral of them, as the Archbiſhop reports, ſeem'd to have a great Deal of Zeal and good Meaning, but with a very moderate Proportion of Learning and Judgment. And now according to the Meaſures præconcerted, thoſe who continued unreclaim'd, had the Diſcipline driven home upon them. Cox Biſhop of Ely approv'd the Archbiſhop's Proceedings; and which is ſomewhat remarkable, Grindal concurr'd with him thus far. And now the Penalties of Silencing and Sequeſtration being executed, and no Signs of Relaxation upon what was to follow, the Diſſenters broke out into Remonſtrance, and complain'd loudly of hard Uſage. Dr. Humphreys wrote a moving Letter to the Secretary to ſtop the Execution, and wave the Advertiſements. That the Silencing the Pulpit was a moſt calamitous Rigour: That People were aſtoniſh'd at this Management: That ſuch Meaſures for Unity would ſplit the Reformation into Parties, diſconcert the common Harmony, and make more Diſagreement than ever. April 23.

(i) Life of Archbiſhop Parker.

The Queen of Scots deliver'd of a Son afterwards King James the VIth.

In June this Year the Queen of Scots was deliver'd of a Son in the Caſtle of Edinborough. Sir James Melvil was diſpatch'd with this News to Queen Elizabeth, who ſent Sir Henry Killigrew to the Scottiſh Court to congratulate upon the Occaſion. The general Aſſembly now conven'd in Edinborough, ſent the Superintendent to Lothian to pay their Duty to the Queen, and to requeſt the Prince might be baptiz'd by the Reform'd. To this the Queen return'd no Anſwer, but the reſt of their Addreſs was kindly receiv'd. Her Majeſty calling for the Prince that the Superintendent might ſee him, he took him in his Arms, fell upon his Knees, made a ſhort Prayer, and then ſpoke to the Infant to ſay Amen for himſelf: This the Queen was particularly pleas'd with, and the Prince when he was grown up, always call'd him his Amen, and treated him with the Regard of his Spiritual Father.

About the End of Auguſt the Prince was convey'd to Sterling, and Preparation made for his Chriſtning. To honour this Solemnity, the Count de Briance was ſent Ambaſſador from the French King, Monſieur de Croque from the Duke of Savoy, and the Earl of Bedford from the Queen of England. This Earl brought a Font of Gold of Two Stone Weight, with a Baſon and Ewer. The Ceremonies of the Roman Church were made Uſe of upon this Occaſion; and thus none but the Nobility and Gentry of that Perſwaſion appear'd in the Chapel. The Prince was carried thither by the French Ambaſſadour, and receiv'd by the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, the Biſhops of Dunkeld, Dunblaine, and Roſs, with ſeveral other Eccleſiaſticks of Diſtinction, being preſent.

The Counteſs of Argyle was the Queen of England's Deputy, and held the Child at the Font. This Sacrament, as I obſerv'd, was adminiſtred with all the cuſtomary Ceremonies of the Roman Communion, excepting Spittle, which was omitted by the Queen's Order. When the religious Part of the Solemnity was over, the Prince was proclaim'd by his Name and Titles, Charles James, Prince and Stewart of Scotland, Duke of Rotheſay, Earl of Carrick, Lord of the Iſles, and Baron of Renfrew. Then the Muſick began, and having play'd for ſome Time, the Prince was convey'd to his Apartment.

The Aſſembly it ſeems, took it ill that the Queen refus'd their Requeſt relating to the Prince, and would not ſuffer her Son ſhould be Baptiz'd into a Communion different from her own. But that which diſoblig'd them moſt, was a Commiſſion granted to the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews. By this Inſtrument he was reſtor'd to his former Juriſdiction in the probate of Wills, in collating to Benefices, and other Branches of Juriſdiction in the Spiritual Courts. This being highly reſented, they drew a Petition to the Reform'd Nobility of the ſecret Council. “In this Addreſs, they acquaint the Lords, that the Cauſes tried in theſe Courts did moſt of them belong to the Cognizance of the true Church: That notwithſtanding they had hitherto conniv'd at Royal Commiſſions of this Kind; yet this Acquieſcence was, becauſe the Majority of the Perſons impower'd, were of their own Profeſſion: But they could never Reſign ſo far to a known Enemy of Chriſt and his Truth, as they expreſs themſelves: That this Juriſdiction would give him a Colour of recovering his pretended Authority: Thus he might uſurp the Cognizance of Hereſy, and then 'tis eaſy to gueſs what Sentence he would paſs upon the Reform'd. Their Requeſt was therefore, that the Queen ſhould be acquainted, this Commiſſion was a Revival of the Papal Supremacy, a Breach upon the Conſtitution, and acting Counter to ſeveral Proclamations publiſh'd by her Majeſty. What Anſwer they receiv'd to this Addreſs, or whether the Archbiſhop acted upon his Commiſſion, or not, is farther than Spotſwood could diſcover. But whatever he might do for the preſent, 'tis certain the State-Revolution, which happen'd the next Year, put an End to his Privilege. (k)

The Aſſembly Addreſs the Privy Council againſt a Commiſſion granted to the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews.

(k) Spotſwood.

About this Time, Knox had leave from the Aſſembly to travel into England, and make his Sons a Viſit at Cambridge. At his going off he brought a Letter from the Aſſembly in Favour of the Diſſenting Miniſters. By the Superſcription and Contents of their Letter, it appears they had a good Opinion of Epiſcopal Government, and were far from the Cenſure of the modern Presbyterians. The Superſcription runs thus:

The Superintendents, Miniſters and Commiſſioners of the Church within the Realm of Scotland, to their Brethren the Biſhops and Paſtors of England, &c.

MVSEVM BRITANNICVM

The Aſſembly's Letter to the Engliſh Biſhops, &c. in Favour of the Diſſenting Miniſters.

In their Letter they complain, that ſeveral of their Brethren are ſilenc'd in the Pulpit, and barr'd the Exerciſe of their Function. That this was only becauſe their Conſcience won't give them leave to wear the Appendages of Idolatry. They have no Intention to enter into the Merits of the Cauſe, or diſpute the Queſtion at preſent; which, as they are inform'd, is argued with too much Heat on both Sides. Waving the Controverſy therefore, they conjure them to Tenderneſs and Charity, and that they would not put ſuch Uſage upon others, which they could not but diſlike in the Return. They put them in Mind that People's Underſtandings are different: That Conſcience is a nice Thing, and ought to be gently treated.

They ſuggeſt that the Non-conforming Miniſters in England don't cenſure thoſe who wear the Habit, nor give them any Diſturbance upon that Score. They deſire therefore the ſame Liberty may be allow'd them. And they hope that Biſhops and other Conformiſts will be more prudent than to trouble the Godly for ſuch vain Trifles. And now to uſe the Words of the Letter, if the Commandment of the Authority, ſay they, urg'd the Conſciences of you and your Brethren farther than they can bear, we pray you Remember that ye are called the Light of the World, and the Salt of the Earth. All Civil Authority has not ever the Light of God ſhining before their Eyes in their Statutes and Commandments, but their Affections ſavour too much ſometimes of the Earth, and of wordly Wiſdom. Therefore we think that ye ought boldly oppone your ſelves, not only to all Power that dare extol it ſelf againſt God, but alſo againſt all ſuch as dare burthen the Conſciences of the Faithful, farther than God hath burthen'd them in his own Word.

Dec. 27. 1566.

In the Cloſe, they renew their Application for Lenity and Forbearance, and hope the Biſhops won't diſown them for Brethren, nor give them the leſs Conſideration for the Slenderneſs of their Figure, and becauſe they don't appear with Equipage and Grandeur. (l)

The Reader may perceive this Application was not every where guarded with Ceremony and Addreſs: For they make no Difficulty to determine for the Diſſenters, to call the Diſtinctions of the Habit vain Trifles, and to exhort the Biſhops to deal more wiſely than to trouble the Godly with ſuch Vanities.

And now to give ſome Satisfaction to the Scotch Miniſters, who were ſtrongly ſolliciting for a Maintenance, the Court offer'd the Aſſembly certain Aſſignments for preſent Relief. Theſe Terms were accepted with a Proteſtation for ſaving their Right to the Tythes: For theſe they look'd on as an unalienable Branch of the Churches Patrimony: And that no Part of them ought to be detain'd by the Laity, upon any Pretence whatever. (m)

An Anſwer to a Book publiſh'd by the Diſſenters.

To return to England: About this Time an Anſwer came out to a Book printed under the Name of the London Miniſters. The Book is call'd a Brief Examination of the Diſſenters Declaration. 'Tis ſuppos'd to be either Archbiſhop Parker's Performance, or at leaſt written by his Direction. The Author amongſt other Things complains the Puritans had made their Title too bulky, and ſwell'd it beyond Matter of Fact: That many of the London Miniſters were of a different Sentiment: That tho' ſome of them might pauſe upon the Habit, yet they were far from thinking there was any downright Immorality in it; neither did they cenſure their Brethren who conform'd in this Particular. And laſtly, he tells them that thoſe who appear'd with ſo much Warmth in theſe Singularities, were but a ſmall Number, moſt of them Mechanicks, and much more remarkable for their Aſſurance than their Learning: And that if they continued to indulge their Fancies, he was afraid they would turn Anabaptiſts, or Libertines, at laſt. (n)

Another Anſwer, ſuppos'd to be written by Jewel.

Another Paper upon the ſame Subject was written this Year: 'Tis call'd a Brief and lamentable Conſideration of the Apparel now us'd by the Clergy of England: By the Style it ſeems to have been penn'd by Biſhop Jewel. His Reaſoning againſt the Diſſenters is much the ſame with what has been mention'd already. But his Addreſs to them in the Cloſe is particularly remarkable.

“ Don't ſuffer Satan, ſays he, to perplex your “ Conſciences: Throw up your Conteſt, and “ make for Unity: Be not aſham'd to repent, “ nor afraid of loſing your Credit with the “ People. We are commanded to go to Nineveh,
“ and denounce the Judgments of God:
“ Inſtead of this, we deſert our Buſineſs, and “ lie idle in the Hold. This Miſbehaviour draws
“ the Storm upon us, and unleſs Jonah repents,
“ the Ship is in danger of being Loſt. You
“ have Churches, continues the Author, why
“ do ye quit them, and run to Field Conventicles?
“ You have publick Places to officiate in,
“ what makes ye affect private Meetings? You
“ have the Chriſtian Religion preach'd to you
“ in its original Purity, what Reaſon then can “ ye have to be diſguſted? Are not the Holy “ Scriptures read to you? Have ye not the Liberty “ of peruſing them at Pleaſure? And is “ not Popery diſcharg'd? As for thoſe who conform “ to the Habit, were they not baniſh'd for “ their Orthodoxy? And did they not give up
“ their Fortune with all the Reſignation imaginable?
“ Who takes more Pains in Preaching?
“ Who writes to better Purpoſe? Who manages
“ with more Vigilance and Vigour in their reſpective “ Stations, than theſe Men? You talk
“ of Reformation, but they practiſe it. If you “ love Chriſt, feed his Sheep, and don't quarrel
“ in his Vineyard: Let us help to bear one anothers “ Burthens, love our Brethren, and not “ diſturb the publick Repoſe. (o)

Archbiſhop Parker not being ſeconded with that Vigour by Grindal which might be expected, was much embaraſs'd with the Diſſenters: He acquainted Dr. Haddon the Queen's Ambaſſador at Bruges with the State of this Affair, and ſent him the Opinion of Bucer and Peter Martyr upon the Controverſy. Haddon in his Anſwer to the Archbiſhop's Letter affirms, that tho' the bare Authority of theſe Two learned Divines was ſufficient to diſable the Novelties, and bring ſuch Peaſants to ſubmiſſion, yet the intrinſick Strength of the Argument was ſuch, that all Perſons of Probity, and without Prejudice, muſt be ſatisfied with it. 'Twas his Opinion therefore the Biſhops had gone far enough in their Inſtructions: That Doctrine ſhould be ſupported with Diſcipline: And that ſuch troubleſome People who took the Freedom to make a Noiſe againſt the Conſtitutions of Church and State, ſhould be reſtrain'd, and taught more Modeſty. (p)

The Diſſenters complain of Archbiſhop Parker's Rigour.

Some of the moſt clamorous Diſſenting Miniſters were put under gentle Confinements. Some were ſent to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, ſome to Ely, and ſome to Norwich. They were thus diſpos'd of partly for better Inſtruction, and partly to prevent the Spreading their Singularities, and doing diſſervice in the Capital of the Kingdom: But 'twas not long e'er they were enlarg'd from from this Durance. John Fox the Martyrologiſt held with the Diſſenters in this Controverſy. However, he was not for carrying the Diſpute to a Schiſm. In his Letter to the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners in Favour of one Weſt his Acquaintance, he laments the Diſtractions in the Church, and that we had neither Peace with Enemies or Friends: From hence he goes on to a Satyr upon the Times. He complains, Scepticiſm was bold and inſulting: That Licentiouſneſs had neither Shame nor Puniſhment: That Covetouſneſs was rampant, and Simony common, with ſeveral other Inſtances of ſcandalous Practice.

Id. Appen. Num. I.

Some of the London Miniſters being ſuſpended, or depriv'd for Non-conformity, the Diſſenters complain'd the Church doors were ſhut, and no Body to officiate in ſeveral Pariſhes. And tho' the Archbiſhop and Biſhop of London had taken Care to ſupply the Vacancies by their own Chaplains, yet the Clamour was kept on, and the Odium thrown upon the Archbiſhop. Parker vindicated himſelf in a Letter to Secretary Cecil, and return'd the Charge upon the Peeviſhneſs and Miſbehaviour of the Diſſenters. He complain'd of his being burthen'd with foreign Buſineſs, and glanc'd at the Remiſneſs of the Biſhop of London. As to the London-Puritans they had been very diſorderly and mutinous: There had been fighting in the Church about the Habit. The Elements had been ſacrilegiouſly ſnatch'd from the Communion-Table, becauſe the Bread was Wafers, and not in the common Figure. The Clergy when officiating had been violently thruſt out of the Church, only becauſe they appear'd in Surplices: And to expoſe the Conformiſts, they made a ſcandalous Perſon do Penance in a ſquare Cap. Theſe intemperate Sallies were ill Symptoms, and unleſs timely prevented, might end in ſomething worſe. This was an open Contempt, both of the Biſhops and the Queen: I ſay of the Queen, for her Majeſty, beſides her former Injunctions and Proclamations, had lately ſent Orders to the Archbiſhop of York, to preſs Conformity thro' that Province. Parker therefore being well appriz'd of the Stomach and Stubborneſs of that Party, deſir'd the Countenance of the Government, and that the Privy-Council would ſupport him in the Execution of Diſcipline. This Favour he told the Secretary had been formerly afforded Cranmer and Hooper upon a reſembling Occaſion. There are ſome Strokes in the Archbiſhop's Letter to Cecil, which diſcovers he had been menac'd by ſome of the Diſſenters, and was not without Apprehenſion of loſing his Life, by diſcharging his Office. However, he declares himſelf reſolv'd to maintain his Poſt, exert his Character, and run the utmoſt Hazzard.

Outrages committed by the Puritans.

May, Anno Dom. 1566.

Cox Biſhop of Ely, and Grindal of London, concurr'd with the Archbiſhop againſt the Diſſenters: The Firſt wrote him a Letter not to ſink under Fatigues, nor be diſheartned at a dark Proſpect. Be ſtrong, ſays he, and of a good Courage, for the Lord thy God is with thee. (q) Time and Truth ſhall put folly to Flight. And Grindal Biſhop of London, who had mov'd very gently hitherto, finding the Diſſenters extravagantly perverſe, endeavour'd to reclaim them. To this Purpoſe he publiſh'd Bullinger's Judgment concerning the Habit in Latin and Engliſh. The Reſolution of this learned Divine was not without its Effect: Several, both of the Miniſters and Laity, were brought off their Prejudices by it. (r) This the Reader may ſee in Biſhop Grindal's Letter to Bullinger, in which there are ſome Paſſages particularly remarkable. *

However, the Bulk of the Puritan-Party ſtood firm in their old Miſtakes. And for their Encouragement, they were not without Countenance at Court. The great Earl of Leiceſter, and Sir Francis Knowles, Vice-Chamberlain, were their Friends: And to mention no more, Sir Francis Walſingham, afterwards Secretary of State, is reckned in the ſame Intereſt. Theſe Men, the Two Firſt at leaſt, were great Politicians, had Deſigns upon the Church-Eſtates, and made Tools of the Puritans. To this I may add, That Parkhurſt, Sandys, and Pilkington, Biſhops of Norwich, Worceſter, and Durham, lean'd to the Diſſenters ſide in this Controverſy. Some of theſe Prelates, out of an exceſſive Averſion to Popery, would have the Church metamorphos'd to a ſtrange Degree, and the old Ceremonies diſcharg'd. But the Queen had more Ballaſt, and would not endure any ſuch Innovation. (s)

They are ſupported by great Men at Court.

Some of the Biſhops willing to indulge the Omiſſion of the Habit.

Nicholas Robinſon, Doctor of Divinity, and Chaplain to Archbiſhop Parker, was conſecrated Biſhop of Bangor: He was a Perſon of Elocution and Learning, and had ſuffer'd for his Religion in the late Reign. There's a remarkable Diſcourſe of his, in Manuſcript mark'd with the Archbiſhop's Hand: 'Twas preach'd before ſome great Audience, either at Court, or at St. Paul's Croſs, about this Time. I ſhall give the Reader a Sight of his Manner, of his bold Honeſty, and of the prevailing Diſorders of the Times. He complains the Pulpit made no Impreſſion: “That Prayers were frequented without Devotion: That People faſted without Mortification, and kept Holidays without any Godlineſs: That there was no Diſcipline in Lent: That People came to Church to ſatisfy the Statute, heard Sermons, and receiv'd the Sacrament, to avoid Singularity. That Religion was little more than Mode and Decency, with a great many. That ſome People pretended to Orthodoxy for ſecular Views, and Liberty of Practice. This Man, ſays he, is a great Enemy to Superſtition, becauſe he has a Mind to live at large. He is for the Reformation, becauſe a Monaſtery, or ſome Part of it, has fall'n to his Share: And thus Popiſh Lands, make Proteſtant Landlords. And thus he goes on in his Satyr upon Hypocriſy to a conſiderable Length. (t)

In Auguſt this Summer, the Queen went a Progreſs, and made a Viſit to the Univerſity of Oxford. She was entertain'd for a Week with great Solemnity. The Beauty of the Buildings, and the publick Exerciſes gave her great Satiſfaction. She took Leave of them in a Latin Speech, and thank'd them for their Entertainment. *

Upon the 30th of September the Parliament, after ſeveral Prorogations, met at Weſtminſter. On the 7th of October a Bill to avoid Sanctuaries for Debt, was read a ſecond Time, and order'd to be engroſs'd. Upon this, the Dean of Weſtminſter pleaded the Exemption of his Church, and deſir'd to be heard by himſelf and his Council in Defence of that Privilege. This being granted, on the 16th of October, the Dean appear'd at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, made an Argument, and endeavour'd to ſupport his Claim by alledging ſeveral Grants from King Lucius downwards. His Council were Mr. Plowden of the Middle-Temple, and Mr. Ford a Civilian. Plowden pleaded Edward the Confeſſor's Charter, and offer'd ſeveral other Authorities from Hiſtory and Law. Ford likewiſe inſiſted upon reſembling Topicks. Upon this, the Bill was committed to the Maſter of the Rolls, and ſome others to peruſe the Grants, and report the Senſe of the Law. Upon the Third Reading the Bill was thrown out by a Majority of Seventeen Voices. (u)

The next Thing I ſhall mention, as being the only Church Buſineſs in this Parliament, is the making a Statute for Confirming all the Conſecrations of this Reign. Bonner's Exceptions againſt the Legality of Horn's Character, gave Occaſion to this Proviſion. Now this Act being particularly Remarkable, both for the Weight of the Caſe, and the Drawing the Bill, I ſhall tranſcribe the greateſt Part of it. It begins thus:

An Act for confirming the Conſecration of Biſhops.

Foraſmuch as divers Queſtions by overmuch Boldneſſe of Speach and Talke amongs many of the common Sort of People, beying unlearned, hath lately growen upon the Makyng and Conſecratyng of Archbiſhops and Biſhops within this Realme, whether the ſame were and be duely and orderly done, according to the Law, or not, which is much tending to the Slaunder of all the State of the Clergy, beyng one of the greateſt States of this Realme: Therefore for the avoyding of ſuch Slaunderous Speach, and to the Intent that every Man that is willing to know the Trueth, may plainly underſtande that the ſame evylle Speach and Talke is not grounded upon any juſt Matter or Cauſe: It is thought convenient hereby partly to touche ſuch Authorities as doth allowe and approve the Makyng and Conſecratyng of the ſame Archbyſhops and Byſhops to be duely and orderly done, according to the Laws of this Realme, and thereupon farther to provide for the more Surety thereof, as hereafter ſhall be expreſſed.

Firſt, It is very well knowen to all Degrees of this Realme, that the late King of moſt famous Memorie, King Henrie the Eight, as well by all the Clergie then of this Realme, in theyr ſeverall Convocations, as alſo by all the Lords Spirituall and Temporall, and Commons aſſembled in diverſe of his Parliamentes, was juſtly and ryghtfully recogniz'd and acknowledg'd to have the ſupreme Power, Juriſdiction, Order, Rule, and Authoritie, over all the State Eccleſiaſtical of the ſame, and the ſame Power, Juriſdiction, and Authoritie, did uſe accordingly: And that alſo the ſayd late King in the xxv Yeere of his Raigne, did by Authority of Parliament, amonges other Thyngs, ſet forth a certain Order of the Manner and Fourme how Archbiſhops and Biſhops within this Realme, and other his Dominions, ſhould be elected and made, as by the ſame more plainly appears. And that alſo the late King of worthy Memory, King Edward the Syxth, did lawfully ſucceed the late Kyng Henry his Father in his Imperial Crown of this Realm, and did juſtly poſſeſſe and enjoye all the ſame Power, Juriſdiction, and Authority, before mention'd, as a Thing to him deſcended with the ſame Imperial Crown, and ſo uſed the ſame duryng his Life. And that alſo the ſaid late King Edward the Sixth, in his Tyme, by Authoritie of Parliament, cauſed a Godly and vertuouſe Book, entituled, The Book of Common Prayer, and Adminiſtration of Sacraments, and other Rytes and Ceremonies in the Church of England, to be made and ſet forth, not only for one Uniforme Order of Service, Common Prayer, and the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, to be uſed within all this Realme, and other his Dominions: But alſo did adde and put to the ſame Book a very good and godly Order, of the Manner and Fourme howe Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and Miniſters, ſhould from tyme to tyme be Conſecrated, made and Ordered within this Realme, and other his Dominions, as by the ſame more plainly will and may appear. And altho' in the tyme of the late Queen Mary, aſwell the ſaid Act and Statute made in the xxv Yeere of the Raigne of the ſaid late King Henry the Eight, as alſo the ſeveral Acts and Statutes made in the ſecond, third, fourth, fyfth, and ſyxth Yeeres of the Raigne of the ſaid late Kyng Edward, for the Authorizing and allowyng of the ſaid Booke of Common Prayer, and other the Premiſſes, amonges divers other Acts and Statutes touching the ſaid ſupreme Authoritie, were repeal'd. Yet never the leſſe, at the Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, in the firſt Yeare of the Raigne of our Sovereigne Lady, the Queen's Majeſty that now is, by one other Act and Statute there made, all ſuch Juriſdictions, Privileges, Superiorities, and Preheminences, Spiritual and Eccleſiaſtical, as by any Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Power or Authoritie hath heretofore been, or may lawfully be uſed over the Eccleſiaſtical State of this Realme, and the Order, Reformation, and Correction of the ſame, is fully and abſolutely, by the Authoritie of the ſame Parliament, united and annex'd to the Imperial Crown of this Realme. And by the ſame Act and Statute, there is alſo given to the Queen's Highneſſe, her Heyres, and Succeſſors, Kings or Queens of this Realme, full Power and Authoritie by Letters Patents under the Great Seale of Englande, from Tyme to Tyme, to aſſign, name, and authorize ſuch Perſon or Perſons, as ſhe or they ſhall think meete and Conveniente, to exerciſe, uſe, occupie, and execute under her Highneſs, all Manner of Juriſdictions, Privileges, Preheminences, and Authorities, in any wyſe touching or concernyng any Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Power or Juriſdiction within this Realme, or any other her Highneſſe Dominions or Countreys. And alſo by the ſame Acte and Statute, the ſaid Acte made in the xxv Yeere of the Raigne of the ſaid late King Henry the Eyght, for the Order and Fourme of the Electing and makyng of the ſaid Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, togeather with divers other Statutes touching the Juriſdiction over the State Eccleſiaſtical is reviv'd, and made in full Force and Effect, as by the ſame Acte and Statute more plainly appeareth. And that alſo by an other Acte and Statute made in the ſayde Parliament, in the firſt Yeere of the Reigne of our ſayde Sovereign Lady, entituled, An Act for the Uniformity of common-Prayer, and Service in the Churche, and Adminiſtration of Sacramentes, the ſaid Book of common-Prayer and the Adminiſtration of Sacraments, and other the ſayde Orders, Rytes, and Ceremonies beforemention'd, and all Things therein conteyn'd, with certayne Additions therein therein newly added and appoynted by the ſayde Statute, is fully eſtabliſh'd and authoriz'd to be uſed in all Places within this Realme, and all other the Queen's Majeſties Dominions and Countreys, as by the ſame Acte amonges other Thinges more plainly appeareth. Whereupon, our ſayde Sovereigne Lady, the Queen's moſt excellent Majeſtie, being moſt juſtly and lawfully Inveſted in the Imperial Crowne of this Realme, with all Authorities, Preheminencies, and Dignities thereunto appertayning: And thereby havyng in her Majeſties Order and Diſpoſition, all the ſayde Juriſdictions, Power, and Authorities, over the State Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal, as well in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, as Temporal, within this Realm, and other her Majeſties Dominions and Countreyes, hath by her ſupream Authoritie, at divers Times, ſythence the Beginning of her Majeſties Raigne, caus'd divers and ſundry grave and well Learned Men, to be duely Elected, made, and Conſecrated Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, of divers Archbiſhopricks and Biſhopricks within this Realme, and other her Majeſties Dominions and Countries, according to ſuch Order and Fourme, and with ſuch Ceremonies, in, and about their Conſecrations, as were allowed and ſet foorth by the ſayde Actes, and Statutes, and Orders annex'd to the ſayde Booke of Common-Prayer beforementioned. And further, for the avoyding of all Ambiguities, and Queſtions that might be Objected againſt the lawfull Confyrmations, Inveſtyng, and Conſecrations of the ſayde Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, her Highneſs in her Letters Patents under the Great Seale of Englande, directed to any Archbiſhop, Biſhop, or others, for the Confyrming, Inveſting, and Conſecratyng of any Perſon, elected to the Office or Dignitie of any Archbiſhop or Biſhop hath not only uſed ſuch Woordes, and Sentences, as were accuſtomed to be uſed by the ſaid late King Henrie, and King Edwarde, her Majeſties Father and Brother, in theyr like Letters Patents, made for ſuch Cauſes: But alſo hath uſed and put in her Majeſties ſaid Letters Patents, divers other general Woordes and Sentences, whereby her Highneſs, by her Supream Power and Authoritie, hath diſpenſed with all Cauſes, or Doubts of any Imperfection or Diſabilite, that can, or may, in any wiſe be objected agaynſt the ſame, as by her Majeſties ſayde Letters Patents remayning of Recorde, more plainly will appear. So that to all thoſe that will well Conſider of the Effect and true Intent of the ſayde Laws and Statutes, and of the ſupream and abſolute Authority of the Queen's Highneſs, and which ſhe by her Majeſties ſayde Letters Patents hath uſed, and put in Ure, in, and about the makyng and conſecratyng of the ſaid Archbiſhops and Biſhops; It is, and may be very evident and apparant, that no Cauſe of Scruple, Ambiguitie, or Doubt, can or may juſtly be Objected againſt the ſaid Elections, Confyrmations, or Conſecrations, or any other material Thing, meet to be uſed or had, in, or aboute the ſame: But that every Thynge requiſite and material for that Purpoſe, hath been made and done as preciſely, and with as great Care and Diligence, or rather more, as ever the like was doone before her Majeſties Tyme, as by the Recordes of her Majeſties ſayd Father and Brothers Tyme, and alſo of her own tyme, wyl more plainly teſtifie and declare.

The Act of the 1ſt of Eliz. cap. 2. An. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. cap. 1. confirmed or revived.

Thus far the Preamble: “By the enacting Part, the 1ſt of Eliz. cap. 2. touching the Book of Common-Prayer and the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, is confirm'd; and the Form for conſecrating Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and for ordaining Prieſts and Deacons, is declar'd to ſtand in full Force and Effect, purſuant to the Act paſs'd in the 5th and 6th of Ed. 6. cap. 1.

“'Tis farther enacted, That all Conſecrations, Confirmations, and Elections, made by Vertue of the Queen's Letters Patents or Commiſſion ſince the Beginning of her Reign ſhall be judg'd good and perfect, to all Reſpects and Purpoſes: And all Perſons that have been, or ſhall be conſecrated Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and ordain'd Prieſts and Deacons, purſuant to the Form or Ordinal abovemention'd, are declar'd and enacted to be rightly conſecrated and ordain'd; any Statute, Law, Canon, or other Thing, to the contrary notwithſtanding.

A Proviſo in Favour of Recuſants.

The Statute concludes with a Proviſo in Favour of Bonner, and other Recuſants. By this Proviſo 'tis enacted, That no Body ſhould ſuffer in Perſon or Property for having refus'd the Oath of Supremacy, or by Means of any Certificate made by any Archbiſhop or Biſhop, or to be made, before the laſt Day of this Seſſion of Parliament. And that all Tenders of the ſaid Oath made within the Term laſt mention'd, ſhall be void, and of none Effect. (w) (w) 8 El. c. 1. Statutes at large.

The Biſhops Character not Parliamentary.

Notwithſtanding this State-Proviſion for Conſecration, there's no Reaſon to reproach the Engliſh Hierarchy upon this Score, or call the Biſhops Parliamentary Prelates: There's no juſt Ground, I ſay, for any Raillery or Reflection of this Kind. For as to the Engliſh Biſhops of the Reformation, the Force of their Character, and the Authority of their Miſſion, depends upon Conſecration and Spiritual Conveyance; neither doth ſuch Conſecration derive its Significancy from any Regulations of the Civil Legiſlature. Thus much I conceive may be collected from the Act, in which the Biſhops and Prieſts are called the Miniſters of God's Holy Word and Sacraments. Now this Denomination ſuppoſes a Divine Commiſſion: For as no Body can repreſent a Prince without a Deputation, ſo neither can any Perſon ſeal Covenants in our Saviour's Name, and govern in his Church, without a Delegated Power for that Purpoſe. Farther, by the Statutes confirming all Conſecrations, Confirmations, &c. made by the Direction of the Queen's Letters Patents, we can fairly infer no more, than that the Biſhops ſo conſtituted lie under the Protection of the State, are guarded in their legal Privileges, and cover'd from Cavil and Proſecution in the Temporal Courts.

The Convocation ſate with this Parliament, but no Buſineſs was done, excepting the Grant of a Subſidy.

A Decree in Favour of the Dutch Church.

The Dutch Church, ſettled at St. Auſtin-Friers, London, complained of ſome of their Members to the Commiſſioners for Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical. Some of theſe Foreigners, it ſeems, had miſbehav'd themſelves, refus'd to ſubmit to their Paſtors, and for Fear of Cenſure revolted from their Communion. This Caſe coming frequently ly up, made the governing Part addreſs the Commiſſioners, that thoſe who had thus deſerted might be obliged to return, and make their Submiſſion. The Biſhop of London, with other Commiſſioners, made a Decree in Favour of the Complainants. The Subſtance of this Order was, That this Dutch Church ſhould continue in its Diſcipline and Government. And here the Miniſters, Deacons, and Elders, are confirm'd in their reſpective Functions. There's likewiſe an Exhortation to all Reformed Foreigners in the City of London to communicate with this Church, and acquieſce in its Regulations. And laſtly, All thoſe who had occaſion'd any Diſturbance, or broke looſe from this Communion, are declar'd Refractory Perſons; and unleſs they recollect themſelves, and make Satiſfaction, are threaten'd with Diſcipline. (x)

The Puritans form ſeparate Congregations.

This Year the Controverſy touching the Habit occaſion'd farther Miſunderſtandings, and ended in an open Rupture: For now the Puritans drew off from the Church, form'd ſeparate Congregations, and laid the Common-Prayer Book wholly aſide. They pretended that Methods of Compulſion, and tying the Ceremonies of Antichriſt to the Service of God, was the Reaſon of their going off. However, they did not at firſt truſt to Extemporary Effuſions, but officiated by the Book made uſe of by the Engliſh Refugees at Geneva, already mentioned. To this there are ſome additional Prayers ſubjoin'd. And thus they quitted the Communion of the Church, and form'd a Schiſm. However, ſeveral of their Miniſters thought they carried their Exceptions too far, and refuſed to join them in their Revolt.

June 19. 1567.

Theſe ſeparate Meetings provok'd the Government, and put the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners upon looking after them. About a Hundred of theſe Diſſenters met in Plummer's-Hall under the Pretence of a Wedding; but this Excuſe being thought too ſlender, about Fifteen of them were committed. The next Day Seven of them, viz. Smith, Nixon, White, Ireland, Hawkins, Rowland, and Morecraft, were examin'd. They were brought before the Biſhop of London, Sir Roger Marten Lord Mayor, the Dean of Weſtminiſter, and other Commiſſioners.

Some of them convented before the Biſhop of London.

The Queen and Council being inform'd of theſe Meetings, wrote to the Biſhop of London to bring them to Conformity by Gentleneſs and Perſwaſion; but that in Caſe of Obſtinacy, they ſhould firſt loſe their City Freedom, and be afterwards farther puniſh'd. The Biſhop laid his Inſtructions before them, and told them over and above, That in ſeparating from the publick Communion, they not only condemn'd the preſent Church, but likewiſe the whole Reformation in the Reign of King Edward: A Reformation for which many good Men had ſacrificed their Lives. He demanded of them, whether they had not the Goſpel preached in its Purity, and the Sacraments unexceptionably adminiſter'd? That the Church of England's differing from other Communions in Circumſtance and Ceremony, was no juſt Ground for Deſertion: That theſe were Things indifferent, ſettled for the Sake of Order, and lay within the Prince's Power.

The Reformed abroad declare againſt the Engliſh Diſſenters.

And becauſe they inſiſted on the Platform of foreign Churches, and pretended to be governed by their Preſident, the Dean of Weſtminſter told them, All the Men of Learning in Europe were of a different Sentiment as to their Caſe. To this the Biſhop of London added, That even the Learned in Geneva were againſt them. He produc'd a Letter from ſome of the Miniſters in that City. The Expreſſion which moſt affected them was this, That they ſhould exerciſe their Office againſt the Will of their Prince and Biſhops, we do ſo much the more tremble at. (y)

The Biſhop of London to reconcile them to the Eſtabliſhment, ask'd them this Queſtion; Have we not a Godly Prince? Speak: Is ſhe Evil? To this three of them made their ſeveral Anſwers thus:

William White. What a Queſtion is that, the Fruits do ſhew.

Thomas Rowland. No, but the Servants of God are perſecuted under her.

Robert Hawkins. Why, this Queſtion the Prophet anſwereth in the Pſalms: How can they have Underſtanding that work Iniquity, ſpoiling my People, and that extoll Vanity? (z)

In the Progreſs of their Examination they objected againſt the Form of the Conſecrated Bread. Their Cavil was becauſe 'twas given in Wafers: This they ſaid was going too near the Roman Communion. The Biſhop of London replied, That the Church of Geneva, for whoſe Practice they had ſo great a Regard, receiv'd in Wafer-Cakes. When Arguing and gentle Applications made no Impreſſion; when inſtead of promiſing to forbear their Meetings they diſcover'd a Reſolution of maintaining their Sentiments and Schiſm, ſome of them were remanded to Priſon; but 'twas not long before they were diſcharged.

Some of the Diſſenting Miniſters condemn'd the Practice of the Separatiſts.

The more learned and conſiderable Miniſters of this Party diſlik'd theſe Exceſſes, as has been already obſerv'd. 'Tis true, they ſcrupled the Practice of the Ceremonies, ſuffer'd in their Preferments, and choſe rather to throw up their Buſineſs than to comply: But notwithſtanding their Diſagreement in theſe Matters, they would by no Means drive the Conteſt to a Schiſm. They avoided the Lengths of theſe Separatiſts, and would neither preach nor pray with them. Amongſt theſe Men of ſome Moderation, Sampſon and Leaver, Coverdale, Fox, and Humphreys, may be reckon'd. Theſe Men had gentle Uſage: Their Preaching was over-look'd, and ſome of them were ſuffer'd to hold Preferments. (a)

Beza's Opinion.

The Diſſenters had ſent to Beza for his Judgment upon the Caſe. What Freedom he took in cenſuring the Conſtitutions of the Engliſh Church, has been already obſerv'd from his Letter to Bullinger. But notwithſtanding his Singularities againſt the Habit: Tho' he complain'd of it as ting'd with Superſtition: Notwithſtanding he was ſo hardy as to affirm that thoſe who introduc'd it, diſſerv'd the Church, and muſt account for it another Day: Notwithſtanding all this Scruple and Vehemence, he pronounc'd againſt the Separatiſts, and declar'd the Miniſters ſhould rather comply than quit their Buſineſs. And that the Laity were to blame who choſe rather to loſe the Benefit of publick Service, than hear a Preacher that wore a Surplice. However, he adviſ'd the Paſtors to disburthen their Conſcience, to publiſh their Diſlike of theſe Ceremonies before their Congregation: And over and above, to addreſs the Queen and Biſhops with a modeſt Remonſtrance againſt them. He will by no Means have them ſubſcribe the Juſtifiableneſs of theſe Ceremonies, or ſo much as to ſtand neuter and ſilent in the Controverſy. And yet after all this diſſuaſive Diſtance, he conjures the Brethren, that laying aſide Animoſities and Diſaffection, they would patiently bear with one another, and ſubmit to the Orders of the Queen, and Biſhops: That they would keep a good Correſpondence with with the Conformiſts, tho' at preſent they differ'd from them in ſome Matters. (b)

(b) Beza Epiſt. 12.

This Year Beza, who ſucceeded Calvin at Geneva, made a Preſent to Biſhop Grindal of his Annotations upon the New Teſtament. The Biſhop return'd him an Acknowledgment, with a Commendation upon his Performance. Beza writing him another Letter of Thanks, took an Opportunity of ſuggeſting a cloſer Correſpondence. He put him in Mind that the laſt Year the Reform'd Churches of France, of Geneva, and Swizzerland, had ſubſcrib'd a common Confeſſion of Faith. And ſince the Church of England, as he ſeem'd to be well aſſur'd, was of the ſame Sentiment, he thought a publick Atteſtation of ſuch an Union, might be a ſerviceable Expedient. He deſir'd the Biſhop therefore to recommend this Buſineſs to the Queen and the reſt of his Order. But this Propoſal of Beza came to nothing: The Engliſh Hierarchy thought it more adviſeable to ſtand upon their own Bottom, than incorporate their Belief with foreign Syſtems, and make themſelves anſwerable for every Thing defin'd by the Reform'd Abroad. *

Beza recommends the Subſcribing a Confeſſion of Faith aſſented to by the Reform'd Churches abroad.

* Beza Epiſt. 8.

This Year Nicholas Wootton, Doctor of Civil and Canon Law, and Dean of Canterbury and York, departed this Life. He was a Gentleman of Condition, but more conſiderable for diſtinguiſhing himſelf in eminent Stations both at home and abroad. He was Privy Counſellor to Henry the VIIIth, and Edward the VIth, to Queen Mary and Elizabeth: He had perform'd Nine Embaſſies to the Emperor, the Courts of France and Spain, and other Princes. He was Plenipotentiary at the concluding Three Treaties between the Engliſh, French and Scotch: And by King Henry the VIIIth's Will, was conſtituted one of the 16 Governors, during the Minority of Edward the VIth.

Cambden Eliz. pag. 129.

To ſay ſomething of the Scottiſh Church Hiſtory of this Year. And here by Way of Introduction, I ſhall briefly touch ſome Paſſages relating to the State.

The King of Scots lodg'd in Edinborough, in Order to his Recovery, was found murder'd at ſome Diſtance in a Garden. The Houſe, to conceal the Villany, was blown up with Gun-Powder. James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, being ſuſpected of this Practice, was brought to his Tryal, and acquitted. Not long after he projected marrying the Queen, and procur'd a Subſcription from ſeveral Noblemen to conſent to the Enterprize. The Queen making a Viſit to the Prince at Sterling, Bothwel ſeiz'd her in her Return, and carried her to the Caſtle of Dunbar. 'Twas commonly ſaid her Majeſty was in the Concert; for ſoon after Bothwel was not only pardon'd all Miſdemeanors, but gain'd her Conſent for the Marriage. To make Way for this Sovereign Relation, Bothwel ſued a Divorce from his Wife the Lady Jane Gordon. The Cauſe was heard in the Biſhop of St. Andrews's Court: 'Twas likewiſe tried by Judges commiſſionated by the Queen. The Sentence was given for the Divorce in both Courts, but the Grounds were different. In the Archbiſhop's Court 'twas prov'd Bothwel and his Lady were of Kin in the Fourth Degree: And that they had procur'd no Diſpenſation of the Pope to remove this Obſtruction. In the other Court, Sentence paſs'd upon the Proof of the Earl's Adultery. (c)

(c) Spotſwood.

The Queen now return'd to the Caſtle of Edinborough, Bothwel ſent to the Church to publiſh the Banes between her Majeſty and himſelf. The Reader refuſing, John Craige the Preacher was deſir'd to perform that Office, Craige anſwer'd, He could ask no Banes, eſpecially ſuch as theſe were, without the Knowledge and Conſent of the Church. The Buſineſs was propounded in a Seſſion of the Church: And after ſome length of Diſpute with the Juſtice-Clerk, 'twas at laſt concluded, That the Three next preaching Days, the Queen's Pleaſure ſhould be publiſh'd.

Craige proteſted he could reſign to their Order only upon Condition of having the Liberty to ſpeak his own Mind; and that he ſhould not be oblig'd to officiate in the Solemnity. The Firſt preaching Day, before an Audience of Noblemen and Privy Councellors, he declar'd, That in his Opinion the Marriage between the Queen and the Earl, was unlawful: That he was prepar'd to give his Reaſons to the Parties themſelves: That in Caſe he was denied this Liberty, he would deſiſt from publiſhing the Banes, or elſe acquaint the Congregation with the Grounds of his Remonſtrance.

Craige a Scotch Miniſter declares againſt the Marriage between the Queen and Earl Bothwel.

In the Afternoon, being brought before the Council, Bothwel call'd for the Reaſons pretended againſt his Marriage. Craige anſwer'd Firſt, That in the laſt Aſſembly the Church had prohibited the Marriage of Perſons divorc'd for Adultery. 2*dly*. He let him know that the Divorce from his Lady was manag'd by Concert: That the Unfairneſs of the Practice was apparent by the Præcipitation of the Sentence, and ſubſequent Contract with the Queen. And laſtly, he had the Courage to charge Bothwel with forcing the Queen, and a Suſpicion of being guilty of the King's Murther.

The Sunday following he publickly repeated his Diſcourſe to the Council, told his Congregation, that he had now diſcharg'd his Conſcience, and that he deteſted the Marriage as a moſt ſcandalous Engagement. But ſince the Flattery or Silence of the great Men ſeem'd to approve it, he deſir'd the People to pray that God would turn ſo unrighteous a Reſolve to the Benefit of the Church and Kingdom. Theſe were look'd on as exceſſive Freedoms, and extremely Shocking to the Court. And being ſent for before the Council, and reprimanded for going beyond his Bounds: He told them, the Bounds of his Commiſſion were natural Reaſon, good Laws, and the Word of God: That he had kept himſelf within due Compaſs: And that from all theſe Topicks he was ready to prove the Marriage, if it went on, would be foul and ſcandalous. He was going to ſomething more, but Bothwel commanded him Silence: And thus he went off without farther Puniſhment.

His hardy Expreſſions before the Council.

To proceed; the Queen and Bothwel were married in Holyrood-Houſe by Adam, Biſhop of Orkney: And to make the Manner more agreeable to the People, the Solemnity was perform'd with the Ceremonies of the Reform'd Church. There was but a ſlender Appearance of the Nobility; and thoſe who were preſent ſeem'd unpleas'd. Monſieur le Crock the French Ambaſſador excus'd his Abſence from the Entertainment: For both his Maſter and the Queen of England, had earneſtly diſſwaded the Match: But the Queen was ill adviſ'd, and betray'd to this Error. In ſhort, the People were generally diſguſted: And ſeveral Noblemen apprehenſive of foul Practice from Bothwel, entred into an Aſſociation for the Preſervation of the young Prince. The Queen ſet forth a Declaration to aſſure them of her Care for her Son's Safety and Education, and that ſhe intended no Alterations in the Government. But ſhe was unbeliev'd, the aſſociated Noble-men ran to Arms, and making an unexpected pected March, ſet down before the Caſtle of Borthwick, where the Court then reſided. But not having ſufficient Force to inveſt the Place, both Bothwel and the Queen made their Eſcape.

She is impriſoned at Locklevin.

Upon this rough Treatment, her Majeſty provides for her Defence, levies Forces, marches towards Edinborough, and drew up her Army againſt the Lords at Carberry-Hill; but perceiving her Men diſinclin'd to engage, ſhe ſurrenders to the Aſſociation, and was ſent Priſoner to Locklevin under a Guard.

Theſe Noblemen having thus diſpos'd of the Queen, began to break amongſt themſelves. The Earls of Argyle, Huntley, and others, were diſpleas'd with the Outrages committed by the Earl of Glencayrn in the Chappel of Holyrood-Houſe: They lamented the Queen's Misfortune, and were willing to retrieve her Affairs.

The Lords of the Faction being thus diſappointed, applied to the general Aſſembly to bring off the other Party from their Adherence to the Queen. The Aſſembly approving the Motion, wrote to the Earls of Argyle, Huntley, Cathneſs, Rotheſs, Crawford, Menteith, and others, to repair to Edinborough for the ſettling of Matters in Church and State. To make their Addreſs more conſider'd, John Knox, Mr. John Dowglaſs, Mr. John Roe, and Mr. John Craig, were appointed Commiſſioners. Theſe Agents had Inſtructions to acquaint the Lords, that the Aſſembly was prorogued to the 20th of July: That this was done to give the Noblemen, Barons, and Burgeſſes an Opportunity of convening at Edinborough: That now the Juncture preſented fair for diſcharging the Remains of Popery, for eſtabliſhing the Polity, and reſtoring the Patrimony of the Church. And therefore ſince Providence had favour'd them ſo far, and brought Things to ſo happy a Criſis, they intreated them to appear and give their Aſſiſtance: Not forgetting to intermix ſomething of Menace and ill Character, in Caſe they fail'd. Thus far the Commiſſioners Inſtructions.

The Letters they brought with them, beſides their being much of the ſame Tenor, ſuggeſted a Union or League amongſt the Profeſſors: That by ſuch a Conjunction they might be in a Condition of Defence againſt the Violence of their Enemies. Their Meaning was, that they might be ſtrong enough to cruſh the Loyal Party.

Id. pag. 209.

But neither theſe Commiſſioners, nor the Letters they were charg'd with, did any Buſineſs. The Lords at Hamilton (for there the Commiſſioners found them) excus'd themſelves upon the Score of the publick Diſtractions, occaſion'd by the Queen's Impriſonment: That Edinborough, appointed for the Place of Meeting, having a conſiderable Body of diſciplin'd Men in it, they did not think it ſafe to venture their Perſons there. However, they declar'd themſelves willing to concur with the Church in any Expedient that might be ſerviceable to Religion.

This in General: But the Earls of Argyle, and the Lord Boyd, were more particular in their Anſwers. The Firſt deliver'd his Mind with Reference to the publick Scheme, and deſir'd that Reſolutions of this Kind might be poſtpon'd, and nothing alter'd before a general Meeting of the Eſtates. The Lord Boyd promis'd to ſubſcribe their Policy, as they call'd their Book of Diſcipline, but with the Limitation of, ſo far as it might ſtand with Law.

Idem.

The Noble-men at Edinborough perceiving the other Party were not to be gain'd, reſolv'd to finiſh without them. And to recommend themſelves to the Aſſembly, they agreed to all the Articles propos'd. I ſhall mention ſome of them.

Firſt, That the Acts made in the Parliament held at Edinborough in Auguſt, 1560; That theſe Acts touching Religion, and the Diſcharge of the Pope's Authority, ſhould be copied from the Regiſters, and have the Force of Law. And that this Parliament, ſo far as Matters of Religion were concern'd, ſhould be declar'd a lawful Parliament.

Articles agreed between the Aſſembly and the Lords of the Faction.

Secondly, That 'till a Settlement was made for recovering the Patrimony of the Church, the Aſſignments of the Thirds of Benefices ſhould be duly paid for the Maintenance of the Miniſtry. By the Way, after the Year 1560, the Roman Catholick Clergy were allow'd to enjoy Two Thirds of the Profits of their Preferment. As to the other Third, 'twas paid into the Exchequer for the Benefit of the Reform'd. But the Miniſters found great Difficulty to get Part of this ſlender Subſiſtence out of the Courtiers Hands.

Thirdly, To proceed; 'Twas agreed that in the Firſt enſuing Parliament, or ſooner if the Matter was practicable, the Patrimony of the Church ſhould be fully reſtor'd, and nothing done till this and other Church Buſineſs was perfectly ſettled.

Fourthly, That all Crimes againſt the Law of God, ſhould be puniſh'd by the Direction of God's Word, and Judges aſſign'd for that Purpoſe. And in Caſe the Conſtitution happens to be ſhort in either of theſe Points, that then a ſupplemental Proviſion be made in the Firſt Parliament. To explain this Matter, the Reader is to obſerve, that the Scotch Kirk thought Chriſtians oblig'd to proceed by the Standard of the Judicial Law: And that, for inſtance, Idolatry, Murder, and Adultery, ought to be puniſh'd as Moſes preſcrib'd.

Fifthly, That for the Future, all Kings of Scotland, before they are crown'd, ſhould take an Oath to maintain the true Religion now profeſs'd in the Realm.

The laſt Article I ſhall mention provides, "That the Nobility, Barons, and others ſhall "faithfully engage to appear in Arms for the "extirpating Idolatry, without Exception of "Place or Perſon." By this Clauſe the Queen is particularly ſtruck at. "They were likewiſe "to promiſe the removing all Idolaters, and "others not admitted to the Preaching of the "Word, from executing any Function in the "Church, which may diſſerve the Miniſtry in "any Reſpect." And in the Place of the Roman Catholick Clergy thus caſhier'd and diſabl'd, there ſhould be a Subſtitution of Superintendents, Miniſters, and other neceſſary Diſtinctions in the Church.

Idem.

Theſe Articles, and ſome others I have paſs'd over, being unanimouſly agreed, were ſubſcrib'd in the Aſſembly by the Earls of Morton, Glencayrn, and Marr, the Lords Home, Ruthen, Sanghar, Lindſay, Grahame, Innermaith, Ochiltrey, a great many Barons, beſides Commiſſioners of Buroughs.

Thus the Aſſembly had fair Promiſes for lending their Credit. But when the Lords had maſter'd the Difficulties, and gain'd their Point; they diſappointed the Kirk, forgot their Engagement, and ran counter to the main Articles. *

their Sovereign, the hardeſt Names imaginable, and ſent Sir Nicholas Throgmorton to expoſtulate with them, and concert Meaſures for reſtoring the Queen.

The Engliſh Ambaſſador remonſtrates againſt the Uſage put upon the Queen of Scots.

When the Ambaſſador arriv'd in Scotland, he perceiv'd the Queen had a great many Enemies; and that her Confinement was ſo cloſe, that neither himſelf, nor the French Ambaſſador were permitted to wait on her. The Rebels were ſomewhat divided, and at a Loſs how to diſpoſe of her Majeſty. Lethington, and ſome few others mov'd for her being reſtor'd upon theſe Conditions; that the Regicides ſhould be proſecuted and puniſh'd according to Law; that Care ſhould be taken for the Security of the young Prince; that Bothwell ſhould be divorc'd from her, and that the Reform'd Religion ſhould be firmly ſettled. Others ſuggeſted perpetual Baniſhment, either into France or England; but with this Proviſo, that the French King, or Queen Elizabeth, would engage to prevail with her to reſign the Crown, and transfer the Government upon her Son. A Third Party were ſtill more extravagantly unjuſt and barbarous: They were for bringing the Queen to a formal Tryal: And taking it for granted, ſhe would be caſt, their Sentence was for perpetual Impriſonment, and that her Son ſhould be crown'd immediately. The Fourth Diviſion thought this Puniſhment too little, and declar'd for her Execution. And this Doom was thunder'd out of the Pulpits by John Knox, and ſome others of his Brethren. (d.)

(d) Cambden Eliz. From the Ambaſſador Throgmorton's Letters, pag. 118.

Sir Nicholas Throgmorton on the other Side, interpos'd for the Queen with a great Deal of Vehemence and Argument. He inſiſted on the Apoſtle's Commanding every Soul to be ſubject to the higher Powers: That the Powers were ordain'd of God, That they ought to be Subject, not only for Wrath but for Conſcience Sake. That the Queen was accountable to none but God Almighty for her Adminiſtration: That no Court upon Earth had any warrantable Pretence to bring her before them: That all the Power of the Scottiſh Magiſtracy was deriv'd from the Queen, and revocable at Pleaſure. To this the confederate Revolters replied, That by the Scotch Conſtitution the Subjects had a particular Proviſion, and that in extraordinary Caſes, they were to apply to extraordinary Expedients. They were furniſh'd with a Colour for their Diſloyalty by George Buchanan: Who at the Inſtance of the Earl of Murray, had lately written his damnable Dialogue, as Cambden calls it, de jure Regni apud Scotos. In this Tract, continues Cambden, he affirms a Right in the Scots for making, and depoſing their Princes, which is no leſs than a downright Contradiction to the Hiſtory and Records of that Kingdom. (e)

The Queen of Scots forc'd to reſign the Government to her Son and declare the Earl of Murray Regent.

But the Queen's Enemies were too numerous, and had gone too far, to alter their Reſolves: And therefore upon the Receſs of the Aſſembly, the Lords Ruthen and Lindſay were ſent to perſwade her to reſign to the Prince: And that ſhe would comply ſo far as to appoint a Regent during his Minority. The Queen, as ſhe had Reaſon, was extremely ſhock'd at the Propoſal, and replied with an Air of Majeſty and Reſentment, that ſhe would rather part with her Life, than her Crown. But being menaced, and roughly treated by the Lord Lindſay, and adviſ'd by the Earl of Athol and Lethington, of the Danger of ſtanding her Ground, ſhe ſubſcribed the Reſignation Inſtrument. She was farther diſpos'd to yield this Length, by a Letter deliver'd to her by Robert Melvil, from Sir Nicholas Throgmorton. In this Letter the Ambaſſador aſſur'd her, that a Reſignation made under ſuch Dureſſe was void, and of no Force either in Juſtice or Law.

The Prince crown'd. July 29. 1567.

The Queen being thus reſtrain'd to reſign her Sovereignty, the Prince was immediately crown'd, and anointed in the Church at Sterling; the Biſhop of Orkney, aſſiſted by Two Superintendents, officiating at the Solemnity. John Knox preachd the Sermon. The Earl of Morton, and the Lord Home ſwore for the King, that he would maintain the Reform'd Religion, and do Juſtice impartially to his Subjects. The Engliſh Ambaſſador, tho' in Town, refus'd to appear at the Ceremony: He thought his Preſence might be interpreted an Approbation of the Proceedings againſt the Queen. When the News of this Revolution was brought to France, the Earl of Murray made haſt to embark, and arriv'd at Edinborough the Eleventh of Auguſt following. As to Bothwell, and the Fate attending him, a Word or Two may not be amiſs. After his Retreat from Carberry, and a ſhort Stay in the Fort of Dunbar, he went on Board, and ſet Sail for Orkney with Two or Three Ships: And being denied Entrance into the Caſtle of Kirkwall, he was oblig'd to put to Sea again, and liv'd upon Piracy: But not long after being chas'd by a greater Force mann'd out by the Regent, he was ſeiz'd upon the Coaſt of Norway, and convey'd to Denmark: Where being diſcover'd by ſome Scotch Merchants, he was confin'd in a very Offenſive Priſon. This Misfortune threw him into a Frenzy, as Spotſwood reports. However, he liv'd Ten Years, but without his Liberty.

The Parliament conven'd at Edinborough.

The Regent now eſtabliſh'd, convenes a Parliament, which met in December following. The Firſt Act ſets forth the Queen's Reſignation of the Crown, with the Conſent and Approbation of the Earls, Lords, Prelates, Barons, &c. And here the Form of the Reſignation is inſerted: I ſhall give the Reader Part of it, to ſhew the Hypocriſy of the Inſtrument, and that the Queen was forc'd to declare ſhe was willing. It begins thus:

The Form of the Queen's Reſignation.

“in former Reigns for the Maintenance of Idolatry and Superſtition, are annull'd and extinguiſh'd, ſo far as any of the foreſaid Acts are repugnant and contrary to the Confeſſion Faith and Word of God, ratified and approv'd by the Eſtates in this preſent Parliament.

Then their Confeſſion of Faith and Doctrine follows, of which I have given ſome Account already.

The general Aſſembly the laſt Judge of the Qualification of Miniſters.

Saying or hearing Maſs is made Death upon the third Offence by this Parliament. The Proteſtant Miniſters, and thoſe of their Communion, are by another Act declar'd to be the only True and Holy Kirk within this Realm. 'Tis farther enacted, that the Examination and Admiſſion of Miniſters ſhall be only in the Power and Diſpoſition of the Church. And then follows a ſaving Clauſe for the Right of Lay-Patrons: And in caſe of any Diſpute between the Patron and Superintendent concerning the Qualifications of the Perſon preſented, 'tis lawful for the Patron to appeal to the Superintendent and Miniſters of the Province where the Benefice lies: And if the Perſon preſented is refuſed by them, the Patron may appeal to the General Aſſembly, where the Cauſe is to be finally decided. (g)

(g) Jam. 6. Parl. 1. cap. 7.

By another Act made this Parliament, the Kings at their Coronation were to take an Oath to maintain the Reformed Religion then profeſs'd.

An Act for puniſhing Fornication and Inceſt.

The next Act I ſhall mention, provides for the Puniſhment of Fornication: For the firſt Offence upon Conviction the Parties were to pay Forty Pounds Scotch, or be impriſon'd eight Days with no better Diet than Bread and Small-Beer; after this they were to ſtand bare-headed at the Market-Place. For the Second Offence they were to forfeit a Hundred Marks, their Impriſonment was to be doubled, and both of them to ſtand in the Market-Place with their Heads ſhaven. For the third Fault a Hundred Pound, or elſe their Impriſonment was to be tripled with the Diſcipline in Diet abovemention'd; after this they were to be duck'd thrice in foul Water, and for ever baniſh'd the Town where they liv'd. Theſe Corporal Puniſhments of Impriſonment, Baniſhment, and the reſt, were to be executed upon all thoſe who either refuſed, or were unable to pay the Forfeiture in Money. As to the Fines, they were to be diſpoſed of to pious Uſes in the Place were the Crime was committed. Inceſt, that is, as the Act explains it ſelf, Cohabitation within the Degrees prohibited in the 18th Chapter of Leviticus, is made Death. But all other Approaches of Conſanguinity, unforbidden in the Old Teſtament, are no Bar againſt Marriage. (h)

(h) Jam. 6. Parl. 1. c. 14, 15, 16.

There is another remarkable Proviſion relating to the Terms of Communion. 'Tis entituled, Anent the True and Holy Kirk, and of them that are declar'd not to be of the ſame.

Item, Forasmeikle as the Miniſters of the Bleſſed Evangel of Jeſus Chriſt, whome God of his Mercy hes now raiſed up amongſt us, or heirafter ſall rayſe, agreeing with them that now livis, in Doctrine and Adminiſtratioun of the Sacraments, and the Peopil of this Realme, that profeſſis Chriſt, as he now is offered in his Evangel, and do communcicat with the holy Sacraments (as in the Reform'd Kirkes of this Realm they are publiklie adminiſtrat) according to the Confeſſioun of the Faith: Our Sovereigne Lord, with the Advice of my Lo d Regent, and three Eſtaitis of this preſent Parliament, hes declar'd, and declaris the foreſaid Perſons, to be the only true and halie Kirk of Jeſus Chriſt, within this Realm. And decernis and declaris that all and ſindrie, quha outher gaynſayis the Word of the Evangel, received and approved, as the Heads of the Confeſſioun of Faith profeſſed in Parliament of befoꝛe, in the Year of God 1560 Yeares, as alſo ſpecified in the Actes of this Parliament mair particuliarlie dois expreſſe, and now ratified and approoved in this preſent Parliament, or that refuſes the Participatioun of the halie Sacramentes as they are now Miniſtrate, to be na Members of the ſaid Kirke within this Realme now preſently profeſſed, ſa lang as they keep themſelves ſa divided fra the Society of Chriſt's Body.

Ja. 6. 1. Parl. c. 6.

By the laſt Act of this Parliament, which I ſhall mention, none but thoſe who profeſs the Religion eſtabliſh'd are allow'd to be Judges, Proctors, or Publick Notaries, or to practiſe under any Qualification in the Courts of Juſtice. But this Act has a Proviſo for ſaving the Rights of Offices, either Hereditary, or for Life.

The Biſhop of Orkney brought to Penance by the Aſſembly.

About this Time the Biſhop of Orkney was convented before the Aſſembly for marrying the Queen to Bothwell. And here theſe Men, who, as far as it appears, were moſt of them ſelf-originated,* and had not ſo much as the Character of Canonical Prieſthood, took the Freedom to depoſe a Biſhop. They likewiſe cited the Counteſs of Argyle for aſſiſting at the King's Chriſtning, perform'd with the Ceremonies of the Church of Rome. This Lady, tho' no farther concern'd than by repreſenting Queen Elizabeth, ſubmitted to their Diſcipline. She was order'd to make ſuch publick Satisfaction in the Chapel at Sterling, as the Superintendent ſhould appoint.

The Queen cleared from having any Knowlege of the King's Murder.

In January following one John Hepburn, and three Servants of Bothwell's, were tried for the King's Murder. Spotſwood reports they confeſs'd the Crime; but their Speech at the Place of Execution was more than the Regent expected. Here they declar'd before God, that Bothwell inform'd them the Murder of the King was ſuggeſted and carried on by the Earls of Murray and Morton: And as for the Queen, they clear'd her from all Suſpicion of any ſuch Practice. Bothwell likewiſe did her the ſame Juſtice, though a Priſoner in Denmark; and to his laſt Hour ſolemnly averr'd ſhe was wholly unacquainted with what happen'd to the King. And Fourteen Years after, when Morton was beheaded for Miſpriſion of Treaſon, and concealing the Deſign of Murdering the King, he confeſs'd that Bothwell had tamper'd with him to come into the Plot; and that he refuſed to engage, unleſs he had an Order to ſecure him under the Queen's Hand: Upon which Bothwell replied, His Demand was impracticable; for the Queen was by no Means to be acquainted with the Enterprize. (i) I grant Spotſwood's Narrative is ſhort upon this Occaſion; but this Prelate's Church-Hiſtory was printed after his Death, and the Manuſcript not well us'd, as I am credibly inform'd. (k)

She makes her Eſcape from Lockleven.

The next Spring the Queen making her Eſcape from Lockleven, was convey'd to Hamilton, and join'd by the Earls of Argyle, Caſſils, Eglington, and Rotheſs, by the Lords Sommervile, Teſter, Borthwick, Levingſton, Herris, Maxwell, Sanghar, and Roſs, and with a great Number of Barons and Gentlemen. A Council being call'd, the Queen declar'd the Reſignation of the Crown extorted, which Allegation was confirm'd by the Teſtimony of Robert Melvil, and others then preſent. Upon this the Inſtruments for reſigning the Government were declared void, and Proclamations ſet forth in her Majeſty's Name, commanding all the Lieges to rendezvous at Hamilton, and aſſiſt the Queen againſt the Rebels. In ſhort, the Queen fought the Regent near Glaſcow, and loſt the Battle. After this Misfortune ſhe made towards the Borders, and contrary to the beſt Advice put to Sea, ſet Sail for England, and landed at Wirkinton in Cumberland. She fell into theſe Meaſures in Confidence of Queen Elizabeth's Friendſhip. The Queen of England had given her a ſtrong Expectation of Shelter in Caſe of Diſtreſs, and had preſented her with a Diamond as a Mark of her Affection. The Queen of Scots, ſome Days before ſhe quitted her Dominions, ſent one Beaton, a Gentleman of her Train, to Queen Elizabeth with this Ring. He was inſtructed to acquaint our Queen that his Miſtreſs intended to caſt her ſelf upon her Protection, if ſhe happen'd to be farther preſs'd. This Gentleman return'd with large Promiſes of Favour and kind Uſage: But when Queen Elizabeth underſtood her Siſter was actually in England, ſhe drew in her Kindneſs, and ſent down Orders not very inviting. For now the Lord Lieutenant of Cumberland was requir'd to convey the Queen of Scots to Carlile, where, under Pretence of more Security, ſhe was deſir'd to ſtay 'till Queen Elizabeth was farther inform'd of the Juſtice of her Cauſe.

The Queen of Scots, who had wrote to Queen Elizabeth to be convey'd with all Speed to Court, was ſomewhat ſhock'd at this Reſtraint. She was now ſenſible of her Miſtake in venturing the Chance, and relying ſo far upon the Aſſiſtance of England: But that wrong Step was paſt retrieving. And thus being in no Condition to complain, ſhe diſſembled her Diſappointment, and ſent the Lord Herris to ſolicit Queen Elizabeth for Admiſſion to her Perſon, and to hear her Defence: That ſhe was prepar'd to vindicate her Conduct, and prove the Miſbehaviour of her Subjects: That in Caſe Queen Elizabeth refuſed to ſee her, ſhe deſir'd the Liberty of quitting the Kingdom: That 'twas Choice, and not Neceſſity, which brought her hither: And for this ſhe mention'd Queen Elizabeth's kind Aſſurances both by Meſſages and Letters.

How our Queen ſtood affected is uncertain: It muſt be granted her Mind was ſomewhat myſterious. But how friendly ſoever ſhe might be diſpos'd in her own Fancy, her Council adviſ'd her not to part with this Princeſs. (l) And thus, as far as it appears, the Queen of Scots was kept at a Diſtance, and made Priſoner upon Reaſons of State. As to this Reſolution, though of no bright Appearance, I ſhall determine nothing: However, I can't forbear ſuggeſting that Intereſt has oftentimes too much the Aſcendant in publick Debates; and thus Politicks prove the Bane of Conſcience and Honour, of Good Nature and Good Faith. As to the Detail of this Princeſs's Misfortune, it not being the Buſineſs of a Church-Hiſtorian, I ſhall paſs it over.

This Year Thomas Harding and Nicholas Sanders, Doctors in Divinity, lately receiv'd an Authority from the Pope to abſolve all the Engliſh who return'd to their Communion: They were likewiſe impower'd to diſpenſe in Caſes of Irregularity, Wilſul Murder excepted: Their Commiſſion extended to Abſolution for Hereſy, provided the Perſons reconcil'd abſtain'd three Years from officiating at the Altar. The Church of England was no leſs batter'd from another Quarter: For now Coleman, Button, Halingham, Benſon, and ſome others, profeſs'd an ardent Zeal for farther Degrees of Reformation. Theſe Men would endure nothing, not ſo much as in Government or Ceremonies, but what lay upon the Letter of the Holy Scriptures: And thus either out of a Principle of Conſcience, Novelty, or Faction, they declar'd ſtrongly againſt the Liturgy and Diſcipline eſtabliſh'd. They firſt queſtion'd the Lawfulneſs of Epiſcopacy, and afterwards flatly condemn'd it. They went upon this falſe Ground, That all Manner of Reſemblance and Conformity to the Church of Rome was plainly wicked. And though ſome of theſe Men were impriſon'd, as has been related, yet what through the Obſtinacy of the Party, the Remiſſneſs of the Biſhops, and the Countenance of ſome great Courtiers, who lay at Catch for the Patrimony of the Church, they came ſtrangely forward, and increas'd to a formidable Number in a ſmall Time.

The Univerſities encouraged to ſtudy Divinity.

(m) Strype Annal. p. 515.

The Diſcouragement the Univerſities lay under for the Study of Divinity, was a Circumſtance of Service to both Papiſts and Puritans. The ſeizing the Church Revenues, and beſtowing a great Part of the Remainder on Court-Clergy and Noblemen's Chaplains, made young Students very backward in ſpending their Time and their Fortunes this Way. The Queen being ſenſible that People of the moſt promiſing Genius would ſtand off from the Prieſthood, and faſten upon other Profeſſions, ſent a Countenancing Letter to Cecil, Chancellor of Cambridge. She let him know, That thoſe who ſtudied Divinity ſhould receive particular Marks of Regard; that upon a Recommendation from the Heads their Merits ſhould be anſwer'd; that ſhe would ſee them preferr'd to Places of Dignity and Wealth; and that ſhe intended to promote none but ſuch as had a fair Teſtimony either from the Biſhops or the Univerſity. This Letter ſent down to the Vice-Chancellor, and communicated to the Body, determin'd their Studies, rais'd their Inclinations, and puſh'd them upon Improvement. (m)

Articles drawn up by the Dutch Congregation in London, and ſent to Geneva, with ſome Animadverſions of Beza and the reſt of that Church upon them.

They were printed by Jugg, the Queen's Printer.

About this Time there happen'd a Miſunderſtanding between the Members of the Dutch Congregation in London. The Conteſt began about the Uſe of Godfathers and Godmothers. The Miniſters were for keeping on this Cuſtom, which no ſmall Number of the People would have laid aſide. There were ſeveral Attempts and Overtures made to adjuſt theſe Differences, but to no Effect. At laſt they drew up certain Theological Propoſitions: In ſome of which they declar'd their Opinion touching the Obligation of Things indifferent, and how far the Members of a Church ought to reſign to their Governors in ſuch Matters. To procure a greater Regard to this Draught, 'twas ſent to the Church at Geneva for their Approbation. Beza, with the reſt of the Genevians, agreed with them in the Main, as appears by their Letter: But ſome Articles they excepted to, as crudely or obſcurely expreſs'd; and ſomething they wiſh'd had been wholly omitted. The Dutch Church brought this Letter from Geneva to Biſhop Grindal, their Superintendent. And becauſe ſome of the Articles were determin'd for the Engliſh Church againſt the Diſſenters, 'twas thought fit to publiſh them in Latin and Engliſh. * The Articles are Thirty two, and are likewiſe printed in Beza's Epiſtles, with ſome Notes and Corrections upon them. I ſhall only mention ſome few of theſe Propoſitions, which ſeem remarkable.

To begin; In their 15th Article, they maintain the Church is ſome Times hidden, by which, 'tis ſuppos'd, they muſt mean Inviſible. The 20th Article aſſerts, That the Government of the Church is lodg'd with the Miniſters and Elders; and that the Authority of the Univerſal Church is no leſs repreſented by theſe Perſons, than that of the State is by the Magiſtracy. The 30th Article ſets forth, That as 'tis the Duty of the Magiſtrate to maintain and defend the Church of God with the Sword, even ſo 'tis the Duty of the Miniſters of the Church, in Behalf of the ſame, to crave his Help againſt Rebels, Hereticks, and Tyrants, as often as they think Need ſhall require.

The next Article is ſomewhat more remarkable. It ſtands thus:

If any Man, againſt the Laws and Privileges of his Country, advance himſelf as a Lord or Magiſtrate; or if he who is confirm'd in the Office of a Magiſtrate, do wrongfully ſpoil his Subjects of the Privileges and Liberty which he hath ſworn unto them, or by open Tyranny oppreſs them; then ought the ordinary Magiſtrates to oppoſe him, who, according to God and their Duty, ought to defend the Subjects as well againſt Domeſtical, as Foreign Tyrants.

Upon the laſt Clauſe of this Article, Beza and the Genevian Church make ſome Remarks. I ſhall tranſcribe the Words as they ſtand in the Engliſh Tranſlation.

“Your Concluſions, ſay they, concerning the Authority of Magiſtrates, as ye ſent them to us, we do not doubt in general to approve, as Godly and Orthodox. Only we could not conjecture, why in Art. XXX. ye make mention of Tyrants, and in Art. XXXI. which ſeems to arm Inferior Magiſtrates againſt the Superior, we are forc'd [ἐπέχειν] to forbear our Aſſent; not only becauſe it is very dangerous, in our Times eſpecially, to open ſuch a Window, but alſo becauſe this Matter ſeems not ſimply to be argued, (as the Thing is handled of you in this Theſis) but from very many, and very weighty Circumſtances. In this Aphoriſm therefore we abſtain; and that not at all out of any Fear of Men, but that we pronounce nothing raſhly in a Matter of ſo great Moment. *

* Strype's Life of Archbiſhop Grindal Append. Numb. XVIII. from Biſhop Moor's Library. Beza Epiſt. 24.

Theſe Animadverſions are ſurprizingly extraordinary. In the firſt Place they palliate the Doctrine, and ſoften the Senſe of the Thirty firſt Article: It only ſeems, as they expreſs themſelves, to arm Inferior Magiſtrates againſt the Superior; whereas the laſt Clauſe is ſufficiently plain and poſitive for Reſiſtance in Caſe of open Tyranny, of which the People muſt be the Judges. This Propoſition has an odd Face, and appears very ill both in Sound and Senſe. The Church of Geneva declare themſelves ſenſible of the deſtructive Conſequences. What Remedy then do they apply to prevent the Miſchief? Do they cenſure the Doctrine as directly unlawful? By no Means: This would be deſerting from their great Maſter Calvin. What then? Are they hardy enough to defend it? Not ſo neither: They are too cautious to venture their Credit thus far. They think it moſt prudential to pitch upon a Temper, to keep in a State of Neutrality, and ſuſpend their Aſſent. And why are they thus reſerv'd and unpronouncing? One Reaſon is, Becauſe, ſay they, the Doctrine is very dangerous in our Times eſpecially, and opens a Window to Injuſtice and Rebellion. Why did they not then proceed to a Categorical Cenſure, and ſtop the Paſſage? Their next Words explain this Myſtery: They don't believe the Doctrine of Reſiſtance abſolutely unlawful; but find Fault with the London Dutch Church for aſſerting the Propoſition in too general Terms; whereas it ought to have been guarded with Diſtinctions, reſtrain'd to particular Caſes, and lain under the Protection of many very weighty Circumſtances. In ſhort, the Remarks upon this Article are ſtrangely Artificial and Evaſive, and not much becoming the Pretenſions to clear Dealing of thoſe who ſent them.

To proceed, The Duke of Alva, Governor for the King of Spain in the Netherlands, was barbarouſly cruel againſt thoſe of a different Religion. This Perſecution drove ſeveral of the Reformed into England, where they were hoſpitably entertain'd. But all theſe Refugees were not of the ſame Innocence and Complexion: Some were extremely wrong in their Belief, and others no leſs ſcandalous in their Manners. This general Entertainment of all Comers, brought a Reproach upon the Government; as if England not only encourag'd all Sorts of Hereſies, but afforded Protection to Thieves, Murderers, and Rebels. The Queen thought it was Time to wipe off this Calumny, and diſtinguiſh in her Compaſſion. To this Purpoſe ſhe wrote to the Archbiſhop with Orders, that himſelf and his Suffragans ſhould make diligent Inquiry into the Character and Religion of theſe Foreigners: That a Viſitation ſhould be made in every Pariſh, and the Names of all Strangers enter'd in a Regiſter, together with their Country, Quality, and Circumſtances. They were likewiſe to enquire into the probable Motives of their coming over, the Manner of their Behaviour, and what Churches they frequented. And where any Perſons were ſuſpected, they were to give Notice of them to the Juſtices of Peace, in order to Trial and Puniſhment. And here they were not only to ſuffer for Crimes againſt the State, but likewiſe for Nonconformity to the Religion eſtabliſh'd, provided they did not belong to Places particularly privileg'd for foreign Worſhip. (n) This Proviſion was no more than neceſſary; for the Dutch Anabaptiſts held private Conventicles in London, and perverted a great many.

A General Aſſembly at Edinborough.

In July this Year a General Aſſembly of the Church was held at Edinborough. Mr. John Willock, Superintendent of the Weſt, was elected Moderator. He refuſ'd to manage that Buſineſs, unleſs upon the Promiſe of better Order than had formerly been kept: For the great Numbers, and indiſcreet Behaviour of ſome People, made the Meeting very noiſy and ill-govern'd. But upon an Engagement of more Temper and Submiſſion he undertook the Function.

Who were allow'd the Privilege of Voting.

At this Aſſembly an Act paſs'd, That none ſhould vote in theſe General Meetings excepting Superintendents, Viſitors of Churches, Commiſſioners of Shires and Univerſities, and ſuch Miniſters as the Superintendents ſhould chuſe in the Dioceſan Synod, and bring along with them.

And that the Aſſembly might not be troubled with unneceſſary Buſineſs, 'twas ordain'd, “That no Buſineſs ſhould be propoſed which lay within the Cognizance of the Superintendents, and ought to be determined in their Synods.

Conſtitutions for Diſcipline.

And as for Acts of Diſcipline, 'twas decreed, “That Papiſts continuing obſtinate after due Admonition ſhould be excommunicated: And that thoſe who were guilty of Murder, Inceſt, Adultery, and other ſuch heinous Crimes, ſhould not be admitted to make Satisfaction in any particular Church, 'till they had made their Appearance in a penitential habit before the General Aſſembly, and received Orders there for a Courſe of Diſcipline.

A Petition was likewiſe put up to the Regent and Council, That the Committee, nominated in Parliament for adjuſting the Polity or Juriſdiction of the Church, ſhould have Inſtructions to meet at a Day prefix'd for finiſhing that Matter.

At the breaking up of the Aſſembly the Biſhop of Orkney, who had been depos'd for marrying the Queen and Bothwell, was reſtor'd upon his Submiſſion. However, this Favour was not without a Mixture of Penance; for in his firſt Sermon he was injoin'd to make a publick Acknowledgment of his Fault, and aſk God, the Church, and the State, Forgiveneſs. *

And here it muſt not be omitted, that at a Convention of the Eſtates this Year, in which, beſides the Commiſſioners of Burroughs, the greateſt Part of the Nobility and Barons were preſent, there was a Settlement agreed for reſtoring the Patrimony of the Church, and particularly the Tythes, by whomſoever detain'd ſince the Reformation. This Article was ſign'd by all the Nobility, Barons, and Commiſſioners of Burroughs, who ſolemnly promiſed it ſhould be paſſed into an Act the next Parliament. *

Thomas Heath a Jeſuit taken in the Diſguiſe of a Puritan.

This Year one Thomas Heath, a Jeſuit, Brother to the late Archbiſhop of York, was ſeized at Rocheſter. He was ſent over Miſſionary by his Superiors with Inſtructions to pretend himſelf a Diſſenter. He was furniſh'd with ſeveral Anabaptiſtical and Arrian Tracts; and was to throw in a Mixture of Puritan Doctrines. This Heath, after Six Years preaching about the Country in the Habit of a poor Miniſter, applied himſelf to the Dean of Rocheſter for Preferment. The Dean, to try his Talent, gave him a Turn in the Cathedral. In his Sermon he refin'd a little upon the Church of England, and warp'd towards Puritaniſm. His Text was, that Prayer was made without ceaſing unto God for St. Peter. From hence he took Occaſion to obſerve, that theſe Prayers were not ſuch as were then us'd in the Engliſh Liturgy. As it happen'd, a Letter drop'd out of his Pocket from the Pulpit, which was taken up by the Sexton, and deliver'd to Gueſt the Biſhop. 'Twas ſuperſcrib'd to him by the Name of Thomas Fine, from one Malt, a Jeſuit of Character in Madrid. The Purport of it was to inſtruct him in the Management of his Miſſion. Upon this Diſcovery the Biſhop examin'd him cloſely. At firſt he own'd no more than that he had been a Jeſuit, but was now of another Perſwaſion: That he was not intirely of the Sentiment of the Epiſcopal Party, but endeavour'd to carry Proteſtancy to a farther Improvement, and ſet the Reform'd at more Diſtance from the Church of Rome. After this, upon ſearching his Chamber, they found a Licence from the Jeſuits, and a Bull from Pope Pius the Vth. In this Inſtrument there was a Diſcretionary Latitude for preaching what Doctrine his Superiors thought fit. This Compaſs was allow'd in order to make Miſunderſtandings amongſt the Proteſtants. In his Trunk there were ſeveral Books againſt Infant-Baptiſm, with other Heterodoxies. For this foul Practice he was ſentenc'd to ſtand three Days in the Pillory at Rocheſter, his Ears were cut off, his Noſe ſlit, and his Forehead mark'd with the Letter [R.] He was over and above condemn'd to perpetual Impriſonment, but Death releaſed him in a few Months after. (o)

A Proclamation for eating Fiſh on Wedneſdays.

This Year a Proclamation was ſet forth for keeping Fiſh-Days, and particularly Wedneſday. This Order was to inforce the Execution of an Act made the 5th of this Reign. By this Statute all Wedneſdays, excepting in Chriſtmas and Eaſter Weeks, are to be kept with the ſame Reſtraint of Diet as Saturdays, and no Perſon allowed to eat Fleſh. This Proviſion was not upon the Score of Diſcipline, but for Politick Reaſons. 'Twas, as the Præamble ſpeaks, for the better Maintenance and Increaſe of the Navy. However, the Penalty ran high; for every Breach of the Statute was three Pounds Forfeiture, or three Months Impriſonment. (p) This Faſt is rallied by Sanders according to his Cuſtom. He ſays 'twas call'd Cecil's-Faſt, and that this Miniſter was ſuppos'd to ſuggeſt the Clauſe.

A Complaint againſt the Biſhop of Glouceſter.

To proceed; Cheney, Biſhop of Glouceſter, and Commendatory of Briſtol, had lain under the Imputation of being popiſhly affected; though the Charge, as far as it appears, was only Ignorance or Ill-will. He preach'd three Sermons at Briſtol in Vindication of himſelf; but was ſo far from giving Satiſfaction, that Dr. Calfill and one Norbrook took the Freedom to attempt a Confutation of his Doctrine in his own Hearing, at the Cathedral: And more than this, ſome of the Aldermen, and other Burghers, ſent a Letter of Complaint againſt him to the Privy Council. There were ſeveral pretended exceptionable Clauſes inclos'd, which were likewiſe tranſmitted to the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners. The Expreſſions were extracted from his Sermons preached in that City. I ſhall give the Reader ſome of the moſt remarkable.

He begins with acquainting the Audience that he was not come to retract any Thing he had formerly aſſerted: That as to Matters of Controverſy his Opinion was ſtill the ſame; and that if he had one Foot in the Grave, he ſhould deliver the ſame Doctrine: That he gave them no other Directions than what he follow'd himſelf, and reſted his own Happineſs upon. After this Introduction, he caution'd them not to reſign too implicitly to the new Writers; for as yet they had not ſtood the Teſt of Time, neither was their Credit ſo well eſtabliſh'd as that of the Fathers.

Octob. 1568.

To report the Biſhop in his own Words: “ Theſe new Writers, ſays he, in Matters of “ Controverſy, as Mr. Calvin, and others, agree “ not together, but are at Diſſention amongſt “ themſelves, and are together by the Ears: “ Therefore take heed of them. Yet read them: “ For in opening the Text they do paſs many of “ the old Fathers. And they are excellently well “ learn'd in the Tongues. But in Matters now “ in Controverſy follow them not, but follow “ the old Fathers and Doctors, tho' Mr. Calvin “ denies ſome of them. As for your new Doctors, “ 'tis good to pick a Sallet out of them now and “ then.

His Doctrine moſtly unexceptionable.

“ Scriptures, Scriptures do you cry? Ben't too “ haſty: For ſo the Hereticks always cried, and “ had the Scriptures. I would aſk this Queſtion; “ I have to do with an Heretick: I bring Scripture againſt him. And he'll confeſs it to be “ Scripture. But he'll deny the Senſe that I bring “ it for. How now? How ſhall this be tried? “ Marry, by Conſent of the Fathers only, and “ and not by others. (q)

“ In reading the Scriptures be you like the “ Snail; which is a goodly Figure. For when “ he feels a hard Thing againſt his Horns, he “ pulls them in again. So do you; Read Scripture o' God's Name, but when you come to “ Matters of Controverſy, go back again: Pull “ in your Horns. I never brought Free Will into the Pulpit. I would to God it had never “ been brought into that Place. Luther wrote “ a very ill Book againſt Free Will; wherein he did very much Hurt. But Eraſmus anſwer'd him very learnedly. In this Point I “ am of Eraſmus's Opinion.

(o) Regiſt. Rocheſter, Foxes and Firebrands, Part 1.

(p) Strype Annal.

“—— Let them not ſay, as was lately preach'd here, that the Fathers had their Faults; which they had indeed: But let them all bring me the Conſent of the Fathers for theſe Matters now in Controverſy; otherwiſe I will not yield to them, nor be of their Judgment.

His Miſtake.

2 Kings 5.

The laſt Article I ſhall mention ſeems a Paradox, to ſpeak ſoftly. It ſtands thus: “A Queſtion may be ask'd, continues the Biſhop, between the young Maid and Nahaman: Whether a godly Man may be at Idol-Service with his Body, his Heart being with God, without Offence or Sin? I ſay he may; and becauſe you ſhan't think I am of this Opinion only, I will bring you Peter Martyr, a learned Man, and as famous as ever was in our Time, being your own Doctor. He ſays, a Man may be preſent without Offence. His Words are theſe, Non enim ſimpliciter & omnibus modis interdictum eſt piis hominibus nè in Fanis præſentes adſint, dum profani & execrandi Ritus exercentur.

Id. v. 18, 19.

This Inſtance of Nahaman ſuppoſes Eliſha gave him Leave to attend the King his Maſter in the Houſe of Rimmon; This is inferr'd from the Prophets bidding him go in Peace, after he had declar'd his Caſe, and ask'd Pardon. But in Anſwer to this, 'tis obſerv'd by ſome Expoſitors, that the 18th Verſe is not rightly tranſlated as to the Marks of Time. And that Nahaman did not ask Leave for any Future Latitude, but begg'd Pardon for the former Liberty he had taken, by bearing a Part in idolatrous Worſhip. And this Senſe, ſay they, ſeems to be confirm'd by the 17th Verſe, where he makes a Profeſſion, that from henceforth he would offer neither burnt Offering nor Sacrifice unto other Gods, but unto the Lord.

The Advantages of the Fathers, with Reſpect to the Moderns.

To return; thus the Main of the Charge againſt this Biſhop, was his Vindicating the Fathers, and preferring their Authority to the Novelliſts. Now one would think the Biſhop laid down a very ſafe Rule for Direction of Conſcience. The Fathers liv'd neareſt the Apoſtles, and ſome of them convers'd with them. From this Circumſtance they had the Advantage of traditionary Expoſitions. They muſt be beſt acquainted with the proverbial Expreſſions of the Jewiſh Nation, with the Cuſtoms to which the Scriptures allude, with the Force and Phraſeology of the Language; beſides, extraordinary Illumination, and ſupernatural Effuſions of the holy Spirit, were not uncommon in the Firſt Ages. And as for Matters of Government, and Ceremonies, the Ancients have ſtill a farther Claim to Regard: For here the Apoſtle's Practice, and that of their immediate Succeſſors, was an Evidence of their Approbation, and the beſt Comment on their Writings.

As to the Remonſtrance, 'tis ſuppos'd the Privy-Council ſaw thro' the Weakneſs of it. To prevent an ill Impreſſion, the Biſhop wrote to Secretary Cecil, acquainted him with the Caſe, and that ſome of the Briſtol Preachers had miſbehav'd themſelves. This Cheny in the Beginning of Queen Mary's Reign; was one of the Proteſtant Divines who argued in the Convocation.

The Queen aſſiſts the French Hugonots.

Cambden Eliz.

The next Year the Civil War between the Hugonots and the French King was reviv'd. The Queen by Secretary Cecil's Advice, treated with the Prince of Condé's Agent, and agreed to aſſiſt theſe Proteſtants: Tho' by the Way, they overlook'd her in the late Pacification between them and their Prince. The Queen ſuffer'd in her Honour upon this Score. The abetting Subjects againſt their Sovereign was not every where underſtood. For Inſtance, Seignior Bertano, an Italian Gentleman, wrote an expoſtulatory Letter to Cecil upon this Head. The Secretary in his Anſwer, acquaints the Gentleman, that the Queen had done nothing indefenſible, and that her Conduct might eaſily be juſtified to indifferent Judges: But he neither argued the Point, nor aſſign'd the Reaſons for Satisfaction.

This Summer one Tilney, a Gentleman, mov'd for a Marriage Diſpenſation. The Caſe was at laſt brought into the Arches, where the Archbiſhop, the Lord Keeper, and Secretary Cecil were preſent. The Queſtion was double, whether the Caſe would admit of a Diſpenſation, and if ſo, who had a Right to give it. The Secretary affirm'd the Queen might do it, for ſhe, ſays he, may do as much as the Pope. The Archbiſhop look'd upon this as a crude Aſſertion, and diſcover'd his Diſlike: But afterwards, to prevent miſconſtruction, he explain'd himſelf on this Head in a Letter to the Secretary. “He told this Miniſter he would by no Means diſpute the Queen's abſolute Power, or Prerogative Royal; nor how far her Highneſs might claim a Papal Juriſdiction, or act upon Precedents in the Court of Rome: But yet, if a Subject ſhould receive a Diſpenſation from the Crown, not warranted by the Laws made by her Majeſty, and the Three Eſtates, in this Caſe he queſtions whether the Subject might not ſome time or other be call'd to Account, and loſe the Benefit of ſuch a Grant; eſpecially ſince the Extent of Diſpenſations are preciſely ſettled by Act of Parliament: 'Tis true, during the Prince's Life ſuch Grants might be cover'd from Diſpute; but then another Reign might call for Retroſpections. And here he declares himſelf diſguſted with ſome Lawyers who make the Injunctions of a Prince during his own Life, not to have equal Force with the Canon Law upon the ſame Queſtion. He inſtances in the Queen's Injunctions upon all Miniſters, relating to their Marriage: And puts the Queſtion whether they are capable of any Eccleſiaſtical Preferment, in Caſe they happen to omit the Circumſtances preſcrib'd. This Order already related the Archbiſhop approves, provided the Printer had not made a groſs Miſtake in publiſhing it. For the Injunctions in the original Manuſcript run thus: That the Parties marriable muſt be ſo allow'd by Two Juſtices of the Peace; Or by the Ordinary. Whereas 'tis printed, And by the Ordinary. Now this latter Reading makes the Order much more remarkable, and ſevere upon the Clergy. However, the Lawyers were of Opinion an overlooking or Contempt of this Part of the Injunctions drew no Incapacity along with it, nor was any diſabling Omiſſion. *

The Earls of Northumberland and Weſtmoreland raiſe a Rebellion in the North.

About this Time the Duke of Alva ſent an Agent to the Engliſh Court: His Pretence was to adjuſt ſome differences relating to Commerce: But the bottom Deſign was to countenance an intended Inſurrection, to give Advice of the Progreſs, and Head the Reinforcement which was to be ſent from Flanders. To touch upon this Matter, the Earls of Northumberland and Weſtmorland were ſuſpected for Malecontents, and commanded to Court to purge themſelves: But inſtead of Obeying the Queen's Summons, they diſcover'd their Practice, rung the Bells backwards to raiſe the Country, and form'd an Army. To impoſe upon the People, and bring them into a Revolt, they threw out ſeveral ſpecious Pretences. Some of them were made to believe theſe Forces were levied to guard the Queen. Others were told all the Engliſh Quality had engaged to reſtore the Roman Catholick Religion:

ligion: And to others they pleaded a Neceſſity of appearing in Arms to reſcue the ancient Nobility from the Inſults of Upſtarts, and to ſecure the Country from being betray'd to foreign Intereſt. One Nicholas Morton was a great Incendiary in this Commotion. He is ſaid to have been ſent from the Pope for this Purpoſe, and had Inſtructions to declare the Queen an Heretick, and that ſhe had forfeited her Dominions for her Misbelief. *

* Cambden Eliz.

The Rebels now increas'd to a conſiderable Number, and rang'd in Military Order, publiſh'd a Declaration, " That they had taken the Field only to reſtore the Religion of their Anceſtors, to remove evil Counſellors, to enlarge the Duke of Norfolk, lately impriſon'd, and recommend other diſcountenanc'd Men of Quality to the Queen's Favour: As for her Majeſty they were, and reſolv'd to be always, her moſt obedient Subjects, and ſhould never attempt any Thing againſt her.

Beſides this Manifeſto, they ſent circular Letters to the Roman Catholicks to exert themſelves, and join them. But theſe Men, as Cambden reports, were ſo far from cloſing with the Invitation, that moſt of them ſent up their Letters, with thoſe that brought them, to the Queen: And from all Quarters of the Kingdom, offer'd the Crown their Aſſiſtance againſt the Rebels of their Religion.

Their Outrages at Durham.

However, the Inſurrection went on, and the Rebels made their Firſt March to Durham: And here, going into the Churches, they tore the Engliſh Bible, and the Common-Prayer: They officiated in the Service of the Maſs, had the Five Wounds of Chriſt repreſented in ſome of their Colours, and a Chalice in others. One Richard Norton, an ancient Gentleman, carried the Standard with a Croſs in it: And thus they came to Clifford Moore not far from Wetherby. Here they muſter'd their Army, and found themſelves no more than 600 Horſe, and 4000 Foot. When they underſtood the Queen of Scots, whoſe Reſcue they deſign'd, was convey'd from Tutberry to Coventry, and that the Queen's Forces were almoſt ready to incloſe them, they countermarch'd to Raby the Earl of Weſtmoreland's Seat. From hence they ſet down before Bernard's Caſtle, and had it ſurrendred. But now the Earl of Suſſex moving towards them with 7000 effective Men, they retreated Firſt to Aukland, then to Hexham, and afterwards to Naworth Caſtle. And here, receiving Intelligence that the Earl of Warwick, and the Lord Admiral Clinton, was coming down upon them from the South, with a Body of 12000, the Two Earls, with a few of their Friends, ſlip'd away into Scotland. When thoſe who headed the Revolt were miſſing, the reſt quickly diſpers'd. There were Threeſcore and ſix Conſtables, and others executed at Durham, amongſt which, Plumptree a Prieſt, and Struther an Alderman, were the moſt Remarkable. Simon Digby, John Fullthorp, Thomas Biſhop, and Robert Pennyman, ſuffer'd at York, and Chriſtopher and Thomas Norton at London. The Earl of Weſtmoreland made his Eſcape into Flanders, where he commanded a Regiment under the King of Spain; but the Earl of Northumberland was afterwards diſcover'd, put into the Hands of the Engliſh by the Earl of Murray, and beheaded at York. (r)

The Rebellion Miſcarries.

(r) Cambden Eliz.

Sanders makes a Martyr of the Earl of Northumberland, and reports, that his Life was promis'd him on Condition of changing his Religion. (s) This Hiſtorian, whoſe Principles are deſperate, and his Zeal almoſt mounted to diſtraction, lays the Miſcarriage upon the Defect of Conduct, and the Immaturity of the Project. 'Twas becauſe, ſays he, the Pope had not publickly excommunicated the Queen, and abſolv'd her Subjects from their Allegiance. But Cambden, as hath been obſerv'd, tho' of a different Religion, reports the Papiſts to better Advantage, and gives a more honourable Account of this Matter. Upon this Diſappointment, continues Sanders, the Catholicks began to be apprehenſive, that Time and Perſecution might wear off the Remainder of their Party. To prevent this Misfortune, they projected the Founding the tranſmarine Seminaries: That by ſuch a Reſerve they might be furniſh'd with Engliſh Miſſionaries to perpetuate and encreaſe their Communion. This Scheme was executed, and the College of Doway founded this Year, at the Charge of Philip the Second, King of Spain: Dr. William Allen an Engliſh-man was made Head of it. In the Year 1579, a College at Rome was founded for the ſame Purpoſe, by Gregory the XIIIth, who ſettled 4000 Crowns per Annum, to ſubſiſt the Society. The famous Robert Perſons, an Engliſh Jeſuit, was Rector of this College. King Philip founded another of theſe Nurſeries at Valladolid in the Year 1589, and one at Seville, in 1593. The ſame Prince founded St. Omers in Artois, Ann. 1596. Beſides theſe, in the next Century, Madrid, Lovain, Liege, and Ghent, afforded each of them a Foundation for the ſame Buſineſs.

(s) De Schiſmate Anglicano, lib. 3. pag. 417.

English Seminaries founded in Flanders, and elſewhere.

The Two Colleges of Doway and Rome receiv'd ſuch Encouragement, and flouriſh'd to that Degree, that when Sanders wrote, above 300 Prieſts had been ſent off from thence into England. And here he breaks out into Admiration of the Zeal and Reſolution of theſe Miſſionaries; That in Catholick Countries the Prieſthood was often courted for Intereſt and Honour: But thoſe who were ſent over hither had no ſuch Mercenary Regards to tempt them. On the Contrary, they had nothing but Poverty, Reproach, and the utmoſt Hardſhip to expect: But no Diſſuaſives of their Parents, no Loſs in their Fortunes, no Proſpect of Danger and Death, could ſhake their Conſtancy, or diſcourage them from the Enterprize.

Id. pag. 420.

To engage the Members of theſe Societies more firmly, and harden them for the Buſineſs to which they were bred, they oblig'd them to take the following Oath at their Admiſſion, provided they were grown up to Man's Eſtate.

I A. B. one bred in this English College, conſidering how great Benefits God hath beſtowed upon me, but then eſpecially, when he brought me out of mine own Country, ſo much infected with Hereſy, and made me a Member of the Catholick Church, as alſo deſiring with a thankful Heart, to improve ſo great a Mercy of God, have reſolved to offer my ſelf wholly up to Divine Service, as much as I may to fulfil the End for which this our College was founded. I promiſe therefore, and ſwear, in the Preſence of Almighty God, that I am prepar'd from mine Heart, with the Aſſiſtance of divine Grace, in due Time to receive Holy Orders, and to return into England, to convert the Souls of my Countrymen, and Kindred, when, and as often, as it ſhall ſeem good to the Superior of this College, &c. And now the Court of Rome having waited a long Time for Queen Elizabeth's Recollection, and deſpairing of her Recovery, reſolv'd to proceed to Extremities, and declare her excommunicated. I ſhall tranſlate the Bull as it ſtands in Sanders's Book, De Schiſmate Anglican. (u)

The Pope's Bull for excommunicating the Queen and abſolving the Subjects from their Allegiance.

A declaratory Sentence of our Holy Lord Pope Pius the Vth, againſt Elizabeth, pretended Queen of England, and all Hereticks adhering to her. By Virtue of which Sentence all her Subjects are abſolv'd from their Oath of Allegiance, and all other Engagements whatſoever: And thoſe who for the Future ſhall obey her, are pronounc'd excommunicated.

“Pius Biſhop, Servant to the Servants of God, for a Memorial of the Matter.

“He that reigns Above, to whom all Power in Heaven and in Earth is given, has conſign'd his one holy Catholick Church, out of which there's no Salvation, to the ſole Government of St. Peter, the Prince of the Apoſtles, and his Succeſſor the Biſhop of Rome. This Succeſſor he has conſtituted Supreme over all Nations and Kingdoms to root out, and to pull down, to deſtroy, to build and to plant; to the End, that the Faithful being incorporated by mutual Charity, may be preſerv'd in the Unity of the Spirit, and preſented unblemiſh'd and acceptable to their Saviour. The Goodneſs of God having pleas'd to ſet us at the Helm, and intruſt us with the Preſidency in his Church, we have omitted no Opportunities, but exerted our ſelves to the Utmoſt that Unity and Catholick Religion might be inviolably maintain'd, which God for the Tryal of Integrity, and for the Puniſhment of Misbehaviour, has ſuffer'd to labour under ſo great a Calamity.

Jer. 1.

“But now the Ungodly are grown up to ſuch a Degree of Power, that there is no Part of Chriſtendom in which they have not endeavour'd to ſcatter their Infection and Poiſon with their Heterodoxies; that Vaſſal of Iniquity, the pretended Queen Elizabeth of England, being particularly active, and affording Shelter and Sanctuary to the moſt Criminal of this Kind. This Woman having ſeiz'd the Crown, and by a monſtrous Uſurpation challenging the Authority and Juriſdiction of ſupreme Head of the Church of England, has brought the Kingdom, lately recover'd to the Catholick Faith, to a lamentable Condition: And thus having by Force prohibited the Profeſſion of the true Religion, formerly ſuppreſs'd by that Revolter King Henry the VIIIth, and with the Aſſiſtance of this See, reſtor'd by the lawful Queen Mary, of famous Memory, ſhe has given in to the Misbelief of the Hereticks, diſmiſs'd the Nobility from the Council Board, and furniſhing it with People who have neither Birth nor Principles to recommend them, has diſcountenanc'd the Catholicks, and reſtor'd the ſcandalous Preachers and Miniſters of Iniquity to their former Poſts. The Sacrifice of the Maſs, the ſtated Prayers and Faſts, the Diſtinctions of Diet, Cœlibacy, and other Catholick Ceremonies, are thrown out of Uſe. And inſtead of theſe, ſhe has order'd Books ſtuff'd with downright Heresy, to be publickly recommended to the Kingdom, and commanded her Subjects to comply with ungodly Myſteries, practis'd by her ſelf upon Calvin's Directions: She has farther preſum'd to deprive the Biſhops, Rectors of Churches, and other Catholick Prieſts of their Churches and Benefices, and barr'd them the Exerciſe of their Function, diſpos'd of their Preferments to Hereticks, undertaken the Cognizance of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, forbid the Prelates, Clergy, and Laity, the Acknowledgment of the Superiority of the Church of Rome, or to obey the Precepts and canonical Sanctions of that Communion, brought a great many to a Compliance with her ſcandalous Laws, to a Renunciation of the Biſhop of Rome, to forſwear all Obedience to him, and by the ſame ſolemn Engagement of an Oath, to acknowledge her ſole Sovereign, both in Temporal and Spiritual Matters: Executing the Penalties of her Statutes upon thoſe who continue in the Unity of the Catholick Faith, pay their cuſtomary Obedience to us, and refuſe to ſubmit to her Innovations: To which may be added her Impriſoning the Catholick Biſhops and Prieſts: In which Durance, a great many after a long Hardſhip, have ended their Days.

“All theſe Things being ſo notorious over all Europe, and prov'd by ſo much unqueſtionable Evidence, as not to admit of any Excuſe, Apology, or Colour of Evaſion: Conſidering wicked and intolerable Practice has been multiplied to ſo many Inſtances, that the Perſecution of the Faithful grows worſe and worſe, and the Batteries are played with more Force upon Religion, and all by the Means and Inſtigation of the ſaid Elizabeth; Conſidering her Mind is ſo far harden'd, as not only to deſpiſe the wholeſome Advice and Sollicitations of Catholick Princes, for her Converſion, but likewiſe to refuſe admitting the Nuncio ſent to her from this See: Theſe Things conſider'd, we are conſtrain'd to have Recourſe to thoſe Remedies which Juſtice ſuggeſts, being extremely troubled at the Neceſſity of ſuch an Application; and that we ſhould be driven to the Uſe of rugged Expedients againſt a Lady, whoſe Anceſtors have been ſo ſerviceable to the Intereſt of Chriſtianity.

“In Virtue therefore of his Authority, who has been pleaſed to advance us to the ſupreme Seat of Juſtice, tho' underproportion'd to ſupport ſo great a Weight, we out of the Plenitude of our Apoſtolical Authority, declare the aforeſaid Elizabeth an Heretick, and an Encourager of Hereticks. And that thoſe who adhere to her in the Practices above-mention'd, lie under the Cenſure of an Anathema, and are cut off from the Unity of the Body of Chriſt: We likewiſe declare the ſaid Elizabeth depriv'd of the pretended Right to the Kingdom above-mention'd, and of all Dominion, Dignity, and Privilege whatſoever: And that all the Nobility and Subjects of the ſaid Realm, who have ſworn to her in any Manner whatſoever, are for ever abſolv'd from any ſuch Oath, and from all Obligation of Fidelity and Allegiance; and by Virtue of theſe Preſents we actually abſolve them, and deprive the ſaid Elizabeth of the pretended Right to the Crown, and all other Pre-eminencies and Privileges above-mention'd. We likewiſe command all the Nobility, Subjects, and others above-mention'd, that they don't preſume to obey her Orders, Commands, or Laws for the Future: And thoſe who Act otherwiſe, are involv'd in the ſame Sentence of Excommunication. And becauſe the conveying this original Inſtrument to all Places "requiſite, may be impracticable, our Pleaſure "is, that a Tranſcript atteſted by a publick "Notary, and ſeal'd with the Seal of a Prelate, "or that of his Court, ſhall have the ſame Credit every where, both judicially and extrajudicially, as if the Original it ſelf was exhibited. Dated at Rome, at St. Peters, in the Year "of the Incarnation of our Lord, One thouſand five hundred and ſixty nine, and the Fifth "Year of our Popedom.

About Two Years after, one John Felton was hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd for publiſhing this Bull, and paſting it up on the Gates of the Biſhop of London's Palace. Sanders takes the Freedom to commend him for his Zeal and Conſtancy in Suffering. But he is not ſo well pleas'd with the Paſſiveneſs and loyal Behaviour of others of his Communion. The reſt of the Catholicks, ſays he, either becauſe they did not believe the Bull publiſh'd in Form, or that they perceiv'd foreign Princes of the Communion of the Church of Rome, continued their Correſpondence with Queen Elizabeth; or that becauſe Pius the Vth dying ſoon after, they were not aſſur'd of the Bulls being confirm'd by his Succeſſor; or out of Fear of expoſing their Lives and Fortunes: In ſhort, Sanders is at a Loſs upon which of theſe Motives the Roman Catholicks govern'd themſelves. However, he grants they kept on their Allegiance, and own'd the Queen for their Sovereign. And as to the Grounds of their Acquieſcence, 'tis charitable to interpret them to the beſt Senſe; eſpecially ſince ſome of them, as will appear afterwards, have ſolemnly declar'd for unexceptionable Principles.

Interrogatories put to the Students in the Inns of Court.

Ann. Dom. 1569.

This excommunicating Bull, and the late Rebellion in the North, made the Government more ſtrict in looking after the Papiſts: The Inward and Middle-Temple in London was mark'd for Perſons of this Communion, who declar'd againſt the Reformation: 'Twas thought fit therefore to put Interrogatories to ſome of the Students. To this Purpoſe they were brought before Archbiſhop Parker, and ſome other Commiſſioners of the Star-Chamber: And here, ſome of them not giving Satisfaction, were committed to the Fleet. Theſe Commiſſioners were furniſh'd with Inſtructions from the Privy Council, amongſt which the Queſtions to be ask'd, are mention'd. Theſe Interrogatories are interlin'd with the Archbiſhop's Hand: Some of them are theſe,

"Firſt, Whether you have commonly frequented the Temple-Church at Service-Time? "Item, Whether you have receiv'd the Communion in the Temple-Church as others of the "Houſe have done? Item, Whether you ſaid of "late Time, that the Marriage of Prieſts was "unlawful, and their Children Baſtards? Item, "Whether you have in your Keeping, a certain "lewd Libel, entitled, An Act to know a Knave, "or any other ſuch like, or whether any other "to your Knowledge has any ſuch? Item, You "being requeſted in your Chamber to go to a "Sermon at Paul's Croſs, whether you ſaid, "you would not hear one Knave of them all? And "that Mr. Alvey, Maſter of the Temple, ſtood in "the Pulpit like a Crow-keeper? (w) The "Two firſt Interrogatories, and the laſt but one were to be put to all the diſaffected Perſons convented before them. Paget and Stone, Students of the Temple were examin'd upon more Queſtions. That is, whether they heard Maſs in the Temple, White-fryers, or the Spittle? Whether at Maſs they pray'd for the Queen? Whether they had the Books of Harding and Dorman againſt her Majeſty's Supremacy? Whether they had no Bulls of Abſolution in their Cuſtody?

And to prevent the Spreading of Popery, and preſs Conformity in the Country, the Privy Council wrote to the reſpective Sheriffs of Counties, that all ſuch as were in Commiſſion for the Peace ſhould ſubſcribe an Inſtrument for obſerving the Uniformity Act, and for frequenting divine Service in the Pariſh Churches. Theſe Papers were ſign'd by the Juſtices in many Counties, and ſent up to the Privy Council with Letters of Information touching their Proceedings, and the Iſſue of this Affair.

Inſtruments for Conformity ſign'd by the Juſtices of Peace.

"One of the Inſtruments runs thus:

"Our humble Duties remembred unto your "Lordſhips. This is to ſignify to the ſame, "that we, whoſe Names are by our ſelves underwritten, do acknowledge, that it is our "bounden Duty to obſerve the Contents of the "Act of Parliament, entitled, An Act for the "Uniformity of the Common-Prayer and Service in the Church, and the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments. "And for Obſervation of the ſame Law, we do "hereby firmly promiſe; and every of us and "our Families, will, and ſhall repair and reſort, "at all Times convenient, to our own Pariſh "Churches, and upon reaſonable Impediment, "to other uſual Chapels and Places for the ſame "Common-Prayers, and there ſhall devoutly "and duly hear, and take Part of the ſame "Common-Prayers, and all other divine Service. And ſhall alſo receive the Holy Sacrament from Time to Time, according to the "Tenor of the ſaid Act of Parliament. Neither ſhall any of us that hath ſubſcrib'd, do "or ſay, or aſſent, or ſuffer any Thing to be "done, or ſaid by our Procurement or Allowance, in Contempt, Lack or Reproof of any "Part of Religion eſtabliſh'd by the foreſaid "Act. In Witneſs whereof, we have ſubſcrib'd "this preſent writing. (x)

On the other Hand the Puritans believing the Juncture favourable, were buſy in projecting new Schemes, and bringing the Reformation to the Geneva Standard.

One Chriſtopher Forſter alias Coleman took the Freedom to remonſtrate againſt the Church in a Letter to Secretary Cecil, and ſolicit for a great many Amendments. And ſince he delivers the Senſe of his Party, ſpeaks in their Phraſe, and argues in their Manner, I ſhall tranſcribe Part of his Letter. —

The Diſſenter Coleman's Letter to Secretary Cecil.

Right Honourable,

"I write in Zeal, and Love has compell'd me "out of a ſimple Heart; Praying your Honour "that you will not be offended with nothing; "beſeeching God to make your Honour Zealous in promoting hereafter. The godly Prophets have been many Times ignorant of "God's Will, and have done Things of their "own Affection. As when David ask'd Nathan "of the Building of the Temple, the Prophet "knowing that he was a godly King, and that "God did proſper him in many Things, bid "him do what his Heart thought good, and yet "afterwards forbad him. Again, Samuel would "have anointed the eldeſt Son of Saul. *

* He means Jeſſe.

"Even ſo the Prophet told Ezechias, that he "ſhould die. Yet afterwards he came again, "and told him that he ſhould live. It is the Nature

“ Nature of the Godly, when they know further of God's Will revealed, they are not aſhamed to tell it, and amend it. The Lord knoweth what great Imperfection is in the Holieſt. David had a great Zeal in bringing home the Ark, yet he fail'd in the Means: Gideon made an Ephod; it was the Deſtruction of his Houſe. Uzzah in touching the Ark did not well; for God will not have Man's Devices in his Buſineſs, but Obedience to his Word. Jeroboam's Policy in ſetting up the Calves, the Lord deſpiſed it. The Altar that Achaz would have in Samaria, it was to garniſh the Temple; and a fairer Altar than the firſt, was a jolly Shew for worldly Men, deſiring always outward Things to pleaſe their Senſes. Manaſſes builded a new Altar, and was reproved for it, &c. (y)

This is ſufficient to give a Sketch of the Performance, the reſt, which I have omitted, runs in the ſame ſtrein. The Addreſs, 'tis probable, was honeſtly intended: But notwithſtanding this Air of Sincerity and Concern, the Man had no Talent for Logick and cloſe Thinking: His Reaſonings are incoherent, and his Inſtances foreign to his Purpoſe.

In September, this Year, Gilbert Bourn, late Biſhop of Bath and Wells, departed this Life. He was a Perſon of good Learning, of a gentle unperſecuting Temper, and recover'd ſeveral Eſtates to his See which had been ſacrilegiouſly wreſted from it. After his being depriv'd for refuſing the Oath of Supremacy, he was committed to the Cuſtody of the Dean of Exeter, where he was well uſed. *

The Earl of Murray aſſaſſinated.

In the latter End of this Year the Earl of Murray, Regent of Scotland, was piſtoll'd as he rode through Lithgow, and died of the Wound. He was ſhot by one Hamilton, upon a private Quarrel. This Gentleman, who was in the Queen's Intereſt, had been impriſon'd by Murray, and menac'd with Execution; and at laſt he was glad to make his Peace by parting with an Eſtate to one of Murray's Dependents. His Wife, by whom this Eſtate came, fell diſtracted upon the Loſs. Hamilton being inrag'd with this Uſage, broke Priſon, and aſſaſſinated Murray. After this he made his Eſcape into France: And being taken Notice of for a bold enterprizing Perſon, he was ſolicited to repeat the ſame Practice upon Admiral Coligny. But he refuſ'd the Service, and told them, He had no Warrant from Scotland to murder in France; and that though he had taken Satiſfaction for the Injury done to himſelf, he ſhould not engage this Way upon any Motive in other Mens Diſputes. (x)

(z) Cambden Eliz. Spotſwood.

As to the Character of the Earl of Murray, 'tis differently drawn. Thoſe who overturn'd the Government, and forc'd the Queen to reſign, commended him for ſuppreſſing Popery, for preſerving the young Prince, for the Juſtice of his Adminiſtration, for his Bounty to Men of Learning, and particularly to Buchanan. On the other Side, the Queen's Friends, who were the Loyal Party, loaded his Memory. They made him no better than a Hypocrite in Religion: That he pretended a Zeal for the Reformation only to carry on his Deſigns of Sacrilege, and to inrich himſelf and his Favourites with the Church-Lands: That he had been ſhamefully ungrateful to the Queen his Siſter, and inſulted the Diſadvantage of her Sex: And that there was little Reaſon to expect that he who had us'd the Mother thus barbarouſly, would have ever prov'd true to the Son. The Queen of Scots was troubled at the News of his being thus ſuddenly taken off: She lamented his not having Time to recollect himſelf, and repent his Miſbehaviour to his Prince and Country.

Hamilton excommunicated by the Aſſembly.

The Aſſembly of the Church at Edinborough publiſh'd an Abhorrence of the Regent's Murder, and order'd the Aſſaſſine ſhould be declar'd excommunicated in all the chief Burroughs of the Kingdom; and that whoever afterwards were convicted of being either Principal or Acceſſary, ſhould lie under the ſame Cenſure. At this Meeting, amongſt other Regulations for Diſcipline, an Act paſſed for the publick Inauguration of Miniſters. This Solemnity was deſign'd to tie them to their Functions, and keep them from rambling into foreign Profeſſions: For it ſeems ſome of them had deſerted from the Pulpit to the Bar, and pleaded before the Lords of Seſſion. Upon the Death of Murray, the Earls of Arran, Argyle, and Huntley, with ſome other Noblemen, attempted to reſtore the Queen, publiſh'd a Proclamation in her Majeſty's Name, and ſummon'd a Parliament to be held at Lithgow in Auguſt following: But by Queen Elizabeth's Aſſiſtance this Party was over-born, and the Earl of Lenox, the young Prince's Grandfather, declar'd Regent.

The Church held a General Aſſembly in Edinborough at the ſame Time. And here one Mr. James Carmitchel, Maſter of the School of St. Andrews, preferr'd an Information againſt Mr. Robert Hambleton, Miniſter of the City. The Charge related to ſome Points of Doctrine deliver'd by Hambleton in the Pulpit. The Articles are not particularly mention'd. But in the Sixth Seſſion of this Aſſembly Mr. James Mackgill Clerk of the Regiſter, Mr. John Bellanden of Aucknoule, Juſtice Clerk, and Mr. Archibald Dowglaſs, one of the Lords of the College of Juſtice, were ſent from the Chancellor and Council to require them “To forbear deciding any Thing upon the Matter in Hand: That the King's Authority was concern'd in the Caſe: That ſome of the Articles border'd upon Treaſon: And that Things of this Nature belong to the Cognizance of the Nobility and Council. Notwithſtanding this Reſtraint, the Meſſage gave them Liberty to proceed in the Management of ſuch Things as lay within the Verge of their Juriſdiction.

July the 11th 1570.

This Order was thought reaſonable, and agreed to by the Church. (b) In the ſame Aſſembly Mr. David Lindſey and Mr. Andrew Hay were commiſſionated to ſolicit the Duke of Chatelerault, the Earls of Argyle, Eglinton, and Caſſils, the Lord Boyd, and other Barons and Gentlemen in the Weſt Parts, to quit the Queen's Intereſt. The Laird of Dun had another Reſembling Commiſſion to gain the Earl of Crawford, the Lord Ogilvy, and their Abbetors in Angus. And here they had Inſtructions to add Menaces to Perſwaſion, and to acquaint theſe Noblemen, &c. that in Caſe they did not return to the King's Obedience, the Sword of Excommunication ſhould be drawn, and the Thunder of the Church diſcharg'd upon them.

As to State Matters, the Regent's Party by Countenance of the Engliſh Court gain'd upon their Enemies, and with other Advantages, ſurpriz'd the Caſtle of Dunbarton. There were ſeveral Perſons of Quality in this Place, and amongſt others John Hamilton, Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, who was afterwards convey'd to Sterling, and executed on a Gibbet ſet up for that Purpoſe.

The Archbiſhop of St. Andrews executed.

He was the firſt Biſhop that ſuffer'd by Forms of Juſtice in this Kingdom. As to his Character, he had a competent Share of Learning, a good Head for Buſineſs, and was of an enterprizing Temper. The Ignominy of his Death was much cenſur'd, as very unſuitable to his Quality and Station; but his lying under a Suſpicion of incouraging the Murder of the King, and Regent, made him fall unpitied by the Generality. 'Tis ſaid, that being queſtion'd for the Regent's Murder, he confeſs'd he might have prevented it for ſome Time at leaſt, and was ſorry for not doing what lay in his Power: But as to the King's Death, he denied his being the leaſt guilty in that Matter. But this Relation ſeems ſomewhat without Ground: For 'tis certain the Archbiſhop moved earneſtly for a Trial, and was refuſed; but the Regent's Parliament had declar'd him a Rebel, and for this he ſuffer'd, without other Formalities: And to make ſure of him, his Execution was hurried, for fear Queen Elizabeth ſhould interpoſe for his Reſcue.

The Kirk Miniſters refuſe to pray for the Queen as their Sovereign.

The Regent having ſummon'd a Parliament to meet at Edinborough, the Duke of Chatelerault, the Earls of Argyle and Huntley, the Lords Herris, Boyd, and others, who ſtood for the Queen, march'd hither. And here to prevent the Meeting of the Eſtates, they order'd the Clerks to deliver up the Council-Books and Records of Parliament, and ſeized every Thing which they conceiv'd might make the Meeting impracticable. The Miniſters were likewiſe commanded to pray publickly for the Queen as their Sovereign: But this Order was diſobey'd by Knox, and the reſt. And here ſetting aſide the Debate of the Queſtion, not examining whether they were right or wrong, I can't help commending them for the Conſiſtency of their Practice. They might be Rebels; but 'tis certain they were no Hypocrites: They had Courage to maintain their Sentiment, to face the Danger, and ſtand the Event.

The Queens Declaration publiſh'd in the Star-Chamber.

The Roman Catholicks came to Church for Nine or Ten Years together.

To return to England; The Queen notwithſtanding the Provocations from the Court of Rome, was willing to ſcreen the Roman Catholicks from unneceſſary Proſecutions, and aſſure them of her Protection upon peaceable Behaviour. To this Purpoſe, the Secretary had Directions to draw a Declaration in her Majeſty's Name, to be publiſh'd by the Lord Keeper in the Star-Chamber. The Subſtance of it was, "That whereas certain Rumours had been ſpread, that her Majeſty intended to make Enquiry into the Conſciences of her Subjects, and examine them ſtrictly in Matters of Belief, ſhe would have them underſtand that theſe Reports were altogether groundleſs, and Suggeſtions of Malice or Miſtake: For though ſome Perſons have been lately brought before her Majeſty's Council, and queſtion'd in Matters of Religion; yet this Trouble was altogether occaſion'd by their own Miſbehaviour: 'Twas becauſe they had broke the Laws; becauſe they declin'd coming to Church, to Common-Prayer, and Divine Service, as they had uſually done for Nine or Ten Years together: And that unleſs they had broke off their Conformity, and liv'd in open Contempt of her Majeſty's Laws, they had never been in the leaſt moleſted.

"The Queen therefore warns all her Subjects not to entertain any Jealouſies of Rigour, nor give Credit to falſe Reports: For that 'tis not her Intention to preſs into the Retirements of Conſcience; but that all who conform to her Laws ſhall be look'd on as good Subjects, and treated accordingly.

While the Government was watching the Motions of the Roman Catholicks, and ſtanding upon their Guard againſt the Court of Rome, the Puritans gain'd Ground another Way. Under the Favour of this Juncture they ſtarted new Scruples, beat out their Scheme farther, and plaid their Force againſt the Church; for now more Objections were advanc'd, and the Breach made wider. The Habit of the Clergy, and the Sign of the Croſs, were formerly the only Things they ſtuck at: But now their Conſciences grew more narrow and perplex'd: Now they came forward in their Demands of Reformation, and attack'd the Government of the Church. Theſe Malecontents were numerous in the Univerſity of Cambridge, and headed by Thomas Cartwright already mention'd. This Man at his Return from Geneva had a ſtrong Party in the Univerſity; inſomuch that upon Dr. William Chaderton's Reſignation of the Divinity-Lecture, founded by the Lady Margaret, Cartwright ſucceeded in the Chair. And here he manag'd in a very Heterodox Manner; and, as Chaderton wrote to Chancellor Cecil, read dangerous Lectures, and maintain'd Opinions intolerable in a Chriſtian Commonwealth. Cartwright was now Fellow of Trinity-College, where there was one Chapman, who at a Divinity-Act denied Chriſt's Deſcent into Hell, and aſſerted the Unlawfulneſs of having two Livings. About this Time one Some, another of Cartwright's Party, preach'd a Sermon at St. Mary's againſt Non-reſidence and Pluralities. In this Diſcourſe he threw out ſeveral ſcandalous Aſſertions againſt the Government both in Church and State: With Reference to the State, he declar'd the Queen's Laws not only permitted, but enacted a great many Damnable and Deviliſh Things. As to the Church, he declaim'd againſt the Court of Faculties, and call'd it a Deviliſh and Deteſtable Regulation, and that he hop'd to ſee it pull'd down. 2. The Epiſcopal Function he lik'd well enough; but the modern Method of Election diſpleas'd him: And beſides, he thought they graſp'd too much Juriſdiction, and ſtretch'd their Authority too far over the Clergy. 3. He maintain'd that thoſe who had Paſtoral Charges were oblig'd to conſtant Reſidence, unleſs their Pariſh would ſometimes give them Leave to be Abſent: But Prebendaries, he ſaid, were only Exhibitioners, and at Liberty to live where they pleaſed. 4. That Excommunication, as 'twas now manag'd, had no Warrant from Scripture, neither ſhould ſuch Cenſures be lodg'd in any ſingle Hand.

Diſorders in the Univerſity.

To ſecond theſe Singularities, Seditious Libels were publickly ſcatter'd in the Schools: They contain'd a Remonſtrance againſt Wealth and Diſtinction, reviv'd ſomething of the Frenzies of Jack Straw and Wat Tyler, and moved for Levelling. Poor Men, they ſaid, were held to Labour and Servitude; but the Prince and the Doctors carried off the Product, and made their Figure out of the Common Calamity. In ſhort, this Univerſity grew mutinous to a remarkable Degree, ſeem'd prepar'd to fly in the Face of the Government, and attempt an Alteration both in Church and State.

Dr. Chaderton acquainted the Chancellor Cecil with this ill Condition of Affairs, and preſs'd for a ſpeedy Remedy: That according as he thought proper, he might either act upon his ſingle Authority, or ſtrengthen his Character by an Order of Council: That Cambridge was in a great Meaſure diſturb'd with a turbulent Humour: That Schiſm and Error were openly maintain'd without Modeſty and Reſerve: That this Miſchief, unleſs ſeaſonably check'd, would not only deſtroy the Repoſe of the Univerſity, but might ſpread from thence through the whole Church and Kingdom.

Grindal, now Archbiſhop of York, foreſeeing the Conſequences of theſe Diſputes, wrote to Cecil upon the ſame Subject. And here to do Juſtice to the Biſhop's Memory, and clear him from all Imputations of Puritaniſm, I ſhall give the Reader the Letter in his own Words.

June 24. An. Dom. 1570.

“ I am to move you for the Univerſity of Cambridge; which if you help not ſpeedily, your Authority will ſhortly grow to great Diſorder. There is one Cartwright, B. D. and Reader of my Lady Margaret's Divinity-Lecture, who, as I am very credibly inform'd, maketh in his Lectures daily Invectives againſt the extern Policy and Diſtinction of States, in the Eccleſiaſtical Government of this Realm. His own Poſitions, and ſome other Aſſertions, which have been utter'd by him, I ſend herewith. The Youth of the Univerſity, which is at this Time very toward in Learning, doth frequent his Lectures in great Numbers; and therefore in Danger to be poiſon'd by him with Love of Contention, and Liking of Novelties; and ſo become hereafter not only unprofitable, but alſo hurtful to the Church. The Vice-Chancellor and Heads of Houſes proceed not ſo roundly in this Caſe as were requiſite, in my Judgment. For reforming whereof, if it pleaſe you to know my Opinion, I wiſh you wrote your Letters to the Vice-Chancellor with Expedition, willing him to command the ſaid Cartwright and all his Adherents to Silence, both in Schools and Pulpits; and afterward, upon examining and hearing the Matters paſt, before him and ſome of the Heads, or all, either to reduce the Offenders to Conformity, or to proceed to their Puniſhment by Expulſion out of their Colleges, or out of the Univerſity, as the Cauſe ſhall require. And alſo, that the Vice-Chancellor do not ſuffer the ſaid Cartwright to proceed Doctor of Divinity at this Commencement, which he now ſueth for. For, beſides the Singularity above rehearſed, the ſaid Cartwright is not conformable in his Apparel, contemning alſo many other laudable Orders of the Univerſity. Thus I ceaſe to trouble, and commend you heartily to the Grace of God. (e)

To this Letter theſe Aſſertions of Cartwright are ſubjoin'd, viz.

Some of Cartwright's Opinions.

Archiepiſcoporum & Archidiaconorum Nomina Suſpecta ſunt.

1. Archiepiſcoporum, Archidiaconorum, Cancellariorum, Commiſſariorum, &c. (ut hodie apud nos ſunt) Munera, Apoſtolica Inſtitutione non nituntur, cui reſtituendæ quiſq; pro ſua Vocatione ſtudere debet; (Intelligo autem id pro Vocatione ſua) ut Magiſtratus Authoritate, Eccleſiæ Miniſtri Verbo, ſinguli eam promoveant. Ita tamen ut nihil tumultuariè, aut ſeditioſè fiat.

2. Miniſtrorum Electio quæ apud nos eſt ab Inſtitutione Apoſtolica deflexit, cui reſtituendæ, ſic ut prædictum eſt, ſinguli ſtudere debent. Nolim autem me putet quiſpiam omnes damnare, tanquàm a Miniſterio alienos, qui ad illam Inſtitutionem hactenus non fuerint Cooptati.

Theſe Propoſitions were deliver'd by Cartwright to the Vice-Chancellor as his Opinion. The Archbiſhop inform'd the Chancellor of ſome other Heterodoxies held by this Divine; but thoſe ſhall be poſtpon'd a little to be mention'd with the reſt.

On the other Hand, Cartwright and his Friends wrote to the Chancellor, and endeavour'd to juſtify their Conduct.

Being thus ſolicited, Cecil endeavour'd to take up the Controverſy, and give Satisfaction, by gentle Applications. In his Letter wrote to the Heads of the Univerſity, he premis'd a favourable Conſtruction of Cartwright's Singularities: That he ſeem'd to advance theſe Novelties out of no Ill-meaning or Pride: That he thought it Part of his Buſineſs to examine the Reſemblance of the preſent Church, with that in the Apoſtles Time, and draw a Compariſon between them. After this gentle Repreſentation of Cartwright's Caſe, he in direct Terms forbids him diſcuſſing theſe Queſtions, either in his Lectures or Sermons, 'till farther Order: And that in the Interim, the other Party ſhould forbear Diſputing upon the Points conteſted. And as for ſilencing and ſettling the Controverſy, the Chancellor is willing to refer that Matter to the Deciſion of the Heads.

Aug. 1570.

The Matter being thus put into the Hands of the Vice-Chancellor and Doctors, Cartwright was injoin'd to forbear reading, not only upon the Points debated, but had Orders not to appear in the Chair. During this Suſpenſion Endeavours were uſed to bring him off his erroneous Opinions. But it ſeems Favour and Application was loſt upon him: He grew more harden'd in his Miſtakes by kind Uſage; ſo that at laſt they concluded it neceſſary to remove him from the Chair. And with this Reſolution Whitgift, the Vice-Chancellor, and the reſt of the Heads, acquainted Cecil. In their Letter to this Chancellor, they incloſ'd a Copy of Cartwright's Propoſitions, ſign'd by himſelf. Theſe were more crudely expreſs'd, and more liable to Cenſure, than thoſe complain'd of by Archbiſhop Grindal: For Cartwright was now gone off to remoter Diſtance, and grew worſe upon Time. The Aſſertions are theſe:

He goes farther in his Heterodoxies.

I. The Names and Functions of Archbiſhops and Archdeacons ought to be ſuppreſs'd.

II. The Names of lawful Miniſters in the Church, ſuch as Biſhops and Deacons, when abſtracted from the Office deſcribed in the Holy Scripture, are likewiſe to be rejected, and the whole brought back to Apoſtolical Inſtitution. And thus the Biſhops Function ought to be limited to Praying and Preaching, and the Deacons to taking Care of the Poor.

III. The Government of the Church ought not to be entruſted with Biſhops Chancellors, or Archdeacons Officials, but lodg'd in the Hands of the Miniſter and Elders of the ſame Church.

IV. That the Miniſtry ought not to go looſe and at large; but that every one ought to be tied to a particular Congregation.

V. That no Body ought to ſolicit for the Function of a Miniſter, nor ſtand Candidate, as it were, for that Imployment.

VI. That Miniſters ought not to be ordain'd by the ſole Authority of the Biſhop, much leſs are they to receive Orders in a Study, or ſuch private Place; but this Office ought to be conferr'd by a publick Choice of the Congregation.

Aſſertions maintain'd by him and his Party.

Beſides theſe Heterodoxies and Miſrepreſentations of the Government of the Church, there were ſeveral other unſound Propoſitions maintain'd by Cartwright and his Party. And of theſe the Chancellor had an Account ſent him this Year. They are rang'd under the following Articles:

I. In Reforming the Church 'tis neceſſary to proceed upon the firſt Model, and bring every Thing up to Apoſtolical Inſtitution.

II. None ought to be admitted into the Miniſtry unleſs qualified for Teaching. And thoſe who have no Talent for this Function, ought to forfeit their Character, and be diſcharged.

(e) Paper Office.

III. Preaching, Prayers, and Adminiſtring the Sacraments, ought to be perform'd by the ſame Perſon. From hence it follows, that thoſe who are not Miniſters of the Word, that is, thoſe who can't preach, ought neither to pray publickly for the Congregation, nor adminſter the Sacraments.

IV. Popiſh Prieſts have no Authority to be Miniſters of the Goſpel by Virtue of their own Ordinations.

V. Nothing but Canonical Scripture ought to be publickly read in the Church.

VI. The Church Liturgy ought to be ſo form'd for Publick Service, that no Allowance ſhould be left for private Prayer or Reading; but that all the Audience ſhould attend to the Miniſter, whether Preaching or Praying.

VII. That the Office of burying the Dead belongs no more to the Miniſter than to the reſt of the Pariſh.

VIII. That all Portions of Scripture, all Names and Diſtinctions of God Almighty, are to be be treated with the ſame Reverence and Regard. And therefore 'tis againſt Reaſon to enjoin the People to ſtand at the reading of the Goſpel, or to bow and pull off their Hats at the Name of Jeſus.

IX. That Sitting at the Holy Communion is as lawful and defenſible a Poſture as Kneeling or ſtanding; and over and above, is more convenient, becauſe it gives the better Image of a Supper.

X. That the Sacraments ought not to be adminiſter'd in private Places, not by the Miniſters themſelves, much leſs by Women and private Perſons; as Baptiſm is ſometimes adminiſter'd to Infants, and the Lord's-Supper to thoſe in Danger of Death.

XI. That to make uſe of the Sign of the Croſs in the Baptiſm of Infants is a ſuperſtitious Practice; and giving the cuſtomary Reaſons for the Uſe of this Ceremony, makes it ſtill more intollerable.

XII. 'Tis very reaſonable the Father ſhould preſent the Child to the Church for Baptiſm, and make a Confeſſion of that Faith in which he intends to inſtruct him: And that this ought to be done without a repreſenting Form, or anſwering I will, I will not, I believe, and ſo forth, in the Name of the Infant. Neither is it to be ſuffer'd that the Child's Name ſhould be given by a Woman in the Church, or that an ignorant Boy ſhould engage for the good Education of the Infant: By an ignorant One is meant a Perſon not qualified to receive the Lord's-Supper.

XIII. That in giving Names at Baptiſm all Reſemblance with Paganiſm ſhould be avoided: And beſides, the Names of Offices ſhould be declin'd upon ſuch Occaſions, ſuch as that of Chriſt, Angel, Baptiſt, &c.

XIV. That to forbid Matrimony at certain Times of the Year, is a Popiſh Fancy: But to take Money for a Licence within the Times prohibited is ſtill more intolerable.

XV. To give any Perſons liberty to marry without acquainting the Congregation, who are the proper Judges of the Impediments, (in caſe there ſhould be any) is unlawful.

XVI. The keeping Lent, together with Friday and Saturday, either upon Motives of Superſtition, or otherwiſe, is unlawful; neither is it a ſufficient Defence to ſettle the Keeping theſe Faſts upon Reaſons of State.

XVII. Keeping Holidays is unlawful; and ſo are Fairs upon the Lord's Day.

XVIII. Theſe Words [Receive the Holy Ghoſt] at the Ordination of Miniſters, is a ridiculous and wicked Expreſſion.

XIX. Kings and Biſhops ought not to be anointed. (f)

As to Cartwright, there was no prevailing with him to retract his Errors. Being thus incorrigible, he was depriv'd of his Profeſſor's Place, and ſoon after of his Preferment in the College.

This Year Archbiſhop Parker made ſome Regulations for his Court of Faculties.

Regulations in the Archbiſhop's Court of Faculties.

I. By this Order no Faculty was to be granted but upon Petition made in Writing to the Archbiſhop, which was to be examin'd and ſign'd by him, or by the Maſter of the Faculties, with theſe Words, Fiat Petitio prout petitur.

II. The ſtated Fee for every ſuch Faculty was to be inſerted at the Bottom of the Petition by the Archbiſhop, or Maſter of the Faculties. The Petition thus ſign'd, was to be a Warrant to the Clerk of the Faculties to make out the Inſtrument.

III. The Clerk of the Faculty was to enter at the Bottom of the Inſtrument the Fee he received.

IV. The Maſter of the Faculty was to make a ſtrict Inquiry into the Grounds of the Diſpenſation, the Condition and Qualifications of the Perſon, whether the Repreſentation is true, and the Cauſe reaſonable.

V. That a great Regiſter ſhall be kept by the Maſter of the Faculties, or ſuch as the Archbiſhop ſhall appoint, in which all Diſpenſations ſealed ſhall be recorded at Length, with a Specification of the Day and Time.

VI. That all Bonds taken for the Indemnity of the Office ſhall be kept in the Archbiſhop's Houſe, in the Cuſtody of ſuch as he ſhall appoint.

VII. That no Diſpenſation ſhall paſs pro Minore under Eighteen Years at leaſt, without the expreſs Aſſent of the Archbiſhop. And here a true Certificate of the Perſon's Age was to be given in, and his Friends bound for his being a Clergyman. (g) There are ſome other Regulations, but what is already mention'd may be ſufficient to ſhew the Archbiſhop's Precaution to prevent the Miſmanagement of his Courts.

Diſputes about the Form and Kind of the ſacramental Bread.

Notwithſtanding the Care which had been taken for Uniformity in the Ceremonies of the Church, ſome ſingularities were ſtill kept on Foot, even by thoſe who frequented our Communion. For Inſtance, there was different Practice in the Form of the ſacramental Bread. In moſt Churches it was round like a Wafer: But in others the Figure was different, and like Pieces of common Bread. The Wafer Form had been ſettled by the Archbiſhop, and Grindal Biſhop of London: However, the People were not every where reſigning enough to be govern'd by their Authority. The Court was ſhock'd at the Diſagreement in ſo ſolemn a Part of Religion. And Secretary Cecil deſir'd Parker to inform him how the Biſhops had order'd this Matter. The Archbiſhop acquainted him in a Letter, that the Biſhop of London and himſelf had ſettled this Circumſtance in the Manner above-mention'd: And that they conceiv'd their Order conformable to the Queen's Injunctions. He therefore deſires the Secretary to think upon ſome Expedient for general Compliance. And whether this was to be done by Proclamation or otherwiſe, (h) is referr'd to the Prudence of this Miniſter.

There was a farther Controverſy about the Kind of the Bread, whether it was to be Wafers, or common Bread. The Archbiſhop determin'd for Wafer-bread: And thus it was directed in his Injunctions to the Clergy. But tho' this Order generally prevail'd, yet in ſome Places, both at Court and elſewhere, the Uſage was otherwiſe. This Diverſity occaſioning ſome Diſputes, the Archbiſhop wrote another Letter to Secretary Cecil in Defence of his Conduct.

“ He acquaints him what Difference of Opinion there was in the Kingdom touching this Matter: That the greateſt Part of Proteſtants thought it moſt proper to adminiſter the Holy Euchariſt in Wafer-bread, as the Injunctions preſcrib'd: But that diverſe others, of what Spirit he could not tell, would have the Loaf-Bread. That once at an Aſſizes, one Fogg would have indicted a Prieſt for uſing Wafer-Bread; Where, by Conſequence, the Charge would have fall'n upon the Archbiſhop for injoining it. Mr. Southcotts and Mr. Gerrard, two of the Judges, viſited the Archbiſhop, and debated this Matter. And here Parker gave his Reaſons why the Controverſy ought to be determin'd by the Injunctions.

The Archbiſhop's Letter to Secretary Cecil.

“ Firſt, He acquainted them, that the Queen diſcourſing him upon this Point, inſiſted upon the Proviſo in the Act of Uniformity: By this Clauſe, in Caſe any Contempt or Irreverence ſhould be us'd in the Ceremonies or Rites of the Church, the Queen by the Advice of her Commiſſioners or Metropolitan, is impower'd to ordain and publiſh ſuch farther Ceremonies as may be moſt for the Reverence of Chriſt's Holy Myſteries and Sacraments. That by Virtue of this Proviſo her Majeſty publiſh'd farther Orders in her Injunctions, both for the Communion-Bread, and for placing the Tables within the Choir. That the Preſſing the Statutes againſt the Injunctions, and making Compariſons between them, is a Failure of Reſpect to the Crown: And beſides, this Reaſoning goes upon a Miſtake; for theſe Two Authorities are ſo far from claſhing, that the Injunctions are ſupported by a Proviſo in the Statute.

And whereas 'tis ſaid in the Rubrick that, To remove the Superſtition which any Man has, or might have in the Bread and Wine, it ſhall ſuffice that the Bread be ſuch as is uſually eaten at the Table with other Meats. Now theſe Words the Archbiſhop interprets to a Toleration, rather than an Appointment: And that the Rubrick only indulges ſuch a Latitude when either Wafer-bread cannot be procur'd, or when there is any juſt Fear of ſuperſtitious Opinions in the Uſe of it. Theſe Reaſons determin'd the Archbiſhop, and others of his Order for Wafer-bread. He thinks the Matter not very Material in it ſelf, but the Queen's Injunctions, as he goes on, ought to be obey'd: And over and above, the greateſt Part of her Subjects are not reconcil'd to receiving the Sacrament in common Bread, tho' as he was inform'd, the Court had begun this Uſage. (i)

(i) MSS. Petit. Strype's Life of Archbiſhop Parker.

And to the Queen.

About this Time the Archbiſhop wrote to the Queen to ſtop the Innovations projected, and Redreſs the Grievances of the Church. He complains that ſome People out of miſtaken Opinion, and others upon mercenary Views, mov'd for ſuppreſſing the Name and Function of Archbiſhops: That if theſe Men could compaſs their Deſigns ſo far as to put down the Office, or maim the Juriſdiction, he humbly conceives her Majeſty's Privy Council might be ſomewhat embarraſs'd: And that neither the Clergy, nor the Laity would be ſo eaſily govern'd: And here he laments the Diſſolution of Manners in the Latter, and the Avarice of Patrons in preſenting upon unreaſonable Conditions. He proceeds to put her Majeſty in mind to what Degree the Clergy were impoveriſh'd: That Arrearages of Tenths and Subſidies paid in a great Meaſure by their Predeceſſors, were exacted of them: And that as far as the Reign of King Henry the VIIIth: Their Poverty was ſo Remarkable that he was forc'd to ſink his Revenues, and wave the Rights of his See, to make their Condition more tolerable: That if the Clergy were reduc'd to beggary, Religion muſt ſuffer with them: That ſuch Circumſtances of Diſadvantage would unqualify them for their Function: And thus, as 'tis found upon Experiment, their whole Buſineſs would be not to Study, but to Live. And of this he gives ſomething of an Inſtance in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he tells the Queen there were not Two Men able, or willing, to read the Lady Margaret's Lecture: And tho' they had a great many Preachers, yet he was afraid ſeveral of them were but ſlenderly furniſh'd for that Employment.

The Queen of Scots Two Letters to the Pope.

The Queen of Scots during her Reſtraint, had by this Time written Thrice to the Pope. In her Second Letter, dated Two Years ſince, ſhe intreats his Holineſs to recommend her Cauſe to the Princes of Chriſtendom: That they would uſe their Intereſt at the Engliſh Court, and ſolicit Queen Elizabeth for her Enlargement: That ſhe came into England purely upon Promiſe of Aſſiſtance. And that provided Queen Elizabeth is reſolv'd not to part with her, ſhe may at leaſt be prevail'd with to allow her the Exerciſe of her Religion: That to her great Regret, this Liberty hath been hitherto denied her. That being cloſely confin'd, an Engliſh Miniſter had ſaid certain Prayers in the Vulgar Tongue; and that not being at her own Diſpoſal, nor permitted the Uſe of any other Religion, ſhe had not refus'd to hear him. However, if ſhe had fail'd in this, or any other Matter, ſhe begs his Holineſſes Abſolution, with a Proteſtation, that whatever her Miſtakes may have been, ſhe never had any wavering Intention: Nor meant to act otherwiſe than what might be expected from a moſt obedient Daughter of the Holy Catholick Roman Church. This Letter is dated from Caſtlebolton, Novem. 30. 1568. (k)

(k) Fuller's Church Hiſtory, Book IX.

In her 3d Letter ſhe mentions the Pope's Writing to her in July this Year. She returns his Holineſs Thanks for endeavouring to promote her Intereſt in the Courts of Chriſtendom, and eſpecially with the Kings of France and Spain. She earneſtly wiſhes the Pope may be ſo ſucceſsful in taking up the Differences between Chriſtian Princes, that they might all unite in a Confederacy againſt the Turk. And that in Caſe the Condition of her Affairs would give Leave, no Perſon would be more forward in ſuch Service than her ſelf. From hence ſhe proceeds to lament her Miſfortune, and that ſhe had loſt the Sovereignty of a Prince, and the Liberty of a common Subject: That her Country had been miſerably harraſs'd by the Incurſions of the Engliſh: That unleſs ſhe would run the Hazzard of loſing her Life, and expoſing her Subjects to farther Calamities, ſhe muſt be forc'd to conſent to a Treaty of Diſadvantage with the Engliſh: Tho', as they ſaid, nothing inconſiſtent with Conſcience or Honour, ſhould be offer'd. However, ſhe acquaints the Pope one Article was very Shocking. The Engliſh inſiſted upon having the young Prince her Son put into their Hands for Security of the Treaty. But to make this Condition the more Eaſy, ſhe might aſſign him what Governors and Houſhold ſhe thought fit. She had likewiſe the Liberty of coming into to England to ſee him, or ſending what Perſons ſhe pleas'd. And notwithſtanding he was to reſide in an unfortunate Nation, ſhe deſires the Pope not to ſuſpect the Miſcarriage of his Education. For effectual Care would be taken to inſtruct him in the Catholick Faith, and Form him to a Regard to the Apoſtolick See. And becauſe 'twas ſomewhat impracticable to report her Affairs at length by Way of Letter, ſhe refers the Pope to her Agent the Biſhop of Dublin, for farther Information.

This Year Barlow, formerly Biſhop of Bath and Wells, and now of Chicheſter, departed this Life, and was ſucceeded by Dr. Richard Curtois, who was conſecrated in May this Summer.

The Poverty of the Iriſh Reform'd Clergy.

It has been already obſerv'd, That the Reformation was oftentimes miſmanag'd to the Impoveriſhing the Clergy. But England was not the only Scene of Oppreſſion: The Iriſh Church lay under the ſame Diſadvantage, as appears by a Letter of the Archbiſhop of Dublin's to Secretary Cecil. His Application to this Miniſter relates to the Deanery of St. Patricks. He deſires Cecil would move the Queen that this Preferment might not be beſtow'd upon any Layman, nor made a Fee for the Lord Chancellor; but that the Chapter might enjoy the Privilege of their Charter, and chuſe ſome learned Divine. And here he complains of the great Want of Preachers in this Kingdom. And that the Diſloyalty of the Subjects is occaſion'd in a great Meaſure by their Ignorance. That the greateſt Number of Benefices within the Engliſh Pale are impropriated to her Majeſty, and farm'd out to ſuch as have no Care for the Cure: And that Religion ſuffers very much upon this Score. That 'tis to be wiſh'd her Majeſty would rather be pleas'd to quit ſome Part of her Impropriations for the Maintenance of the Miniſtry, who are now in a very miſerable Condition; 'tis to be wiſh'd her Majeſty would rather reſign ſomething upon this Conſideration, than convert the Deanery into a Fee for a Civil Officer, which unqueſtionably belongs to the Church. (l)

Upon 2d of April the next Year, the Parliament was conven'd at Weſtminſter.

The Queen open'd the Seſſions with this ſhort Speech.

The Queen's Speech.

My right loving Lords, and you our right faithful and obedient Subjects, We in the Name of God, for his Service, and for the Safety of this State, are now here Aſſembled to his Glory. I hope and pray that it may be to your Comfort, and the common Quiet of Us, Yours, and all Ours for ever.

After this, Sir Nicholas Bacon, the Lord Keeper, was order'd to acquaint the Houſes with her Majeſty's Reaſons for ſummoning this Parliament. This Miniſter delivering himſelf in a long Harangue, told them the Motives for calling them together were Two; one to make or repeal Laws; the other to pitch upon proper Meaſures for the Adminiſtration; to conſider what may be moſt ſerviceable for the Honour and Security of the Government.

Part of the Lord Keeper's Speech.

Under the Firſt Head he obſerves, That in all publick Councils, the Honour of God ought to have the Preference. That Religion is the Foundation of publick Happineſs: That the Motions of the State ought to be directed by this Rule: And that this World is principally ſupported by a Regular Practice, with Reference to the other. For the Right Management therefore of that Branch of their Buſineſs, concerning Laws they were to conſider in the Firſt Place, whether the Diſcipline of the Church was ſufficiently guarded: And in Caſe there was any Thing wanting, the Care of a ſupplemental Proviſion ought chiefly to be referr'd to the Biſhops, who are beſt acquainted with the Defects, and to whom the Execution principally belongs. * The reſt of his Speech relating to the State ſhall be omitted.

The Commons made Choice of Chriſtopher Wray, Serjeant at Law, for their Speaker. † He was led up to the Bar of the Upper Houſe, where after making Three Reverences to the Queen, he began his Speech with Suggeſting, "That for the good Government of a Common-Wealth, Three Things were requiſite, "Religion, Authority, and Laws. By Religion, ſays he, we are not only directed to a "right Knowledge of God Almighty, but likewiſe inſtructed in our Duty to the Queen, "whom we ought to obey, not only in Temporal Cauſes, but in Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical, "in which wholly her Majeſty's Power is abſolute."

Serjeant Wray's Proofs of the Regale inſufficient.

And here, leaving all Proofs of Divinity to the Biſhops, he Attempts to make good his Aſſertion from the Practice of Princes within this Realm. But here the Speaker does not ſeem to be aware, that the main Streſs of the Queſtion lies within the Compaſs of Divinity, and that all Arguments from other Topicks are ſhort of the Point: But having evinc'd this already, I ſhall purſue it no farther.

To engage this Serjeant a little in his own Way.

His Firſt Authority for the Abſoluteneſs of the Regale, is Pope Eleutherius his Letter to Lucius the Firſt Chriſtian King of Britain: In this Addreſs he tells him he was Chriſt's Vicegerent, and that he might extract Laws out of the Holy Scriptures for his own Conduct, and that of his Subjects. But not to diſpute the Senſe of this Paſſage, this Letter to King Lucius is plainly a counterfeit Record, and of much later Antiquity than the Age for which 'tis cited. This I have made appear in the Firſt Part of this Work, from ſeveral Circumſtances relating to the Matter and to the Stile. *

Secondly, He cites the Conquerors diſcharging Battle-Abby from Epiſcopal Juriſdiction: But this Inſtance has likewiſe been ſhewn Unſerviceable to his Purpoſe. †

His 3d Inſtance is in Ranolph or Ralph Archbiſhop of Canterbury. He cites Part of King Henry the IIId's Letters Patents, in theſe Words,

Rex, &c. Sciatis quod, dedimus Dilect. noſtro Ranulpho Archiepiſcop. Cantuarien. quem inſtituimus Annulo & Baculo. From hence the Speaker argues from the Emblem. The Ring, ſays he, denotes Perfection, and the Staff is a Mark of paſtoral Authority. And therefore, ſince the Kings gave Biſhops theſe Hieroglyphicks of Spiritual Juriſdiction: This Authority muſt be Originally lodg'd in the Crown.

Where the Speaker found this Piece of a Record, I ſhall not examine, but 'tis certainly good for nothing. For Firſt, There was no ſuch Perſon as Ralph Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in Henry the IIId's Time. In the Reign of Henry the Firſt, I grant there was an Archbiſhop of Canterbury of this Name; but then this King had parted with the Privilege of Inveſtitures, and given up his Claim to Anſelm, Ralph's Predeceſſor. * And beſides, this Delivery of the Ring and Croſier was but a late Practice of the Saxon Kings, as I have already prov'd from good Authority. And thus the Reader may perceive this Serjeant Wray, tho' a good Lawyer, was but a ſlender Antiquary.

Laſtly, He urges a Law Caſe in the Reign of Edward the Firſt. * The Precedent ſets forth, that the bringing an Excommunication from the See of Rome in Abatement of an Action at Common Law, was adjudg'd High-Treaſon. Granting all this, the Inference is far from reaching home. The Judges Reſolution amounts to no more than that the Over-ruling the Courts of Juſtice by a papal Cenſure, ſtopping the Practice of Law, and making the Government impracticable, was an Attempt againſt the King's Crown and Dignity, and deſerv'd Death.

But tho' the Pope had no Right to check the Civil Adminiſtration, it does not follow they denied him a Spiritual Authority. 'Tis plain, both theſe Judges, and the reſt of the Kingdom, practis'd on a contrary Belief, and own'd the Biſhop of Rome for the Head of the Chriſtian Communion. *

"For a Remedy of this Miſchief, the putting in Ure any Bull of Abſolution or Reconciliation to the Biſhop of Rome: The taking the Authority of Abſolving or Reconciling by Virtue of ſuch Inſtruments, the procuring and publiſhing ſuch Bulls, or receiving Abſolution upon them, is made High-Treaſon, and all thoſe who aid or abet the ſaid Offenders," to the Intent to uphold or allow the Execution of the ſaid uſurp'd Power, ſhall incur the Penalties in the Statute of Præmunire. Farther, by this Statute the Concealing or not diſcovering a Bull or Reconciliation offer'd, is made Miſpriſion of Treaſon.

'Tis farther Enacted, "That thoſe who bring in Agnus Dei, or any Croſſes, Pictures, or Beads from the Biſhop of Rome, or from any Perſons claiming Authority from him, ſhall fall under the Forfeitures and Penalties of the Præmunire Statute. By the Way, an Agnus Dei was a Loaf of Wax, with a Figure of a Lamb upon it, conſecrated by the Pope on Low Sunday. (n)

An Act to prevent the Alienation of the Church Revenues.

To prevent fraudulent Conveyances to the Prejudice of Succeſſion, 'twas enacted, "That no Spiritual Perſon, College, or Hoſpital, ſhall make any Leaſes, Gifts, or Grants of Eſtates for more than One and twenty Years, or Three Lives, reſerving the accuſtom'd yearly Rent or more, to be paid during the ſaid Term. But here 'tis provided, that nothing in this Act ſhall be conſtrued to make good any Leaſe made by any College or collegiate Church, for more Years than are limited by the private Statutes of the ſame College. (o)

(o) 13 Eliz. cap. 10.

This Remedy, tho' not without ſome Effect, did not reach every Part of the Grievance. For the Crown not being expreſly mention'd, was left in the ſame Condition of receiving Grants and Leaſes from the Clergy, as before: And thus by the Strength of the Prerogative the Courtiers made Prize of the Church: And by this Omiſſion, the Benefit of the Statute was in a great Meaſure loſt.

An Act to oblige the Clergy to declare their Aſſent to the 39 Articles.

By the next Act relating to the Church, all Prieſts or Miniſters under the Degree of a Biſhop, that have been ordain'd by any Ordinal, or Form different from that ſet forth in the Reign of King Edward the VIth, and now in Uſe, are oblig'd to declare their Aſſent to all the Articles of Religion, which only Concern the Confeſſion of the true Chriſtian Faith, and the Doctrine of the Sacraments compriz'd in a Book, entitled, Articles by which it was agreed by the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of both Provinces, and the whole Clergy and Convocation holden at London in the Year of our Lord 1562, for the avoiding Diverſities of Opinions, and for eſtabliſhing Conſent touching true Religion put forth by the Queen's Authority.

"If any Eccleſiaſtical Perſon adviſedly maintains any Doctrine directly contrary to any of the ſaid Articles, and refuſes to revoke his Error after being convented before his Ordinary, or the Queen's Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, or relapſes after ſuch Retractation, he is liable to be depriv'd by the Biſhop of the Dioceſe.

The Age and other Qualifications of Perſons to be admitted to Benefices.

The Statute proceeds to enact, "That no Perſon ſhall be admitted to any Benefice with Cure, unleſs he is at leaſt 23 Years of Age, and ſhall Firſt have ſubſcrib'd the Articles in the Preſence of the Ordinary, and publickly read them in his Pariſh Church, with a Declaration of his unfeigned Aſſent; and that every Incumbent who omits the Performing this Condition by the Space of Two Months after his Induction, ſhall ipſo Facto be immediately depriv'd.

'Tis farther enacted, "That no Perſon now permitted by any Diſpenſation or otherwiſe, ſhall retain any Benefice with Cure, being under the Age of One and twenty Years, or not being Deacon at the leaſt. And that none ſhall be made Miniſter, or admitted to preach or adminiſter the Sacraments, being under the Age of Twenty four Years, nor unleſs he brings the Biſhop of the Dioceſe's Teſtimonial of his regular Life, and of his profeſſing the Doctrine expreſs'd in the ſaid Articles: Nor unleſs he is able to give the Ordinary an Account of his Faith in Latin, according to the ſaid Articles.

"And laſtly, All Admiſſions to Benefices, Inſtitutions, and Inductions contrary to the Form and Proviſion of this Act, and all Tolerations, Diſpenſations, Qualifications and Licenſes whatſoever to be made to the Contrary hereof, ſhall be void in Law. (p) (p) 13 El. cap. 12.

To proceed; The Attainders of Charles Earl of Weſtmoreland, Thomas Earl of Northumberland, and ſeveral others attainted for Treaſon in the late Rebellion, are confirm'd. And here the Lands of the ſaid Offenders which lay within the County Palatine of Durham, are granted to the Queen, notwithſtanding Pilkington claim'd Jura Regalia, in Right of his Church: The Tryal of which Challenge and Claim, as the Statute goes on, was then depending in Sute between the Queen and the Biſhop in the Court of King's-Bench, and was not yet diſcuſs'd or determin'd. But notwithſtanding the Cauſe was undecided, the Parliament in Conſideration the Queen had ſpent a great Deal of Treaſure in ſup-ſuppreſſing the Rebellion, and preſerving the Biſhop and his Dioceſe: For this Conſideration all the Honours, Manors, Lands, &c. within the Biſhoprick of Durham, forfeited by the Rebels, and claim'd by the Biſhop, are granted to the Queen. But then, 'tis for this Time only, and without any Prejudice to his See for the Future. 'Tis farther enacted, That in Caſe the Biſhop ſucceeds in the Tryal againſt the Queen, that then her Majeſty may be pleas'd to beſtow ſome Part of the Forfeitures above-mention'd upon the ſaid Biſhop, or his Succeſſors. And here the Proportion is left wholly to her Majeſty's Pleaſure: That is, if by the Court of King's-Bench all the forfeited Eſtates were adjudg'd to the Biſhop, then the Queen might return him ſomething of his Own, and as little a Part of that too as ſhe pleas'd. (q) This Right of the See of Durham to forfeited Eſtates in Caſe of High-Treaſon, had been enjoy'd by the Biſhops for ſeveral Hundred Years; 'twas once conteſted in the Reign of Edward III, and Judgment given againſt the Crown. But for the Particulars I ſhall refer the Reader to the Firſt Part of this Hiſtory. *

An Act againſt going beyond-Sea without the Queen's Leave.

To prevent dangerous Practices againſt the State, 'tis provided by another Statute, that thoſe who had tranſported themſelves into foreign Countries without the Queen's Leave, ſhould, unleſs they return'd within a certain Term, forfeit the Profit of their Manors, Lands, Tenements, and all their Goods and Chattels whatſoever: And in Caſe they were Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, all their Preferments were declar'd void: And provided any fraudulent Conveyances were made to cover their Fortunes, ſuch Grants and pretended Alienations are likewiſe declar'd of none Effect. There were ſeveral Bills touching Religion brought in, and ſome of them gone thorough in the Houſe of Commons, viz. A Bill for Reſidence of Paſtors; A Bill to avoid corrupt Preſentations, and ſome others: But the Proceeding upon theſe Matters was check'd by the Queen, who ſeem'd apprehenſive of Encroachment upon the Regale. For this Reaſon, ſhe order'd ſome of the Lords to report her Pleaſure to the Committees of the Commons. The Meſſage was, "To tell them ſhe approv'd their good "Endeavours, but would not ſuffer theſe Things "to be order'd by Parliament. (s)

The Commons engaging ſo much this Way, 'tis probable diſappointed the paſſing the Body of Eccleſiaſtical Laws drawn up in the Reign of King Edward the VIth. The Enacting this Book into Law, was mov'd in the Houſe of Commons. * The Matter ſeems to have been concerted by ſome Church-men before the Seſſion, for the Book was newly printed from Two Manuſcript Copies. The one belong'd to Parker, and the other to Cranmer. Fox publiſh'd it with a Preface, in which, after having dilated on the Serviceableneſs of the Performance, he recommended it to the Countenance of the Parliament. But, the Queen being willing to keep the whole Regale in her Hands, the Deſign miſcarried, and the Parliament was diſſolv'd on the 29th of May.

The Convocation meets.

To go back a little to the Convocation who met in the Chapter-Houſe of St. Paul's on the 3d of April. The Sermon was preach'd by Dr. Whitgift, his Text was, ver. 6. of the 15th of the Acts. The Apoſtles and Elders came together to conſider of this Matter. From hence he took Occaſion to diſcourſe upon the Inſtitution and Authority of Synods, touch'd upon the Oppoſition made to the Church by Puritans and Papiſts, dilated on the Uſe of diſtinct Habits and religious Ornaments: And laſtly, mention'd ſeveral Things which requir'd Reformation. John Ailmer, Dr. of Divinity, was choſen Prolocutor.

In the 3d Seſſion, Cheney, Biſhop of Glouceſter was excommunicated for not appearing at the Convocation, nor conſtituting a Proxy. The Denouncing the Sentence was committed to Eaton, Archdeacon of Glouceſter, with a Purſuivant attending him.

This unuſual Cenſure was paſs'd upon the Biſhop for Contempt. It muſt be ſaid this Prelate's Conduct was extraordinary. For tho' he was in Town at the Meeting of the Convocation, he never appear'd: And, over and above, went into the Country without Leave from the Archbiſhop: That this was the Reaſon of Proceeding againſt him, appears by the Form of the Sentence. The Excommunication was pronounc'd by the Archbiſhop, but not without the Aſſent of the Upper Houſe.

After ſome little Time, Higgins, the Biſhop of Glouceſter's Chaplain, exhibited Letters of Proxy for his Lord, and mov'd the Biſhop might receive Abſolution, which was granted. (t)

The Canons of Diſcipline paſs'd in this Synod.

This Convocation paſs'd ſeveral Canons for Diſcipline, which the Reader may ſee in Sparrow's Collection.

In the Firſt Article, de Epiſcopis, the Biſhops are injoin'd to call the Preachers in their Dioceſe before them, and demand a Sight of their Licenſe, which they may either Cancel or keep by them. And after they have examin'd the Parties, and found them qualified for their Employment, they are to furniſh them with a new Faculty, but upon the Condition of their Subſcribing the Articles of Religion paſs'd in Convocation; and ſolemnly engaging to maintain the Doctrine contain'd in thoſe Articles, as altogether agreeable to the Word of God.

The Statute requires Subſcription to all the Articles.

Notwithſtanding this Caution, by the Firſt Branch of the Act of Parliament above-mention'd, the Clergy's Subſcription is requir'd to ſuch Articles as Only contain the Confeſſion of the true Chriſtian Faith, and the Doctrine of the Holy Sacraments. By this Reſtriction in the Word Only, all Articles relating to the Homilies, the Ordinal, the Churches Power in impoſing Rites and Ceremonies, and her Authority in Controverſies of Faith, ſeem omitted on Purpoſe, as if it had not been the Deſign of the Statute to bring theſe Articles within the Subſcription. However, the following Branches require Subſcription to the Articles without any Exception. And that this was the Meaning of the Legiſlature, is farther made good by Sir Edward Coke's Authority, who poſitively affirms, That the Subſcriptions requir'd by the Clergy takes in all the Nine and thirty Articles. And that by this Statute the Delinquent is diſabled and depriv'd, ipſo Facto. He adds farther, "That when one Smith ſubſcrib'd the Nine "and thirty Articles with this Addition (ſo far "forth as the ſame were agreeable to the Word "of God) 'twas reſolv'd by Sir Chriſtopher Wray, "Chief Juſtice in the King's-Bench, and all the "Judges of England, that this Subſcription was "not according to the Statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 12. Becauſe the Statute requir'd an abſolute Subſcription, whereas this Subſcription made it conditional. And farther, this Act was made for avoiding Diverſity of Opinions, &c. But by this Qualification or Addition, the Party might by his own private Opinion take ſome of the Articles to be againſt the Word of God: And ſo by this Means diverſity of Opinions would not be avoided: And thus the Scope of the Statute, and and the very Act it ſelf made touching Subſcription, would be of none Effect. Thus far Sir Edward Coke. *

* Inſtitutes, Part 4. fol. 323, 324.

However, the Puritans took their Advantage of the Ambiguity of the firſt Part of the Statute, and made this their Defence againſt their ſubſcribing the whole Number of the Articles.

In the laſt Article concerning Patronage the Biſhop is injoin'd to put the Patrons in Mind of the Truſt lodg'd with them; to regard the Intereſt of Religion, and recollect the Account they muſt give of their Management at the Day of Judgment: That they ſhould be eſpecially careful not to preſent any Perſons but ſuch as have Learning, Diſcretion, and unblemiſh'd Life, to recommend them: And that in the Conduct of this Affair, no indirect Conſiderations, no Motives of Pride or Profit, ſhould govern them. Adding withal, that he himſelf would omit no proper Inquiry to find out the Truth: And if any Fraud or Simoniacal Contract is diſcover'd, if either Money or Part of the Iſſues of the Living are ſecur'd to the Patron; in this Caſe the Biſhop is bound to make the Simony publick in his Cathedral, and elſewhere, to the Diſgrace of ſuch a ſcandalous Patron. And as for the Clerk who was thus wretchedly preferr'd, he is not only to loſe the Benefice, but be ſuſpended the Exerciſe of his Function, and expell'd the Dioceſe. (u)

(u) Sparrow's Collection, pag. 240.

This Convocation order'd every Archbiſhop and Biſhop to furniſh themſelves with Fox's Martyrology; that the Deans ſhould place it in their Cathedrals; and that Archdeacons, Reſidentiaries, and the reſt above-mention'd ſhould let it lie in ſome publick Room for the Inſtruction of their Domeſticks, and others who were occaſionally entertain'd by them. But from hence it can't be inferr'd that the Convocation believed all the Matters of Fact reported, or approv'd all the Remarks and Reaſoning of this Hiſtorian. The Church allows the Reading of the Apocrypha, and the Binding it up with the reſt of the Canon. But to argue from hence that all the Hiſtorical Paſſages are unqueſtionable, the Cuſtoms warrantable, and the Doctrine without Exception, would be a wrong Conſequence.

This Convocation granted the Queen a Subſidy of Six Shillings in the Pound, which was confirm'd by the Parliament. They were diſſolv'd on the 30th of May: And thus as they met a Day after, they ſat a Day longer than the Parliament.

Archbiſhop Parker being inform'd that Grindal deſign'd a general Viſitation, ſent him the Canons of Diſcipline above-mention'd. Theſe Canons, though ſubſcribed by the Biſhops of both Provinces, wanted the Queen's Ratification. The Queen was acquainted with what paſs'd in the Synod, and approv'd the Proceedings; but, as it happen'd, the Royal Aſſent was not given in Form. Archbiſhop Grindal therefore demurr'd to the Execution of theſe Canons: He was afraid a Præmunire might reach him. And it ſeems his Scruples were not without Reaſon; for by venturing thus far, he would have been liable to Proſecution, and muſt have caſt himſelf upon the Queen's Mercy. *

* 25 H. 8. cap. 19.

Archbiſhop Grindal's Articles of Viſitation.

Grindal, notwithſtanding he could have no Aſſiſtance from theſe Canons, went on with his Viſitation, and gave Fifty Articles in Charge. And ſince they diſcover'd the Condition of the Church in a great Meaſure, I ſhall mention ſome of them which are moſt remarkable.

By the Articles in which the Clergy are concern'd, " Thoſe who adminiſter the Communion are order'd not to put the conſecrated " Bread into the Peoples Mouths, but into their " Hands. The Prieſts are likewiſe forbidden the " uſing any Ceremonies or Geſtures not appointed by the Book of Common-Prayer.

" They were to adminiſter the Holy Euchariſt " to none under Fourteen Years old, unleſs they " could repeat the Ten Commandments and " Lord's-Prayer; nor to none above that Age, " unleſs they could repeat the Catechiſm.

" Thoſe likewiſe who either were not perfect in the Catechiſm, or refuſ'd to rehearſe " it to the Miniſter, were not to be married.

" The Communion is order'd to be received " three Times a Year, beſides Aſhwedneſday, that " is, on one of the two Sundays before Eaſter, " on one of the two Sundays before Whitſuntide, " and one of the two Sundays before Chriſtmas.

This Order, in preferring common Sundays to Feſtivals of the higheſt Solemnity, looks ſomewhat particular.

To go on: " The Articles of Religion were " to be read in Churches on ſome Sunday twice " every Year, the Queen's Injunctions were to be " read once every Quarter, and the Archbiſhop's " Injunctions once every half Year.

" No Miniſter (being unmarried) was to keep " any Woman in his Houſe under Sixty Years " of Age, excepting ſhe was his Mother, Aunt, " Siſter, or Niece.

The following Articles concern the Laity.

" And here no Perſon, not being a Miniſter, " (that is, a Prieſt,) Deacon, or at the leaſt tolerated by the Ordinary in Writing, ſhould " execute the Office of a Prieſt or Deacon in " ſaying Divine Service in any Church or Chapel.

" All Altars were to be pull'd down, and the " Altar-Stones defac'd, and put to ſome common " Uſe." Whether this was not over reforming, and going too far from Popery, the Reader muſt judge.

" At Burials, all yearly Commemorations of " the Dead, all Ceremonies which ſeem'd to " countenance Prayer for thoſe departed, or the " Popiſh Purgatory, are forbidden.

" The Miniſter is not permitted to make any " Stop between the Morning-Prayer, the Litany, " and the Communion; but to go through the " whole Service without Pauſe or Intermiſſion. " The Meaning of this Article is to keep the " Congregation together, and prevent their going out of the Church 'till the whole Service " was over.

" No Perſons are allow'd to wear Beads, or " to pray upon them in Latin or Engliſh; nor to " burn any Candle in the Church ſuperſtitiouſly " upon the Feaſt of the Purification. —— Nor " ſuperſtitiouſly to make the Sign of the Croſs " when they enter the Church.

But ſuppoſing they did not do theſe Things ſuperſtitiouſly, 'tis poſſible they might not come within the Cenſure of the Article. But if the Archbiſhop thought the making the Sign of the Croſs was always ſurperſtitious, he goes Counter to the Practice of the Primitive Church. (w) (w) Tertull. de Coron. Mil.

That in Perambulations in Rogation-Week, the Miniſter ſhould uſe no other Ceremonies than reading the two Pſalms beginning, Benedic Anima mea, Domine,* and ſuch Sentences of Scripture as are appointed by the Queen's Injunctions, with the Litanies and Suffrages annex'd. There was likewiſe an Homily to be read, ſet forth for that Purpoſe. But then there was no Surplice to be worn, no Banners or Hand-bells carried, or any Reſting at Croſſes, allow'd at theſe Proceſſions.

* That is the Hundred and third and fourth Pſalm.

And by the laſt which I ſhall mention, the Miniſters and Church-wardens were not to ſuffer any Fiddlers, Morrice-Dancers, or Buffoons, to bring their ridiculous Diverſions into any Church or Church-yard. (x)

(x) Regis Eccleſ. Eborac. Life of Archbiſhop Grindal.

To ſecure the Government from the Papiſts on one Hand, and the Puritans on the other, there was a Proteſtation drawn up to be taken by each of them. That for the Papiſts ſtands thus:

A Proteſtation for Papiſts and Puritans.

I do profeſs and confeſs before God, that I do firmly believe in my Conſcience, that Queen Elizabeth, my Sovereign Lady, now reigning in England, is rightfully, and ought to be and continue Queen, and lawfully beareth the legal Crown and Power of this Realm; and ſo to be obey'd, notwithſtanding any Act or Sentence that any Pope or Biſhop hath done or given, or can do or give: And that if any Pope or other ſay or judge the contrary, whether he ſay it as Pope, or howſoever, he erreth, and affirmeth, holdeth and teacheth Error.

The other made for the Puritans was as follows:

I do profeſs and confeſs before God, that I do firmly believe in my Conſcience, that Queen Elizabeth, my Sovereign Lady, now reigning in England, is, and ought to be and continue lawful Queen, and lawfully beareth the Regiment, Crown, and Power, of this Realm, and ſo to be obey'd, notwithſtanding any Act or Sentence that any Church, Synod, Conſiſtory, or Eccleſiaſtical Aſſembly, hath done or given, or can do or give: And that if any ſay or judge the contrary, in what Reſpect ſoever he ſaith it, he erreth, and affirmeth, holdeth and teacheth Error and Falſhood. (y)

(y) Petit's MSS.

Whether theſe Forms were drawn by the Convocation, or how far they were executed, does not appear.

As for the Puritans, they grew more hardy againſt the Church Eſtabliſhment: They either uſed the Geneva Form, or maim'd the Engliſh Liturgy, and miſled the People by preaching or praying in Churches or Private Houſes. To ſtop their Progreſs, the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners ſent down a ſtrict Order to the Church-wardens throughout the Province of Canterbury, not to ſuffer any Perſon publickly or privately to teach, read, or preach, in any Churches, private Houſes, or other Places, unleſs ſuch as were licenſed by the Queen, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, or the Biſhop of the Dioceſe. Another Condition was, that the Licenſe of the Perſon officiating was to be of no older Date than the Firſt of May laſt paſt. And laſtly, That he was not under Deprivation by the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, or any other lawful Authority. (z) This Order is ſign'd by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter, Ely, Worceſter, and Chicheſter, beſides ſeveral Civilians and others.

(z) MSS. C. C. C. C. Append. to Parker's Life.

About this Time Goodman, Leaver, Sampſon, Walker, Whyborne, Gouff, all leading Puritans, were cited to Lambeth: They were examin'd by the Archbiſhop; but that they either complied, or loſt their Preferments, does not appear. Deering, another Puritan-Miniſter of Note, was brought before the Archbiſhop, and others of the High Commiſſion. He was charg'd with maintaining “That breaking the Laws of the Civil Government was no Sin in its own Nature, but only upon the Score of the Scandal: That Chriſt's Deſcent into Hell relates only to the Force and Efficacy of his Paſſion; but that neither his Body nor his Soul went to that Place: That 'tis lawful to take Oaths when the Forms are written or printed, to mark the Senſe of the Impoſer; but to make Uſe of the Book for a Circumſtance of Solemnity in Swearing, is a ſacrilegious Addition. His laſt Propoſition cenſures the Sacerdotal Habit, becauſe worn by the Papiſts.” Theſe Aſſertions were drawn up in Latin, and ſigned by him. They ſtand thus:

In violata lege Principis, Peccatum eſt Scandali, non Facti.

Chriſtus deſcendit ad Inferos virtute Paſſionis, nullo neq; Corporis, neq; Animæ Itinere.

Juramenta ſunt licita, libris tanquam Teſſaris conſignata. Librum vero ipſum ad Juramenti Fidem adhibere, omnino eſt Sacrilegum.

Veſtes, quas verè Papiſticas vocamus, mihi videntur plenæ Offenſionum, ac mihi ſecus ad Veritatem perſuadere libentiſſimè cupiverim.

Edward Deringe.

Deering's Singularities.

Whittingham and Gilby, two other active Diſſenting Preachers, were not forgotten by Archbiſhop Parker, who deſir'd the Archbiſhop of York to undertake them: But as for the latter, he lived at Leiceſter, out of Grindal's Province, neither does it appear he was ſucceſsful enough to gain the other.

Robert Brown, who gave the Denomination to the Browniſts, began to diſcover ſome of his Singularities about this Time. He was cited before the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners. What Cenſure he received is more than I have met with: That he lay under ſome publick Diſcountenance may be collected by his withdrawing into Holland, where himſelf and one Harriſon, a Schoolmaſter, printed a Book againſt the Church of England.

Robert Johnſon, Chaplain to the Lord-Keeper Bacon, was mark'd for ſome Diſaffection to the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution. He was convented before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhops of Wincheſter and Ely. Being requir'd to ſign Three Articles tender'd to thoſe ſuſpected for Non-conformity, he refuſed to comply, and was ſuſpended.

What the Articles were may be collected from his Letter to the Archbiſhop, and the reſt, where he endeavours to come towards the Appointment, and offers his Utmoſt for Satisfaction.

Three Articles to be ſubſcribed.

Firſt, He promiſes to officiate by the Service-Book, and keep cloſe to the Rubrick; and that he would neither publickly, nor of ſet Purpoſe, make any Diſcourſes againſt the Liturgy: That he thought the Imperfections in theſe Offices might be born with upon the Score of Union and Charity: That this might be done 'till an Opportunity for a thorough Reformation preſented; to which happy Juncture every Man in his Vocation ought to contribute.

Secondly, The Miniſters Apparel he conceived might be uſed, though neither generally expedient, nor edifying.

The Third Article requiring his Aſſent to the Thirty nine Articles, agreed by the Convocation in 1562, he complied with without Scruple.

Some Endeavours had been uſed to bring the Dutch Churches, particularly thoſe of London and Norwich, under the Government of the Reſpective Dioceſans.

Sandys, Biſhop of London, inſiſted on his Juriſdiction over theſe Foreigners: And in this he was fairly juſtifiable by the Practice of Antiquity, and the Laws of the Church, as a Spiritual Society. For as a Man who travels owes the Prince of the Country where he reſides a local Allegiance, ſo a Chriſtian of what Country ſoever ought to be ſubject to the Biſhop of the Dioceſe where he dwells, provided he is Catho lick and Orthodox; for a Biſhop within his Precinct is an Eccleſiaſtical Prince, and has an Independent Commiſſion from our Saviour.

To return; Parkhurſt, Biſhop of Norwich, on the other Hand, being a Man of Latitude and low Principles, left theſe Dutchmen to themſelves, and diſclaim'd all Pretentions upon them. Neither was Sandys in much Likelihood of ſucceeding in his Claim; for theſe Foreigners pleaded a Privilege for Liberty, and that they were exempted from the Biſhops Government by Vertue of their Charter. This ſeems to have been no more than Matter of Fact; and thus the Point was overborn by the Weight of the Regale.

The Dutch Churches demur to the Juriſdiction of the Engliſh Biſhops.

To ſay ſomething concerning the Affairs in Scotland: The Lord Claud Hamilton, the Earl of Huntley, and ſome others of the Queen's Party, being inform'd that the Regent paſs'd his Time in an unguarded Manner at Sterling, reſolv'd to make a Night March, and endeavour to ſurprize him. Their Motions being unſuſpected, they ſucceeded in the Enterprize, enter'd the Town at Break of Day, and made the Regent Priſoner. But the Town being alarm'd before they could carry him off, he was ſhot by one Captain Calder for Fear of a Reſcue. He was recover'd from the Enemy by his Men, but died ſoon after of his Wound, and was ſucceeded by the Earl of Marre.

Spotſwood.

As to the Buſineſs of the Church, where the Queen's Intereſt prevail'd the Miniſters own'd her in the Pulpit, and pray'd for her as their Sovereign. This was a hardy Motion, and quite counter to the Appointment of the General Aſſembly. Knox, as hath been obſerv'd, withdrew from Edinborough to St. Andrews upon this Score. And here he met with great Oppoſition from Archibald and John Hamilton, Profeſſors of Philoſophy in the New College. Theſe Gentlemen ſtood firm to the Queen, and gained over a great many of the Students. Upon this Diſadvantage in the Conteſt, and finding the Cauſe ſomewhat unproſperous, Knox grew melancholly, and fell into a Sickneſs, of which he never perfectly recover'd. And now being acquainted with the Meeting of a General Aſſembly at Sterling, he ſent them a kind of Paſtoral Letter, in which there are ſome Paſſages not unbecoming a Perſon of Integrity and Courage.

Knox diſappointed at St. Andrews, and falls Sick.

His Letter to the Aſſembly at Sterling.

Aug. 13. 1571.

He tells them, "That the Decay of his Conſtitution giving him certain Expectation of "approaching Death, he thought it his Duty "to exhort and charge them to take heed to them"ſelves, and to the Flock over which the Holy Ghoſt "had made them Overſeers. As to the Mention of "Particulars, he ſuppoſes it unneceſſary: To "acquit themſelves well in their Function, and "maintain their Poſt, will put them upon a hard "Battle, as he calls it. A general Aſſembly at Leith reſtores Epiſcopacy.

In January following the General Aſſembly met at Leith. And here the Regent and Council were ſolicited to ſettle the Polity of the Church, and bring Things to a more perfect Form. Six of the Council, and the ſame Number of the Aſſembly, were order'd to join in a Committee for concluding this Buſineſs. Thoſe who repreſented the Council were James Earl of Morton, Chancellor, William Lord Ruthven, Treaſurer, Robert Abbot of Dumferling, Secretary, Mr. James Macgille, Keeper of the Rolls, Sir John Bellenden, Juſtice Clerk, and Colin Campbell of Glenorchy. Thoſe for the Church were Mr. John Ereskin of Dun, Superintendent of Angus, Mr. John Winraine Superintendent of Fiſe, Mr. Andrew Hay Commiſſioner of Cliddiſdale, Mr. David Lindeſay Commiſſioner of the Weſt, Mr. Robert Pont Commiſſioner of Orkney, and Mr. John Craig one of the Miniſters of Edinborough. Theſe Twelve, after ſeveral Meetings and Debates, came to a Reſolution upon the following Articles.

Firſt, That the Archbiſhopricks and Biſhopricks now void ſhould be diſpos'd of to thoſe of the Miniſtry beſt qualified.

Secondly, That the ſpiritual Juriſdiction ſhould be manag'd by the Biſhops within their reſpective Dioceſes.

Thirdly, That all Abbots, Priors, and other inferior Prelates, preſented to Benefices ſhould be examined by the Biſhop, or Superintendent, within whoſe Precinct the Preferment happens to lie: That amongſt other Marks of their Ability, their Fitneſs to repreſent the Church in Parliament ſhould be examin'd. And laſtly, That upon the Biſhops or Superintendents Collation or Inſtitution, they ſhould be admitted to the Benefice, and not otherwiſe.

Fourthly, That to Sees vacant at preſent, or which ſhall happen to be void afterwards, the King and Regent ſhould nominate Perſons well qualified: That after ſuch Nomination, the Election ſhould be made by the Chapters of the reſpective Cathedrals: And that in Regard ſeveral of the Chapters-Churches were poſſeſſed by Incumbents preferr'd thither before his Majeſty's Coronation; and that theſe Men in ſeveral Pariſhes forbore the Exerciſe of their Function; to remedy this Inconvenience, a Nomination of Miniſters was to be made in every Dioceſe to ſupply the Cures of theſe unofficiating Clergy till the Benefices ſhould fall void.

Fifthly, That all Benefices with Cure, beneath Prelacies, ſhould be diſpos'd of to none but Miniſters who actually officiate.

Sixthly, That the Miniſters ſhould have Ordination from the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, and where no Biſhop was yet fix'd, from the Superintendent of the Bounds.

Seventhly, That the Biſhops and Superintendents, at their reſpective Ordinations, ſhould oblige the Miniſters to ſwear an Oath for recognizing his Majeſty's Authority; and likewiſe an Oath of Canonical Obedience to their Ordinary.

Theſe and ſeveral other ſerviceable Orders were agreed to ſtand in Force 'till the King was a Major, or 'till the Eſtates of the Realm ſhould otherwiſe determine. (a)

Thus the ancient Eccleſiaſtical Polity was reviv'd, the Patrimony of the Church ran much in the uſual Chanel, and expreſs Proviſion was made for ſecuring the Rights and Privileges of Chapters, Abbots, and Priors.

By the Firſt and Fourth Article it appears that ſeveral of the Sees in Scotland were full at the Sitting of the Aſſembly. Now theſe muſt of Neceſſity be Biſhops of the Roman Catholick Communion; for there was very few others in Scotland before this Settlement; neither do I find any Biſhops, excepting thoſe of Orkney, Galaway, and Argyle, gain'd over to Proteſtancy. To make this this Matter clear the Reader is to obſerve, that at the Beginning of the Reformation, though the Roman Catholick Biſhops who refuſed to come in were ouſted of their Juriſdiction, and barr'd the Exerciſe of their Office, yet they had a friendly Conſideration in other Reſpects: Their Revenues were allowed them during Life, together with their Privileges of voting in Parliament. And as for thoſe few Biſhops who turned Proteſtants, theſe Prelates, beſides the Privileges above-mention'd, were permitted ſome Share of Juriſdiction, (b) that is, as much as would fall in with the reformed Scheme, and their New Book of Diſcipline.

The Roman Catholick Biſhops allow'd their Revenues and their Right of Seſſion in Parliament.

(b) Spotſwood Refut. Libel. de Regim. Eccleſ. Scotic. p. 4.

The Church all along repreſented in the Scotch Parliaments.

That the Biſhops continued to ſit in Parliament from the firſt Beginning of the Reformation 'till ſeveral Years after this Agreement at Leith, is plain from the Scotch Hiſtory and Records. Indeed thoſe who drew up the firſt Book of Diſcipline, though they had no great Regard for the Diſtinction of Biſhops, yet allow'd the Clergy to aſſiſt in Parliament when the ſame is called. Here the Presbyterian Calderwood interpolates the Text, and throws in a falſe Gloſs; for inſtead of theſe Words [when the ſame is call'd,] he puts in theſe, [if he be call'd;] as if the Summoning the Clergy might be dropp'd by the Conſtitution. And then as to their Aſſiſtance, he interprets to Advice, and not to a Right of Voting. But this is downright miſreporting the Caſe, for nothing is more evident than that a Repreſentation of the Church was always thought eſſential to a Scotch Parliament. Thus in the Year 1560, to give the Reformation a Face of Law, the Biſhops, as hath been obſerv'd, were ſummon'd to the Parliament. To give ſome more Inſtances: When the Marriage between the Queen and Bothwell was on Foot, not only the Temporal Nobility were prevail'd with to ſign their Aſſent, but for farther Satisfaction to the Kingdom, all the Biſhops then in Edinborough were ſent for to Court, and requir'd to ſubſcribe the ſame Inſtrument. (c)

(c) Buchan. pag. 667.

In the Year 1568 a Charge was exhibited againſt the Queen of Scots before the Queen of England's Commiſſioners. That this Impeachment might look like the joint Act of all the Eſtates, and carry the Appearance of a national Conſent, the Biſhop of Orkney, and the Abbot of Dunfermline, were appointed to repreſent the Spiritual Eſtate.

Id. pag. 698. July 12.

Farther, in the Year 1571, when each of the two Parties pretended to hold a Parliament, thoſe in the Queen's Intereſt met at Edinborough, where notwithſtanding the Members made a thin Appearance, they had two Biſhops in their Seſſion. (d)

(d) Buchan. pag. 766. Compar'd with Spotſwood, pag. 254.

In their next Seſſion, held at Edinborough about five Weeks after, though there were but Five Members who had a Right of Voting, two of this ſmall Number were Biſhops, as Spotſwood reports. (e) Buchanan's Account is ſtill more remarkable; for one of theſe two Prelates appear'd againſt his Will. So that it ſeems the three Temporal Noblemen which made up the Five, forc'd this Biſhop into the Houſe. And if the Queſtion is ask'd, why this was done? The moſt probable Anſwer is, 'Twas out of an Opinion, that the Eccleſiaſtical Eſtate was eſſential to a Parliament.

(e) Spotſwood, p. 256.

That the Biſhops ancient Right for Voting in Parliament was continued by the Agreement at Leith above-mention'd, I think needs not be queſtion'd: For ſince the Popiſh Biſhops enjoy'd this Privilege during their Lives, there is no Reaſon to ſuppoſe the Reform'd of that Order ſhould be denied it.

This Point may be farther made good by obſerving, that when the Presbyterian Project for Parity was ſet on Foot by Andrew Melvil, in the Year 1575, when this Deſign was carrying on, the main Difficulty to be ſurmounted was this: 'Twas objected that Prelacy could not be ſupprefs'd without ſinking one of the three Eſtates of Parliament. This, not to mention other Evidence, appears by two Letters written to Beza, one by the Lord Glamis, Chancellor of Scotland, about the Year 1576. This Lord, who without Doubt ſtated the Caſe upon the Senſe of the Generality of the Scotch Nation, ſpeaks thus:

“ Since every Church has its own Paſtor, and the Power of Paſtors ſeems to be co-ordinate by the Chriſtian Inſtitution, the Queſtion is, Whether the Epiſcopal Function is neceſſary for drawing theſe Paſtors into a Synod upon Occaſion, for ordaining Paſtors, and for exerting the Cenſures of the Church? Or whether 'tis more eligible that the Paſtors managing upon Terms of Equality, and under the Check of no Prelatick Superiority, ſhould elect Perſons into the Miniſtry with the Conſent of the Patron and People, and likewiſe be impower'd to cenſure, depoſe, &c. For keeping on the Biſhops, continues this Lord, we have theſe two Motives: Firſt, The ſtiff and ungovernable Temper of the People. The Dealing with this Stubborneſs would in all likelihood be impracticable, were it not for the Force of the Epiſcopal Character and Juriſdiction. The other Motive is, That by the ancient Conſtitution of the Realm, nothing can paſs in Parliament without the Biſhops, who make the Third Eſtate. Now to change this Uſage, and ſink this Third, would be extremely dangerous. (f)

Melvil's Letter to Beza, in the Year 1579, ſpeaks to the ſame Senſe.

“ Notwithſtanding, ſays he, the Oppoſition we have met with from many of the Nobility, we have attack'd Pſeudepiſcopacy for five Years together. The Noblemen againſt us object, that if Epiſcopacy be put down one of the three Eſtates is diſſolv'd; and that Preſbyteries cannot be ſet up without maiming the Prerogative Royal. Thus Melvil.

Idem.

And when Epiſcopacy was aboliſh'd by the Kirk-Aſſembly, in the Year 1580, the King ſent ſeveral Times to acquaint them, “ He could not diſpenſe with the Loſs of one of his Three Eſtates; and put the Queſtion to them, Which Way they could make good this Defect, and raiſe a new Eccleſiaſtical Eſtate.” To this their Anſwer was, “ That they had no Diſlike of Churchmens having a Vote in Parliament; but their Opinion was, that none ought to repreſent the Church in Parliamentary Buſineſs unleſs the Church gave them a Commiſſion.” And upon this Foot they ſettled the Point in the Second Book of Diſcipline. (g)

(g) 11 Chap. Art. 17, & 18.

To give one Inſtance more: The Aſſembly held at Dundee, March the 7th, 1598, came to this Reſolution, That 'twas neceſſary and expedient for the Well-being of the Kirk that the Miniſtry, as the third Eſtate of this Realm, in the Name of the Church, have Vote in Parliament. (h)

(h) MS. Act of the Aſſembly, Petry, p. 545. Spotſwood, p. 449. Calderwood, p. 420.

And thus to ſhew the ancient Conſtitution of Scotland, and the Intereſt the Churchmen had in the Legiſlature, and publick Debates, I have exceeded the Order of Time for the Sake of the Unity of the Matter.

To return to the Aſſembly at Leith: One Reaſon which ſeems to have diſpos'd them to con-

The Conveyance of the Character of the Reform'd Biſhops in Scotland.

ſent to a Review of the Church Polity, was an Act of Parliament lately paſs'd, by Virtue of which, thoſe who formerly held Lands of Religious Houſes, were from henceforwards to hold them of the Crown. This Statute awaken'd the Aſſembly into a Jealouſy of hard Uſage. Thoſe of the Laity who had ſeiz'd the Patrimony of the Church, had hitherto nothing but Poſſeſſion for their Title. The Reform'd Miniſters were not without Hopes therefore of recovering theſe Eſtates, and turning them to Uſes more ſerviceable. But now, ſince the Monaſteries were veſted in the Crown, they knew 'twould be no difficult Matter for the Courtiers to procure Grants from the Minor King: And thus their Title would be indefeaſible. The Monaſtery Lands being thus given up for Loſt, they were not without Apprehenſions the rich Laity might advance to farther Inroads: They might not unreaſonably ſuſpect the Biſhop's Lands, and other Branches of the Church's Revenue, might be mark'd for ſeizure by the ſame Hands. And now 'tis likely they were ſenſible of their Miſtake in breaking the old Church Scheme, and Refining too far in the Firſt Book of Diſcipline. And that the beſt Way to retrieve their Affairs, and ſtop the Progreſs of Sacrilege, was to reſtore Epiſcopacy. For when Epiſcopacy was incorporated with the Reformation; when the Biſhops Authority was recover'd, and the Sees kept full, the ſeizing their Eſtates, and the Projects of Alienation, were not ſo practicable.

Jac. 6. Parl. 2. cap. 38.

This Settlement of Epiſcopacy at Leith ſeems not without ſome remarkable Omiſſion. For it does not appear they receiv'd their Character by primitive Conveyance, by conſecrated Hands, and Catholick Solemnity. 'Tis true, there were ſome old Biſhops living who came into the Reformation: But 'tis pretty evident the new Ones could receive no Conſecration from theſe: For by their Book of Diſcipline, Impoſition of Hands was ſet aſide, and cenſur'd as unlawful. And as they had no new Form for the conſecrating Biſhops, ſo we may be aſſur'd the old Popiſh one would by no Means be allow'd. And as theſe Biſhops had no more Juriſdiction than the Superintendents, tho' ſomewhat different in the Manner and Adminiſtration; ſo it appears clear enough they had the Call to their Office, and their Character convey'd by no other Ceremonies and Authority than what was us'd in the making Superintendents.

The Power of Superintendents more particularly related.

Farther, ſince the Power of the Biſhops reſtor'd by the Leith-Aſſembly was the ſame in Subſtance with that of the Superintendents; it may not be improper to add ſomething farther to what has been already related, concerning the Power and Superiority of theſe Latter. To be ſomewhat Particular on this Subject: Superintendents by Virtue of their Office, were conſtant Members of the general Aſſemblies: They were to examine the Qualifications of thoſe who entred into the Miniſtry. 'Twas Part of their Privilege to fill Benefices void: They had likewiſe the Power of Ordination or Admiſſion, as they call'd it: And all Pariſh Miniſters were oblig'd to pay them canonical Obedience: 'Twas Part of their Juriſdiction to viſit all their Churches within their Precincts, to inſpect the Studies of the Miniſters, and examine their Proficiency. Farther, 'twas within their Power to oblige the Miniſters to Reſidence, and to deprive them for Miſbehaviour: 'Twas likewiſe Part of their Authority to nominate Members for the general Aſſembly. The Superintendents were impower'd to appoint the Meetings of Synods within their reſpective Precincts, twice in the Year: They appointed publick Faſts, and aſſign'd Stipends to Pariſh Miniſters: They receiv'd Appeals from Kirk-Seſſions. 'Tis true, the Party pretended to be griev'd by their Deciſion, might make a farther Application to a general Aſſembly. But then, if this Conteſt was kept up, and the laſt Appeal made againſt Reaſon and Juſtice, the Superintendent and his Synod, were impower'd to fine the Appellant. The Superintendents were conſtituted publick Caſuiſts for their Precincts, and authoriz'd to decide Differences in Matters relating to Church Government: And in Caſe Miniſters or others, ſhould trouble the Aſſembly, and not acquieſce in the Judgment of the Superintendent, provided the Caſe lay within the Compaſs of their Character: When the Matter lay thus, ſuch litigious Applications were to be rejected by the general Aſſembly. To take the Cognizance of Divorces, and give Judgment upon the Controverſy, was another Branch of the Superintendent's Authority. The injoining Penance for great Crimes was lodg'd with the Superintendents, and ſo was the Power of Excommunication in Caſes of Contumacy. It belong'd to Superintendents to delate Criminals more remarkably Scandalous to the Civil Magiſtrate, in Order to corporal Puniſhment. And to draw towards an End, they had a Vote in the Elections of Principals of Colleges, and confirm'd ſuch as were choſen, and none were allow'd to have Charge of Schools, Colleges, or Univerſities, but ſuch as had paſs'd the Superintendent's Examination. And laſtly, no Book upon the Subject of Religion was to be publiſh'd without the Licence of the Superintendent, or of ſuch as were deputed by him for that Purpoſe. This Extent of Authority and Juriſdiction, was granted by Aſſembly-Regulations, and all paſs'd in Favour of Superintendents, between the Years 1560, and 1572; That is, before the Revival of Epiſcopacy, at the Leith-Agreement. The Death of Biſhop Jewel.

To return to England. This Year John Jewel, Biſhop of Saliſbury, departed this Life. He was extracted from a Gentleman's Family in Devonſhire, and educated in Oxford. He died on the Twenty third Day of September, in the Fiftieth Year of his Age, having govern'd that See almoſt Twelve Years. He was an extraordinary Genius, well improv'd. He was thoroughly acquainted with Eccleſiaſtical Antiquity, a great Maſter of Style, and one of the beſt controverſial Divines of the Engliſh Hierarchy. He was no leſs Exemplary in his Life, than eminent for his Parts and Learning. But his Character and Performance having been touch'd already, I ſhall add no more.

The Queen Orders no Bills touching Religion ſhould be brought into the Houſe of Commons till examin'd and approv'd by the Clergy.

On the 8th of May the next Year, the Parliament met at Weſtminſter. The printed Statutes mention little relating to the Church: But Sir Simon D'Ewes's Journal takes Notice of a Bill for Rites and Ceremonies read Thrice in the Houſe of Commons. The Purport of this Bill was to weaken the Eſtabliſhment of the Church: To diſcharge ſeveral Paſſages in the publick Offices, and to temper the whole to the Puritan-Guſt: But the Queen, as far as it appears, was neither pleas'd with the Matter, nor the Method: And over and above, ſhe might think her ſelf attack'd in her Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy: But whatever the Grounds of her Averſion were, 'tis certain ſhe ſent a Meſſage to the Commons to acquaint them, 'twas her Pleaſure, that for the Future no Bills concerning Religion ſhould be brought into the Houſe, 'till they had firſt been examin'd

Parker (Matthew) Archbiſhop of Cant.

examin'd and approv'd by the Clergy: And that her Majeſty's farther Pleaſure was, that the Two laſt Bills touching Rites and Ceremonies read in their Houſe, ſhould be ſent to her: Upon which an Order paſs'd the Houſe that thoſe Bills ſhould be deliver'd to her Majeſty by ſome of the Privy Council who ſate there. (k)

(k) D'Ewes's Journal, pag. 213.

One Wentworth made a tragical Harangue upon the Subject of this Meſſage in the next Parliament: But how well his Freedom was taken, and in what Manner he was diſpos'd of, ſhall be related afterwards.

The Houſe of Commons came to a Reſolution, that the ſpeedy Tryal of the Queen of Scots for High-Treaſon, was neceſſary for the Safety and Preſervation of the Queen's Perſon. And to prevail with her to this extraordinary Motion, a Paper was put into her Hands upon this Argument. Sir Simon D'Ewes is of Opinion 'twas drawn up in the Houſe of Commons; And if ſo, 'tis probable it might be Wentworth's Performance; for this Gentleman was a Member of a warm Temper, and overgrown with Puritaniſm. However, there is ſomething in the Paper which ſuppoſes it to be written, or ſuggeſted at leaſt, by ſome Biſhop. Whether this was a Piece of Art or not, to make it paſs the Better, is more than I ſhall determine. But whoever was the Author, the Reaſoning is Weak and Sanguinary. To give the Reader Part of the Subſtance of it.

Rom. 13.

A Sanguinary Paper deliver'd to the Queen for executing the Queen of Scots.

The Text of St. Paul to the Romans is alledg'd to ſhew, that the Magiſtrate is God's Miniſter for the Puniſhment of Evil-doers. But what then? this Puniſhment ought to be executed on none but Subjects, and not ſtretch'd to Princes independent of the Government. In the Second Place 'tis obſerv'd, That Saul loſt God's Protection, and had the Crown transferr'd from his Family, for ſparing Agag King of the Amalekites. But here the Author forgot to take Notice, that Saul had an expreſs Command to deſtroy the Amalekites, without Exception of Perſons. The Third Reaſon affirms, That every good Prince ought to purſue thoſe to Death who endeavour to debauch the People of God in their Religion, and miſlead them to Idolatry. This is endeavour'd to be made good from Deuteronomy 13, where the neareſt Relations are commanded to be delated, and executed for ſuch Apoſtacy. In Anſwer to this, I have formerly obſerv'd, that there is no drawing a Parallel between Popery and Paganiſm.

1 Sam. 15.

Secondly, There is no arguing from the Old to the New Teſtament. The Goſpel is a much gentler Diſpenſation than the Law. And therefore the Diſciples who went upon the Precedent of Elias, and call'd for Fire upon thoſe of a different Religion, are reprimanded by our Saviour, and charg'd with Ignorance.

Luke 9.

'Tis urg'd farther, that Conſtantine the Great put Licinius to Death for Relapſing to Paganiſm, and endeavouring to ſuppreſs Chriſtianity: That he ſtands commended in Hiſtory for this Length of Juſtice: And yet Licinius was no Subject of Conſtantine's, but a Sovereign upon the ſame Level. To this it may be anſwer'd Firſt, That 'tis a Queſtion whether Licinius was an independent Prince. Euſebius in comparing theſe Two Princes together, calls Conſtantine Κρείτων, which may probably refer to the Superiority of his Title, and not only to the Extent of his Dominions. But let this be as it will, Licinius after having given ſome Provocation, made a Peace: And here amongſt other Things, engag'd not to moleſt the Chriſtians: But not long after he fail'd in the Performance of what had been ſtipulated; and thus the Two Emperors came to a Rupture: But which was the Aggreſſor Socrates does not relate. (l) But Euſebius is clear in the Point; he tells us Licinius acted inſidiouſly, broke the Articles of the Treaty, and began the War upon Conſtantine. (m) And ſince the Fact ſtands thus, Conſtantine's making Uſe of his Victory, and taking his Enemy's Life may be fairly accounted for. However, Conſtantine was too generous to take the Firſt Forfeiture. He gave Licinius his Life, and his Liberty in a great Meaſure: He did not proceed to the laſt Extremities, till that ungrateful Perſon endeavour'd to embroil the Empire, and rebell'd upon his Benefactor.

The Inſtance of Joſhua's killing Five Kings dragg'd out of the Cave, is miſerably miſapplied: For the Queen of Scots was neither Enemy nor Priſoner of War. She came into England upon Queen Elizabeth's Invitation, and in Confidence of Protection.

Joſhua 10.

Elijah's killing the Prophets of Baal is alledg'd as another Reaſon for diſpatching the Queen of Scots. But this Princeſs, notwithſtanding the Clamour againſt her, had done nothing that might bring her to ſo ſcandalous a Parallel. Beſides, Elijah was under a ſupernatural Direction, and had a Warrant from God Almighty for theſe extraordinary Proceedings. That he did nothing without an immediate Commiſſion from God, appears by his bringing down Fire upon the Sacrifice in ſo miraculous a Manner.

1 Kings 18.

The Paper has ſeveral other Arguments: But what has been obſerv'd may ſufficiently ſhew the Unwarrantableneſs of the Principles it goes upon.

Before the Receſs of the Parliament, the Puritans drew up Two Admonitions, as they call'd them, to the Parliament: In their Firſt Addreſs they repreſent their pretended Grievances: And that the only Way of Redreſs was to allow their Scheme of Diſcipline.

This Admonition being diſcourag'd, and the Chief Agents impriſon'd, they take Care to reinforce it with a Second. In the Firſt, Cartwright who writ the Pamphlet, had drawn up all the Arguments that his Reading and Invention could ſuggeſt, or his Friends furniſh, againſt the Government of Biſhops, and almoſt all the Offices in the Engliſh Liturgy. But this failing of Succeſs, he appears with more Reſolution in his next Attempt. The Second Admonition publiſh'd towards the End of the Parliament, breaks out with Lightning and Thunder, expoſtulates in high Terms, and Menaces the Government in the boldeſt Manner imaginable. The Author not only juſtifies the Firſt Application, but tells them plainly, That the State did not ſhew it ſelf upright, alledge the Parliament what it will; That all honeſt Men ſhould find Lack of Equity, and all good Conſciences condemn that Court: That it ſhould be eaſier for Sodom and Gomorrha in the Day of Judgment, than for ſuch a Parliament: That there is no other Thing to be looked for than ſome ſpeedy Vengeance to light upon the whole Land, let the politick Machiavils of England provide as well as they can, tho' God do his Worſt: And finally, if they of that Aſſembly would not follow the Advice of the Firſt Admonition, they would infallibly be their own Carvers in it, the Church being bound to keep God's Order, and nothing to be called God's Order but their preſent Platform. (n)

To proceed to the Convocation: They met at St. Paul's on the 9th of May, the next Day after the Opening of the Parliament. The Sermon was preach'd by Dr. Young, one of the Reſidentiaries. He took his Text out of the Second of the Revelations, ver. 2. I know thy Works, and thy Labour, and thy Patience, and how thou can'ſt not bear them which are Evil. The Archbiſhop made a Speech to the Two Houſes to the following Effect.

The Archbiſhop's Speech at the Opening the Convocation.

“ He began with a Commendation of the Sermon: From thence he proceeded to take Notice of the Zeal which had been ſhewn for the Propagation of Truth, and the Defence of Chriſtianity: That the Circumſtances of his Station and Character oblig'd him to be more particularly Vigilant and concern'd: That if Occaſion ſhould require, he ought to hazzard his Reputation, and Sacrifice his Life and Fortune in the Service: That for exerting himſelf, he had not only the Precedent of the late Martyrs, but of Saints of the earlieſt Antiquity; that ſome of theſe in the Firſt Century arriv'd in this Iſland, and have left us noble Remains of their Piety and Succeſs. And notwithſtanding the Inſtructions they left, and the Uſages they ſettled, are partly worn out by Time and Superſtition; yet many of them have had a more happy Conveyance, and reach'd down to the preſent Age: And thus it appears our Conſtitutions and Ceremonies are little different from what was then eſtabliſh'd. That theſe Remains of Antiquity ought to be the more Valuable, becauſe they are, as it were, the Growth of our own Country: However, had Providence been leſs favourable, and had they ſunk in the Current of Time, we ſhould not have been unfurniſh'd with the Means of Happineſs: For the Fountains of divine Knowlege were open, the Hebrew and Greek Originals of Holy Writ, were all along preſerv'd. And thus, when the Stream was diſturb'd, we might go to the Spring Head, and have every Thing in its Firſt Purity. For as that Holy Martyr St. Cyprian writes, (o) If we have Recourſe to the Oracles of God, and trace Religion to its divine Original, all Miſtakes of Frailty or Deſign, will be diſcover'd. The inſpir'd Writings will diſentangle the Perplexity, diſpel the Miſt of the Argument, and ſet the Truth in a clear Light. If the Channel which formerly flow'd plentifully, happens to fail, the Way is to examine the Fountain, and then we ſhall know what Occaſions the Stoppage. By this Method the holy Biſhops ought to govern themſelves. If the Colours are almoſt rubb'd out, if we are at a Loſs in any Part of Belief or Practice, let us apply to the holy Evangeliſts, to the Writings and Traditions of the Apoſtles. And thus let us execute cloſely upon the Firſt Scheme, and form our Conduct upon the divine Inſtitution.

“ The great St. Baſil delivers himſelf to the ſame Purpoſe: 'Tis not reaſonable, ſays he, they ſhould Over-rule the Point by Force of Cuſtom. Ancient Uſage is not always the Standard of Orthodoxy. Let the Diſpute between us be referr'd to the holy Scriptures. And what ever Perſwaſion is beſt able to ſtand this Teſt, let it be receiv'd without farther debate.

“ By the Reaſoning of theſe Fathers, continues the Archbiſhop, we are inſtructed to examine the Scriptures, to reſt on the divine Authority, and make the moſt ancient Records, the Rule to direct us. If we ſteer by this Compaſs, we can't miſs making the Port: And to come out of the Allegory, this Way we may be ſure of our Religion: And that we are not miſtaken in what Regards either Notion or Practice. From hence he goes on to congratulate the Happineſs of the Reformation; how the Darkneſs of former Ages was ſcatter'd; how Religion was brightned, and the Church emerg'd from a State of Ignorance. And laſtly, he exhorts them to avoid Squabbling, to manage in a Method, and act with Harmony: And to this Purpoſe he recommends the Chuſing a Prolocutor to the Lower Houſe.” (p) Dr. Whitgift was accordingly elected, but the Convocation was prorogued, and nothing done either this Meeting, or at any other Time, during the Life of this Archbiſhop. (q)

A Miſtake in Fuller.

Fuller obſerves, That till this Time the Biſhops had been more ſparing in preſſing, and others more daring in denying Subſcription, becauſe the Canons made in the Convocation 1563, were not for Nine Years after confirm'd by Act of Parliament. But now the ſame being ratified by Parliamentary Authority, they urg'd them more ſeverely than before: This made many Diſſenters keep their private Meetings in Woods, Fields, their Friends Houſes, &c. †

But here the Hiſtorian is miſtaken as to his Firſt Remark: For the Convocation of 1563, or to ſpeak more properly, of 1562, made no Canons. For as the learned Heylin obſerves, from the original Records, the Paſſing the 39 Articles, and granting the Queen a Subſidy, was all the Buſineſs done this Synod. *

As to the Admonition above-mention'd, 'twas anſwered by Dr. Whitgift, who examin'd it thoroughly, and diſprov'd it from Point to Point: This Performance of his, entitled, An Anſwer to the Admonition, was publiſh'd this Year. Cartwright publiſh'd a Reply the next Year, to which Whitgift rejoin'd the Year following. To this Second Book of Whitgift's, call'd, A Defence of the Anſwer, Cartwright offer'd nothing, but retir'd out of the Field, and left the Enemy poſſeſs'd of all the Marks of an entire Victory.

To proceed; there was a Dutch Church ſettled at Stamford, by the Encouragement of Sir William Cecil, now advanc'd to the Honour of Lord Burleigh and Treaſurer. This Noble-man was Chancellor of Cambridge: And at the Inſtance of ſeveral of the Heads, had ſent down ſome new Statutes for that Univerſity.

Deringe's Letter to the Lord Burleigh.

Theſe Regulations were made for a Check to the Novelliſts, and a Teſt againſt Puritaniſm. The Diſſenter Deringe was much diſguſted with the Chancellor's Proviſion, and took the Freedom to ſend him a warm expoſtulating Letter upon the Subject. Amongſt other Things, he gives a hard Character of moſt of the Maſters of Colleges, charges them with being Enemies of God, or faint Profeſſors. Names thoſe he diſlikes, and Paints them as his Fancy led him. Particularly, he tells the Chancellor, that God had ſuffer'd Dr. Whitgift to fall into great Infirmities: And that in the Controverſy with Cartwright, his Paſſion and Partiality had clearly the Aſcendant: The Maſters of Magdalen College, St. Johns, Kings, Bennet, and Pembroke-Hall, were uncenſur'd by him. But theſe were either Puritans, or ſomewhat affected to that Perſwaſion.

His Lectures at St. Paul's.

This Deringe read Lectures in St. Paul's Cathedral: But here he misbehav'd himſelf ſo much, and run out into ſuch extravagant Aſſertions, that he was convented before the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, and order'd to forbear that Function. He ſeems to have been not only a Man of ſingular Fancy, but a dangerous Enthuſiaſt. He condemn'd quoting the Fathers in the Pulpit, and call'd the Teſtimonies of the Ancients, and the Vouching of Councils, no better than Entertaining the Audience with Vanities. He maintain'd that our Saviour upon the Croſs not only ſuffer'd bodily Pain, but Anguiſh of Mind, and that he lay under the Indignation of God the Father. But how does this agree with St. Paul's Doctrine to the Philippians? Where having mention'd the Divinity of our Saviour, and the great Condeſcenſion of his Incarnation, he adds as a farther Inſtance of his Goodneſs, that he became Obedient even to the Death of the Croſs, wherefore God alſo has highly exalted him, and given him a Name above every Name. The Author to the Hebrews likewiſe delivers himſelf directly counter to Deringe's Doctrine, where ſpeaking of our Saviour, he tells us, That for the Joy that was ſet before him, he endur'd the Croſs, and deſpiſ'd the Shame. To proceed, Deringe maintain'd dangerous Tenents in his Lectures with Reſpect to the State: He told his Congregation that Chriſtians were Lords of all, and that they had no Sovereign in Heaven or Earth: He expreſs'd himſelf as if Faith had diſcharg'd them from Subjection, rais'd them to a Participation of our Saviour's Condition, and made them Rulers of the Univerſe. But this Gentleman, tho' remov'd from his Lecture, had the Satiſfaction of a numerous Party and conſiderable Abettors. The Puritans, beſides their great Patron the Earl of Leiceſter, had no few Friends at the Council Board. Under this Countenance they appear'd boldly in the Cauſe, publiſh'd Pamphlets, and attack'd the Hierarchy, without much Regard either to Truth or Decency. Of theſe intemperate Sallies the Archbiſhop complains in a Letter to the Lord Treaſurer Burleigh.

The Biſhop of Ely was highly ſenſible of theſe Diſorders, and dreaded the fatal Iſſue in which they might terminate. In his Letter to the Archbiſhop, he endeavours to alarm his Caution, and keep him upon his Guard; I doubt not, ſays he, *but ye are Circumſpect and Vigilant, that theſe Godleſs Schiſmaticks over-run not the Realm, ne deface the Religion of our godly and well Reform'd Church. The Vice-Chancellor Bing's Letter to the Lord Burleigh.

About this Time Dr. Bing, Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, wrote a complaining Letter to the Chancellor. He inform'd him the Univerſity was furniſh'd with a great many troubleſome People. That there was great claſhing amongſt the Students, and that Whitgift's Anſwer to Cartwright was violently attack'd; tho' 'twas true, they brought more Paſſion than Force into the Controverſy, and that their Words were much harder than their Arguments. That one Charke in a Sermon, ad Clerum, had laid down theſe two Concluſions. 1ſt. Epiſcopatus, Archiepiſcopatus, Metropolitanatus, Patriarchatus, & Papatus, á Satana in Eccleſiam introducti ſunt. 2. Inter Miniſtros Eccleſiæ non debet alius alio eſſe Superior. That Libels were paſted upon the Schools againſt Dr. Whitgift: That one Browning, a Fellow of Trinity College, preach'd Novatianiſm and Sedition at St. Mary's: And that one Nicholas Brown, (not he who gave the Name to the Browniſts) Fellow of the ſame College, had declaim'd in the Pulpit againſt the Engliſh Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution, and pronounc'd the Orders receiv'd in the Reigns of King Henry, and Queen Mary, of no Significancy: And that thoſe who were then made Prieſts, ought not to officiate without a new Ordination. Being call'd to an Account for theſe Heterodoxies, he was at laſt prevail'd with to recant them.

Idem.

The Puritans going on in their Invectives againſt the Church, the Court affording Shelter to Libertines, and ſome of the Clergy not managing altogether Unexceptionably, the Lord Treaſurer Burleigh, now on a Progreſs with the Queen, drew up a ſhort Scheme for ſilencing theſe Clamours, for ſtrengthning Diſcipline, and rectifying thoſe Things he thought amiſs. The Title of the Draught is this,

Things needful to be conſidered, how to be Ordered.

“The Government of the Church of England to be directed not only to more Uniformity purſuant to the Laws eſtabliſh'd, but alſo brought up to more Reverence and Devotion: For which Purpoſe abuſes hereafter mention'd may be Reform'd upon the Plan following. (t)

(t) MSS. Cecilian, Parker's Life.

The Lord Burleigh's Draught touching Church Government.

“1. The Pariſhes ſhould be furniſh'd with the inſtituted Incumbents, and all Pluralities reſum'd by general Order. Commiſſioners likewiſe ſhould be aſſign'd to examine the Neceſſity for Diſpenſations: And here for Order's Sake, the Archbiſhops of each Province ought to be in Commiſſion.

“2. Care ſhould be taken for the Reparation of Churches, and for keeping them in a more decent and ornamental Manner.

“3. Amendments ought to be made in the Statute for coming to Common-Prayer: And ſome ſtricter Order provided to command the Execution. By ſuch Reinforcement of Diſcipline, People would not have the Liberty to live at Diſcretion, without any Appearance of Piety, without ſo much as pretending to any Religion whatſoever. That the preſent Remiſſneſs and Want of Reſtraint, has given encreaſe to the Growth of Atheiſm, to the Diſhonour of God, and Danger of the Realm. That in this Matter there ſhould be ſome particular Proviſion for the Queen's Houſhold, which at preſent is a Sort of Protection for Epicures and Atheiſts. The Reaſon is, becauſe the Court is not within the Precincts of a Pariſh, lies out of the Purlieu's of Diſcipline, and is look'd on as a lawleſs Place.

“4. Sundays, both by Order and Example, ſhould be kept with more Strictneſs and Solemnity.

“5. The Clergy ſhould be reſtrain'd from alienating their Lands, from letting unreaſonable Leaſes, from Waſt of Woods, from Grants of Reverſions and Advowſons to any Perſon whatſoever, either by direct Conveyance, or Way of Truſt. And farther, the Biſhop's Regiſter ſhould be inſpected, what Grants have been made within Five or Six Years laſt paſt to the Deſheriſon of the Church, and an Act of Reſumption paſs'd in the next Parliament.

Beza's Letter to Knox in Commendation of the Scotch Diſcipline.

To proceed to a brief Account of the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs in Scotland. The Beginning of this Summer Beza wrote to Knox: “In this Letter he gives a ſtrong Commendation of the Scottiſh Doctrine and Diſcipline: And infers the Merits of that Reformation from its ſtanding the Shock of ſo formidable an Oppoſition: That no Country had maintain'd their Ground better, encountred the Devil with more Reſolution, nor been batter'd ſo much within theſe few Years, as that Kingdom.” He dates the Beginning of this glorious Combat from their Riſing upon the Government, dethroning their natural Sovereign, and purſuing her to Death, notwithſtanding ſhe indulg'd them the Liberty of their own Religion.

To go on with Beza. “He returns Thanks to God Almighty for ſetting Knox at the Helm, and furniſhing him and his Aſſiſtants "with ſuch Firmneſs and Fortitude." He tells him, "'Twas the particular Bounty of Heaven that he brought in the Doctrine and Diſcipline into Scotland together. He intreats him to ſtick cloſe to both of them, becauſe the one is a guard to the other; and that 'tis impoſſible to preſerve the firſt, in caſe he parts with the latter. This may be learn'd both from the Nature of the Things themſelves: For which Way can Laws be maintain'd without a proper Force of Diſcipline and Execution? The ſame Thing is likewiſe clear upon Experiment, the Inſtructer of Fools: And thus ſeveral Countries have miſcarried for refuſing to ſubmit to Correction and Reſtraint. Whereas 'tis plain the Goſpel was publiſh'd, generally ſpeaking, for Vengeance rather than Clemency. * And here he deſires Knox and his Brethren to remember, that as Epiſcopacy introduced the Papal Supremacy, ſo theſe modern pretended Biſhops, theſe Remains of Popery, will undoubtedly make Way for Licentiouſneſs. † Let thoſe who regard the Intereſt of the Church have a Care of this Peſtilent Government: And ſince you have expell'd the Pope's Uſurpation, never give Way to the Readmiſſion of Epiſcopacy, what ſpecious Pretences, what Motives ſoever for Union may be alledg'd for that Purpoſe: For that theſe plauſible Colours had miſled a great many well-meaning Men amongſt the Ancients. (u)

* Evangelium ad judicium potius quam ad miſericordiam (Electos Dei pauculos excipio) promulgari.

† Ita Pſeudepiſcopos, Papatûs Reliquias, Epicureiſmum terris invecturos.

(u) Beza's Epiſt. 79.

The Occaſion of Writing this Letter, as may reaſonably be collected, was the reſtoring Epiſcopacy at the late Aſſembly at Leith. Beza was much diſconcerted at this Apearance of primitive Government: He look'd on it as a Reflection on the Geneva Model. To prevent this Settlement, he makes it his Buſineſs to ſolicit Knox and his Party to diſturb the publick Meaſures, and break through the Leith-Agreement.

Aug. 1572. The general Aſſembly at Perth.

Neither was this Effort altogether without its Effect, as may be conjectur'd from the Management of the General Aſſembly at Perth. At this Meeting the Leith-Agreement was reported: But what was done was not received with general Satisfaction. I mean the Univerſality were not altogether pleas'd with what had been tranſacted. Some weak or humourſome Members ſcrupled the Titles of Archbiſhop, Dean, Archdeacon, Chancellor, and Chapter. Theſe, they ſaid, were Popiſh Diſtinctions, and offenſive to the Ears of good Chriſtians. Theſe trifling Exceptions were thought fit to be conſider'd. An explanatory Temper was therefore propos'd, that theſe Names might be ſoften'd to a more acceptable Change, and the Sound of Superſtition ſomewhat diſcharg'd. For the Purpoſe, an Archbiſhop ſhould be ſunk to the Title of a Biſhop, the Chapter ſhould be call'd the Biſhops Aſſembly, and the Dean the Moderator of that Aſſembly. And as for the Titles of Archdeacon, Chancellor, Abbot, and Prior, a Committee ſhould be aſſign'd to examine the Extent of theſe Functions, propoſe other more unexceptionable Diſtinctions, and make a Report of their Reſolution to the next Aſſembly. But that any ſuch Report was deliver'd, is more than appears. 'Tis probable the wiſer Part thought there was no Reaſon to quarrel the Name, when the Office was allow'd both lawful and neceſſary.

However, a Proteſtation was thrown in by the Aſſembly, that they admitted the Leith-Articles only by Way of Interim, 'till a more perfect Settlement might be procur'd from the Regent and Nobility. Purſuant to this Reſolution, Mr. John Dowglaſs, Provoſt of the New College of St. Andrews, was promoted to the Archbiſhoprick of that See, Mr. James Boyde to the Archbiſhoprick of Glaſcow, Mr. James Paton to the Biſhoprick of Dunkeld, and Mr. Andrew Graham to the See of Dunblain. Knox's Death and Character.

In October this Year the Regent of Scotland, tir'd with the publick Diſturbances, and the ill Succeſs of his Adminiſtration, contracted a Diſtemper, and died. And the next Month John Knox departed this Life. To ſay ſomething of him: He was extracted from a private Family at Gifford within Lothian: He was educated under the Famous John Major. By reading the Antients, and eſpecially St. Auſtin, as Spotſwood relates, he was recover'd to the Primitive Doctrine, and brought off from the Errors of the Church of Rome. But notwithſtanding this gentle Repreſentation, 'tis certain if Knox had govern'd himſelf by the Primitive Writings, he would have avoided a great many wrong Steps, and manag'd his Reformation in a quite different Manner. And as to his Skill in the Records of Antiquity, we have little Proof of it. To deal plainly with his Memory, he was a flaming Incendiary, maintain'd deſperate Principles, and made no Scruple to put them in Practice. He had no ſmall Share in fomenting the Rebellion againſt the Queen, in imbroiling the Kingdom, and making it a Scene of Blood and Confuſion for near Seven Years together. It muſt be granted he was a Perſon of Reſolution and Zeal: But then theſe good Qualities were under a frightful Direction. He was extravagantly ſmitten with his own Judgment, and ſeems to have taken the Suggeſtions of his Fancy for little leſs than Prophetick Impulſe. He was ſo hardy as to cenſure the Conduct of two Apoſtles, St. James and St. Paul, and ventur'd to declare he greatly doubted whether St. James's Command, or St. Paul's Obedience, proceeded from the Holy Ghoſt. The Caſe he cenſur'd was St. James's Advice to St. Paul to go into the Temple, and conform to the Cuſtoms of the Jewiſh Worſhip, that no Offence might be given to the Converts of that Nation. *

* Acts 21. v. 18, 19. Hiſt. Ref. Scot. pag. 101.

He took the Freedom to tell the Queen at Lockleven, That in caſe Princes fail'd in the Adminiſtration, and declin'd the Puniſhment of Wickedneſs and Idolatry, 'twas lawful for the Subject to execute this Function, and take the Sword of Juſtice into their Hands. This ſtrange Doctrine he endeavour'd to make good from ſeveral Inſtances in the Old-Teſtament. For the Purpoſe, from Samuel's hewing Agag in Pieces, though preſerv'd by the Order of King Saul; from Elijah's executing Baal's Prophets and Prieſts when King Ahab, of that Religion, look'd on: And laſtly, from Phineas's diſpatching Zimri and Cosbi, who, as Knox takes Care to tell the Queen, was no Magiſtrate. (x)

(x) Hiſtory of the Reformation in Scotland, pag. 357.

And thus Knox had the Confidence to argue with the Queen from Judaiſm to Chriſtianity; from Inſpiration to common Right. This Principle is big with Murder and Aſſaſſination, ſubverſive of all Government, and gives a Handle to Villany and Diſtraction. 'Twas under the Shelter of this Privilege that the Jewiſh Zealots committed ſuch Ravage and Slaughter upon their Countrymen at the Siege of Jeruſalem. But Knox was at a Stand: He was afraid the Queen would connive at the Exerciſe of her own Religion; and therefore to keep the Pope at a Diſtance, and animate the Proteſtants to kill the Papiſts for going to Maſs, he applies to this deſperate Remedy: Though after all, the new Law, on which Knox founded his Juſtice, was enacted by no better than a pretended Parliament. This Right of ſubordinate Magiſtrates acting without the ſupream Authority, and ſometimes againſt it, was one of Calvin's Noſtrum's; and Knox ſeems to have learn'd it in the Geneva School. But this, it ſeems, was not enough: Knox refines upon his Maſter's Inſtructions, and carries the Privilege to Subjects who had no publick Character upon them: For Phineas, ſays he, was no Magiſtrate, and yet ſtands commended for killing Zimri and Cosbi. But after all, Knox was no entire Convert to the Geneva Diſcipline: He declar'd againſt Presbyterian Parity, promoted the Superintendent-Scheme, and preſs'd Submiſſion to that Eſtabliſhment.

Calvin concurs with Knox in the Lawfulneſs of reſiſting the Civil Magiſtrate.

That Calvin commended Knox for his preaching Reſiſtance is plain from ſeveral of his Epiſtles. His firſt Letter upon this Subject is an Anſwer to Knox's Queſtion, Whether Baſtards, the Iſſue of Idolaters and excommunicated Perſons, might be admitted to Baptiſm before their Parents had acknowledg'd their Crimes, and made their Submiſſion to the Church? Calvin's Return to this and ſome other Queſtions is dated November the 8th, 1559.

When this Letter was written, the Lords of the Congregation had taken the Field, ſign'd their ſecond Covenant at Perth, and carried on the Reformation ſword in Hand againſt the Prince. And as for Knox, he puſh'd the Commotion, and diſtinguiſh'd himſelf to a remarkable Degree: But this needs not be repeated. Now Calvin was appriz'd of all this: He knew the Steps Knox had taken; how deeply he had engag'd; and what Service he had done the Cauſe by his Preaching and Caſuiſtry. That Calvin was thus inform'd appears by Knox's Letter,* where he tells this Geneva Divine that the Bearer could inform him of the Difficulties they met with, of the Reſolution of their Party, and the Poſture of their Affairs. Calvin in his Anſwer owns this Letter was deliver'd him by Knox's Agent. After this, "He congratulates Knox upon the Succeſs of the Enterprize.* He tells him, the Arrival of this News gave himſelf, and all the Godly, a great Pleaſure: That they admir'd ſo incredible a Progreſs ſhould be made in ſo ſmall a Time: That the Divine Interpoſition was remarkably apparent, and that they had return'd Thanks to Almighty God upon the Occaſion: That the Favour of Providence thus ſignally ſhewn was, as it were, an Earneſt of future Succeſs, and ought to animate them to bear up againſt the greateſt Oppoſition. But being ſenſible how good an Encourager Knox was, and how well God had furniſh'd him for that Function, he thought a Diſcourſe to raiſe the Courage of the Party not neceſſary. However, he lets him know that the Brethren at Geneva were no leſs concern'd at the Danger the Scotch Reformers were in, than if themſelves were imbark'd in the ſame Bottom. But all that they could do was to join with them in their Devotions, that God would ſtrike their Enemies* with Blindneſs and Diſtraction, defeat their Counſels, and blaſt their Deſigns. He adds for their Comfort, that the French were much imbarraſs'd in rigging out their Fleet for Scotland: But that the Dragon was reſolved to try every Thing rather than give over.

To proceed; Calvin writes a ſecond Letter to Knox. 'Tis dated April the 23d, 1561. This was a conſiderable Time after Knox and Willock had given their Opinion for depoſing the Queen-Regent, and about Ten Months after that Princeſs's Death. And here "Calvin is tranſported with Satisfaction for the glorious Progreſs of the Reformation in Scotland: He is wonderfully pleas'd that they were not diſcourag'd at the Hazzard of the Enterprize.

He means, I ſuppoſe, the Riſques they run in breaking in upon the Conſtitution, facing the Government, and incouraging the Mob in pulling down Monaſteries and Churches.

However, Calvin goes on to applaud their Conduct, tells them, "The Aſſiſtance of Heaven is viſible in their Courage and Conſtancy: That 'tis this which has made them impregnable againſt Satan and his Adherents: And that unleſs they had been thus reinforc'd from above, they could never have held on with ſuch Firmneſs and Bravery.*

And in another Letter of the ſame Date, he commends Chriſtopher Goodman for joining Knox, and animates him to go on. Now what Sort of Miſſionary this Goodman was, has been already related.

That Knox brought his Principle of Reſiſtance from Geneva, may be farther made good from two remarkable Inſtances. They ſtand in Knox's Hiſtory, which is enough to put the Teſtimony beyond Exception.

At the Conference between Secretary Lethington and Knox at the Edinborough Aſſembly, held in the Year 1564, Knox affirm'd, That to maintain the People, or a Part of the People, may not execute God's Judgment againſt their King, being an Offender, was an unwarrantable Aſſertion: That 'twas only a Court Scheme, and the Opinion of thoſe who were more afraid of offending their Princes than God Almighty.

To this Lethington replied, The contrary Doctrine was taught by ſome of the moſt eminent Divines in Europe, and which Knox himſelf muſt own to be Men of Piety and Learning. Upon this he call'd for ſome Papers, and read the Opinions of Luther and Melancthon, of Bucer, Muſculus, and Calvin, upon the Queſtion; and how Chriſtians ought to behave themſelves in Time of Perſecution. To this Knox replies, That the Authorities won't bear in the Application: That Luther and Melancthon's Deciſion is directed only againſt the Anabaptiſts, who make Independency on the Civil Government Part of the Privileges of Chriſtianity, and affirm that 'tis not lawful for a Chriſtian to be a Magiſtrate. And as for the other Divines, that is, Bucer, Muſculus, and Calvin, their Doctrine is calculated for Chriſtians in a defenceleſs unfortified Condition: 'Tis only adapted to Caſes where the Subjects are perfectly diſabled from redreſſing their Grievances by Force, and have no other Remedy to apply to but Prayers and Tears.*

And at the End of the Conference, when Knox was commanded to write to Calvin, and other Learned Divines of the Reformation, I ſuppoſe in Geneva, and Germany; when, I ſay, Knox was requir'd to conſult Calvin and the other Divines upon the Queſtion, he refus'd to comply for this Reaſon, which the Reader ſhall have in his own Words: I my ſelf, ſays he, am not only fully reſolved in Conſcience, but alſo I have heard their Judgments in this, and all other Things that I have affirm'd within this Realm, of the moſt Godly and moſt Learned that I knew in Europe: *I came not to this Realm without their Reſolution; and for my Aſſurance I have the Hand-writing of many: And therefore if I ſhould now move the ſaid Queſtions again, what ſhould I do other but either ſhew mine own Ignorance and Forgetfulneſs, or elſe Inconſtancy. And therefore it may pleaſe you to pardon me in that I write not.

To proceed; Spotſwood endeavours to diſengage Knox from being the Author of the Hiſtory of the Reformation in Scotland, though he grants 'tis commonly ſuppos'd to be his Performance. But what are the Archbiſhop's Reaſons for taking this Hiſtory from Knox? Is the Period of the Book ſtretch'd too far? Not at all. The Hiſtory ends with the Year 1567, which was five Years before Knox's Death. But the Archbiſhop has two Things which he conceives a ſufficient Diſproof of Knox's being the Author of this Hiſtory. His firſt Argument is, the Scurrility of the Language, more fit for a Player than the Character of a Miniſter. But few People were more unguarded in their Diſcourſes, or indulg'd themſelves farther in Satyr, than this Divine. And as for the Spiteful Malice with which this Author treats the Queen-Regent, the Surprize at this Behaviour will abate, if we conſider Knox had written a violent Diſcourſe againſt the Government of Women, and rail'd plentifully upon our Queen Mary: And over and above, it was Part of his Opinion to reckon Papiſts little better than Canaanites. Spotſwood's laſt Reaſon for disbelieving this Scotch Hiſtory written by Knox, is the Citing Fox's Martyrology, and referring the Reader thither. But Fox's Acts and Monuments, the Archbiſhop ſuppoſes, were not publiſh'd till ten or twelve Years after Knox's Death. But this is a Miſtake: For the firſt Engliſh Edition of Fox's Martyrology was publiſh'd in the Year 1563, four Years ſhort of the Period of Knox's Hiſtory, and nine Years before his Death. (y)

To return to England: About this Time Chark, Travers, Gardiner, Barber, Cheſter, Crook, and Edgerton, join'd the reſt of the Puritan Faction in order to the ſettling their Diſcipline. After ſome Debate upon the Queſtion, they came to the following Reſolution.

That foraſmuch as divers Books had been written, and ſundry Petitions exhibited to her Majeſty, the Parliament, and their Lordſhips, to little Purpoſe, every Man ſhould therefore labour by all Means poſſible to bring the Reformation into the Church. It was likewiſe farther reſolv'd, That for the better bringing in of the ſaid holy Diſcipline, they ſhould not only as well publickly as privately teach it, but by little and little, as well as poſſibly they might, draw the ſame into Practice.

A Presbytery erected at Wanſworth.

Purſuant to this Reſolution a Presbytery was erected at Wanſworth in Surrey. 'Tis a ſmall Village about four Miles diſtant from London. This Town ſtanding upon the Thames, was convenient for forming a Congregation out of the Diſſenters in the City. 'Twas likewiſe more retir'd, and farther from publick Notice, than their London-Meetings. This firſt Eſtabliſhment was call'd the Order of Wanſworth by Field, who was their Miniſter. They had drawn their Settlement into a Form: The Elders Names are mention'd, the Manner of the Election ſpecified, and their reſpective Offices deſcribed. (z)

Whether the Queen was quickly inform'd of this Wanſworth-Eſtabliſhment is uncertain: However, Complaints being brought to Court of the Schiſmatical and Turbulent Conduct of the Puritans, who now ſeem'd prepar'd to ſet up Altar againſt Altar, to form a Body againſt the Church, and declare for a ſeparate Communion, the Queen iſſued out her Proclamation, That the Laws for the keeping up the Uniformity of Publick Worſhip ſhould be put in Execution; and that The firſt and ſecond Admonition to the Parliament, and all ſuch ſcandalous Books and Pamphlets, ſhould either be deliver'd to ſome Biſhop in their ſeveral Dioceſes, or to ſome of the Lords of the Council, upon Pain of Impriſonment. (a)

An. 1572. The Biſhop's Bible.

This Year the Archbiſhop publiſh'd a ſecond Edition of the Old and New-Teſtament in Engliſh. 'Twas firſt printed in 1568, and call'd the Biſhops Bible, becauſe ſeveral of that Order were concern'd in the Verſion. To give a brief Account of this Matter: The Work was divided into ſeveral Parcels, and aſſign'd to Men of Learning and Character pick'd out for this Purpoſe. Moſt of the Diviſions are mark'd with great Initial Letters, ſignifying either the Titles or Names of the Perſons imploy'd. William Alley, Biſhop of Exeter, had the Pentateuch for his Proportion, and at the End there ſtands the Capital Letters W. E. Joſhua, Judges, Ruth, and the Two Books of Samuel, were given to Richard Davis, preferr'd to the See of St. David's when Young was tranſlated to York: 'Tis mark'd R. M. The Four Books of Kings and Chronicles were aſſign'd to Edwin Sandys, then Biſhop of Worceſter. The Books of Eſrah, Nehemiah, Eſther, and Job, were done by one whoſe Name is mark'd A. P. C. which probably might ſtand for Andrew Perſon, one of the Archbiſhop's Chaplains, and Prebendary of Canterbury. The Book of Pſalms is ſign'd with T. B. Whether this was Thomas Bentham, Biſhop of Coventry, or Thomas Beacon, Prebendary of Canterbury, is ſomewhat uncertain, but moſt probably the latter. The Proverbs were tranſlated by one who ſubſcribes A. P. C. the C. ſtands at ſome Diſtance, probably to diſtinguiſh the Perſon from the former A. P. C. Eccleſiaſtes and Solomon's Song is mark'd with A. P. E. for Andreas Perne Elienſis. Eſaiah, Jeremy, and Lamentations, were done by Robert Horn, Biſhop of Wincheſter, as may be conjectur'd from the Letters R. W. Ezekiel and Daniel were tranſlated by T. C. L. which is ſuppos'd to ſtand for Bentham, Biſhop of Litchfield. Hoſea, Joel, and ſo forward through all the Minor Prophets, is ſign'd E. L. and was done by Edmund Grindal, Biſhop of London. The Apocrypha, as 'tis ſaid, was tranſlated by Parkhurſt, Biſhop of Norwich; the Capitals ſubjoin'd are J. N. Biſhop Burnet relates Barlow, Biſhop of Chicheſter, began with Eſdras, and tranſlated to the Book of Wiſdom. (b) The four Goſpels, the Acts of the Apoſtles, and the Epiſtle to the Romans, were given to Cox, Biſhop of Ely: The Capitals are R. E. for Richardus Elienſis. The Firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians is ſubſcrib'd G. G. which probably may ſtand for Gabriel Goodman, then Dean of Weſtminſter. The Remainder of the New-Teſtament has no Capitals ſubjoin'd. Archbiſhop Parker had the main Direction of this Affair, review'd the Performance, and, it may be, gave the finiſhing Hand. He imploy'd ſeveral Criticks in the Hebrew and Greek Languages to review the old Tranſlation, and compare it with the Original. One Lawrence, an eminent Grecian, was made Uſe of to examine the Verſion of the New-Teſtament. He ſeems to have been well qualified for this Undertaking, manag'd with great Exactneſs, and made ſeveral Animadverſions upon the Performances of Beza and Eraſmus this Way. (c) As to the Method, whether 'twas the ſame with that follow'd in the next Reign is uncertain. Thoſe who tranſlated the Bible at the Inſtance of King James the Firſt, threw the Work into ſeveral Diviſions, aſſign'd to ſeveral Perſons. Thus far the Reſemblance holds: That they went through the reſt of the Method, afterwards made uſe of, ſeems unlikely; for every Portion of the Scripture was now aſſign'd not to ſeveral, but ſingle Perſons. And beſides, whether the whole Body examin'd the Performances of each other, is ſomewhat uncertain. But of this it may be more afterwards.

And here it may not be improper to abſtract a few Lines from Archbiſhop Parker's Preface to this Bible. This Prelate in recommending this Work takes Care to preſerve a Reſpect to the Verſion publiſh'd by Archbiſhop Cranmer. He obſerves Cranmer's Impreſſion was in a great Meaſure ſpent, and that many Churches were unfurniſh'd with convenient Bibles. From hence, 'tis probable, the Archbiſhop might be ſenſible the Geneva Tranſlation was us'd in ſome Pariſhes. This Scarcity of Copies was one Reaſon for the undertaking the Work: And though the Order of the Text was plac'd to Advantage, and the Senſe farther explain'd, yet this was not ſaid to diſparage the former Tranſlation, which they had moſtly follow'd, and eſteem'd next to the Original. And after having taken Notice of the Variety of Verſions, and the Ambiguity of the Senſe in ſome Paſſages, he deſires the Reader not to be ſhock'd with this Conſideration: And for this Purpoſe he cites St. Auſtin, who obſerves that we are to look upon the numerous Tranſlations of the Holy Scriptures as a ſpecial Bleſſing of Providence: That by this Means the Divine Pleaſure is farther communicated, and a fuller Proviſion made for general Inſtruction. And though Opinionative and Uncautious Readers are ſometimes miſled by the Obſcurity of the Tranſlation, yet this Diſadvantage is not without Benefit another Way: For the Myſtery and Involution of ſome Texts are a Check upon humane Arrogance. Beſides, the Difficulty of reaching the Meaning ſecures the Scriptures from growing cheap in ſome Meaſure: For Truths that are open and obvious are often diſregarded upon this Score. And laſtly, this Father concludes, That this Variety of Tranſlations, provided they were not negligently done, were of Service to the common Reader: And that by this Means the Perplexity of the Text was often diſintangled. (d)

Bullinger's Letter to Horn, Biſhop of Wincheſter, in Vindication of the Church of England againſt the Puritans.

The latter End of this Year Bullinger ſent the Biſhop of Wincheſter a Letter, to congratulate with him upon the Happineſs of the Engliſh under Queen Elizabeth. And here, after a high Character of this Princeſs, he acquaints him he was much troubled at the Conduct of the Puritans: And that thoſe who pretend a peculiar Regard for the Goſpel ſhould check the Propagation of Truth, and embarraſs the Biſhops in their Government. That this Misfortune however was not without a Parallel: For at the Beginning of our Reformation, ſays he, we ſuffered not a little under the ſame Calamity. There was a Sort of People amongſt us, who lov'd to puſh Things to Exceſs, and thought they had never gone far enough in the Buſineſs of Reforming. Upon this Fancy they commenc'd a Separation, and met in Conventicles. And what was the Conſequence? Nothing but Schiſm and Variety of Sects. This was Sport to the Papiſts. But at laſt the World began to ſee through the Hypocriſy and Diſorder of theſe Men: And thus they broke in Pieces, and dwindled to nothing. And I queſtion not but God in his Mercy will reſcue your Church from the Miſchiefs theſe Puritans have brought upon her. *

Whitgift's Anſwer to the Admonition. March 12. 1572.

Anno Dom. 1573.

The Proſecution of the Puritans was now vigorouſly manag'd by the Queen's Order. To take off the Weight of the Government, and juſtify their Non-compliance, the Party propos'd a publick Diſputation. This Challenge, whether accepted or not, was likely to gain Time, and give Credit to the Cauſe. Sandys, Biſhop of London, offer'd them Satisfaction this Way, and ſent the Lord Treaſurer and the Earl of Leiceſter a Liſt of the Names of thoſe he thought proper for the managing this Controverſy. But the Lord Treaſurer did not think it prudential that a Publick Settlement ſhould be expos'd to Queſtion, and referr'd to the Hazard of a Diſpute.

Some Diſſenters examin'd upon Articles.

Inſtead of a Conference therefore, ſeveral of the leading Diſſenters were brought before the Council, and the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners. Of theſe the Principal were Deringe, Wyborne, Johnſon, Brown, Field, Wilcox, Sparrow, and King. Johnſon officiated in the Lord Keeper's Family, and Brown in that of the Dutcheſs of Suffolk. Theſe Men were examin'd touching their Opinion of Cartwright's Book, and upon the following Articles.

Firſt, Whether 'tis lawful for a private Perſon openly to cenſure a Publick Eſtabliſhment before he has made an humble Application to Authority for diſcovering the Miſtake?

Secondly, Whether the Common-Prayer Book is a pious and ſerviceable Compoſition, and every Part of it founded upon Holy Scripture?

Thirdly, Whether the Book of Articles eſtabliſhed is agreeable to God's Word or not?

Fourthly, Whether we are oblig'd to follow the Cuſtoms of the Primitive Church or not?

Fifthly, Whether all Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters ought to be of equal Authority both in Office and Juriſdiction? (e)

Deringe, Johnſon, Wyborn, and Brown, all ſubſcrib'd the Negative of the Firſt Article: But it ſeems they came ſhort of giving full Satisfaction; for Deringe's Suſpenſion from his Lecture at St. Paul's was kept on by the Council, and Wyborne, Johnſon, and Brown, were forbidden Preaching 'till farther Order; Field and Willcox had been ſent to Newgate by the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, and Sparrow and King were remanded to Priſon, and threaten'd with Baniſhment.

The Puritans had too much Courage to ſink under this Diſcountenance: They went on boldly with the Cauſe, and cry'd up Cartwright's laſt Book as an unanſwerable Performance: 'Twas his Reply to Whitgift's Anſwer to the Admonition to the Parliament. Cartwright, who is ſuppos'd to be moſtly the Author of the Admonition, appear'd warmly in the Vindication of that Pamphlet, and treated Whitgift in a rough uncourtly Manner. Parker was apprehenſive Whitgift might be tir'd with the Controverſy, and not willing to venture a ſecond Conteſt with ſo rugged an Adverſary. He ſent him a Letter therefore to reaſſure his Spirits, and bring him on to a Rejoinder. Whitgift, who wanted no Courage where the Church was ſo much concern'd, wrote back to the Archbiſhop, inform'd him of the Progreſs of his Work, and how willing he was to go forward with the Controverſy. And here he reports the Failings and Diſingenuity of his Adverſary: That this Anſwer of Cartwright's was ſtuffed with groſs Overſights, and falſe Citations: That he had wreſted the Scriptures and Fathers to Meanings moſt remarkably foreign: That his Reaſoning was Trifling and Illogical: And that in fine, he was far from deſerving the Character his Party gave him. As to Whitgift's Rejoinder, 'twas publiſh'd the latter End of this Year.

Whitgift's Character of Cartwright. June Ann. Dom. 1573.

The Beginning of this Summer the Archbiſhop acquainted the Council with the Reſtleſs endeavours of the Puritans, and the ſchiſmatical Pamphlets diſpers'd thro' the Kingdom; Upon which the Queen publiſh'd her Proclamation, for bringing them in to the Biſhops or Council, already mention'd mention'd. But this Proclamation it ſeems was little regarded. For the Biſhop of London, as he complain'd to the Lord Treaſurer, had not ſo much as one Copy deliver'd to him.

The Biſhop of Ely expoſtulates with the Privy-Council.

This Prelate however, out of Tenderneſs and good Nature, mov'd the Privy Council in Dering's Behalf. And thus this Miniſter's Suſpenſion was taken off. Cox, Biſhop of Ely, expoſtulated with the Lord Treaſurer upon this Occaſion. He dealt plainly like a primitive Biſhop, and told his Lordſhip the Council went too far in reſtoring this Diſſenter upon their own Authority: That the Cognizance of the Cauſe lay properly within the Buſineſs of Eccleſiaſticks: And that Things relating to Religion ſhould not have been determin'd without their Advice: That Deringe had not given a ſatisfactory Anſwer to the Articles above-mention'd: And that the Suggeſtions upon which he was reſtor'd, were untrue: And that the Judgment of Divines ought to be taken in theſe Caſes, he endeavour'd to make good from Authority. For this Purpoſe he cites the Emperors Arcadius and Honorius, who make no Scruple to affirm, that in Matters of Religion 'tis proper to conſult the Biſhops. To this he adds the Teſtimony of Bullinger, whom he calls a Pillar of the Church. Now this Divine lays it down for a Rule, that the Prieſts or Clergy are to ſettle Religion: And that 'tis their peculiar Office to define upon theſe Points from the Word of God. And as for Princes, their Part is to aſſiſt the Prieſthood, and protect Truth. And for this Reaſon, as the Biſhop goes on, the Spiritualty are call'd to Parliament, and brought to the Council-Board.

Idem.

An Engagement to maintain Cartwright's Book.

About this Time, Crick and Wake, Two Puritan Miniſters, preach'd againſt the Eccleſiaſtical Polity at Paul's Croſs, and run a Length of Commendation upon Cartwright's Plan. And now the Faction made a bolder Motion, and were buſy in procuring Subſcriptions to Cartwright's Book: That is, they were to engage to maintain the Contents even to Death, if Occaſion requir'd: Some of the Bench of Aldermen, and others of Wealth and Diſtinction in the City, were gain'd over to this Aſſociation.

The French Miniſters interpoſe for the Diſſenters.

The French Miniſters, from whom a Neutrality might have been expected, interpos'd in the Conteſt, and ſtruck in with the Puritan Party. Upon this, the Biſhop of London mov'd the Queen and Council to ſend them a reprimanding Letter: That they ſhould be order'd not to concern themſelves in theſe foreign Diſputes, nor receive the Queen's Subjects to their Communion. He likewiſe requeſted the City might be admoniſh'd againſt giving Countenance to theſe Men. He ſuggeſted farther, That the Principals of the Faction might be ſent off to ſome conſiderable Diſtance from the Town. That if theſe Idols ſo richly preſented and almoſt ador'd, were once remov'd from the Capital, the eſteem of their Saintſhip would dwindle, and their Honour be laid in the Duſt. And in ſhort, they would be conſtrued no higher than their Merit, and taken for Men of ſlender Attainments. And here he complains to the Council, that the Authority of the Church ſignified little: That the Biſhops Character was ſunk, and lamentably diſvalued by the Meaneſt of the People.

Idem.

That both the Church and State were in no ſmall Danger, is pretty apparent by a Letter written by the Archbiſhop and Biſhop of London to another Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioner of their own Order. The Letter is very remarkable, I ſhall give it the Reader as it ſtands in the Original.

A Letter written by the Archbiſhop and Biſhop of London concerning the Puritans.

Sal. in Chriſto,

“ Theſe Times are Troubleſome. The Church is ſore Aſſaulted, but not ſo much of open Enemies who can leſs hurt, as of pretended Favourers and Falſe Brethren, who under the Colour of Reformation, ſeek the Ruin and Subverſion both of Learning and Religion. (f) Neither do they only cut down the Eccleſiaſtical State, but alſo give a great Puſh at the Civil Policy. Their Colour is Sincerity under the Countenance of Simplicity; but in very Truth, they are ambitious Spirits, and can abide no Superiority. Their Fancies are favour'd of ſome of great Calling, who ſeek to gain by other Men's Loſſes. And moſt plauſible are theſe new Devices, to a great Number of the People, who Labour to live in all Liberty. But the one blinded with the Deſire of Getting, ſee not their own Fall, which no doubt, will follow: The other hunting for Alteration, pull upon their Necks intolerable Servitude. For theſe fantaſtical Spirits which labour to reign in Men's Conſciences, will, if they may bring their Purpoſes to paſs, lay a heavy Yoak upon their Necks.

(f) Petit's MSS.

“ In the Platform ſet down by theſe new Builders, we evidently ſee the Spoliation of the Patrimony of Chriſt, and a popular State to be ſought. The End will be Ruin to Religion, and Confuſion to our Country. And that you may the better perceive, how theſe Fancies are embrac'd, and like to take Effect, except in Time they be met withal, here encloſ'd we have ſent unto you certain Articles taken out of Cartwright's Book, by the Council propounded unto Mr. Dering, with his Anſwer to the ſame: And alſo a Copy of the Council's Letter writ to Mr. Dering to reſtore him to his former Reading and Preaching, notwithſtanding our Advices never required thereunto. Theſe Proceedings puff them up with Pride, make the People hate us, and magnify them with great Triumphing, that her Majeſty and the Privy Council, have good liking of this New Building. Which hitherto, as we think, in no Chriſtian Nation hath found any Foundation upon the Earth, but is now fram'd upon Suppoſitions, full of Abſurdities and Impoſſibilities in the Air. We are perſwaded that her Majeſty hath no liking thereof, howſoever the Matter be favour'd by others.

“ But for ſo much as God hath placed us to be Governors in his Church, hath committed unto us a Care and Charge thereof, and will one Day require a Reckoning at our Hands for the ſame; it ſhall be our Duties to labour by all Means we can, to ſee ſound Doctrine maintain'd, Gainſayers of the Truth repreſs'd, good Order ſet down and obſerv'd; that the Spouſe of Chriſt ſo dearly redeem'd, may by our Miniſtry be beautified. Theſe perilous Times require our painful Travails: And ſeeing that God's Cauſe is brought into Queſtion, and the Church many Ways troubled, we muſt with good Courage ſtand to the Defence thereof, and reſiſt the Underminers. We hear bear a heavy Burthen, and incur many Dangers and Diſpleaſures. But nothing ſhall be grievous unto us; if we may do good unto his Church. We doubt not but that you “are like affected, and bear a Burthen in Mind with us. We have made a ſpecial Choice of you, whom for good Learning, prudent Council, and godly Zeal, we Love and Reverence, and have thought it good to put you in Remembrance of theſe Matters. And withal, to require you to conſider of theſe Things, and to be prepar'd for our next Meeting, which we think will be ſhortly, to ſee unto the ſame, as may moſt tend to the Glory of God, good of his Church, Maintenance of his Goſpel, eſtabliſhing of decent and good Order; to the Edifying of his People, and to the Repreſſing of all Gainſayers. Thus thinking it convenient, that you ſhould keep theſe Matters ſecret to your ſelf, we commend you to the good Direction of God's Holy Spirit. From Lambeth, July 6, 1573.

Your Loving Brethren,

Mat. Cantuar.
Edw. London.

From hence it appears the Biſhops were awake upon their Charge: That the Proſpect of Affairs was dark, and that they had ſet Meetings to examine the Danger, and debate upon the Remedy: And that all this Vigilance was no more than Neceſſary, conſidering the enterprizing Spirit of the Diſſenters. And as none were more active to encreaſe their Party, ſo they were particularly careful to faſten their Proſelytes, and fix them in their Miſtakes. And of this I ſhall give the Reader an Inſtance in the Proteſtation which thoſe admitted into their Congregations were oblig'd to take. The Engagement runs thus:

The Puritans Proteſtation.

“Being thoroughly perſwaded in my Conſcience by the Working, and by the Word of the Almighty, that theſe Relicks of Antichriſt be abominable before the Lord our God; and alſo, for that by the Power, Mercy, Strength and Goodneſs of the Lord our God only, I am eſcap'd from the Filthineſs and Pollution of theſe deteſtable Traditions, through the Knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; and laſt of all, inaſmuch as by the Working alſo of the Lord Jeſus his Holy Spirit, I have join'd in Prayer, and hearing God's Word, with thoſe that have not yielded to this idolatrous Traſh, notwithſtanding the Danger for not coming to my Pariſh Church, &c. Therefore I come not back again to the Preaching, &c. of them that have receiv'd theſe Marks of the Romiſh Beaſt. (g)

“I. Becauſe of God's Commandment to go forward to Perfection, Heb. 6. 1. 2 Cor. 7. 1. Pſal. 84. 1. Eph. 4. 15. Alſo to avoid them. Rom. 16. 17. Eph. 5. 11. 1 Theſ. 5. 22.

“II. Becauſe they are Abomination before the Lord our God. Deut. 7. 25, 26. and 13, 17. Ezek 14. 6.

“III. I will not Beautify with my Preſence thoſe filthy Rags, which bring the heavenly Word of the Eternal our Lord God into Bondage, Subjection and Slavery.

“IV. Becauſe I would not communicate with other Men's Sins. John 2. 9, 10, 11. 2 Cor. 6. 17. Touch no unclean Thing, &c. Sirach 13. 1.

“V. They give Offences, both to the Preachers and the Hearers. Rom. 16. 17. Luke 17. 1.

“VI. They glad and ſtrengthen the Papiſts in their Errors, and grieve the Godly. Ezek. 13. 21, 22. Note this 21 Verſe.

“VII. They do perſecute our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in his Members. Act. 9. 4, 5. 2 Cor. 1. 5. Alſo they reject and deſpiſe our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Luke 10. 16. Moreover, thoſe Labourers, who at the Prayer of the Faithful, the Lord hath ſent forth into his Harveſt, they refuſe, and alſo reject. Mat. 9. v. 38.

“VIII. Theſe Popiſh Garments are now become very Idols indeed, becauſe they are exalted above the Word of the Almighty.

“IX. I come not to them, becauſe they ſhould be aſhamed, and ſo leave their idolatrous Garments, &c. 2 Theſ. 3. 14. If any Man obey not our Sayings, Note him.

“Moreover, I have now join'd my ſelf to the Church of Chriſt. Wherein I have yielded my ſelf Subject to the Diſcipline of God's Word, as I promis'd at my Baptiſm. Which, if I ſhould now again miſtake, and join my ſelf with their Traditions, I ſhould forſake the Union, wherein I am knit to the Body of Chriſt, and join my ſelf to the Diſcipline of Antichriſt. For in the Church of the Traditioners, there is no other Diſcipline than that which hath been maintain'd by the Antichriſtian Pope of Rome; whereby the Church of God hath always been afflicted, and is until this Day. For the which Cauſe I refuſe them.

“God give us Grace ſtill to ſtrive in ſuffering under the Croſs, that the bleſſed Word of our God may only rule, and have the higheſt Place to caſt down ſtrong Holds, to deſtroy or overthrow Policy or Imaginations, and every high Thing that is exalted againſt the Knowledge of God, and to bring into Captivity or Subjection every Thought to the Obedience of Chriſt, &c. 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5. That the Name and Word of the Eternal, our Lord God, may be exalted, or magnified above all Things, Pſal. 8. 2.

To this Proteſtation the Congregation ſingularly did ſwear, and after took the Communion for Ratification of their Aſſent. This laſt Paragraph ſtands written in Archbiſhop Parker's Hands.

The Archbiſhop's Letter in the Defence of the Biſhops Titles.

Thus we ſee theſe Puritan Chiefs made all their Proſelytes ſwear the Church of England's Service was polluted and abominable; and the Epiſcopal Government Antichriſtian. And becauſe they perceiv'd the Biſhop's Character ſtrengthen'd by Title and Civil Privilege, they made an Attack upon this Quarter, clamour'd againſt their being call'd Lords, and ſaluted with the Reſpect of Honourable. Theſe Exceptions were not altogether diſregarded by the Envious and Ignorant. The Archbiſhop therefore wrote a Letter to the Lord Treaſurer, to juſtify theſe Diſtinctions. He takes Notice the Biſhops held their Lands by Barony, and therefore the giving them the Title of Lords was no Singularity, and nothing more than a Regard reſulting from the Tenure. That Aaron was not in a much inferior Station to Moſes: That Prophets and Prieſts were ſtrongly recommended to Regard under the Old Teſtament. That the Biſhops in the Council of Nice were honourably treated by Conſtantine the Great. And ſo was St. Ambroſe by Theodoſius, notwithſtanding he exerted his Diſcipline upon that Prince. And as for the Text in St. Luke, where the Apoſtles are forbidden to exerciſe Lordſhip over each other, like the Kings of the Gentiles, the Archbiſhop obſerves, That the Check in this Place reaches no farther than ambitious Affectation of Government, and Abuſe of Power. A deſperate Sect in the Iſle of Ely.

The Puritans were not the only Men that diſturb'd the Church: A much worſe Sect had got footing in the Iſle of Ely. Theſe Men ſeem to have blended the Hereſies of the Gnoſticks, Arians, and Anabaptiſts together. The Lord North gave Notice of them, and laid their Opinions before the Council, and Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners.

Firſt, They maintain'd the Unlawfulneſs of taking an Oath upon any Account, or before any Perſon whatſoever. They founded this Error upon a Miſinterpretation of a Text in the 5th of St. Mathew, where 'tis ſaid, Swear not at all, &c. Secondly, They held all capital Puniſhments unlawful, tho' executed by the Order of the Magiſtracy. For this Heterodoxy they cited the Sixth Commandment, Thou ſhall not kill. 3*dly*, They condemn'd Property, and preach'd up Community without Reſerve either of Goods or Perſons, as far as it appears. Their Warrant for this Doctrine is the Second of the Acts where the Believers are ſaid to have had all Things Common. 4*thly*, They aſſert that every Man at the Impulſe of his Fancy, or the Suggeſtion of his Conſcience, as probably they would call it, may preach or expound the Scriptures: And that there's no Need of any Miſſion or cuſtomary Conveyance of Character. 5*thly*, They maintain the Limbus Patrum, and the old Arabian Hereſy of the Soul's ſleeping till the Reſurrection. They reject the Canons of the Old Teſtament, and the Epiſtles of St. Paul, when they are preſs'd with Authorities, and embarraſs'd with Citations from thence. 6*thly*, Many of them maintain an Inequality in the Perſons of the Godhead. 7*thly*, They aſſert that by Hell there is nothing more meant than irregular Appetite, and Perturbation of Mind. Many of this Sect were horribly ſcandalous and immoral: Their Meetings were very private, and no body permitted but thoſe who were thoroughly perverted. Their Preachers were not choſen and fix'd. This Exerciſe being perform'd by ſome Perſon on the ſudden, who was puſh'd forward by his own Confidence or Phrenzy. (i)

Burchet*'s deſperate Principle.*

To proceed; the Zealots Principle encourag'd by Knox, was not without Precedent in England. For Inſtance, Peter Burchet, a Puritan-Student of the Middle-Temple, entertain'd a Perſuaſion that 'twas lawful to kill thoſe who were Enemies to the Goſpel. This deſperate Fancy had poſſeſs'd him ſo far, that ſeeing one Hawkins, a famous Sea Captain in the Street near the Temple, he ſtabb'd him with his Dagger. This Hawkins, Burchet miſtook for Chriſtopher Hatton Eſq; one of the Privy-Council. This Gentleman, afterwards Lord Chancellor, was a ſtrict Conformiſt, in a Counter-Intereſt to the Earl of Leiceſter, and by Burchet, ſuppos'd to be a Papiſt. The Queen was more than uſually angry at this Villany, and would have had the Aſſaſin immediately puniſh'd by Martial Law: But being inform'd this Way of Proceeding was proper to the Camp, and would look like a Strein of the Prerogative, ſhe order'd him to be tried by Common Law. And being brought into the Court, the Queſtion was put, whether he believ'd a private Man might lawfully kill a Papiſt, who does his Utmoſt to hinder the Glory of God. Burchet anſwer'd, he believ'd he might; and therefore, if Mr. Hatton was of that Religion, as he conceiv'd him to be, he ſhould not have repented the Killing him. This Opinion Burchet ſign'd, October the 27th. (k)

It pleas'd God the Wound Hawkins receiv'd, did not prove Mortal. As for Burchet, after this Declaration of his Principles, he was ſent to the Lollard's Tower, from thence brought into the Conſiſtory at St. Paul's, and interrogated by the Biſhop. And when the Sentence of Hereſy was ready to paſs upon him, he promis'd to renounce his Perſuaſion, and ſubmit to the Penance of the Court. But when the Teſt was farther put, and the Conditions requir'd, he refus'd to make good his Engagement. Upon this, he was ſent to the Tower, where he beat out one of the Warder's Brains with a Billet. For this Murther he was tried and condemn'd. His right Hand was cut off, and nail'd to the Gallows; he ſtruggled againſt the Execution, and died without the leaſt Sign of Repentance. (l)

The Earl of Morton Regent.

The latter End of the laſt Year, the Earl of Morton was by Queen Elizabeth's Intereſt, elected Regent of Scotland: And ſoon after Sir Henry Killegrew was ſent Ambaſſador thither. His Inſtructions were to ſettle the Regent, and cruſh the Queen of Scots Party. He prevail'd with the Duke of Chatelerault and Earl of Huntley to prolong the Ceſſation of Arms then on Foot: And over and above this Conceſſion, they agreed to ſend Commiſſioners to Perth to treat with the Regent in Order to a full Accommodation. The Laird of Grange, Governor of Edinborough Caſtle, the Lord Hume, the Biſhop of Dunkeld, Lethington, and ſome other Perſons of Quality in the Garriſon, ſtood firm to their Queen, and refus'd having any Share in that Treaty.

The Queen of Scots deſerted.

In the mean Time the Parliament was held at Edinborough. Amongſt other Things, 'twas enacted, " That Papiſts, or ſuſpected Papiſts, " who refus'd to receive the Sacrament with the " Reform'd, were to be admoniſh'd to recant " their Errors, to communicate with the Kirk, " and ſubmit to the Diſcipline eſtabliſh'd. The " Firſt Penalty for Non-compliance was Ex- " communication: And in Caſe of Obſtinacy " or Relapſe, they were to be reputed Infa- " mous: That is, they were diſabled from ha- " ving any Office, purſuing any Action, or be- " ing admitted as Witneſſes in any Court of Ju- " ſtice. (m)

By another Statute, all Eccleſiaſtical Perſons were oblig'd to ſubſcribe the Confeſſion of Faith, under the Penalty of Deprivation. And for this Purpoſe all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Superintendents, were to appear before the general Aſſembly.

By the laſt Act, I ſhall mention, all Perſons who refuſe to own the King's, (that is the Regent's) Authority, are to be admoniſh'd by the Miniſters of the Kirk to acknowledge their Offence, and change their Practice. And that none ſhall be reputed good Subjects, but ſuch as profeſs the Reform'd Religion, as by Law eſtabliſh'd: And that thoſe who own the Confeſſion of Faith, and yet fail in their Duty to the Government, ſhall be excommunicated.

The Accommodation at Perth.

At the Receſs of the Parliament, Commiſſioners from the Regent, and thoſe who ſtood for the Queen met at Perth. And here, after ſome Days debate, the Latter agreed to diſengage from the Cauſe, to ſubmit to the Regent, and to acknowledge, that whatever they had done by Virtue of the Queen's Commiſſion, ſince her Son's Coronation was void, and againſt Law. And thus, after a great Deal of handſome Struggle, and Appearance of Loyalty, they ſign'd themſelves Rebels. (n) The reſt of the Articles, ſome of which were not very favourable, ſhall be omitted.

The Caſtle of Edinborough ſurrendred.

And now the Regent ſollicited the Engliſh Ambaſſador to move his Miſtreſs for Troops to reduce Edinborough Caſtle. Queen Elizabeth, who had all along encourag'd the Regencies, granted the Requeſt, and ſent a Body of 1500 Men under the Command of Sir William Drury. In ſhort, by this Reinforcement the Caſtle was oblig'd to ſurrender upon hard Terms: The Quality in the Garriſon were made Priſoners, and the Governor executed. This was the finiſhing Stroke to the Queen of Scots: Thus her Intereſt was entirely broken, and ſhe was ouſted of all her Dominions.

To return to England: The ſetting up a Preſbytery at Wanſworth, Cartwright's Reply to Whitgift's Anſwer to the Admonition, and other Pamphlets diſpers'd by the Party, kept up the Conteſt, and made an unſerviceable Impreſſion. The Queen therefore to give Check to the Deluſion, order'd the Lord Treaſurer Burleigh, to make a Speech in the Star-Chamber upon this Subject, and preſs the Execution of the Laws. It ſeems ſome Perſons in the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion were ſuſpected to countenance the Puritans, under Hand; or at leaſt to manage with too much Remiſneſs.

The Lord Treaſurer's Speech in the Star-Chamber for preſſing Conformity.

The Treaſurer acquaints the Lords of the Star-Chamber, “Her Majeſty was inform'd, that thro' the Negligence of the Biſhops and governing Clergy, ſeveral Perſons underqualified in Age, and unfurniſh'd with Learning and Diſcretion, have been admitted to Cure of Souls, and truſted with the Desk and Pulpit. That theſe Men, for Want of Ballaſt and Maturity, have ſtruck out into Singularities, govern'd themſelves by their own Fancies, ſet the Rubrick aſide, and made Alterations in the Offices of the Church. And thus, neither the Prayers are read, nor the Sacraments adminiſtred according to publick Order. Thus by the Miſchief of Precept and Example, they have miſled their Audience, brought them to diſlike and Cenſure of the Eccleſiaſtical Government, and made them believe they can't comply with the Ceremonies eſtabliſh'd, without diſſerving their Conſcience. That this Latitude muſt be deſtructive to Government: And that her Majeſty can't diſcharge the Truſt lodg'd with her by God Almighty, without providing a Remedy for this Evil.

Novem. 28. 1573.

“For this Purpoſe her Majeſty in the Beginning of this Term publiſh'd a Proclamation for the ſtrict Keeping the Uniformity-Statute. And to give more Vigour to the Conſtitution, ſhe had appointed certain Commiſſioners, of which the Archbiſhops and Biſhops are the Principal, to take Cognizance of Offences of this Nature. She had likewiſe order'd the Lord Keeper to ſignify her Pleaſure upon this Head, and ſuggeſt the great Benefits in enforcing the Execution of the Laws, and the Miſchiefs of a languid Management. That notwithſtanding all this Precaution, her Majeſty is inform'd, that Error and Preſumption come rather forward, and gain Ground upon the Church and State.

“That her Majeſty can't ſatisfy her Conſcience without proſecuting theſe Diſorders, and doing her Utmoſt to bring Practice and Law together: Neither does ſhe think thoſe Subjects worthy of Favour and Protection, that abet theſe Innovations; and either directly or indirectly, countenance the Alteration of any Thing ſettled in the Church.

“Her Majeſty commanded him farther to acquaint the Lords of the Star-Chamber, that being impower'd by Act of Parliament, ſhe had at ſeveral Times, by the Advice of the Clergy, publiſh'd Injunctions and Orders for the uniform Government of the Church; and given the Execution of theſe Orders in Charge to the Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, and Miniſters of Juſtice.

“That her Majeſty is Apprehenſive the long Connivance at theſe pernicious Doctrines, the Countenance and Commendation given them by ſome Perſons in publick Stations, both of the Clergy and Laity, may probably have made Way for propagating the Miſtake upon ſome Perſons of Figure in the Country: And it may be, ſome nominated in the Commiſſions, are not altogether untouch'd by the Infection: That by this Lenity in the Adminiſtration, by this Countenance from unexpected Quarters, ſome Men of Diſtinction may be apt to Fancy theſe innovating Doctrines, theſe refinings upon the Ceremonies of the Church, are not ſo deſtructive, as her Majeſty believes them: That the Points are little more than Matter for Argument and Problem, and that the Practice either Way, is in a Manner indifferent. And it may be ſome People may go farther, and imagine theſe Novelliſts in the Right: And that their Exceptions againſt the Ceremonies of the Church are reaſonable and well founded. Now if any Perſons lay under a Miſ-perſwaſion of this Kind, the Queen commanded him to dilate farther upon the Caſe, and make good her Apprehenſions of the Danger.

“He obſerves therefore, That nothing is more obvious to thoſe who have any Idea of Government, any Taſt for Conduct, then that Contempt of Order muſt pull all in Pieces, and prove fatal in the Iſſue. If a Man has but a Family to manage, or a Veſſel to ſteer, there's no good to be done without Submiſſion to the Perſon at the Helm. For if the Subordination is once broken, if Orders are diſputed, if he that is to govern commands one Thing, and thoſe under his Charge quarrel the Directions, and demur in their Obedience; if they ſet up new Schemes of their Own, what can follow but jarring and Confuſion: And if, as it ſometimes happens, they diſagree among themſelves, contend for their own Singularities, and run into farther Subdiviſions, the Miſchief muſt encreaſe and grow more Troubleſome. When the Union is thus broken, when Authority is loſt, and all the Reſpects of Publick and Private, confounded, what a Condition muſt any Society be in? Which Way can either the Head or the Body be preſerv'd upon ſuch wild Meaſures? Can the Governor maintain his Poſt, and continue his Situation without being obey'd? Or can the Subject ſubſiſt in a Government where every one runs counter to the publick Rule, and ſets up a different Direction? And if this Liberty looks ill in Language and Deſcription; how lamentable muſt it be when brought into Life, and reduc'd to Practice? By this Claſhing between the Father and the Children, between the Maſter and the Servants, between the Captain and the Crew, many rich Ships go to the Bottom, many Eſtates are ſpent, and Families brought to nothing. And thus by a private Image, and by comparing ſmall Things with great, they might collect the Calamity of a Nation, when the Harmony was diſturb'd, and the Government diſregarded. And if Diſorder and Squabbling about Temporal Matters may deſtroy the publick Intereſt to ſo remarkable a Degree,

“ what may be expected where Conſcience is “ concern'd, where Religion lies at Stake, and
“ the other World is brought into the Quarrel?

The Treaſurer goes on to give an Inſtance ſuggeſted by her Majeſty at the Council-Board: But what it was is uncertain, for here the Paper breaks off. (o)

(o) Cotton Lib. Titus B. 2. Life of Archbiſhop Parker.

To this Speech it may not be improper to ſubjoin ſome Propoſals laid before the Council for keeping the Puritans more in Order.

Propoſals laid before the Council for Checking the Growth of Puritaniſm.

The Paper in the firſt Place obſerves, That a Defect in the Statute of Uniformity encouraged the Puritans in their Obſtinacy and Miſbehaviour: That the Act giving the whole Forfeiture to her Majeſty, made the Proviſion leſs ſerviceable: That becauſe the Subject has no Reward for informing, the Proſecution ſleeps, and no Suit is commenc'd againſt any of the Offenders. By this Impunity, the Diſſenters grow bold in the Schiſm, and contemn the Church-Conſtitutions. To check theſe Innovations, 'tis propos'd to the Board.

1ſt, That no Biſhop ſhould ſuffer any to preach, but ſuch as have good Teſtimonials for their Learning, Morals, and Conformity.

2dly, That all Miniſters and Preachers thro'-out the Kingdom ſhould give her Majeſty a Bond of Two hundred Pounds to conform in every Particular to the Common-Prayer, purſuant to an Act for Uniformity made in the Firſt Year of her Reign: And farther, that they would obſerve and keep all ſuch Conſtitutions and Orders now made, or hereafter to be made, and ſet forth by publick Authority: And that they ſhould procure two ſufficient Men to be bound with them for Performance of Conditions. This Bond, the Projector ſuggeſts, would frighten them more than all Laws and Conſtitutions imaginable: For both themſelves, and thoſe who engage for them, will be afraid of incurring the Forfeiture, and being return'd into the Exchequer by the Biſhops.

3dly, If any Perſon ſhall obſtinately refuſe to enter into Bonds, and give ſuch Security for the Purpoſes above-mention'd, that then the Dioceſan ſhall commit the Party ſo refuſing to Priſon; and in caſe the Incompliance is continued, deprive him of all his Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, and not ſuffer him to preach or teach 'till he has made a Submiſſion, and is furniſh'd with the Biſhop's Licenſe for that Purpoſe. (p)

(p) Petit's MSS. Life of Archbiſhop Parker.

There had been lately a new Method of Inſtruction ſet up in ſeveral Dioceſes: 'Twas call'd Propheſying. The Manner was this: Certain of the Clergy agreed upon Times and Places for a publick Meeting. The Place was ſome Church in the Neighbourhood: The Buſineſs was to expound upon ſome Text of Holy Scripture aſſign'd them. And here they had a Moderator to govern the Exerciſe; to prevent improper Lengths, and foreign Digreſſions; to report the Subſtance of what was deliver'd, and determine upon the Queſtion and Performance. This Exerciſe ſeems to have been brought from Scotland. We meet with it firſt in Knox's Book of Diſcipline: And having given ſome Account of it already, I ſhall refer the Reader thither. Whether this Scheme was well drawn or not, I ſhan't examine: However, 'tis certain the Managers ran out into unwarrantable Liberty. By this Reading upon the Scriptures, they took Occaſion to ſtart Controverſies, to moot upon the Church Diſcipline, and queſtion the Lawfulneſs of Epiſcopacy. Others were too eager in diſtinguiſhing themſelves, diſcover'd their Vanity, and top'd upon thoſe of lower Attainments. By this Miſbehaviour the Deſign of the Meeting was loſt; and neither the Edifying the Laity, nor the Improvement of the Clergy, was anſwer'd upon Trial. The Queen being inform'd the Dioceſe of Norwich was particularly remarkable for this Miſcarriage, commanded the Archbiſhop to ſuppreſs the Meetings. Parker accordingly wrote in her Majeſty's Name to Parkhurſt, the Biſhop, to diſcharge thoſe Exerciſes. The Archbiſhop call'd them Vain Propheſyings; at which Parkhurſt was ſomewhat diſguſted, and therefore he deſir'd to know whether the Archbiſhop applied that Term of Cenſure to the undue Manner ſometimes us'd, or to the Exerciſe in general. And here the Biſhop dilates upon the Serviceableneſs of the Scheme. In ſhort, this Biſhop being ſomewhat puritanically inclin'd, ſolicited his Friends at the Council-Board to keep up theſe Propheſyings, to put a Slur upon the Archbiſhop, and ſend down a Countermand to his Orders. This Application was not without Succeſs: For Sandys, Biſhop of London, Sir Francis Knolles, Sir Thomas Smith, and Sir Walter Mildmay, four of the Council, ſent the Biſhop of Norwich a Letter, in which they ſet forth the Advantage of theſe Meetings for expounding the Scriptures, complain of thoſe who reported them as a Grievance; and in the Cloſe, required his Lordſhip not to diſturb the Exerciſe: But then this Encouragement was given with a Reſerve, that nothing of Hereſy, Schiſm, or Sedition, was maintain'd in thoſe Meetings.

The Archbiſhop ſuppreſſes the Exerciſe of Propheſying. March 25. 1574.

May the 6th.

The Archbiſhop notwithſtanding this Rub, went on, carried his Point againſt this ſmall Number of the Privy-Council, and brought the Biſhop of Norwich to Compliance.

A Plot againſt the Archbiſhop and ſome of the Miniſtry.

About a Month forward a Plot was diſcover'd upon the Archbiſhop, and the Lord Treaſurer Burleigh, and ſome other Courtiers of Diſtinction. The Deſign was to have taken them off by Poiſon, or ſome other ſecret Way. 'Twas charg'd upon ſome Puritans, who are ſaid to have engaged upon Zeal, and Motives of Conſcience. One of the principal Confederates was one Undertree, who communicated the Enterprize to the Archbiſhop's Steward, and offer'd him a Bribe to join in the Attempt, and deſtroy his Maſter. The Steward ſeeming to cloſe with the Motion, diſcover'd the Villany to the Archbiſhop. Parker acquainted the Treaſurer with the Detail, adviſ'd him to ſearch the Matter to the Bottom, to proſecute the Conſpirators, and reward the Informer: And that unleſs Juſtice was exerted in an exemplary Manner, neither his Lordſhip, nor the Queen her ſelf, could be long ſafe: That he believ'd theſe Aſſaſſines were countenanc'd underhand at Court; and that ſome who lay in the Queen's Boſom, as he expreſſes himſelf, would ſting her when Opportunity ſerv'd.

When Undertree was ſeiz'd, and brought before the Privy-Council, the Practice had ſomewhat of the Face of a Sham-plot: For ſeveral Puritans Hands had been counterfeited by this Undertree. In ſhort, this Man upon his Examination denied the having any Accomplices, and took the whole Matter upon himſelf. This made the Archbiſhop ſuſpect farther Danger; that Undertree had been tamper'd with, encourag'd to falſe Evidence, and inſur'd againſt Proſecution: For he thought it improbable this Aſſaſſine ſhould engage in ſo deſperate a Practice of his own Fancy.

The Earl of Leiceſter, as has been obſerv'd, appear'd at the Head of the Puritan Party, and ſeem'd very active to bring the Archbiſhop into Diſfavour with the Queen, and make him inſignificant. Parker in a Letter to the Lord Treaſurer complains of this Uſage, mentions the Earl's being unquiet, and that he practis'd with the Preciſians to undo him: That he car'd not for him, but ſhould pay him a Regard, becauſe her Majeſty had been pleas'd to diſtinguiſh his Perſon, and put him in a Poſt of Honour: That theſe Puritans, and their Abettors, ſtruck at the Treaſurer no leſs than himſelf: And that therefore his Lordſhip was concern'd to guard in Time, and look out for a Defence.

Id. Appen. Num. 95.

This Year the Archbiſhop gave his eldeſt Son, John Parker Eſq; a Licence for a private Chapel, and that neither himſelf, nor any of his Family, might be oblig'd to go to the Pariſh Church, excepting twice in the Year. But then this Liberty was granted with this Condition, That the Incumbent ſhould ſuffer nothing in the Perquiſites and Profits belonging to him. And to fence againſt the Statutes, the Diſpenſation ſtands guarded with this Clauſe, Authoritate prædicta, quantum in nobis eſt, & jura Regni Angliæ patiuntur, Tenore præſentium de ſpeciali Gratia Diſpenſamus, &c.

Id. Appen. Num. 97.

The Churchmen diſappointed in the Earl of Morton Regent of Scotland.

To proceed; The Regent of Scotland fell ſhort of the Churchmens Expectation. The Confidence they had in him made them reſign the Thirds of their Livings. To gain this Point, he engag'd the Miniſters ſhould have their Stipends paid with leſs Trouble. And beſides, if they ſhould happen to miſs their Account, and diſlike the new Method of Payment, he promiſed to reſtore them to their former Condition. But the Thirds being thus put into his Hands, he reſolv'd to make a Penny of the Bargain. For this Purpoſe he aſſign'd three or four Churches to one Miniſter, without increaſing the Profits. And thus they had only the Burthen of being Pluraliſts: And as for the Readers, their Allowance was ſtreight to a Scandal. Thus the Churchmen by relying on the Regent, made their Circumſtances much worſe than before: For when the Thirds were paid by the Superintendents, Acceſs was open and eaſy, and Application was never made to no Purpoſe. But now the Miniſters were forc'd to give Attendance at Court, where after having loſt their Time, and ſpent their Money, they were frequently diſappointed at laſt. Neither had the Superintendents any better Uſage; and when they complain'd of the Stoppage of the Payment, the Anſwer was, Their Office was no longer neceſſary; for now ſince the Sees were fill'd, the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction belong'd to the Biſhops. The Churchmen perceiving they had taken a wrong Courſe, inſiſted on the Regent's Promiſe, and deſir'd the Thirds might be lodg'd with the Superintendents as formerly. To this Requeſt, after ſeveral Evaſions and Delays, 'twas plainly anſwer'd, That ſince the Surpluſage of the Thirds belong'd to the King, 'twas more proper for the Regent and Council to apportion the Miniſters Stipends, than that the Remainder for the Crown ſhould be ſettled at the Church's Diſcretion. Thus they found the Retrieving their Maintenance was impracticable. However, to prevent ſome Part of the Miſchief of the Regent's Regulation, 'twas order'd by the next Aſſembly, that thoſe Miniſters who were appointed Pluraliſts, ſhould undertake the Charge of no more than the ſingle Pariſh where they reſided: And becauſe the filling the Sees was made a Pretence for detaining the Superintendents Revenues, the Biſhops were injoin'd not to exerciſe their Juriſdiction within the Superintendents Precinct, at leaſt, not to do it without their Conſent and Approbation. Theſe Counter-motions of the Church and Regent, diſturb'd the Harmony between them; inſomuch that his Intereſt with that Party was never well recover'd. (q)

April 1575.

To go back to England: Archbiſhop Parker, at the Inſtance of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, made a Viſitation in the Iſle of Wight. And here finding the Orders of the Church neglected, and the Puritans gaining Ground, he exerted his Character, brought the People to Conformity, and recover'd them from their Miſtakes. This Vigour in Diſcipline was complain'd of to the Earl of Leiceſter, who made his Report to the Queen with Art and Aggravation enough. This unkind Office was not without Effect: For when the Archbiſhop waited on her Majeſty at Hampton-Court, ſhe receiv'd him coldly, and declar'd her ſelf unpleas'd with his Viſitation. Of this Diſcouragement the Archbiſhop gave the Treaſurer an Account in a Letter. Amongſt other Things he puts him in Mind the Puritans had a ſtrong Intereſt at Court; that the Queen was almoſt the only Perſon that ſtood firm to the Church: That if the Preciſians had the Aſcendant, and prevail'd in the Adminiſtration, her Majeſty would be undone. He complains of the Inconſtancy of ſome of the Biſhops: That ſeveral of that Order lay by, and ſignified little: And that ſome others endeavour'd to undermine him. Her Majeſty once told him, as he goes on, he had a ſupream Government Eccleſiaſtical; but upon Experiment, he finds it very much hamper'd and embarraſs'd. He declares himſelf not ſo much concern'd for the Tippet, Surplice, or ſuch like Ceremonies, as for the Authority of the Laws which injoin'd them: That if publick Proviſions are once diſregarded, and treated with Contempt, the Government muſt ſink of Courſe. As for the Queen's Eccleſiaſtical Prerogative, though he is afraid 'tis not ſo great as the Treaſurer had made it in penning the Injunctions, yet he believes it more extenſive than the Papiſts will allow. (r)

The Archbiſhop's Complaint againſt the Puritans.

His laſt Sickneſs.

The Archbiſhop was now ſick, and almoſt upon the Verge of the other World. Some little Time before his Death he wrote to the Queen, and recommended the Protection of the Church. Amongſt other Things, he put her in Mind how much Religion had ſuffer'd by the Alienation of the conſecrated Revenues: That her Majeſty had been miſled in this Affair by ſome of her great Men: That ſtretching of Politicks to Injuſtice and Sacrilege was a dangerous Latitude: And for theſe mercenary Suggeſtions, and miſdirecting her Majeſty, he charg'd the Lord-Keeper Bacon, and the Lord Treaſurer Burleigh: And that theſe two Miniſters were the chief Promoters of Invaſion upon the Church. This Letter was pen'd with a Concern ſuitable to the Occaſion: For not to mention Parker's Cuſtomary Reſolution, when a Man's dying eſpecially, his Thoughts ſtrike out, and he is ſeldom over-ſet with Ceremony. However, a Gentleman attending the Archbiſhop, and who was more faſten'd to the World, diſſwaded the ſending this Letter: The Archbiſhop being always a modeſt Perſon was over-ruled. But after all, 'tis great Pity the Queen miſs'd the Advice: For few Princes had more Need of having their Memory refreſh'd, and their Conſcience awaken'd upon this Subject.

His Death and Character.

The Archbiſhop died on the 17th of May, and was ſolemnly interr'd on the 16th of June following. To add ſomething to what has been already related concerning him: He was a Gentleman by Extraction, born at Norwich in the Year 1504, and educated in Bennet-College in Cambridge. I ſhall paſs over the firſt Part of his Life and Preferments, and only remark ſomething upon his Conduct after he was Archbiſhop. And firſt with reſpect to the more publick Part of his Character: He is reported to have managed to great Commendation in the Conſiſtory, and Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion. He was of a ſedate Temper, had no Starts of Paſſion, nor treated any Perſon with rough Language. When a Cauſe had any Depth and Difficulty in it, he always examin'd with the niceſt Exactneſs, and made himſelf Maſter of the Argument, before he came to a Deciſion. He was eaſy of Acceſs, had great Penetration in going to the Bottom of Things, and was very quick in apprehending the Tendency of what was propos'd. His Retinue, and the Appearance of his Family, was ſuitable to his Station: But the Credit of the Figure was his leaſt Concern. He was particularly careful of the Regularity of thoſe that belong'd to him: And to prevent Miſcarriage, he aſſign'd every Body Buſineſs, and would have no idle People about him. Thoſe who were not imploy'd in Learning, the Affairs of the Houſe, or the Management of his Revenues, ſpent their Time ſome other Way that turn'd to Account. Thus for Inſtance, he entertain'd Book-Binders, Engravers, and Painters, and thoſe who wrote fine Hands, and underſtood Drawing and Illuminating. He kept a hoſpitable Table, and once gave the Queen a ſplendid Entertainment at Canterbury. As to his private Life, 'twas unexceptionable and exemplary. He wrote a Learned Book in Defence of the Marriage of the Clergy; the Lives of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, intituled, Antiquitates Britannicæ, though by ſome ſuppos'd to be writ by his Secretary Joſcelin, was undoubtedly Parker's Performance. He owns himſelf the Author of this Book in a Letter to the Lord Burleigh, to whom he ſent it in Manuſcript for his Opinion. This Book ſhews him a good Antiquary, which may be farther collected from his publiſhing Matthew Paris, Matthew Weſtminſter, Walſingham, and the Four Goſpels in the Saxon Language. (s)

To mention ſome of his Benefactions: He founded a School at Rochdale in Lancaſhire; purchas'd an Eſtate for founding two Fellowſhips, and thirteen Scholarſhips in Bennet-College in Cambridge, built a Library for that Society, and beſides a conſiderable Value in printed Books, furniſhed it with a great Number of curious Manuſcripts. He gave likewiſe an Hundred Books, half of them in Manuſcript, to the Univerſity-Library. He gave Bennet-College 310 Ounces of gilt Plate enchas'd, and the Advowſon of Saint Mary Abchurch in London. He made a new Street from the Weſt End of St. Mary's Church to the publick Schools. He left Legacies in Plate to the City of Norwich, Key's-College, and Trinity-Hall, where he likewiſe founded a Scholarſhip. And to conclude, he expended conſiderable Sums in Pious and Charitable Uſes. He was buried in Lambeth Chapel with this Inſcription upon his Monument:

May 15.

To go back a little: On Eaſter-Day this Spring a Conventicle of Dutch Anabaptiſts was diſcover'd at a Houſe without the Bars at Aldgate. Twenty ſeven of them were ſeiz'd and committed. Of theſe Four were recover'd, and brought to a Recantation at Paul's-Croſs in the Form following:

A Recantation of ſome Dutch Anabaptiſts.

'Whereas I N. N. being ſeduc'd by the Spirit of Error, and by falſe Teachers, his Miniſters, have fallen into many damnable and deteſtable Hereſies, viz. 1. That Chriſt took not Fleſh of the Subſtance of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary. 2. That Infants born of Faithful Parents ought to be rebaptiz'd. 3. That no Chriſtian Man ought to be a Magiſtrate, or bear the Sword or Office of Authority. 4. And that it is not lawful for a Chriſtian Man to take an Oath. Now by the Grace of God, and through Conference with good and learned Miniſters of Chriſt his Church, I do underſtand and acknowledge the ſame to be moſt damnable and deteſtable Hereſies, and do ask God here before his Church Mercy for my ſaid former Errors, and do forſake them, recant, and renounce them, and abjure them from the very Bottom of my Heart. And further I confeſs, That the whole Doctrine and Religion eſtabliſh'd in this Realm of England, as alſo that which is received and practis'd in the Dutch Church here in this City, is ſound, true, and according to the Word of God: Whereunto in all Things I ſubmit my ſelf, and will moſt gladly be a Member of the ſaid Dutch Church; from henceforth utterly abandoning and forſaking all and every Anabaptiſtical Error. (t)

(t) Stow's Annal.

This Diſcipline carried ſomething of Terror, and check'd the Hereſy. But ſome were ſo obſtinate, that neither Inſtruction nor Puniſhment could make any Impreſſion. Ten Dutchmen, and one Woman of the ſame Country, proving thus incorrigible, were brought into the Conſiſtory at St. Paul's, and condemn'd to the Stake. There was great Pains taken to undeceive them; but none but the Woman was recover'd. However, the Government was ſo merciful as to baniſh the reſt without any farther Puniſhment. This Clemency giving Encouragement to others, 'twas thought neceſſary to proceed to ſome Inſtances of Extremity. Thus two of the ſame Nation and Heterodoxies, were burnt in Smithfield. While they lay under Sentence, Fox, the Martyrologiſt, petition'd the Queen in their Behalf: He wrote a Latin Letter in a very handſome Chriſtian Strain. 'Twas to mitigate the Rigour, and change the Puniſhment; or at leaſt to reſpite the Execution for a Month or two: And that during this Interval they might have the Aſſiſtance of ſome Learned Men to diſintangle their Underſtandings, and bring them off their Hereſy. But a Reprieve being granted, and Fox's Expedient tried without Succeſs, the Forfeiture of their Lives was taken.

Two of them burnt in Smithfield.

Id. Fuller's Church Hiſt. Book 9.

The Lawfulneſs of Epiſcopacy put to the Queſtion in the General Aſſembly.

About this Time the Reform'd in Scotland began to divide and break into Parties: The Form of Church-Government was puſh'd at, and a Deſign on Foot to break the Settlement at Leith. Andrew Melvil, as far as it appears, was the principal Undertaker. He had ſtudied ſome Time at Geneva, and was entirely in Beza's Sentiments: He was of a warm enterprizing Temper, apt to believe himſelf always in the Right, and impatient of Diſappointment. This Gentleman, whoſe Learning lay moſtly in Languages, was ſtrongly in the Project of a Presbyterian Parity: But being but lately come from Geneva, and wanting a Character to break the Ice, he thought it moſt adviſable to make uſe of another Hand. To this Purpoſe he made an Acquaintance with ſeveral of the Preachers, and particularly with one John Dury, a Miniſter of Edinborough. This Dury, as Spotſwood repreſents him, was a well-meaning undiſſembling Man, open in declaring his Mind, and zealous in maintaining his Opinion: But then he was ſomewhat unguarded in his Management, had an Over-ballance of Belief, and was eaſily impoſ'd on. (u)

Aug. 1575.

Melvil having practis'd upon this Dury, and brought him over to his Singularities, prevail'd with him to open the Cauſe, and remonſtrate againſt Epiſcopacy at the General Aſſembly. The firſt Eſſay touch'd the Matter ſomewhat tenderly, and an Enquiry was only propos'd concerning the Lawfulneſs of the Epiſcopal Function, and the Authority of Chapters in the Election. When Dury had ſtarted the Queſtion, Melvil ſtruck in, and ſeconded the Motion: However, he managed as if the Subject had been perfectly new, and the Matter unconcerted between them. He began with a Commendation of Dury's Zeal, harangued upon the flouriſhing Condition of the Church of Geneva, dilated upon the Opinions of Calvin and Beza, and at laſt advanc'd to a direct Aſſertion, That none ought to bear Office in the Church, unleſs they could make out their Claim, and prove their Title from the inſpir'd Writings. 'Tis true, the Diſtinction of Biſhops was mention'd in Scripture, but then 'twas not to be taken in the cuſtomary Conſtruction; for our Saviour has allow'd no Superiority amongſt his Miniſters: He himſelf is the only Lord of his Church; and as for his Officers, they are all rang'd in the ſame Degree, and alotted the ſame Porportion of Power. In the Cloſe of his Diſcourſe he took the Freedom to ſay, That the Epiſcopal Function, as now manag'd, was ſo far degenerated, and overgrown ſo much with Corruption and Abuſe, that unleſs this Grievance was removed, the Church could never be happily ſettled, nor the Purity of Religion long preſerv'd.

A Committee appointed to debate the Matter.

This Speech being well receiv'd by many of the Members, a Committee of Six were appointed to debate the Queſtion. Mr. David Lindeſay, Mr. George Hay, and Mr. John Row repreſented the preſent Eſtabliſhment, and argued for the Lawfulneſs of Epiſcopacy. The other Three on the oppoſite Side, were Mr. James Lawſon, Mr. John Craig, and Mr. Andrew Melvil. After ſeveral Conferences, and a great Deal of Diſpute, they came to ſomewhat of a Temper, and made the Report of their Reſolution to the Aſſembly in Writing. 'Tis digeſted under Five Heads.

Their Reſolution.

“ Firſt, They did not think it expedient at preſent to anſwer the Queſtions propos'd by Dury:” However, tho' they waved ſpeaking directly to that Point, ſomething was offer'd towards Satisfaction. “ For they add, that if any Biſhop was unfurniſh'd with the Qualities requir'd by the Word of God, he was to be tried by the general Aſſembly, and depos'd.

“ Secondly, They conceiv'd that the Name of a Biſhop was no appropriated Diſtinction, but common to all Miniſters that had the Charge of a Pariſh: And that by the Word of God the principal Function of ſuch Eccleſiaſtical Governors conſiſted in Preaching, in Adminiſtring the Sacraments, and in the Exerciſe of the Church Diſcipline, with the Concurrence of his Elders.

“ Thirdly, That out of the Body of the Miniſters ſome one might be choſen to inſpect, and Viſit, beyond his own Charge, and ſuperintend within ſuch a Precinct as the general Aſſembly ſhould appoint.

“ Fourthly, That the Miniſters ſo elected might ſettle Preachers within the Limits laſt mention'd: But then this was not to be done without the Advice of the Miniſters of that Diviſion, and the Conſent of the Flock where they were to officiate.

Elizabeth Q.

Id. MS. Acts of the Aſſembly.

“ And laſtly, That ſuch a diſtinguiſh'd Eccleſiaſtick might ſuſpend Miniſters from the Exerciſe of their Office, upon reaſonable Cauſes, with the Conſent of the Miniſters of the Bounds.

And here, notwithſtanding the Presbyterians gain'd ſome Ground in putting Epiſcopacy to the Queſtion, yet they fell ſhort of their Purpoſe, for they could not prevail for a Deciſion againſt the Function: And more than that, by the Firſt and Third Articles, the Project for Parity is clearly baffled.

When this Aſſembly was held, and the grand Queſtion put, the Archbiſhop of Glaſcow, the Biſhops of Dunkeld, and Galloway, of Brichen, Dunblain, and Iſles, the Superintendents of Lothien and Angus, were preſent. But notwithſtanding they were ſo much concern'd in the Buſineſs, it does not appear by the Records that either they were ſo far conſider'd as to make Part of the Conference, or that they offer'd at any Defence of their Office and Dignity. What made them ſo ſilent and paſſive under ſo warm an Attack, is ſomewhat Myſterious. If they expected the Regent would cruſh the Motion, and diſappoint their Adverſaries, they miſcalculated upon the Event. But if 'twas done out of a Principle of Reſignation and ſelf denial, there was more Humility than Conduct in it. For 'twas by no Means prudential to give Way to ſuch Novelties, and ſuffer the Warrantableneſs of their Function to be made a Moot Point.

Melvil's Project for Parity miſcarries.

However, the Conteſt was much ſhort of Victory on the Presbyterians ſide. This, beſides what hath been obſerv'd already, may be farther evinc'd by the Articles preſented to the Regent by this Aſſembly, the Firſt of which runs thus:

For Planting and Preaching the Word thro' the whole Realm, 'tis deſir'd, that as many Miniſters as may be had, who are yet unprovided, may be received as well in the Country, to relieve the Charge of them that have many Kirks, as otherwiſe throughout the whole Realm, with Superintendents or Commiſſioners, within thoſe Bounds where Biſhops are not, and to help ſuch Biſhops as have too great Charges. (w)

From hence 'tis plain Melvil's Undertaking had little Encouragement: And that the Aſſembly was reſolv'd to continue the Superiority of Biſhops and Superintendents.

To return to England: Upon the 8th of February the Parliament met at Weſtminſter, and ſate till the 15th of March, when 'twas once more prorogued. This Parliament paſs'd an Act that the Third Part of the Rent of College-Leaſes ſhould be reſerv'd in Corn. And in Default of Payment, the Leſſees were to pay after the Rate of the beſt Wheat and Malt in the Market of both the Univerſities. This Act was very beneficial to theſe learned Societies, and encreas'd their Revenues to a very conſiderable Degree. *

Upon another Act where Two Leaſes upon Church Lands or Livings are concurrent, the Latter is declar'd void in Caſe it was made Three Years before the Expiration of the Firſt. This Proviſion was made for the Benefit of the Succeſſor, and to prevent Alienations of the Church Revenues. †

This Parliament, Mr. Wentworth's Speech made the laſt Seſſions, was conſider'd by the Houſe. There were ſome undutiful Expreſſions in it relating to the Queen. But theſe, as foreign to this Work, ſhall be omitted.

The Reader may remember that the laſt Seſſions a Meſſage was ſent from the Queen to the Commons, not to debate Matters of Religion till the Points had been firſt examin'd and recommended by the Clergy. This Meſſage, Wentworth ſuppos'd, ſuggeſted by the Biſhops: And thus being check'd in his Reformation Project, he falls into an invective againſt the whole Order. The Biſhops, ſays this Gentleman, I do ſurely think were the Cauſe of that doleful Meſſage: My Reaſon is this, I was amongſt others the laſt Parliament ſent to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury for the Articles of Religion, that then paſs'd this Houſe: He ask'd us why we put out of the Book, the Articles for the Homilies, conſecrating of Biſhops, and ſuch like? Surely Sir, ſaid I, becauſe we were ſo occupied in other Matters, that we had no Time to examine them how they agreed with the Word of God. What, ſaid he, ſurely you miſtook the Matter, you will refer your ſelves wholly to us therein? No, by the Faith I bear to God, ſays I, we will paſs nothing before we underſtand what it is, for that were but to make you Popes; make you Popes who liſt, ſaid I, for we will make you none.

D'Ewes's Journal, pag. 239, 241, &c.

From the Archbiſhop's expecting the Commons would refer themſelves to the Biſhops in Matters of Religion, this Member would infer the Prelates pretended to infallibility: For, ſays he, had they a lower Opinion of their Judgment, they would reform Things amiſs at the Remonſtrance of God's People, meaning the Puritans. And to prove God's Spirit is not confin'd to the Biſhops, he cites this Text, Seek ye Firſt the Kingdom of God, and his Righteouſneſs, and all theſe Things ſhall be added unto you. And from hence the Reader may collect Mr. Wentworth's Talent for Reaſoning and Divinity. That Part of his Speech which touch'd the Crown, brought him into ſome Trouble. For he was ſequeſtred from the Houſe, committed to the Serjeant's Ward, examin'd by the Commons, and ſent to the Tower, but upon his Submiſſion, the Queen pardon'd him, and he was re-admitted into the Houſe.

St. Math. 5.

After the See of Canterbury had been kept Vacant ſomewhat more than half a Year, Grindal Archbiſhop of York was preferr'd thither. But before he had paſs'd thro' all the Forms, and compleated his Character, the Convocation, after ſeveral Prorogations, was re-aſſembled at St. Paul's. And here, according to Cuſtom, the Biſhop of London was Preſident. At the Second Seſſion, Grindal's Tranſlation being perfected, he came into the Convocation Houſe at St. Paul's, and took the Preſidentſhip upon himſelf. There was no Buſineſs done till the 17th of March, when the Archbiſhop being preſent, order'd the Reading of ſeveral Articles, afterwards ſubſcrib'd by both Houſes. They relate to the Regulation of the Clergy.

Feb. 10. Ann. Dom. 157$\frac{5}{6}$.

Feb. 17.

Articles for the Regulation of the Clergy agreed by the Convocation.

“ By the Firſt; none were to be ordain'd Deacon or Prieſt, unleſs known by the Dioceſan, or recommended to him by Teſtimonials: That theſe Credentials were to vouch for his Morals and Orthodoxy; particularly, that he believ'd the Doctrines contain'd in the Articles ſet forth by the Convocation held in the Year 1562. Another Qualification requir'd, was his Ability to give an Account of his Faith in Latin, upon the aforeſaid Articles, which he was likewiſe oblig'd to ſubſcribe. None was to be ordain'd Deacon under 23 Years of Age, nor a Prieſt under 24. Neither of theſe Orders were to be given but on Sundays or Holidays: And here the Solemnity was to be directed by the Form of the Ordinal.

“ Secondly, That no Biſhop ſhould give either of the ſaid Orders to any Perſons foreign to his Dioceſe (Graduates who were Gremials in either of the Univerſities excepted) without Letters dimiſſory from the Biſhop to whom they belong'd. And here Letters dimiſſory from any Chancellor or other Officer, are expreſly barr'd.

“ Thirdly, That unlearned Miniſters formerly Ordain'd, ſhall not be admitted to any Cure or Spiritual Function. For this Purpoſe, the Biſhops ſhall paſs no Curates with out ſtrict Examination.

“ Fourthly, Diligent Enquiry is to be made in every Dioceſe for diſcovering ſuch as have counterfeited Letters of Orders, that they may be ſet aſide, and puniſh'd.

“ Fifthly, That the Biſhops ſhould certify each other of the Names of ſuch pretended Clergy-men, to prevent their Officiating in any other Dioceſe.

“ Sixthly, That for the Future none ſhall be Ordain'd without either exhibiting a Preſentation to a Benefice actually void in the Dioceſe, or producing a Certificate for ſupplying a Cure, or making Proof of Preferment in ſome Cathedral or Collegiate Church, or College; or unleſs the Biſhop ſhall immediately provide him with ſome Benefice or Cure: Or laſtly, unleſs he is known to have a ſufficient Eſtate of his Own to maintain him.

“ Seventhly, That none ſhall be admitted to any Dignity, unleſs qualified up to the Firſt Article; and in Caſe any ſuch Dignity or Benefice ſhall reach the Value of 30 l. per Annum in the Queen's Book, the Perſon preferr'd muſt either be a Doctor in ſome Faculty, or a Batchelor of Divinty at the Loweſt, or a Preacher licens'd by ſome Biſhop, or one of the Univerſities: And beſides, before his Admiſſion to any ſuch Dignity or Benefice, he was to preach before the Biſhop, or ſome other learned Perſon appointed by him, and ſtand the Teſt of their Judgment. This Article concludes with ſomewhat of Softning and Relaxation, “ That where the Stipends and Livings are very ſmall, the Ordinaries are to ſtoop to the Neceſſity, and take the beſt Men they can find.

“ Eighthly, That all Licences for Preaching granted within the Province of Canterbury, and Prior to the Date of Feb. the 8th, 1575. ſhall be void.” With a ſaving Clauſe notwithſtanding. “ That thoſe who are found qualified for that Function, ſhall be reſtor'd to their Privilege without Difficulty or Charge.

“ Ninthly, None under a Deacon are allow'd to preach.

“ Tenthly, Every Biſhop was forthwith to take Care that the Church Catechiſm was diligently taught in every Pariſh. And when there was no Sermon, the Homilies were to be read on Sunday and Holidays in the Order appointed.

“ Eleventhly, The Biſhops were to take Care that all Incumbents and Curates under the Degree of Maſter of Arts, and not Preachers, ſhall provide themſelves the New Teſtament, both in Latin and Engliſh, or Welſh; read a Chapter every Day, and compare the Tranſlations together. The Archdeacons, Commiſſaries, and Officials at their Viſitations were ordered to give the Clergy above-mention'd ſome Text out of the New Teſtament, to be “either gotten without Book, or explain'd: And that at the next Viſitation they were to take an Account of their Diligence and Proficiency.

Twelfthly, And whereas ſome Ambiguity and Doubt has ariſen amongſt Divers, by what Perſons private Baptiſm is to be adminiſtred, foraſmuch as by the Book of Common-Prayer allow'd by Statute, the Biſhop of the Dioceſe is to expound and reſolve all ſuch Doubts as ſhall ariſe concerning the Manner, how to underſtand, do, and execute the Things contain'd in the ſame Book; it is now by the ſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops, expounded and reſolv'd, and every of them doth expound and reſolve, that the ſaid private Baptiſm, in Caſe of Neceſſity, is only to be miniſtred by a lawful Miniſter or Deacon, called to be preſent for that Purpoſe, and by none other. And that every Biſhop in his Dioceſe ſhall take Order that this Expoſition of the ſaid Doubt ſhall be publiſh'd in Writing before the Firſt Day of May next coming, in every Pariſh Church of his Dioceſe in this Province; and thereby all other Perſons ſhall be inhibited to intermeddle with the Miniſtring of Baptiſm privately; it being no Part of their Vocation. This Article being particularly remarkable, I have given it in the Words of the Record.

“Thirteenthly, No Commutation of Penance is to be allow'd, unleſs upon weighty Reaſons. And here the Dioceſan is to teſtify his Conſent to the Indulgence under his Hand and Seal.

“Fourteenth, That all Archdeacons, and other Eccleſiaſtical Judges, ſhould ſummon thoſe preſented before them, and puniſh them proportionable to their Crime.

“Fifteenth, That Marriage may be ſolemniz'd at all Times of the Year, provided the Banes are publiſh'd in the Church Three ſeveral Sundays or Holidays, and no Impediment objected.

(x) Journal of the Convocation, fol. 140. & deinc.

The Queen refus'd to aſſent to this laſt Article, for which Reaſon 'twas not publiſh'd with the Reſt. *

Notwithſtanding none but the Archbiſhop and Biſhops are mention'd for their Concurrence in the Articles, yet in the Archbiſhop's Mandate for the Publication, they are ſaid to be agreed and ſettled by both Houſes.

This was the laſt Buſineſs of the Convocation, which by the Queen's Order, was now prorogued to the Sixth of November, and ſo forward from Year to Year, 'till January, 1580.

The Queen's Mandate for conſecrating the Biſhop of Man.

The See of York not being yet fill'd ſince Grindal's Tranſlation, the Queen directed her Mandate to him for the Conſecration of John Merrick to the Biſhoprick of Man. The Earl of Derby is Patron of this See, and nominates or preſents to the Crown, the Perſon to be preferr'd: Humbly praying that the King or Queen would pleaſe to admit the Preſentation; from whence it ſeems to follow, the Crown is judge of the Qualifications of the Perſon; ſo far as either to allow, or refuſe the Earl's Nomination. But here no Exceptions being made, the Queen iſſued out her Mandate for the Confirmation and Conſecration of the Preſentee. If the See of York had been full, the Queen's Precept of Courſe would have been directed to that Archbiſhop, becauſe the Iſle of Man lies within that Province. I ſhall tranſcribe Part of the Queen's Mandate into the Records. (y)

(y) See Records, Number LXXXVIII.

This Summer Archbiſhop Grindal made a metropolitical Viſitation. The Articles of Enquiry may not be unacceptable to the Reader. They ſtand thus in the Regiſter.

Articles of Enquiry at the Archbiſhop's metropolitical Viſitation.

Articles to be enquired of in the metropolitical Viſitation of the Moſt Reverend Father in God, Edmund, by Divine Sufferance, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Metropolitan in all and ſingular Cathedral and Collegiate Churches within his Province of Canterbury. (z)

“1. Whether the Biſhop and his Chancellor, Commiſſaries, and all other his Officers do Miniſter Juſtice indifferently and incorruptly to all her Majeſty's Subjects, and puniſh Vice and publick Crimes with due Puniſhment, without any corrupt Commutations, neither reſpecting Gifts nor Perſons; and whether any Money, Gift, Reward, or any other Temporal Commodity (other than accuſtomed lawful Fees) hath been received for Juſtice, or any Judgment or Execution of Laws, or for any Gift, Advowſon, Preſentation, Collation, Inſtitution, or Induction, or for the Procuring of any ſuch to any Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Living, what hath been receiv'd, by whom, and by whoſe Mediation?

“2. Item, Whether the Biſhop, Dean and Chapter, and all other the Governors do in their ſeveral Regiments direct all their Doings to ſeek the Glory of God, the godly Quietneſs of the Church of England, the Upholding in good Order of the Cathedral, neither ſuffering in the ſame corrupt Doctrine, nor offenſive Manners; and whether any of them hath, or doth make or ſuffer any Waſt, Ruin, Decay, or Dilapidation of the Goods or Poſſeſſions of this Church, as by Decay or not repairing the Church, and their ſeveral Houſes, alienating the Stock, Buildings, Implements, or other moveable Goods of the Church, or committing any of the ſame to private Uſes, or making of Leaſes in Poſſeſſion or Reverſion, for more Years or otherways, than the Statutes of the Church do preſcribe, or by greedy Waſt of Timber, exceſſive Sale of Woods, Advowſons unus'd, and unreaſonable Grants, Patents, and Reverſions of Offices, unwonted Annuities, and ſuch like greedy Griping of Things preſent, to the Impoveriſhing of the Church and Succeſſion, how many, and what they be, whether any ſuch Grants or Advowſon hath been ſold for any Value, by whom, to whom, and for how much, and who now enjoyeth the Same?

“3. How many ſuch Grants, Patents, Advowſons, Sales, Offices, Annuities and ſuch like, hath been confirm'd by your Chapter's Seal, ſithence the Firſt Year of her Majeſty's Reign, to whoſe Uſe, and by whoſe Means, and what Money was received for the ſame, by whom, and to whoſe Uſe; whether any like Gift, Grant, Advowſon, or Leaſe for longer Time, than for Twenty one Years, or Three Lives hath been made or confirmed, antedated, or by other colourable Means procured in Poſſeſſion or Reverſion, ſithence the Beginning of the Parliament, in the Thirteenth Year of her Majeſty's Reign; what thoſe be, and by whoſe Means procured, and to whoſe Uſe?

“4. Item, Whether your Deans, Archdeacons, and other Dignities of your Church, be reſident or not? Who they be, what other Promotions or Livings every one of them hath, and in what Dioceſs? And whether every one of them be Miniſters or not? Whether they uſe ſeemly or Prieſtly Garments, “according as they are commanded by the Queen's Majeſty's Injunctions to do?

“5. Item, Whether your Prebendaries be commonly Reſident, or how many of them, Whether any of the Reſt be, what be their Names, what Livings every one of them hath, and in what Place? What Orders they be in, how, and in what Apparel they do commonly go, whether they do Preach in their ſeveral Courſes, or how often, and what Times in the Year, or how often they do reſort to your Cathedral Church?

“6. Item, Whether your Divine Service be uſed, and the Sacraments be miniſtred in the Manner and Form preſcrib'd in the Queen's Majeſty's Injunctions, and none other Ways? Whether it be ſaid or ſung in due Time, whether in all Points according unto the Statutes of your Church, not being repugnant to any of the Queen's Majeſty's Laws or Injunctions; Whether all that were wont, be bound or ought to come to it, do ſo ſtill; whether every one of your Church doth openly communicate in the ſaid Cathedral Church, at the leaſt once in every Year?

“7. Item, Whether your Grammar-School be well order'd, whether the Number of the Children thereof be furniſh'd, how many do want, and by whoſe Default, whether they be diligently and godly brought up in the Fear of God, and wholeſome Doctrine; whether any of them have been received for Money or Rewards, and by whom, whether the Statutes, Foundations, and other Ordinances touching the godly preſcribed and uſed Alms of your Church, and the ſaid Grammar-School, Maſter, or the Scholars thereof, or any other having, doing, or Intereſt therein be kept, by whom it is not obſerv'd, or by whoſe Default; and the like in all Points you ſhall enquire and preſent of your Choriſters, and their Maſter.

“8. Item, Whether all other Officers and Miniſters of your Church, as well within as without, do their Duties in all Points obediently, and faithfully. And whether your Dean, Stewards, Treaſurers, Burſors, Perveyors, or any Officer, having any Charge, or any Ways being Accomptant to the ſaid Church, do make a true, perfect, and faithful Account at ſuch Days, and Times as be limited and appointed by the Statutes and Cuſtoms of the ſaid Church, making full Payment yearly of all Arrearages, whether any Money or Goods of the Church do remain in any Man's Hands, who they be, and what Sum remaineth?

“9. You ſhall enquire of the Doctrine and Judgment, of all and ſingular, Head and Members of your ſaid Church, as your Dean, Archdeacons, Prebendaries, Readers of Divinity, Schoolmaſters, Vicars, petty Canons, Deacons, Conducte, Singing-Men, Choriſters, Scholars in Grammar-Schools, and all other Officers, and Miniſters, as well within your Church as without, whether any of them do either privily or openly Preach any unwholeſome, erroneous or ſeditious Doctrine, contrary or repugnant to any Article agreed upon in any Synod of the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury, ſithence the Firſt Year of her Majeſty's Reign; or diſcourage any Man ſoberly for his Edifying from the Reading of the Holy Scriptures; or in any Point do perſuade or move any not to conform themſelves to the Order of Religion reformed, reſtored, and revived by publick Authority in the Church of England.

“10. Item, You ſhall enquire of the Names and Sirnames of all and ſingular the above-named Members, Officers and Miniſters of this your ſaid Church; as well High as Low; whether you know or ſuſpect any of them to obtain his Room or Living by Symony, That is by Money unlawful, Covenants, Gifts or Reward, who preſented him, whether his Living be in Leaſe, and by whom it is leaſed, to whom, upon what Rent, whether he doth pay any Penſion, for what Cauſe, what Sum, and to whom? Whether any of them be known or ſuſpected to be a Swearer, an Adulterer, or ſuſpected of any other Uncleaneſs, a Fornicator? Whether any of them do Uſe any ſuſpected Houſe, or ſuſpected Company of any ſuch Faults, any Tavern, Ale-houſe, or Tipling-Houſe at any inconvenient Seaſon? Whether any of them be ſuſpected to be a Drunkard, a Dicer, a Carder, a Brawler, a Fighter, Quarreller or unquiet Perſon; a carrier of Tales, a Backbiter, Slaunderer, Batemaker, or any other Ways a Breaker of Charity, or Unity, or Cauſe of Unquietneſs by any Means?

“11. Item, Whether you have neceſſary Ornaments and Books for your Church?

“12. Item, Whether your Church be ſufficiently repair'd in all Parts, what Stock or Annuity is there towards the Reparations of the Cathedral Church, in whoſe Hands and Cuſtody doth it remain?

From theſe Articles the Reader may perceive the Archbiſhop was no negligent Governor, nor yet a Perſon of Latitude and Indifferency for the Ceremonies of the Church.

The Exerciſe of Prophecying was attended with ſeveral Inconveniencies: For beſides the Inſtances of Miſmanagement already related, it gave Opportunity to the ſpreading erroneous Doctrine. For the Purpoſe; thoſe who were ſuſpended or depriv'd for Non-conformity, ventur'd to appear at theſe Meetings: And here they took the Liberty to declare againſt the Government and Liturgy of the Church. And ſometimes their Satyr was played upon the State: Sometimes they glanced upon Perſons, and run out into particular Invectives. And ſometimes the Laity undertook the Argument, and held forth. In ſhort, the Exerciſes at laſt were remarkable for Squabbling and unneceſſary Diſputes, and fail'd in the Requiſites of Charity and Diſcretion.

The Archbiſhop believ'd this Miſmanagement accidental to the Meetings: He thought the Deſign was ſerviceable for the Improvement of the People and Clergy; and therefore endeavour'd to make it anſwer upon Experiment, and bring the Practice up to the Plan. To this Purpoſe he drew up ſome Regulations to prevent the Occaſions of Diſorder. They are digeſted under the following Heads.

The Archbiſhop's Regulations for the Exerciſe of Prophecying.

“1. That the ſaid Exerciſes are to be uſed only in ſuch Churches, and at ſuch Times, as the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, under his Hand and Seal, ſhall appoint.

“2. That in all Aſſemblies for ſuch Conferences, either the Archdeacon, if he is a Divine, or elſe ſome other Grave and learned Graduate at leaſt, be appointed by the Biſhop to moderate at the Exerciſes.

“3. That a Liſt of the Names of ſuch as are ſuppos'd qualified to ſpeak in thoſe Exerciſes be given in: And that ſuch Parts of the Scripture ſhall be only handled as the Biſhop ſhall appoint.

“4. That the reſt of the Miniſters who have no Talent for Speaking in publick, ſhall have the Expoſition of ſome Part of Scripture aſſign'd them as a Task by the Moderators: And that thoſe Tasks ſhould be read privately before the Miniſters only, and not before the Laity.

“5. That no Lay-Perſon be allow'd to ſpeak publickly in thoſe Aſſemblies.

“6. No Man in the Courſe of his Exerciſe ſhall be ſuffer'd to libel the Church or State, or cenſure any Perſon publick or private, either by broad Satyr, or more Covert Innuendoes. And when any one happens to run Riot in this Manner, he ſhall be immediately ſilenc'd by the Moderator. And here the Biſhop was to be certified why the Check was given. And the Party receiving this Rebuke was not to be re-admitted to any Share in the Exerciſe, without the Biſhop's Approbation, and making an Acknowledgment of his Miſbehaviour.

The Seventh Article is little more than a fuller Explication of the Sixth. 'Tis here order'd, “That no Man ſhould be ſuffer'd to make any Invectives againſt the Laws, Rites, Policies, and Diſcipline of the Church of England eſtabliſh'd by publick Authority. And if any Sallies of this Kind ſhould happen, the Moderator was immediately to ſilence the Speaker, and ſhew the Audience the Unreaſonableneſs of his Exceptions: And here the Perſon offending was not to be reſtor'd to his Poſt without making publick Satisfaction.

“Laſtly, That no Miniſters barr'd the Pulpit, or depriv'd for Non-conformity, ſhould be allow'd to ſpeak in theſe Exerciſes: That every Dioceſan ſhould be particularly careful in this Matter: And not ſuffer any Perſons to expound Scripture, and make any Diſcourſes at this Meeting, (a) excepting thoſe who ſubſcrib'd the Articles of Religion, and conform'd to the Church Eſtabliſhment.

Thus the Archbiſhop endeavour'd to guard againſt the Abuſe, and continue the Exerciſe. But the Queen was of a different Sentiment. She thought theſe Meetings gave Encouragement to Novelty, made People ramble in their Fancy, and neglect their Affairs. That their Curioſity was too much indulg'd, and their Heads overcharg'd with Notions by theſe Diſcourſes: And that by raiſing Diſputes, and forming Parties, Things might poſſibly grow up to a publick Diſturbance. She told the Archbiſhop the Kingdom was overfurniſh'd with Inſtructions of this Nature: That ſhe would have the Exerciſe of Prophecying ſuppreſs'd, the Preachers reduc'd to a ſmaller Number, and Homilies read inſtead of Sermons. She conceiv'd Three or Four Preachers in a County might be ſufficient, and that therefore Licenſes for the Pulpit ſhould be granted with more Reſerve. The Queen deliver'd her ſelf upon this Subject with ſomething of Vehemence and Diſguſt: And gave her Pleaſure in Charge to the Archbiſhop.

His Letter to the Queen againſt retrenching the Number of the Preachers, and in Defence of Prophecying.

Grindal, to give him his Due, was a Prelate of more Conſcience and Courage, than to be dazled with the Luſtre of a Court, to reſign againſt his Judgment, and be over-rul'd into inſignificancy. He wrote a long Letter to the Queen to excuſe his Incompliance. 'Tis penn'd with a Mixture of Freedom and Regard. He writes like a Subject in the State, and a Governor in the Church: And takes Care neither to forget her Majeſty, nor himſelf. 'Tis printed at Length in Fuller, I ſhall give the Reader the Subſtance of it. By the Way, this Hiſtorian places it to the Year 1580, whereas 'twas written no earlier than September this Year. (b)

Decemb. 20. 1576.

The Archbiſhop takes Notice that the Queen's not being pleas'd to hear him out upon the Argument at his laſt waiting upon her, was the Reaſon of his Addreſſing her this Way. “He begins with a Profeſſion, that nothing but Neceſſity and Conſcience ſhould make him Incompliant. He believes her Zeal and Meaning was of the beſt Kind; but good Princes may be ſometimes miſtaken. Thus for Inſtance, David had no ill Intention in numbering the People: Jehoſhaphat had no revolting View in making an Alliance with idolatrous Ahab, neither did Hezekiah conceive any Harm in ſhewing his Rarities and Treaſure to the Babylonian Ambaſſadors: And yet 'tis certain all theſe Princes fail'd in their Meaſures. And to make Way for Speaking his Mind more freely, he takes Notice of St. Ambroſe's Manner of Addreſſing the Emperor Theodoſius. The Father acquaints this Prince he was well aſſured of his Piety and good Nature; and owns his having receiv'd many Obligations from him: But notwithſtanding this introductive Acknowledgment, he ſolicits the Emperor ſtrongly to recal an ungodly Edict: The Purport of the Order was to command a Biſhop the Rebuilding of a Jewiſh Synagogue pull'd down by ſome of his People.

2 Sam. 24.
2 Chron. 19.
2 Kings 20.

“After an Application of this Inſtance to himſelf, the Archbiſhop comes directly to the Caſe: And in the Firſt Place inſiſts on the Neceſſity of a great many Preachers. He ſuggeſts to her Majeſty, that Preaching is the ordinary Means of Salvation. That by the Diſcharge of this Function, Ignorance is inſtructed, Stubbornneſs rebuked, Scruples diſcharg'd, Comfort adminiſtred to afflicted Conſciences, and Vengeance threatned to the Obdurate. Preaching gives a Ground for Loyalty, and Forms a Principle for Civil Obedience. For Obedience is the Reſult of Conſcience, Conſcience receives its Force from the Word of God, and the Word of God operates by Preaching. So that generally Speaking, where Preaching fails, the Want of it is ſeen in the Manners of the People. Thus for Inſtance, in the late Commotions in the North, Mutiny encreas'd in Proportion to Ignorance, and where there was leaſt Knowledge, there was moſt Rebellion. He obſerves, That thoſe who object againſt frequent Preaching, were either People of exceſſive Niceneſs, who could Reliſh nothing but what was ſet off with Ornament and Notion, and heard Sermons more for Entertainment than Edifying: Or elſe they were Enemies to the Reformation; They were afraid that Error and Innovation ſhould be too much expoſed. Or laſtly, They were Men of Licence and Avarice, and wholly reſign'd to Intereſt and Pleaſure. That this laſt Diviſion, which was very numerous, hated Reproof, and dreaded the Diſcipline of the Pulpit. Theſe Harpyes and Libertines are afraid of being drag'd into Light, and painted in their Colours, and would gladly have no Preaching at all. And becauſe they dare not be ſo hardy as to condemn the Office, they except againſt the Perſons, and Report them to diſadvantage.

“And here the Archbiſhop was ſenſible it would be objected the Homilies might ſuperſede the Neceſſity of Sermons, and paſs for an equivalent Inſtruction; to obviate this, he tells the Queen, “He is ſtill of his former Opinion: He grants the reading of Homilies is not without its Serviceableneſs; but then 'tis comparatively faint, and falls much ſhort of the Force of Preaching: The Homilies, though unexceptionable in the Matter, are too generally digeſted. They don't always come up to particular Exigence, point upon the Caſe, nor awaken the Conſcience. The Homilies were only deſign'd for a Temporary Proviſion: At the Beginning of the Reformation Men of Orthodoxy and Learning were not to be met with in every Pariſh. This Scarcity of qualified Preachers was the Reaſon the Homilies were compos'd and recommended to publick Uſe. Beſides, he obſerves the Sacrilege which kept Pace with the Reformation, was another Reaſon of bringing the Church under a Neceſſity of providing for the People this Way: That Impropriations being firſt convey'd from Abbies to the Crown, and now granted away to private Perſons, there's no Hopes of retrieving the Patrimony of the Church, and bringing Things back to their original Intendment: That by this Means there is ſcarcely one Pariſh in Seven able to furniſh a competent Maintenance for a Learned Preacher. And in many Pariſhes where there are Seven or Eight hundred Souls to take Care of, the Living is ſeculariz'd to that lamentable Degree, that there is not eight Pounds per Annum left for ſupporting the Incumbent: By theſe Alienations the furniſhing Preachers is wholly impracticable in many Places: And therefore that the People might not be wholly uninſtructed, the Homilies were ſet forth.

Elizabeth Q.

He prefers Sermons to reading the Homilies, and why?

“From hence he proceeds in the ſecond Place to defend the Exerciſe of Prophesying. As to this Matter, he had conſulted ſeveral of his Brethren the Biſhops, and found them of his own Opinion. And he hopes when the Circumſtances are explain'd, and the Manner deſcrib'd, when the Authority 'tis grounded upon is alledg'd; when the Convenience of keeping it on, and the ill Conſequences of ſuppreſſing it, are ſuggeſted; when all theſe Particulars are briefly repreſented, he hopes her Majeſty will be of the ſame Sentiment.

The Manner of the Exerciſe of Propheſying.

“Thoſe who encourage theſe Propheſyings are the Biſhops of the reſpective Dioceſes, who both by the Laws of God, and the Canons of the Church, have Authority to preſcribe Exerciſes to their Clergy: And that the Manner of promoting Improvement, and making the Curates more ſerviceable, is one Branch of the Epiſcopal Function, and left to the Diſcretion of the Ordinary. The ſtated Times for theſe Meetings is once a Month, or once a Fortnight, as the Dioceſan ſhall think fit. The Time for the Exerciſe is two Hours. The Place is the Pariſh Church appointed for the Aſſembly. The Matter to be handled is as follows: Some Text of Scripture, given out before, is expounded in this Order: Firſt, The Occaſion of the Words are laid open. And Secondly, the End or Intention of the inſpir'd Writer. Thirdly, The proper or literal Senſe of the Place is examin'd. Fourthly, The Force and Propriety of the Words are diſcuſs'd: And here thoſe that are learned in the Languages cite the Expoſitors, and ſhew how far they differ in their Interpretations. Fifthly, The ſame Phraſes and Manner of Speaking in other Places of the Scripture are mention'd. Sixthly, Texts which carry a Face of Oppoſition, and ſeeming Repugnancy, are reconcil'd. Seventhly, The Argument of the Text is open'd more at large. Eighthly, The Audience is inſtructed what Virtues and Vices are touch'd upon, and under which of the reſpective Commands they are to be rang'd. Ninthly, The Miſconſtruction of the Text by thoſe of a different Communion is dilated on, if Occaſion requires. And laſtly, The Doctrine of Faith or Manners, comprehended in the Text, is briefly explain'd. The Whole concludes with a Prayer for the Queen and the Government, read out of the Liturgy; after which they ſing a Pſalm.

The Archbiſhop proceeds to give the Queen an Account of the Order preſcrib'd for the Exerciſes: But theſe Regulations having been mention'd already, need not be repeated.

He endeavours to juſtify it from reſembling Inſtances in the Scripture.

1 Sam. 19.
1 Sam. 10.
1 Kings 2.

1 Cor. 14.

“He advances next to the Juſtification of theſe Propheſyings from Scripture-Authority. He inſiſts that Samuel had a Share both in the Practice and Direction of Exerciſes of a reſembling Nature: That this was done both at Nayoth and Bethel: And that Eliſha did the ſame Thing at Jericho: And that thoſe who were train'd up to Religion and Learning this Way were call'd Sons of the Prophets; and that this Method was uſed to ſtrengthen their Character, and fit them for publick Inſtruction: That St. Paul makes mention of Propheſying, and gives Direction for the Management. And to prevent Miſconſtruction, and take off the Odium of pretending to be a Prophet, he ſuggeſts that Propheſy does not always ſignify Prediction; and that in this Epiſtle of Paul, laſt mentioned, Expoſition of Scripture is only meant: And for this he appeals to the Teſtimony of the beſt and moſt ancient Writers. He grants that in the Apoſtles Time this Ability for interpreting Scripture was convey'd by Miracle and Inſpiration, and no Study required for this Purpoſe: And ſo likewiſe was the Knowledge of Languages. But now ſince Miracles are ceas'd, there's no gaining either of theſe Acquirements without Application and Study. That theſe Propheſyings are of the ſame Nature with Academical Exerciſes; only they have the Advantage of being perform'd in the Language of the Country, for the Benefit of thoſe who are unlearned.

The Advantages conſequent upon this Exerciſe.

“And how much ſoever this Matter may have been miſreported to her Majeſty, both himſelf and other Biſhops, mention'd in the Margin, have found the good Effect of theſe Propheſyings. (c) He gives ſeveral Inſtances. For the Purpoſe, the Miniſters are more knowing in the Scriptures, and better qualified to inſtruct their Charge. They are drawn off from Idleneſs and unſerviceable Diverſions. Some of them, ſuſpected for Heterodoxy, have been diſentangled from their Miſtakes, and given publick Satisfaction: That the Clergy of lower Attainments have been puſh'd to Induſtry upon Motives of Shame, and prevail'd with to mend their Pace, and make the moſt of themſelves, for Fear of Diſcipline. That by this Means the Laity have no Handle to reproach the Clergy with Idleneſs. That upon Experiment, nothing batters Popery more effectually than a learned Miniſtry. That by the Advantage of theſe Exerciſes, where there were formerly not above three Perſons fit to preach at St. Paul's-Croſs, there are now thirty well furniſh'd for ſo publick an Appearance; beſides much greater Numbers not underqualified for their Cures in the Country.

(c) London, Winton, Bathon, Litchfield, Gloceſtren, Lincoln, Ciceſtren. Exon, Meneventis. I have ſeen Letters of theſe Biſhops to Grindal upon this Subject. The Papers are now in the Hands of Mr. Harbin.

“ Laſtly, That the Breaking this Exerciſe would afford Matter of Triumph to the Adverſaries, and weaken the Intereſt of Religion. That according to the Prophet Ezekiel, the Heart of the Righteous ought not to be made ſad. And that though ſome Places have run out into Abuſe and Miſmanagement, there's no Reaſon the Puniſhment ſhould be ſtretch'd beyond the Offence, and the Miſbehaviour of a few affect an unexceptionable Majority.

Ezekiel. 13. ℣. 18.

“ For theſe Reaſons, the Archbiſhop tells the Queen, he is forc'd to declare plainly, tho' with all Humility, that his Conſcience will not give him Leave to comply with her Commands; neither can he aſſent to the ſuppreſſing theſe Exerciſes without offending the Majeſty of God: And that his ſending out any Mandate or Injunction is ſtill more impracticable. He takes the Freedom to ſay with St. Paul, That his Power is given him for Edification, and not for Deſtruction: And that, as the ſame Apoſtle elſewhere ſpeaks, he can do nothing againſt the Truth, but for the Truth.

2 Cor. 10.

2 Cor. 13.

“ As for any Conſequences of Incompliance, he is willing to reſign to her Majeſty's Pleaſure with all Humility. He conſiders, That 'tis a fearful Thing to fall into the Hands of the Living God. He conſiders likewiſe, Quod qui facit contra Conſcientiam (Divinis Juribus nixam) Ædificat ad Gehennam; that is, He who acts againſt his Conſcience, opens a Gap, as it were, and paves the Way to his own Deſtruction. And what Advantage would it be to him, if he ſhould gain the whole World, and loſe his own Soul.

Heb. 10.

“ And making an Excuſe for the Length of his Application, he humbly deſires the Queen to afford her Conſideration to the two following Requeſts.” And now to ſpeak in his Perſon, “ Madam, My firſt Requeſt, ſays he, to your Majeſty is, That you would not interpoſe your Prerogative in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, nor carry the Regale thus far into the Church: That you would rather refer Points of Doctrine and Diſcipline to the Management of Biſhops and Divines: That by theſe Permiſſions you would follow the Precedent of all Pious Emperors and Princes from Conſtantine the Great to your own Time: That Things of this Nature, as an ancient Father expreſſes himſelf, are to be decided in the Church, and not in the Palace.* When any Controverſies of Law ariſe, 'tis not your Majeſty's Cuſtom to determine at your Court; but to ſend them to your Judges for their Reſolution. And thus when any Doubt or Difficulty happens in Reference to religious Belief, or Church Diſcipline, the uſual Way is to remit the Deciſion of theſe Points to the Biſhop, and other Eccleſiaſticks of Diſtinction.

His ſeaſonable Advice to the Queen.

* In Eccleſia ſeu Synodo non in Palatio.

“ St. Ambroſe upon a reſembling Occaſion applies himſelf thus to Theodoſius the Great; Si de Cauſis Pecuniariis Comites tuos conſulas, quanto magis in Cauſa Religionis Sacerdotes Domini æquum eſt Conſulas? i. e. If in Matters of Property you aſk the Opinions of your Chancellor and the Bench, how much more reaſonable is it to conſult our Saviour's Prieſts when Religion is the Buſineſs in Queſtion? (d) The ſame Father acquaints the good Emperor Valentinian, Si de Fide conferendum eſt, Sacerdotum debet eſſe iſta Collatio; ſicut factum eſt ſub Conſtantino Auguſtæ Memoriæ Principe; Qui nullas Leges ante præmiſit quam Liberum dedit Judicium Sacerdotibus; i. e. When Faith is the Subject of the Debate, the Diſcuſſion ought to be left to the Biſhops; That Conſtantine, of Illuſtrious Memory, govern'd himſelf by this Rule, and made no Laws with Relation to the Church 'till the Point was firſt ſettled by the Clergy. And St. Ambroſe obſerves in the ſame Letter, That Conſtantius the Emperor, by following his Father's Precedent, mov'd well at firſt in the Adminiſtration; but when he took upon him de Fide intra Palatium judicare, to make himſelf a Judge of Religious Controverſies, and pronounce upon Matters of Faith within the Palace, this Method prov'd unhappy in the Iſſue, and miſled him into Arrianiſm: A terrible Example!

(d) Ambroſ. ad Theod. Epiſt. 29.

Id. Epiſt. 32.

“ This famous St. Ambroſe, who ſtands with ſuch Advantage upon Record, goes a farther Length in his Remonſtrance, and treats the Emperor Valentinian with more plain Dealing: His Words are theſe, Si docendus eſt Epiſcopus à Laico quid ſequatur? Laicus, ergo diſputet, & Epiſcopus audiat; Epiſcopus diſcat à Laico. At certè, ſi vel Scripturarum Seriem divinarum vel vetera Tempora retractemus, quis eſt qui abnuat, in Cauſa Fidei, in Cauſa, in quam, Fidei, Epiſcopos ſolere de Imperatoribus Chriſtianis, non Imperatores de Epiſcopis judicare? If a Biſhop is to be inſtructed by a Lay-Man, what muſt be the Conſequence? Why then let the Laity argue, and the Biſhop make Part of the Audience; let a Biſhop reſign his Character, and learn of a Lay-Man. But if either the Tenor of the Scripture, or the Practice of Antiquity, are conſulted upon this Queſtion, who can deny but that when a Point of Faith is under Debate; when a Point of Faith, I ſay, is under Debate, it has been cuſtomary for Biſhops to give Judgment upon Chriſtian Emperors, and not Emperors upon Biſhops?

Ibid.

“ Madam, I wiſh to God you would ſteer by this Compaſs: By managing in this Manner your Majeſty would conſult your own Repoſe, pleaſe God Almighty better, and avoid many Inſtances of wide Conduct. And in ſhort, the Government of the Church would go on with a ſmoother Motion, to your Majeſty's Satiſfaction, and the Publick Benefit.

“ The ſecond Petition I have to make to your Majeſty is this, That when you interpoſe in Matters of Faith and Religion; in Matters that touch the Church of Chriſt, the Church which is his Spouſe, and bought at ſo high a Price; when Things of this Nature lie before your Majeſty, my humble Requeſt is, that you would not pronounce with ſuch Abſoluteneſs* and Reſolution as you may do in ſecular Buſineſs. Be pleaſ'd to remember that in Things of this Nature the Will of God, and not of any earthly Creature, is to govern the Affair: Sic volo, ſic jubeo, ſtat pro ratione Voluntas; To make Pleaſure a Law is the Language of the Court of Rome: 'Tis Papal Preſumption. Where the Divine Worſhip is concern'd, all Princes ought to ſtoop their Scepters to the Son of God, and aſk Council at his Mouth. David exhorts all Kings and Governors to ſerve God with Fear and Trembling.

* His Words are, ſo reſolutely and peremptorily.

“ Remember, Madam, you are a mortal Creature: Don't over contemplate your Character, nor look upon your Purple too much: 'Tis the Advice of St. Ambroſe to Theodoſius the Great. Be pleaſ'd to conſider, as that Father goes on, what kind of Body 'tis that wears the Royal Robes. Is it any more than Fleſh and Blood? Has it not the common Principles of Diſſolution? And is it any farther than a Pſalm. 76.

“ few Removes from Duſt and Aſhes? (e) Muſt you not one Day appear before the Judgment-Seat of Chriſt to receive according to what you have done in the Body, whether it be good or bad? Tho' you are a mighty Prince, yet remember he who dwells in Heaven is mightier; and as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, He ſhall cut off the Spirit of Princes, he is terrible to the Kings of the Earth.

“ Wherefore I beſeech you, Madam, in Viſceribus Chriſti, to move with the utmoſt Caution in the Management of Religious Affairs: Set the Majeſty of God before your Eyes, and lay your own aſide. Reſolve to obey him without Reſerve, and ſay with all Humility, Not my Will, but thine be done. God has bleſs'd your Reign with remarkable Proſperity for many Years: Don't reckon your Happineſs to your Merit and Conduct, but give God the Glory. And as to the Significancy of Means and ſecondary Cauſes, impute your Felicity in the firſt Place to the Goodneſs of the Cauſe you are engag'd in, I mean the Propagation and Maintenance of the true Religion: And ſecondly, To the fervent Prayers of the Godly put up in your Behalf; which Powerful Interceſſions have, as it were, diſarm'd Omnipotence, and tied the Hands of God, that he could not pour out his Plagues on you and your People, moſt juſtly deſerv'd.

2 Chron. 26.

“ Take Care that a Revolting Thought never reſts upon your Mind, for Fear the Fate of Joaſh ſhould come upon you. He govern'd with Juſtice and Piety for many Years; But when he was ſtrong, his Heart was lifted up to his Deſtruction, and he tranſgreſs'd againſt the Lord his God. You have done many Things well; but except you perſevere, you cannot be bleſſed: But if you turn from God, his Favour will be withdrawn from you; and what then remains but a fearful Looking for of Judgment, and heaping up Wrath againſt the Day of Wrath?

Heb. 10.
Rom. 2.

I ſhall give the Reader the reſt in the Words of the Letter: “ But I truſt in God, continues the Archbiſhop, your Majeſty will always humble your ſelf under his mighty Hand, and go forward in the zealous Setting-forth of God's true Religion, always yielding due Obedience and Reverence to the Word of God, the only Rule of Faith and Religion. And if ye ſo do, although God hath juſt Cauſe many Ways to be angry with you and us for our Unfaithfulneſs, yet I doubt nothing, but that for his own Name's Sake, and for his own Glory's Sake, he will ſtill hold his merciful Hand over us, ſhield and protect us under the Shadow of his Wings, as he hath done hitherto.

“ I beſeech God, our Heavenly Father, plentifully to pour his principal Spirit upon you, and always to direct your Heart in his Holy Fear. Amen, Amen.

Whether Grindal was right or not in pleading for the Propheſying-Meetings, I ſhall not pretend to determine: Though it muſt be ſaid he has offer'd a great Deal in Defence of theſe Exerciſes. And 'tis moſt likely, could they have been kept within the Compaſs of his Regulation, they would have prov'd ſerviceable to the Church. But this Conſideration apart, 'tis certain he writes with the Spirit of a Primitive Biſhop: His Application is religiouſly brave, and has not the leaſt Appearance of Intereſt or Fear. And beſides the Piety of the Addreſs, 'tis manag'd with great Force and Advantage: To which we may add, the Advice is admirable and well directed. Nothing could be more ſerviceable to diſengage the Queen from the Flattery of her Court, and bring her off from ſome lofty Miſtakes her Favourites ſeem to have led her into.

About this Time the Privy-Council ſent the Archbiſhop a Letter touching the Keeping of Ember-Weeks and Fiſh-Days. The Contents being ſomething remarkable, I ſhall tranſcribe it as it ſtands upon the Regiſter.

An Order of Council for keeping Fiſh-Days, and why.

(f) Regiſt. Grindal. Fol. 150.

“ After our Right Hearty Commendations to your good Lordſhip, the Queen's Majeſty of late entring into ſome Conſideration, how that notwithſtanding ſundry good Statutes and Laws made heretofore by common Conſent in Parliament to the contrary, (f) the Obſervation of the Embringe and Fiſh-Days is not ſo duely look'd unto as it ought to be, and is requiſite in Policy for the Maintenance of Mariners and Fiſhermen, and the Navy of the Realm, Hath thought convenient for that Cauſe, firſt in her Highneſs's own Houſhold to give ſtreight Charge unto the Officers for the Obſervation of them. And it is order'd that they ſhall be more carefully ſeen unto and continued than heretofore they have been. The like we have ſignified, by her Majeſty's ſpecial Appointment, to the Intent that by an unfeigned Obſervation in all Places throughout this Realm, of the ſaid Laws already provided, and meet to be put in Execution in this Reſpect, the Eſtate might take ſuch Benefit thereby as was at the ſame Time of the Making intended, which we can aſſure your Lordſhip is the only Cauſe why at this Time the Obſervation of them is ſo much urg'd. Howbeit for that it may be that this her Majeſty's good Meaning may either be miſconſtrued by ſome, and depraved by others, as though any Superſtition (wherewith her Majeſty, God be thanked, is not to be touched or ſuſpected) were thereby intended. For the Meeting with, and anſwering ſuch ſlanderous Conceits as may be ſpread and miſtaken among her Highneſs's Subjects, we have thought good to require your Lordſhip to give Order within your Province, that the Miniſters and Preachers which are or ſhall be admitted to that Function, be commanded in their Sermons and Exhortations to the People, to inſtruct and teach them to be willing and obedient to conform themſelves and their Families to the Obſervation of the ſaid Laws, as in Duty they are bound. And farther declare unto them, that the ſame is not required for any Liking of Popiſh Ceremonies heretofore uſed, (which utterly are deteſted) but only to maintain the Mariners and the Navy of this Land, by ſetting Men a Fiſhing; which Thing is ſo neceſſary for the Realm, eſpecially in theſe dangerous Times, as no Means are to be omitted, whereby it may be thought the ſame may be according to the Laws brought to paſs, and perfected accordingly. And for that the Exhortations and Doctrine of good and dutiful Miniſters may do much good in this Matter, both to remove the Scrupulouſneſs and Miſconceits of ſome few: And alſo to induce the greater and common Number to obey and obſerve the ſaid Laws; We have thought good to ſignify ſo much unto your Lordſhip, that by the good Aſſiſtance of you, and others under you, the Matter might be further'd, and take ſuch good Succeſs for the Benefit of this Realm as we deſire, and ſo we bid your good Lordſhip right heartily well to fare.

By this Order it appears theſe Days of Abſtinence are declared to be kept only for promoting the Fiſhery, and the Encouragement of Seamen. Now, with Submiſſion, to lay the whole Streſs of Embring and Abſtinence upon Reaſons of State is ſomewhat ſingular. For to ſay nothing of Ember-Weeks; the Faſts of Lent, and thoſe of Wedneſdays and Fridays, reach up to the earlieſt Ages of Chriſtianity. (g) Now this Reſtraint of Appetite was always impos'd with a Proſpect upon the other World: 'Twas enjoin'd to reduce the Senſes, and make the Mind more abſolute. And is it not ſomewhat a Misfortune that the Apoſtles Canons, the Authority of the Fathers, and the Practice of the Primitive Church, ſhould be ſtruck out of all Conſideration? And muſt all this Diſcipline be only for the Benefit of Navigation? Have we not Sins to faſt for, and Temperance to guard? Are we not bound to diſtinguiſh Times upon ſpiritual Motives, and prepare for the Solemnities of Religion? But when ſecular Men preſcribe to the Church, when thoſe who are Strangers in Antiquity, give Laws for Diſcipline, 'tis no Wonder if they miſtake in their Direction. And to make the Matter leſs ſurprizing, three of theſe Privy-Councellors, Leiceſter, Knowlis, and Walſingham, were either Puritans, or Abettors of that Party.

This Year James Pilkinton, Biſhop of Durham, departed this Life. His Connivance at Nonconformity, and the reſt of his Character and Fortune, has been related already.

To look back a little upon Scotland: The Reader may remember the Presbyterians made an Attempt to introduce their Parity, but fail'd of Succeſs as to the Main. But this Diſappointment did not diſcourage them from making another Effort at the next General Aſſembly. Here they gave a new Turn to the Controverſy, and put the Queſtion under a different State. Their Motion was, Whether Biſhops, as then ſettled in Scotland, had their Function warranted by the Hand of God? But here they fail'd of their Expectation: For after they had thoroughly debated every Article of the ſix Collocutors, or Commiſſioners, the Majority came to the ſame Reſolution with the former Aſſembly: To the ſame Reſolution, only with this Addition, that the Biſhops ſhould fix upon ſome one Church for their common Reſidence and Paſtoral Care. 'Twas farther reſolv'd, That thoſe who detain'd the Patrimony of the Church, and gave notorious Scandal by ſuch remarkable Injuſtice, might be proceeded againſt not only by Preaching and Admonition, but by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. And that the Patrimony of the Church was held Jure Divino. (i)

The Regent makes a Motion Diſſerviceable to Epiſcopacy.

The Regent being inform'd of theſe Proceedings, and diſpleas'd with their depoſing Patton Biſhop of Dunkeld, ſent a Gentleman to know whether they would abide by the Polity agreed at Leith: And if not, they were deſir'd to ſettle ſome other more acceptable Form of Government. If the Regent was hearty for Epiſcopacy, he made a wrong Step, and diſſerv'd the Cauſe through Miſtake. But 'tis not improbable but this Earl of Morton, notwithſtanding his Countenance, might be in the Presbyterian Intereſt. He is mark'd in Hiſtory for a covetous Perſon, and one that was very forward in making Seizure of the Church Revenues. (k) For when the Regent Lenox refuſed him the Eſtate belonging to the Archbiſhoprick of St. Andrews, he quitted the Court in a Diſguſt; neither could he be prevail'd with to return 'till his Suit was granted. Morton therefore might probably abet the Preſbyterian Party behind the Curtain: For when Innovations were ſet on Foot, when the Church was embroil'd, and her Government unhing'd, there was ſome Proſpect of a new Booty, and of finding his Account in the Confuſion. But not to enquire any farther into his Deſign, 'tis certain his Propoſal was what the Presbyterians wiſh'd for. And thus the Parity-Members of the Aſſembly catching at the Advantage, ſent him Word they would immediately apply themſelves to conſider the Motion: And over and above, that they would draw up a ſtanding Form of Church-Polity, and preſent it to the Council for their Approbation. For this Purpoſe they nominated Mr. Andrew Melvil, Mr. Andrew Hay, Mr. David Cunningham, Mr. George Hay, Mr. Alexander Arthbuthnet, Mr. David Lindſay, and ſeveral others. Theſe Gentlemen of the Church were pitch'd on for a Committee to draw the Scheme. The Archbiſhop of Glaſcow was likewiſe named amongſt the reſt; but being preſs'd to take the Charge of a particular Flock, he deſir'd to be excus'd. He told them, He had enter'd upon his Office purſuant to an Order both of the Church and State: That he did not think it adviſeable to break thro' the publick Eſtabliſhment: That ſuch a Liberty might bring him under the Reproach of violating his Oath, and doing his Part in ſubverting the Conſtitution. However, to ſhew his Inclination to ſerve the Church, he promis'd to preach at Glaſcow when he liv'd there; and as often as he remov'd to the Sheriffdom of Aire, he engag'd to exerciſe the ſame Function in any Church they would appoint him: But upon Condition however, not to be tied to any particular Place, nor do any Thing in Prejudice of his Epiſcopal Juriſdiction. This frank Declaration gave Diſguſt, and ſtruck him out of the Committee.

A Committee for drawing up a new Form of Church Polity.

The See of St. Andrews falling void by the Death of Mr. John Dowglaſs, the Regent recommended Mr. Patrick Adamſon to the Chapter. The Chapter had made ſome Progreſs in the Election when the General Aſſembly met. And here the Queſtion being put to Adamſon, whether he would ſubmit to be tried by a Committee of the Aſſembly, and receive his Character upon the Terms preſcribed by the Church? His Anſwer was, The Regent injoin'd him not to accept the Biſhoprick any otherwiſe than upon the publick Eſtabliſhment. And thus the Aſſembly not receiving Satiſfaction, they forbid the Chapter going on. However, upon freſh Orders from the Regent they met again, and elected Adamſon. The Kirke being highly provok'd with this Freedom, order'd Mr. Robert Pont, Superintendent of Lothian, Mr. James Lawſon, and Mr. David Ferguſon, to call Adamſon before them, and prohibit him the Exerciſe of any Part of his Juriſdiction 'till he was furniſh'd with an Authority from the Aſſembly.

In the mean Time a Form of Church-Polity was drawn, and preſented to the Regent by Mr. David Lindſay, Mr. James Lawſon, and Mr. Robert Pont. In their Preface they proteſted, “ To wiſh “ nothing more, than that as God had made him a ſerviceable Inſtrument in exterminating Popery, and ſettling the publick Repoſe, ſo he would honour him with the eſtabliſhing of a Godly Polity in the Church. They entreated his Grace to peruſe the Articles: And in Caſe he excepted to any of them, that he would pleaſe to hear the Committee ſent to wait on him in their Defence. Not that they look'd upon the Draught as perfect in all Points: For as God ſhould farther reveal to them, they ſhould be always ready to make Amendments." The Regent, though not liking the Undertaking, diſſembled his Diſguſt, and order'd ſome of the Council to treat with the Aſſembly, and make their Report of the Heads upon which they agreed. But by the Diſturbances which happen'd in the State, this Conference broke off before they had gone any Length in it. And the next Year Morton reſign'd the Regency. (l)

To mention the Filling another See; Nicholas Bullingam, Biſhop of Worceſter, being lately dead, the Queen nominated Dr. Whitgift Maſter of Trinity College in Cambridge, for his Succeſſor: He was conſecrated by the Archbiſhop, aſſiſted by John, Biſhop of London; Robert, Biſhop of Wincheſter; and Richard, Biſhop of Chicheſter.

The Queen's Order to the Biſhops for ſuppreſſing the Exerciſes of Prophecying

Grindal refuſing to act in the Suppreſſing of Prophecyings, the Queen directed her Letters to the other Biſhops to put them down in their reſpective Dioceſes. Her Majeſty's Letter ſets forth, That "in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, no ſmall Numbers preſum'd on the Function of Preaching, tho' neither lawfully call'd, nor qualified for that Employment: That new Forms of Worſhip were offer'd to Practice: That by ſetting up unlawful Aſſemblies the People were drawn to Places remote from their Pariſhes, and entertain'd with Diſputations upon Points of Divinity very improper for a vulgar Audience: That by this Means, many of her Subjects were carried off to idleneſs and Schiſm: That theſe Innovations were an open Breach of her Laws, diſturb'd the Harmony of the Government, and gave Offence to thoſe good Subjects who were willing to ſerve God conformably to the Order eſtabliſh'd. For theſe Reaſons the Biſhops are commanded not to ſuffer any publick Divine Service, any Form of Adminiſtring the Sacraments, or any Rites and Ceremonies, but ſuch as are ſettled and allowed by the Conſtitution. And that no Perſons ſhould be ſuffer'd to preach, teach, or exerciſe any Function in the Church, but ſuch as are licenſed, and conform to the Church of England. And where the Incumbents were underqualified for Preaching, the Reading the Homilies purſuant to the Injunctions ſhould be injoin'd them.

"And becauſe of the great Abuſes conſequent upon the Exerciſes call'd Prophecyings, they are ſtrictly commanded not to ſuffer any of them for the Future: And if any Perſon ſhall preſume to continue theſe Exerciſes, the Biſhops are order'd to commit them, and ſend up their Names and Qualities, their Maintainers and Abettors to the Council. The Order concludes in theſe Words:

May 7. 1577.

"And in theſe Things we charge you to be careful and Vigilant, as, by your Negligence, if we ſhould hear of any Perſon attempting to offend in the Premiſſes without your Correction, or Information to us, we be not forced to make ſome Example in Reforming of you according to your Deſerts. (n)

(n) Cotton Library, Cleop. vi. F. 11. fol. 207.

The Archbiſhop confin'd, and his Juriſdiction ſequeſtred.

About a Month forward, Grindal continuing incompliant, was confin'd to his Houſe, and ſequeſtred from his Juriſdiction for Six Months. This Reſtraint was clap'd upon him when he was going on with his metropolitical Viſitation. 'Twas done by the Lords in the Star-Chamber, who I ſuppoſe paſs'd this Sentence in Virtue of their Eccleſiaſtick Commiſſion. Dr. Yate acted for him during this Suſpenſion.

Idem.

The Roman Catholick Miſſionaries ſent from the Seminaries beyond-Sea, made ſome Progreſs in their Undertaking, and drew off a great many People from going to Church. To ſtop this Defection from the Reformation, 'twas thought fit to impoſe a pecuniary Penalty on ſuch as abſented themſelves from divine Service. But there being no Proviſion by Act of Parliament, the Legality of the Method was debated. For this Purpoſe the Secretary wrote in the Queen's Name to the Lord Keeper and Lord Treaſurer to require the Judges Opinion. Theſe Two Lords ſent to Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Maſter of the Rolls, to ſummon the Judges. When they came together, their Reſolution was, that by the Statute of the 1ſt of Eliz. the Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes had Authority to inflict any Puniſhment, either Amerciament, or otherwiſe, which the Eccleſiaſtical Laws allow'd of. The Ground of their Opinion was, becauſe all Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction and Authority, is by the Statute annex'd to the Crown. And by the ſame Statute, her Majeſty is impower'd to commit this Authority to ſuch Perſons as ſhe thinks fit to employ.

Dec. 3. 1577.

To make this Reſolution bear, and come up to the Caſe in Hand, 'twas agreed that Dr. Lewis, an eminent Civilian, ſhould conſult with ſome others of that Faculty, and deliver their Opinion how far the Eccleſiaſtical Law might proceed.

Thus this Lewis and Dr. Hammond another Civilian, gave in the Senſe of the Canon Law under Three Articles.

The Opinion of ſeveral Judges and Civilians touching the Extent of the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion.

I. That the Biſhop, but no other inferior Judge, may puniſh any Perſon, Eccleſiaſtical or Lay, by a pecuniary Mulct for any Eccleſiaſtical Crime or Offence; eſpecially if he perceives the Party is more afraid of ſuch a Penalty, than of the Church Cenſures.

II. By the Eccleſiaſtical Law, the Ordinary may ſet a pecuniary Puniſhment upon ſuch as abſent themſelves from Divine Service without reaſonable Excuſe: Eſpecially when this Abſence proceeds from contempt.

III. Some Canoniſts affirm, a Biſhop may make an Ordinance, that an excommunicated Perſon ſhall pay Ten Pounds for every Month he ſtands excommunicated out of Contempt.

From hence they concluded, That Recuſants might be puniſh'd in the Pocket by Virtue of the Eccleſiaſtical Law. And the next Conſequence, as the Maſter of the Rolls drew it, was, That her Majeſty's Commiſſioners might execute that Law by Authority of their Commiſſion. And that this was the Opinion of the Judges, and others learned in the Law. Thoſe who appear'd at the Confe rence and concurr'd in this Reſolution, were the Chief Juſtice Dyer, Juſtice Southcoat, Juſtice Manwood, Juſtice Mounſon, Dr. Lewis, the Attorney General, and the Sollicitor General. (o)

(o) Life of Archbiſhop Grindal 232, 233.

The Six Months of the Archbiſhop's Sequeſtration being now expired, the Lord Treaſurer ſent him a Letter by Goodman, Dean of Weſtminſter, to acquaint him in what Manner the Star-Chamber would proceed farther againſt him: He likewiſe ſent him ſome Directions for diſentangling himſelf. And here he adviſed the Archbiſhop to declare his Approbation of the Queen's Proceedings in ſuppreſſing Propheсyings: To own himſelf ſorry for his Incompliance; to make a general Acknowledgment of his Fault, and beg the Queen's Pardon.

Id. Pag. 234.

The Archbiſhop not conſcious of any Crime, refus'd to betray his Innocence, and give in to ſo abſolute a Submiſſion. However, being willing to go as far as he could towards the Queen's Satisfaction, he ſent a Letter to the Lords of the Star-Chamber, to intercede in his Behalf. It runs thus:

To the Right Honourable the Lords of her Majeſty's Privy-Council in the Star-Chamber.

Archbiſhop Grindal's Letter to the Lords of the Star-Chamber.

“ Right Honourable, and my ſingular good Lords: I cannot deny but that I have been commanded both by the Queen's Majeſty herſelf, and alſo by divers of your Honourable Lordſhips in her Name, to ſuppreſs all thoſe Exerciſes within my Province, that are commonly called Propheſies. But I do proteſt before God, the Judge of all Hearts, that I did not of any Stubborneſs or Wilfulneſs refuſe to accompliſh the ſame, but only upon Conſcience. For that I found ſuch Kind of Exerciſe ſet down in the Holy Scriptures, and the Uſe of the ſame to have continued in the primitive Church. And was perſuaded that (the Abuſes being Reformed, which I always offer'd my ſelf ready to labour in) the ſaid Exerciſes might yet ſerve to the great Profit of the Church; and fear'd that the utter Suppreſſing of them would breed Offence. And therefore was a moſt humble Suiter unto her Majeſty, that I might not be made the chief Inſtrument in Suppreſſing the ſame: Yet not prejudicing or condemning any, that in Reſpect of Policy, or otherwiſe, ſhould be of contrary Judgment; or being of Authority, ſhould ſuppreſs them. For I know right well, that there be ſome Things of that Nature, wherein divers Men may be of divers Opinions, and abound in their own Senſe, (being not repugnant to the Analogy of Faith) without any Prejudice of their Salvation, or any Prejudice of either to other. Notwithſtanding, howſoever others, being otherwiſe perſuaded, might ſafely do it, yet I thought it not ſafe for me (being ſo perſuaded in Mind) to be the Doer of that whereof mine own Heart and Conſcience would condemn me.

“ And whereas I have ſuſtain'd a Reſtraint of my Liberty, and Sequeſtration of my Juriſdiction, now by the Space of Six Months, I am ſo far from Repining thereat, or thinking my ſelf injuriouſly or hardly dealt withal therein at her Majeſty's Hands, that I do thankfully embrace, and frankly with all Humility acknowledge her Princely, Gracious, and rare Clemency towards me: Who having Authority and Power to have uſed greater and ſharper Severity againſt me, and for good Policy and Example, thinking it ſo expedient, hath notwithſtanding, dealt ſo mercifully, mildly, and gently with me.

“ But the greateſt Grief that ever I had, or have, is the Loſs of her Majeſty's Favour, and the Suſtaining of the Diſpleaſure of ſo gracious a Sovereign; by whom the Church and Realm of England hath been ſo long and ſo happily govern'd. And by whom my ſelf, privately and ſpecially above other Subjects, have received ſo many, and ſo great Benefits above all my Deſerving. For the Recovery of whoſe gracious Favour, I moſt humbly beſeech your Lordſhips to be a Means to her Majeſty for me. The which obtain'd, I ſhall eſteem far above all worldly Benefits whatſoever. And I proteſt here, before God and your Honours, that not only my dutiful and humble Obedience to her Majeſty, ſhall be ſuch as ſhe ſhall have no Cauſe to repent of her gracious Goodneſs and Clemency ſhewn unto me: But alſo, that by moſt fervent, hearty and daily Prayer, as I have done hitherto, ſo I will continue, according to my bounden Duty, to make moſt earneſt Suit unto Almighty God for the long Preſervation of her Majeſty's moſt happy Reign, to the unſpeakable Benefit of the Church and Realm of England, (p)

Melvil's Project for a farther Reformation in Scotland had now gain'd Ground: Inſomuch, that at the next Aſſembly held in the Year 1578, this Gentleman was choſen Moderator. Having rais'd himſelf to this Aſcendant, his Party began to open their Deſign, and ſtrike more directly at the Order of Biſhops. Thus at the Beginning of the Aſſembly, 'twas decreed, That Biſhops, and all others bearing Eccleſiaſtical Functions ſhould be called by their own Names, or Brethren, (q) That is, they would not endure the Style of Lord Biſhops. This levelling Language was founded on a Miſinterpretation of Two Texts in St. Mathew and St. Luke.

April 24.

(q) MS. Acts of the Aſſembly.

Math. 20. 25.
Luke 22. 25.

The next Step was ſomewhat bolder: For 'twas farther ordain'd, That foraſmuch as there is great Corruption in the State of Biſhops, as at preſent conſtituted in this Realm, the Aſſembly being deſirous to provide ſome Check to ſuch Diſorders, has ordain'd that no Biſhop ſhall be elected or admitted before the next general Aſſembly: Purſuant to this Order, All Miniſters and Chapters are prohibited to proceed to the Election of any Biſhop, under the Penalty of perpetual Deprivation. 'Twas likewiſe reſolv'd, that this Buſineſs ſhould be propos'd for farther Conſultation at the next Aſſembly.

The Progreſs of Presbytery in the general Aſſemblies.

MS. Acts.

Idem.

To ſmooth the Way for the Deſign, and draw a farther Odium upon Epiſcopacy, they appointed a general Faſt: The Reaſon aſſign'd for this Humiliation is ſaid to be the Corruption of all Eſtates: And the general Coldneſs and Indifferency of the Profeſſors: And that God would put it in the King's Heart, and the Hearts of the Eſtates of the Parliament, to eſtabliſh ſuch a Policy and Diſcipline in the Kirk, as is crav'd in the Word of God. The Second Book of Diſcipline, with which they had lately acquainted the Regent, was now under debate in the Kirk.

Idem.

The next general Aſſembly met at Sterling, July the 11th. And here 'tis pretty plain the Presbyterian Intereſt grew bigger upon the Progreſs. For now the Members came to an unanimous Reſolution, That the Act of the laſt Aſſembly for forbidding the Election of Biſhops, ſhould be extended to all Time coming, till the Corruptions in the Eſtate of Biſhops be wholly remov'd. 'Twas likewiſe ordain'd, that all Biſhops now in Being, ſhould ſubmit themſelves to the general Aſſembly for Diſcipline and Reformation: And in Caſe they refus'd to comply with this Order, they were to be excommunicated. (r)

(r) Idem.

But before I proceed to the Second Book of Diſcipline now upon the Anvil, it may not be improper to give a farther Deſcription of the Old One. And here I ſhall begin with a brief Account of the Form of Divine Service, commonly call'd Knox's Liturgy. This publick Form begins with a Confeſſion, but nothing of Abſolution follows. There are Three Prayers compos'd for this Purpoſe. The Second was to be us'd on Wedneſdays which was a Day appointed for Common-Prayer. The Third was to be us'd before Sermon. After this the People ſung a Pſalm: When this was done the Miniſter made an Extempore-Prayer: After Sermon a Prayer for the whole State of Chriſt's Church follows, concluding with the Lord's Prayer: After this there is a ſhort Collect for Perſeverance, and Encreaſe of Faith, of which the Congregation makes a Confeſſion in the Rehearſal of the Apoſtles Creed. (s) When the People have ſung another Pſalm, the Miniſter pronounces the Bleſſing in the plural Number thus, The Lord bleſs us, and ſave us, &c. The Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with us all, &c.

A brief Account of Knox's Liturgy.

(s) The whole Form and Diſcipline of Prayers according to the Church of Scotland.

But here the Rubrick gives a diſcretionary Latitude in theſe Words: It ſhall not be neceſſary for the Miniſter daily to repeat all theſe Things before-mentioned; but beginning with ſome Manner of Confeſſion, to proceed to the Sermon: Which ended, he either uſeth the Prayer for all Eſtates before-mentioned, or elſe prayeth, as the Spirit of God ſhall move his Heart: Framing the ſame according to the Time and Matter which he hath entreated of.

Id. pag. 47.

The next Thing I ſhall mention, is a Thankſgiving for the Expulſion of the French. And here there is a very acknowledging Paſſage for Queen Elizabeth's putting them in a Condition to oblige the French Forces to quit the Kingdom: This was done at the Treaty at Leith in the Year 1560.

The Confeſſion of Faith uſed in the Engliſh Congregation at Geneva was now receiv'd by the Church of Scotland. Under the Article of the Catholick Church they make this Society partly inviſible, and only known to God, who of the loſt Sons of Adam, has ordain'd ſome as Veſſels of Wrath to damnation, and has choſen others as Veſſels of his Mercy to be ſaved.

As to that Part of the Church which is viſible, they diſtinguiſh it by Three Marks. Firſt, By receiving the Word of God contain'd in the Old and New Teſtament. Their Second Note is, the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments of Baptiſm, and the Lord's Supper. The 3d Mark is Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, which conſiſts in Admonition and Correction. Beſides this Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, they own a Politick Magiſtrate belongs to this viſible Church. But by making the Civil Magiſtrate eſſential to a Church, they muſt deny there was any ſuch Society till the Reign of Conſtantine the Great: What Share they allow the chief Magiſtrate in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, appears by their arguing from the Precedents of Moſes, Hezekiah, Joſiah, and other Princes under the Old Teſtament, who, as they obſerv'd, purg'd the Church of God from Superſtition and Idolatry. From hence they infer, that the Defence of Chriſt's Church againſt all Idolaters and Hereticks, is part of the Office of a Chriſtian Magiſtrate.

To proceed, and add ſomething to what has been already related concerning the Election of a Superintendent. "The People were demanded whether they would make Choice of the Perſon propos'd? Upon their anſwering in the Affirmative, the next Queſtion was, whether they would honour and obey him as Chriſt's Miniſter, and comfort and aſſiſt him in every Thing pertaining to his Charge?" To this they were to anſwer, "We will and do promiſe him ſuch Obedience as becomes the Sheep to give their Paſtor, ſo long as he remains faithful in his Office." After ſeveral Queſtions put to the Electors and Superintendent, a Prayer follows for invocating the Bleſſing of God upon the Perſon elected: This Prayer is pronounced by the Preacher of the Ordination Sermon. After this, the reſt of the Miniſters, with the Elders of that Church, take the Perſon elected by the Hand: Then the principal Miniſter gives him his Benediction: And to conclude the Solemnity, reads him an Exhortation to Integrity and Diligence, to Humility, Fortitude, and Compaſſion to the Poor. The Form for electing and conſtituting Superintendents and other inferior Miniſters, is the ſame.

Id. pag. 68.

The Diſcipline comes next: And here the Miniſters are not to paſs over any Crime or Miſbehaviour without Admonition or Puniſhment. Amongſt the Liſt of the Criminals, beſides thoſe of a blacker Guilt, they mention Drunkards, Slanderers, Uſurers, covetous Perſons, Libertines, and thoſe who are diſobedient to Parents, or Governors.

When the Perſon offending continues obſtinate, and after Three Admonitions refuſes to make Satisfaction, they proceed to excommunication. The Subſtance of the Sentence runs in theſe Word.

The Form of Excommunication.

O Lord Jeſu Chriſt, thy expreſs'd Word is our Aſſurance, and therefore, in boldneſs of the ſame, here in thy Name, and at the Commandment of this thy preſent Congregation, we cut off, ſeclude, and excommunicate from thy Body, and from our Society, N. as a proud Contemner, and ſlanderous Perſon, and a Member for the preſent, altogether corrupted, and pernicious to the Body. And this his Sin (albeit with Sorrow of our Hearts) by Virtue of our Miniſtry, we bind and pronounce the ſame to be bound, in Heaven and Earth. We farther give over, into the Hands and Power of the Devil, the ſaid N. to the Deſtruction of his Fleſh: Straitly charging all that profeſs the Lord Jeſus, to whoſe Knowledge this our Sentence ſhall come, to repute and hold the ſaid N. accurſed and unworthy of the familiar Society of Chriſtians; declaring unto all Men, that ſuch as hereafter (before his Repentance) ſhall haunt, or familiarly accompany him, are Partakers of his Impiety, and Subject to the like Condemnation.

This our Sentence, O Lord Jeſus, pronounc'd in thy Name, and at thy Commandment, we humbly beſeech thee to ratify even according to thy Promiſe.

Then they proceed to a Prayer for the Repentance of the Perſon excommunicated.

The Manner of Penance.

Thoſe who recover from their Obſtinacy, can't be re-admitted to Communion till they have ſtood at leaſt Three Sundays at the Church door. After this Term, and Satisfaction made, ſome of the Elders convey him to the Place appointed for Penitents, where he is to ſtand till Sermon's over, in the ſame Habit in which he made his Satisfaction. To give a more particular Inſtance, as to the Manner of Penance; A Perſon guilty of Murther is oblig'd to ſtand Three Sundays at the Church Door, uncover'd and Barefoot, and in a poor neglected Dreſs. He is likewiſe oblig'd to hold the Weapon with which he committed the Murther, or one like it, bloody in his Hand: And then make his Confeſſion in a mortifying Form there preſcrib'd. The Form of Abſolution is as follows:

Id. pag. 85.
The Form of Abſolution.

In the Name and Authority of Jeſus Chriſt, I, the Miniſter of his bleſſed Evangel, with Conſent of the whole Miniſtery and Church, abſolve thee N. from the Sentence of Excommunication, from the Sin by thee committed, and from all Cenſures laid againſt thee for the ſame heretofore, according to thy Repentance; and pronounce thy Sin to be looſed in Heaven, and thee to be received again, to the Society of Jeſus Chriſt, to his Body the Church, to the Participation of his Sacraments, and finally to the Fruition of all his Benefits, in the Name of God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit: So be it.

Id. pag. 116.

The Compiler of this Liturgy, and the Time of its publick Approbation, is mention'd at the End in theſe Words.

This Book is thought neceſſary and profitable for the Church, and commanded to be printed by the general Aſſembly. Set forth by John Knox Miniſter: And ſighted by us, whoſe Names follow, as we are appointed by the ſaid general Aſſembly, 1567.

The Reader may obſerve, there is mention made of Common-Prayer in this Liturgy. This in Knox's Hiſtory, is called the Book of Common-Prayer, and order'd to be read on Sundays and other feſtival Days in the Pariſh Churches. 'Twas Part of this Order that the Leſſons of the Old and New Teſtament were likewiſe to be read purſuant to the Direction of the Kalendar. This Proviſion was made by the Lords of the Aſſociation in the latter End of the Year 1557, or, as Spotſwood reckons it, in the Beginning of the next Year. (t) By the Way, this publick Office for divine Worſhip was order'd to be read before Knox came from Geneva. 'Tis likewiſe mention'd in Knox's Liturgy as a Form then in Uſe, and Prior to that Compoſure; which was not drawn up till ſeveral Years after Knox's Return into Scotland. This Book of Common-Prayer therefore injoin'd by the Lords of the Congregation, and now mention'd in Knox's Form, muſt be either the Book of Common-Prayer us'd in the Church of England, or the Geneva Liturgy: For as for any Third, 'tis not ſo much as pretended for thoſe Times. Now, that this Book was not the Geneva Liturgy may be inferr'd, Firſt from the Incredibility of ſo many Copies tranſlated into the Scotch Language. 2*dly*, In the Genevian Form there's no Rubrick for the Obſervation of any other Holidays, excepting Sundays. Neither is there any Direction in the Scotch Genevian Form for Reading the Leſſons of the Old and New Teſtament, excepting in the Treatiſe of Faſting, which was not drawn up by the Aſſembly till the Year 1565. 'Tis true, here are Pſalms appointed, and Leſſons out of the Old Teſtament, but nothing out of the New. (u) But in no other Part of this Scotch Genevian Liturgy is there the leaſt mention of Leſſons: From whence 'tis evident, That the Book appointed to be read by the Lords of the Congregation, was not the Genevian Liturgy.

The Common-Prayer mention'd in Knox's Liturgy, the Engliſh Common-Prayer Book.

(u) Knox's Liturgy, pag. 126, 171, 172.

Farther, I have already obſerv'd from Buchanan, That the Scotch ſubſcrib'd the Worſhip and Rites of the Church of England, in Order to Form an Alliance with that Nation, for the Expulſion of the French. 4*thly*, By the Firſt Book of Diſcipline it appears, that the Order of Geneva, as it is call'd, was then only us'd in ſome Churches. (w) Now this Firſt Book of Diſcipline was not drawn till the Year 1560, which was more than Two Years poſterior to the Order of the aſſociated Lords for Reading the Book of Common-Prayer in all Pariſhes of the Realm. In ſhort, the Geneva Form had no Face of a publick Eſtabliſhment till the general Aſſembly held at Edinborough Decemb. 25. 1562. For then, and not before, 'twas ordain'd that one uniform Order ſhould be obſerv'd in the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments; In the Solemnities of Marriages, and at Burials. And that all theſe Ceremonies ſhould be regulated by the Kirk of Geneva. (x) (x) MS. Acts of the Aſſembly, fol. 35.

(w) Spotſwood, p. 153.

Thus the Geneva Liturgy was making its Way in Scotland. But it ſeems this Proviſion was not ſufficient to give it a general Prevalence, and diſcharge the Engliſh Service. For at a general Aſſembly held at Edinborough, Decemb. 25. 1564, 'tis ordain'd That every Miniſter, Exhorter, and Reader, ſhould have one of the Pſalm Books lately printed at Edinborough, and to uſe the Order therein contain'd in Prayers, Marriage, and Adminiſtration of the Sacrament. Thus, notwithſtanding Knox's warm Cenſure of the Engliſh Common-Prayer, he found no ſmall Difficulty in ſetting it aſide. For from what has been already obſerv'd, 'tis plain the Engliſh Liturgy continued Seven Years, at leaſt, with the Scotch Reformation; that is from December 1557, to the ſame Month 1564. I ſhall conclude this Subject with the Teſtimony of the Compilers of the Scottiſh Liturgy ſent to Edinborough for the Uſe of that Kingdom, in the Year 1637: In the Preface to this Book 'tis ſaid, "That 'twas then known that divers Years after "the Reformation, the Scotch had no other Order "for Common-Prayer, but the Engliſh Liturgy.

The Engliſh Liturgy us'd publickly in Scotland for ſeveral Years.

And now having given the Reader a brief Account of Knox's Liturgy, I ſhall return to the Project for putting an End to Epiſcopacy and introducing the Second Book of Diſcipline. This Deſign was now conſiderably advanc'd, as may be collected by the hard Conditions put upon the Biſhops at the next general Aſſembly. By the Order of this Kirk-Meeting, the Biſhops are required "to be Miniſters or Paſtors of one Flock, to "uſurp no criminal Juriſdiction, not to vote in "Parliament in the Name of the Kirk, without "Commiſſion from the general Aſſembly. Not "to receive the Church Revenues for maintaining their Ambition and Epicuriſm: That "theſe Revenues ought to be diſtributed a"mongſt a great many Paſtors, and employ'd "for the Support of publick Schools and the "Poor: And that the Biſhops ought to be con"tented with a moderate Proportion. They "were likewiſe requir'd not to inſiſt on the "Titles of Temporal Lords, nor engage in "Civil Juriſdiction, nor Empire it over particular "Elderſhips, but be Subject to the ſame; nor "take upon them to viſit any bounds not com"mitted to them by the Church. And laſtly, "if any more Corruptions ſhould afterwards be "diſcover'd in the State of Biſhops, they were "to conſent to a Reformation. (y)

To go on with the Affairs of the Church in Scotland. This Summer the Parliament ſate at Sterling: And now Melvil and his Party having finiſh'd the Second Book of Diſcipline, laid it before the Eſtates for their Approbation. The Parliament having no leiſure to examine it in the Houſe, order'd a Committee to treat with the Delegates of the Aſſembly. And in Caſe they came to an Agreement upon the Heads, the Book was to have had a legal Eſtabliſhment: How Heads and Concluſions of the Church: And Firſt, Of the Policy thereof in general, wherein it differs from Civil.

1. Agreed.

The Second Book of Diſcipline drawn by the Scotch Presbyterians.

“ 1. The Church of God is ſometimes largely taken for all them that profeſs the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt: And thus 'tis a Society not only of the Godly, but alſo of Hypocrites, who make an outward Profeſſion of the true Religion.

2. Agreed.

“ 2. Sometimes the Church is taken in a ſtricter Senſe, and comprehends only the Elect: And ſometimes the Notion is ſtill more confin'd, and reaches no farther than thoſe who exerciſe ſpiritual Functions.

3. Agreed that the Church is ſometimes taken for them that Exerciſe the Spiritual Function in particular Congregations.

“ 3. The Church in this laſt Senſe has a Power of Juriſdiction and Government, granted by God for the Benefit of the whole Society.

4. Continued to farther Reaſoning; and when it is ſaid, This Power floweth from God to his Church, whether this ſhould be underſtood of the whole Church, or of the Office-bearers, and whether it floweth mediately or immediately.

“ 4. This Eccleſiaſtical Power is an Authority granted by God the Father, through the Mediation of Jeſus Chriſt: 'Tis granted to his Church by the Word of God, and is to be executed by thoſe to whom the ſpiritual Government of the Church is committed by lawful Calling.

5. Referr'd to farther Reaſoning.

“ 5. This Polity and Power of the Church is an Order or Form of ſpiritual Government, exercis'd by thoſe entruſted with it by the Word of God. The Grant of it is therefore immediately made to the Office-bearer, by whom 'tis manag'd for the Advantage of the whole Body.

6. The laſt Words of the Article are thought unneceſſary, and therefore to be deleted.

“ 6. This Power is differently uſed: For ſometimes 'tis executed moſtly by the Teachers; ſometimes 'tis manag'd conjunctly by the mutual Conſent of thoſe that bear Office and Charge after the Form of Judgment. The former is call'd Poteſtas Ordinis, the other Poteſtas Juriſdictionis.

7. Agreed.

“ 7. Theſe two Kinds of Power have both one Ground, and one final Cauſe, but are different in the Form and Manner of Execution, as appears by what our Saviour has deliver'd in the 16th and 18th of St. Matthew.

8. Agreed.

“ 8. This Eccleſiaſtical Polity and Juriſdiction is of a different and diſtinct Nature from that call'd the Civil-Power; though both the one and the other are deriv'd from God, and tend to the ſame End.

9. Say inſtead thereof, For this Power is ſpiritual, not having —— deleting the other Words.

“ 9. For this Power Eccleſiaſtical flows immediately from God, and the Mediator Jeſus Chriſt, and is ſpiritual; not having any Temporal Head in the Earth, but only Chriſt, the Spiritual King, and Governour of the Church.

10. Agreed.

“ 10. 'Tis a Title falſly uſurp'd by Antichriſt to call himſelf the Head of the Church, and ought not to be given to any Angel or Mortal whatever.

11. Agreed.

“ 11. This Power and Polity of the Church therefore ſhould be clearly grounded upon the Word of God, and taken from the pure Fountains of the Scripture.

12. Agreed, changing theſe Words, They ſhould not be called Lords over their Flock.

“ 12. It belongs to Kings, Princes, and Magiſtrates, to be call'd Lords and Dominators over their Subjects: But in the Spiritual Government of the Church, the Style of Lord and Maſter ought to be given to none but Chriſt. As for thoſe that bear Office in the Church, they ought not to uſurp Dominion, nor be call'd Lords, but Miniſters, Diſciples, and Servants.

13. Change the laſt Words of Eccleſiaſtical Government for Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline.

“ 13. Notwithſtanding, as the Miniſters and others of the Eccleſiaſtical State, are ſubject to the Magiſtrate Civilly, ſo ought the Perſon of the Magiſtrate be ſubject to the Church Spiritually, and in Eccleſiaſtical Government.

14. Referr'd to farther Reaſoning when the Order of Biſhops ſhall be diſcuſs'd.

“ 14. The Exerciſe of both theſe Juriſdictions can't ordinarily be united in one Perſon.

15. Referr'd till they come to the Attribution of the Power.

“ 15. The Civil Power is call'd the Power of the Sword; the other the Power of the Keys.

16. Agreed.

“ 16. The Civil Power ſhould command the Spiritual to perform their Office according to the Word of God: The Spiritual Rulers are to require the Chriſtian Magiſtrate to adminiſter Juſtice, to maintain the Liberty of the Church, and the publick Repoſe.

17. Defer this to be reſolv'd with the 15.

“ 17. The Magiſtrate commands in Things External for promoting the publick Tranquillity; but the Miniſter manages External Things only with Reference to Conſcience.

“ The 18*th* is no more than an Explicatoin of the 17*th*, and ſtands referr'd in the Margin.

19. Here is nothing.

“ 19. The Civil Magiſtrate gets Obedience by the Sword, and other External Means: But the Miniſter by the Spiritual Sword, and Spiritual Means.

20. Agreed, that neither ought the Magiſtrate preach nor execute the Cenſures of the Church, which is to be underſtood of Excommunication, and referreth the ſecond Part of this Article to farther Reaſoning: 'Tis likewiſe agreed, that the Magiſtrate ought not to adminiſter the Sacraments.

“ 20. The Magiſtrate ought neither to preach, adminiſter the Sacraments, nor execute the Cenſures of the Church, nor yet preſcribe any Rule how it ſhould be done, but command the Miniſter to obſerve the Rule preſcribed in the Word, and puniſh Tranſgreſſors by Civil Means. The Miniſter on the other Side exerciſes not the Civil Juriſdiction, but teaches the Magiſtrate how it ſhould be exercis'd according to the Word.

21. Referr'd.

“ 21. The Magiſtrate ought to aſſiſt, maintain, and fortify, the Juriſdiction of the Church: The Miniſters ſhould aſſiſt their Princes in all Things agreeable to the Word, provided they neglect not their Charge by involving themſelves in Civil Affairs.

22. Referr'd.

“ 22. Finally, as Miniſters are ſubject to the Judgment and Puniſhment of Magiſtrates in External Things, if they offend; ſo ought the Magiſtrates to ſubmit themſelves to the Diſcipline of the Church, if they tranſgreſs in Matters of Conſcience and Religion.

Chap. II. Of the Parts or Polity of the Church, and Perſons or Office-bearers to whom the Adminiſtration is committed.

1. The Name of the Church in this Article is taken for the Church in the firſt Signification, to wit, for the whole Church. Agreed with the reſt of the Articles.

“ 1. In the Polity of the Church ſome are appointed to be Rulers, and the reſt to obey, according to God's Word, and the Inſpiration of his Spirit, always under one Head and chief Governor Jeſus Chriſt.

2. Referr'd.

“ 2. The whole Polity of the Church conſiſts chiefly in theſe three Things, Doctrine, Diſcipline, and Diſtribution: Under Doctrine the Adminiſtration of the Holy Sacraments is comprehended.

3. Referr'd.

“ 3. In Conſequence of this Diviſion there are three Kind of Officers in the Church; that is to ſay, Miniſters or Preachers, Elders or Governors, and Deacons or Diſtributors:

“And all theſe may be rang'd under the general Denomination of Miniſters of the Church.

4. Referr'd. “4. Notwithſtanding Jeſus Chriſt is the only King, High-Prieſt, and Head of the Church, yet he makes uſe of the Miniſtry of Men as neceſſary Officers in his Government.

5. Referr'd. “The 5*th* Article proves the 4*th* by Inſtances from the Scripture, both before the Law, under the Law, and under the Goſpel. Theſe Men are ſaid to be endow'd with the Gifts of the Holy Spirit, and rais'd up for the Government of the Church.

6. Referr'd. “6. And to prevent all Pretences for Tyranny, 'tis God Almighty's Pleaſure that theſe Officers ſhould govern with mutual Conſent of Brethren, with Parity of Power, and every one within the Compaſs of their reſpective Functions.

7. Referr'd. “7. In the New-Teſtament under the Goſpel he hath uſed the Miniſtry of the Apoſtles, Prophets, Evangeliſts, Paſtors, and Doctors, in the Adminiſtration of the Word; the Elderſhip for good Order and Adminiſtration of Diſcipline, the Deaconſhip to have the Care of Eccleſiaſtical Goods.

8. Referr'd. “8. Some of theſe Eccleſiaſtical Functions are Ordinary, ſome Extraordinary, or Temporary. Under this latter Head the Apoſtles, Prophets, and Evangeliſts are to be reckon'd: Theſe are not perpetual, but have now ceas'd in the Church: Notwithſtanding it may pleaſe God to revive them again for ſome Time upon extraordinary Occaſions.

9. Referr'd. “9. There are four Ordinary Offices or Functions in the Church of God; the Paſtor, Miniſter or Biſhop, the Doctor, the Presbyter or Elder, and the Deacon.

10. Referr'd. “10. As theſe Offices are perpetual, ſo no other ought to be admitted in the Church of God. From whence it follows,

11. Referr'd. “11. That all ambitious Titles invented in the Kingdom of Antichriſt, and his uſurp'd Hierarchy, and which are none of theſe four Sorts of Offices, ought to be rejected.

Chap. III. How the Perſons that bear Eccleſiaſtical Functions are to be admitted to their Offices.

“In the firſt Place they make a Calling to this Function neceſſary: This Calling they define a lawful Way for the promoting qualified Perſons to any ſpecial Office in the Church of God. There are two Sorts of Callings; one by immediate and extraordinary Miſſion: And thus the Apoſtles and Prophets were call'd by God Almighty; but where a Church is fully form'd and ſettled this immediate Deſignation is not to be expected. The ordinary Calling requires an Approbation from Men, according to God's Word, and the Order eſtabliſh'd in the Church. However, none ought to preſume upon any Eccleſiaſtical Office unleſs his Conſcience declares for his Integrity, and prompts him to it. This ordinary Calling conſiſts of Election and Ordination: Election is the Appointing a Perſon to a Vacancy. The Choice is to be made by the Suffrages of the Elderſhip, together with the Conſent of the Congregation where the Perſon is to officiate.

This laſt Article is referr'd; but all the reſt of the Chapter, both precedent and ſubſequent, is agreed by the State-Committee.

“The general Qualifications requir'd in thoſe promoted to the Paſtoral Office are Othodoxy and Regularity of Manners.

“Ordination is the Separation and Sanctifying of the Perſon appointed by God and his Church. The Ceremonies of Ordination are Faſting, Prayer, and Impoſition of Hands, by the Elderſhip. The Perſons ordain'd are to remember that the Extent of their Function is limited by God's Word. From whence, as they proceed, it follows, they are to aſſume no Titles but what the Scripture gives them; and diſtinguiſh not themſelves by any Marks of Dignity or Secular Honour. And laſtly, That all theſe Office-bearers ſhould be tied to their particular Flocks, and reſide with them.

Chap. IV. Of the Office-bearers, and firſt of the Paſtors and Miniſters.

“Paſtors, Biſhops, or Miniſters, are thoſe who are appointed to particular Congregations, which they are to govern by the Word of God. Thus, for this Reaſon, they are ſometimes called Paſtors, becauſe they feed their Congregation, ſometimes Biſhops, becauſe they over-ſee and guard their Flock; ſometimes Miniſters, upon the Score of their Service and Office; and ſometimes Presbyters or Seniors in Regard of the Gravity and Solemnity of Behaviour, for which they ought to be remarkable. No Perſon ought to be choſen into the Miniſtry without the Aſſignment of a particular Congregation: No Man ought to uſurp this Office without lawful Calling. Thoſe who are duly elected, and have undertaken the Miniſterial Office, are not allow'd the Liberty to return to a ſecular Life; and therefore in caſe they deſert their Function, they are to be excommunicated. No Paſtor is to have the Liberty of quitting his Congregation without the Permiſſion of the Provincial Aſſembly. * Preaching and Adminiſtration of the Sacraments is the Paſtor's Buſineſs. He is likewiſe to pray for the People, and pronounce the Bleſſing. He is to inſpect the Behaviour of his Flock, that he may be the better directed in his Exhortations and Reproof. And after lawful Proceedings of the Elderſhip, 'tis the Miniſter's Function to pronounce the Sentence of Binding and Looſing, purſuant to the Power of the Keys granted the Church. *

* Referr'd.

* After lawful Proceeding.

“It belongs to him likewiſe, after lawful Proceeding in the Matter by the Elderſhip, to ſolemnize Marriage. And laſtly, all publick Denunciations, as they call them, that are made in the Church, concerning Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, belong to the Miniſter's Office: For he is the Meſſenger and Herauld betwixt God and the People in all theſe Affairs.

The Articles of this Chapter are all agreed by the State-Committee, excepting the Marginal References, which will likewiſe be the Method in all thoſe that follow.

Chap. V. Of Doctors and their Offices, and of Schools.

“One of the two ordinary and perpetual Functions of thoſe that Labour in the Word, is the Office of the Doctor, who may alſo come under the Denomination of Prophet, Biſhop, Elder, and Catechiſer.* His Buſineſs is to

* This whole Chapter is referred to farther Reaſoning.

“expound the Scriptures without any Application to the Audience. The Deſign of his Function is to inſtruct the Faithful in ſound Doctrine, to preſerve the true Senſe of the Goſpel, and prevent the Growth of Ignorance and Error: And thus he ſtands diſtinguiſh'd from the Paſtor in Qualifications and Management; for the Doctor's Function is to explain the Myſteries of Faith without Rhetorick and Amplification: This is ſuppos'd to be his Talent. But the Paſtor has the Gift of Wiſdom, as they ſpeak: This he is to employ in a more pathetical and affecting Way. He is to apply to the Paſſions in Order to gain the Heart, and command the Practice. Under the Name and Office of Doctors, Schools, Colleges, and Univerſities, are comprehended. The Doctor being an Elder, ought to aſſiſt the Paſtor in the Government of the Church: His Concurrence with the Elders, his Brethren, is likewiſe requiſite. The Reaſon is, becauſe the Interpretation of the Scripture, which is the only Judge in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, is committed to his Charge. But Preaching, Adminiſtring the Sacraments, and the Solemnities of Marriage, are none of the Doctor's Buſineſs, unleſs he has the Paſtoral Office annex'd to his Character. And laſtly, notwithſtading this Diſtinction, the Paſtor may be allow'd to teach in Schools.

Chap. VI. The Elders, and their Office.

“The Word Elder in Scripture is ſometimes attributed to Age, and ſometimes to Office. And when it imports an Office, 'tis ſometimes taken in a large Signification, and comprehends Paſtors and Doctors, no leſs than thoſe who are called Seniors or Elders. We call thoſe Elders whom the Apoſtle calls Preſidents or Governors. The Office is always neceſſary, and by Conſequence perpetual, and is a ſpiritual Function. Elders lawfully call'd, and endow'd with proper Qualifications, muſt not have the Liberty to quit their Office. However, the Election of Elders in certain Congregations may be carried to ſuch a Number, that there may be enough to officiate by Turns, and relieve each other. And for this the Courſes of the Levites in the Buſineſs of the Temple, may ſerve for a Precedent.*

* The Perpetuity of Elders referr'd to farther Deliberation.

“The Number of Elders in every Congregation ought to be proportion'd to the Extent of the Precincts, and the Neceſſities of the People: 'Tis not neceſſary that all Elders ſhould be Teachers or Doctors, tho' this Advantage of Character ought to be aim'd at.*

* Referr'd.

“How they ought to be qualified is to be referr'd to the expreſs Declaration of the Scriptures, and the Canons, as they call them, ſet down by the Apoſtle St. *Paul.

* Referr'd.

“Their Buſineſs, as well ſingly as in Conjunction, is to over-ſee the Behaviour of their Charge; that neither Miſbelief nor Immorality comes in upon them. 'Tis Part of the Function of theſe Elders to aſſiſt the Paſtor in viſiting the Sick, and in examining thoſe that come to the Lord's Table: They are to take Care the Acts of the reſpective Aſſembly are duly executed: They muſt admoniſh all People of their Duties purſuant to the Scripture Directions: And thoſe Things they find too ſtubborn for private Correction, they muſt delate to the Elderſhip or Presbytery. And laſtly, their principal Buſineſs is to conſtitute Aſſemblies with the Paſtors and Doctors for the Execution of Diſcipline: And to theſe Aſſemblies all Perſons reſiding within the Precinct are oblig'd to ſubmit their Conduct.

Chap. VII. Of Elderſhips, and Aſſemblies, and of Diſcipline.

“Elderſhips are generally conſtituted of Paſtors, Doctors, and thoſe commonly call'd Elders, that labour not in the Word and Doctrine. Aſſemblies may be rang'd under a fourfold Diviſion: They either repreſent a particular Congregation, a Province, a whole Nation, or ſeveral Chriſtian Kingdoms and Governments. All Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies have Authority to meet in a lawful Way for treating Eccleſiaſtical Matters.* To be more particular, they have Power to fix the Circumſtances of Time and Place: And thus every Aſſembly may appoint the When, and the Where, for the Meeting of the next.* In all Aſſemblies a Moderator ſhould be choſen by the Conſent of the Members: His Function is to propoſe Buſineſs, to collect the Votes of the Houſe, and keep good Order. And here he is to be particularly careful that the Debates turn only upon Eccleſiaſtical Affairs; that the Aſſembly makes no Encroachment upon the State, nor reaches into any Thing belonging to Civil Juriſdiction. Every Aſſembly has Authority to delegate one or more of their Members to viſit their Precinct, and examine the Conduct of the Miniſters and People.

* Agreed, that Synods be kept twice in a Year by him who has the Charge of Viſitations.

* General Aſſemblies once yearly, his Majeſty's Authority being interpos'd, and from the General Aſſembly, Noblemen, and ſuch as pleaſe to come, ſhall not be excluded, provided that Fifteen only, with his Majeſty's Commiſſioner, have Voice therein.

“The Viſitation of Churches is not an ordinary Eccleſiaſtical Office, confin'd to a ſingle Perſon; neither is it neceſſary for a Viſitor to be call'd a Biſhop; neither is this Office to continue always in the Hands of the ſame Perſon. On the contrary, 'tis within the Power of the Elderſhip to employ what Perſons they pleaſe *pro re natâ. The great End of all Aſſemblies is firſt to ſecure the Doctrines of Chriſtianity from Error and Alloy: And in the next Place to maintain the Church in a Condition of Decency and good Order. And thus for the preſerving of Order, Aſſemblies may make Conſtitutions for regulating the Conduct of all the Faithful.* They have likewiſe Power to abrogate and annul all Ordinances, and Eccleſiaſtical Decrees, which prove unſerviceable, which don't correſpond with the Time, or are abus'd by the People.* The entire Execution of Diſcipline for Contempt, and other Offences, is lodg'd in their Hands.

* Referr'd to the Head of Biſhops, and their Reformation.

* In ſpiritual Things only.

* Agreed, that as they make Acts in ſpiritual Things, ſo they may alter the ſame as the Neceſſity of Time requires.

This Article is referr'd, and ſo is the whole Remainder of this Chapter. To go on with Andrew Melvil, and the reſt of his Party in this Book of Diſcipline.

“The firſt Kind of Aſſemblies, ſay they, tho' within particular Congregations, exerciſe the Authority and Juriſdiction of the Church with mutual Conſent; and for this Reaſon they are ſometimes called the Church.

“Notwithſtanding the Diſtinction of Elders of particular Congregations, 'tis not meant that every Pariſh Church can have a particular Elderſhip, eſpecially to Landwart: But we conceive three or four Pariſhes, generally ſpeaking, may have an Elderſhip or Presbytery common to them all. And for the right conſtituting this Eccleſiaſtical Court of Judicature, 'twill be requiſite to elect ſome of the Elders out of every particular Congregation or Pariſh: By this Means the Members will be better qualified to give Information of what's “amiſs: And over and above, the Power will will be more balanc'd to general Satiſfaction. That theſe Aſſemblies ſhould be thus form'd, we gather, ſay they, from the Practice of the Primitive Church, where Elders, or Colleges of Seniors, were conſtituted in Cities and famous Places.

This Aſſertion has no Countenance from Antiquity: 'Tis not ſupported with ſo much as any ſingle Inſtance from the Primitive Church. To go on with them.

“It belongs to theſe particular Elderſhips to ſee the Word of God orthodoxly preach'd within their Bounds, the Sacraments rightly adminiſter'd, Diſcipline maintain'd, and the Revenues of the Church fairly diſtributed. It belongs to this Presbytery to execute the Orders made by Provincial, National, or General Aſſemblies. 'Tis likewiſe Part of their Authority to make Conſtitutions for Decency and Order within their own Churches, and to avoid ſuch Regulations as they find prejudicial. But then this Power is not without Limitation; for they are not allow'd to alter any Proviſions made by Provincial or General Aſſemblies; nor to make any new Regulations till the Scheme has been tranſmitted to the Provincial Aſſembly.

“Farther, theſe particular Elderſhips or Preſbyteries, have Power to excommunicate the Obſtinate and Unrelenting: The Election and Depoſing of thoſe who bear Eccleſiaſtical Offices belong to this Aſſembly ſo far as their Bounds reach.

And here amongſt the Crimes which deſerve Depoſing or Degradation, Simony, Drunkenneſs, Uſury, and Dancing, are reckon'd.

“Other Churches are to be certified of the Perſons depos'd, that they may not be received to the Exerciſe of their Function. Thoſe who are diſabled by Age or Accident are to continue in the Reſpect of their Character, and allow'd a competent Maintenance.

“Provincial Aſſemblies are lawful Conventions of the Paſtors, Doctors, and Elders, of the Province: They have Power to review the Deciſions of particular Aſſemblies, and rectify what's amiſs: They have likewiſe Power to depoſe the Office-bearers, as they call them, of their Province. And generally theſe Aſſemblies have the whole Power of the particular Elderſhips out of which they are elected.

“A National or General Aſſembly is a lawful Convention of the whole Church of the Realm. None are oblig'd to repair to this Aſſembly for voting, but only Eccleſiaſtical Perſons; and the Number even of theſe is to be fix'd by the ſame Aſſembly. However, ſecular Perſons have the Liberty of coming thither: They are allow'd to propoſe Buſineſs, to hear the Proceedings, and argue upon Debates; but all this without the Privilege of a deciſive Voice.

“This General Aſſembly has a Power to re-examine the Decrees of Provincial Aſſemblies, and make Regulations for the whole Church. They are likewiſe to take particular Care to keep the Spiritual and Civil Juriſdiction at a proper Diſtance; and that they don't interfere and claſh with each other.

As to the 4th Diviſion of Aſſemblies conſiſting of ſeveral Nations, they juſt touch upon the Deſcription, as having no Occaſion to enlarge upon it.

Chap. VIII. Of Deacons, and their Office.

“Deacons are to be elected in the ſame Method as the reſt of the Spiritual Officers. Their Buſineſs is to receive the Revenues of the Church, and diſtribute them purſuant to the Direction of the Presbyteries or Elderſhips.*

* The Chapter of Deacons, and Patrimony of the Church, is thought fit to be poſtpon'd till the Head of Corruptions is argued.

Chap. IX. Of the Patrimony of the Church, and the Diſtribution of it.

“By the Patrimony of the Church they underſtand every Thing that either by univerſal Conſent, or the Cuſtom of Chriſtian Countries, has or ſhall be granted to the publick Uſe or Benefit of the Church. And thus under the Patrimony of the Church they comprehend all Things dedicated to the Service of God, whether Lands, Tenements, Rents, or Oblations; and in ſhort, all Manner of Endowments ſettled by Kings, Princes, or any other Perſons. And thus Tythes, Manſes, and Glebes, are likewiſe comprehended, which by Common Law, and Univerſal Cuſtom, are Part of the Church's Eſtate. To make illegal Seizures of any Part of this Patrimony, and transfer it to prophane or ſecular Uſes, is deteſtable Sacrilege.

“The ancient Canons diſtributed the Patrimony of the Church into four Parts: One Part of this was aſſign'd to the Paſtor, as they call him, for Maintenance and Hoſpitality. A ſecond Diviſion was allow'd to the Elders, Deacons, and the whole Clergy. A third Share was ſet apart for the Proviſion of the Poor. And the fourth was to be ſpent upon the Reparation of the Churches, and other incidental Exigencies. To this fourfold Diviſion they add Schools and School-Maſters, who are to be included in the Body of the Clergy, and ſupported from the conſecrated Revenues. And to theſe, they ſubjoin the Clerks of Aſſemblies, the Agents for the Church, the Takers up of Pſalms, and other neceſſary Officers.

By the Way, the Paſtor they mention, who by the ancient Canons was to have a fourth Part aſſign'd him, was plainly the Biſhop, as diſtinguiſh'd from the Prieſts, or ſecond Order. The Oblations of the Faithful were likewiſe lodg'd with him: And in ſhort, 'twas the Biſhop who had the Diſpoſal of the Patrimony of the Church. (a) But to mark all their Deviations from the Primitive Diſcipline and Government would be too tedious an Undertaking, and ſomewhat foreign to this Work.

Chap. X. Of the Offices of a Chriſtian Magiſtrate in the Church.

“All Chriſtian Kings and Magiſtrates are in a more eſpecial Manner bound to advance the Kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt.* For the Purpoſe, 'tis part of the Office of a Chriſtian Magiſtrate to reinforce the Decrees of the Church, and aſſiſt her with his Authority; to encourage and ſupport the Miniſtry; to prevent the Incurſions of falſe Teachers, and take Care that the Preferments are not miſpent by idle and inſignificant People; to maintain Diſcipline, and correct thoſe with Corporal or Pecuniary Puniſhments who diſregard the ſpiritual Cenſures: And all this without confounding the Juriſdiction of Church and State. To preſerve the Patrimony of the Church from

* For the whole Chapter it is thought meet, that an Article be preſented to his Majeſty and Eſtates, craving a Puniſhment to be appointed for thoſe that put violent Hands on Miniſters, and likewiſe to deſire ſuch Immunities and Privileges to them as ſhall be thought convenient.

“ Violence and Sacrilege: To make Laws for the Benefit of this Spiritual Society without ſtretching his Prerogative too far, or concerning himſelf with Functions purely Eccleſiaſtical; ſuch as Preaching, Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, Pronouncing or Executing in Church Diſcipline, or Seizing any Part of the Power of the Keys which our Saviour has granted to his Apoſtles, and their Succeſſors.

“ Although when Churches are corrupted, Godly Kings and Princes ſometimes interpoſe their Authority, place Miniſters, recover Things from Diſorder, and reſtore the true Service of God; and for this they have the Precedent of ſome Godly Kings and Emperors, both under the Jewiſh and Chriſtian State: Notwithſtanding this, where the Miniſtry of the Church is once well conſtituted, and thoſe that officiate manage fairly and faithfully, all Godly Princes and Magiſtrates ought to hear and obey their Voice, and reverence the Majeſty of God ſpeaking by them.

This laſt Article was contrived to ſave ſome Appearances: But upon Examination 'twill be found ſhort of the Purpoſe. For if the Civil Magiſtrate is Judge of the good Conſtitution of the Church, and the Behaviour of the Eccleſiaſticks, then he may interpoſe at Diſcretion, alter the Eſtabliſhment, and diſplace the Miniſters as often as he pleaſes. But if the Privilege of judging upon the State and Condition of her own Body belongs to the Church, then the Prince can't act till the Church gives the Signal; nor proceed any farther than the Governors of this Spiritual Society ſhall direct.

The Title of the Eleventh Chapter ſtands thus:

Chap. XI. Of the preſent Abuſes remaining in the Church, which are deſir'd to be Reform'd.

“ They begin with declaring againſt Abbots, Priors, Prioreſſes, Commendators, &c. All which Names and Offices they deſire may be ſuppreſs'd and aboliſh'd.

From whence it follows, that notwithſtanding the Monaſteries were pull'd down and deface'd, yet the Diſtinctions and Privileges of the Perſons were ſtill continued.

Their next Remonſtrance is pointed againſt, the “ Titles and Offices of Deans, Archdeacons, Chanters, Subchanters, Treaſurers, Chancellors, &c.” The reſt of their Complaint in this Chapter is levell'd againſt the Superiority of Biſhops: But here, ſince they do but repeat ſome of their former Aſſertions, I ſhall paſs moſt of it over. But notwithſtanding their Declaiming againſt the ſecular Employment of Biſhops, they make no Scruple to affirm, “ That Miniſters when requir'd, may, and ought to aſſiſt their Princes in Council, Parliament, or out of Council.

The Twelfth Chapter goes upon the ſame Subject of Reformation: I ſhall mention only ſome of the Heads.

“ They would have Doctors fix'd in the Univerſities and other Places for explaining the Scriptures, and teaching the Rudiments of Religion: And this with a ſettled Maintenance proportion'd to their Character. That the Liberty of national Aſſemblies ſhould be preſerv'd: That the Church ſhould be unmoleſted in her Privilege of appointing Time and Place for this national Meeting: And that all Perſons, as well Magiſtrates, as private Perſons, ſhould acquieſce in their Deciſion of Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, without making Appeal to any Civil Judicature.

As to the Election of Eccleſiaſticks, they deſire “ none may be forc'd upon any Congregation, either by the Prince, or Subject, without the Choice and Aſſent of the People where the Miniſter is to preſide. *

* Agreed to the General.

And being ſenſible of the Inconſiſtency of Patronages with this Method, they deſire all thoſe that “ truly fear God to conſider, that Patronages and Benefices have no Foundation in the Word of God: So far from any Warrant from thence, that they ſtand condemn'd by the Tenure of the Scriptures, and the Practice recommended there: They are utterly Subverſive of the Liberty of Elections, and ought not to be endur'd under the Reformation? And therefore all thoſe who are willing to be govern'd by the Direction of the Holy Scriptures, and deſire the Advancement of our Saviour's Kingdom, are oblig'd to receive the Polity, or Eccleſiaſtical Regulations, held forth in the inſpir'd Writings: For without Reſigning in this Point, their Profeſſion of Chriſtianity is to no Purpoſe. *

* Referr'd.

“ But as to other Patronages of Benefices, not having Curam Animarum, ſuch as Chaplainries, Prebendaries, &c. endow'd with Lands or annual Rents, they are contented, the Nomination to theſe Preferments may go in the cuſtomary Method: Theſe may be reſerv'd to their reſpective Patrons, and diſpos'd of by them to Men of Learning, as they fall void. *

* To be ſought of the Parliament.

And to mention but one Article more, they deſire “ That none but the Deacons may receive the Profits, and Rents belonging to the Church: And that all other Collectors of theſe Revenues employ'd either by the Prince, or any other Perſon, may be diſcharg'd. * (b)

* Referr'd to the Head of the Deacons.

(b) MS Acts of the Aſſembly, fol. 951. to fol. 980.

This Second Book of Diſcipline, tho' laid before the Parliament by Andrew Melvil and ſome of his Party, yet it did not paſs ſo much as the general Aſſembly till Three Years forwards, as will be farther obſerv'd afterwards. As to the Scheme, a good Part of it is tranſcrib'd from Beza's Tract, De triplici Epiſcopatu, and his Anſwer to the Queſtions propos'd to him by the Lord Glamis. To give the Reader ſome of Beza's Aſſertions upon this Argument.

The Scotch new Book of Diſcipline, drawn partly out of Beza.

This Genevian Miniſter is poſitive for the divine Right of Ruling Elders. He affirms that Biſhops engroſs the Power of Ordination, without any Warrant from the Holy Scripture. That all Eccleſiaſtical Functions are principally founded upon popular Election: That this Election, and not Ordination, or Impoſition of Hands, makes Paſtors or Biſhops. That Impoſition of Hands means nothing farther than putting them in Poſſeſſion of their Miniſtry. But as for the Entireneſs and Powers of their Character, they come wholly from their Election. And therefore by Conſequence it may be ſaid with more Propriety, that the Fathers of the Church are made by the Holy Ghoſt, and the Votes of their Children, rather than by the Biſhops. Beza goes on in his Remarks, and obſerves that St. Paul in his 1ſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, expreſly directs his Diſcourſe againſt the then prevailing Schiſm. That foreſeeing the Authority in the Epiſcopal Character might be judg'd a proper Remedy for ſo great a Miſchief: Foreſeeing a Miſinterpretation might paſs upon this Head, he join'd Soſtenes with himſelf in the Salutation: That thus by his own Example he might teach how much Empire and monarchick Sway, was to be avoided ed in Eccleſiaſtical Conventions: Since the Apoſtles themſelves, who were next to our Saviour, and rang'd in the Firſt Claſs of Church Government, did notwithſtanding exerciſe their Power upon Terms of Parity. This by the Way, is an odd Inference from the Text. Farther; Beza makes no Scruple to affirm, that Epiſcopacy is rather productive of Schiſms, than a Remedy againſt them. That had it not been for this humane Invention, a great many Diviſions had never happen'd in the Church. That the Papacy was the Product of Epiſcopacy. That the Council of Nice by making that Canon about 'Αρχαῖα ἔθη, That the Ancient Cuſtoms ſhould continue, &c. open'd a Way for the Roman Pontificate, and erected a Throne for that Strumpet that ſits upon the Seven Hills: That the Primitive Churches were in a flouriſhing Condition as long as their Governors held the Balance even, manag'd upon a Level, and refus'd to give Way to the Admiſſion of Prelacy. (c)

(c) Beza de triplici Epiſcopatu. See Saravia's Works: And Fundamental Charter of Presbytery examin'd, pag. 247.

By theſe few Citations from this Writer, from whom much more might be collected, the Reader may perceive from what Magazines the Scotch were furniſh'd: And that 'twas from Beza's Inſtructions that the Aſſembly form'd their Scheme for Church Government: Beza's Performance upon this Subject was brought into Scotland in the latter End of the laſt Year; which was about half a Year before their new Book of Diſcipline was preſented to the Parliament.

The 1ſt Presbytery erected, when.

This Book of Diſcipline mentions Presbyteries, ſtates their Powers, and deſcribes the Members of which they were to conſiſt: But notwithſtanding their inſiſting ſo much upon this Subject, there were no ſuch Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies then in being. The Firſt Presbytery in that Nation was ſet up at Edinborough: But then this was not done, till May 1581. (d)

Octob. 24. 1578.

Tho' this Presbyterian Model was in a great Meaſure check'd at the Council-Board, yet Melvil (who had lately been Moderator of the Aſſembly) and his Party were reſolv'd to act independently of the State, and try the Strength of their Intereſt. Thus at their next general Meeting already mention'd, they paſs'd ſeveral Orders for Diſabling the Biſhops, drawing them down to a Parity with the Miniſters, and bringing them under the abſolute Sway of the Aſſembly. Purſuant to theſe Reſolutions already related, they requir'd Mr. James Boyd, Archbiſhop of Glaſcow, to make his Submiſſion to the Aſſembly, and comply with the Reformation preſcrib'd. But the Archbiſhop was not altogether ſo paſſive as they expected: He ſtood upon the Defence of his Station and Character: And after having argued the Point with David Ferguſon the Moderator, gave his Anſwer in writing to this Purpoſe.

The Aſſembly require a Submiſſion from the Archbiſhop of Glaſcow.

The Reaſons of his Incompliance.

" He told them, that not only the Name of a " Biſhop, but the Power and Regard uſually " paid to that Character, was warrantable by " the Holy Scriptures: That ſince he was pro" moted to the See of Glaſcow by the King's " Nomination, and the Election of the Chapter, " he believ'd his Calling was lawful, and ſhould " endeavour to perform the Duties requir'd: " That notwithſtanding, he was willing to refer " himſelf to the Judgment of the Church, in " Caſe of Miſbehaviour. But on this Condi" tion, that no more was demanded from him, " than what the Apoſtle requires. As to the " Revenues and Privileges of his See, he con" ceiv'd the Title good, and the Keeping them " very lawful. And as for ſerving the Crown " with his Advice, he thought his Allegiance " bound him to it: And beſides, he look'd on " the Biſhops being preſent at ſuch publick " Conſultations, as beneficial to the Church.

This Anſwer was voted Unſatisfactory. But the Archbiſhop withdrew from the Aſſembly, and would give them no better. Upon this Andrew Melvil, and ſome other Miniſters were commiſſionated to preſs his Subſcription to the Aſſembly-Act, for the Reformation of Epiſcopacy: And if he refus'd to comply, to proceed to Excommunication. Melvil went to the utmoſt Length of his Commiſſion, menac'd the Archbiſhop with the Cenſures of the Church, and finding him under the Diſadvantage of ill Health, work'd him to the Signing the ſhocking Articles already mention'd. This Submiſſion troubled Boyd very much in his laſt Sickneſs: Spotſwood gives him the Character of a wiſe, learned, and religious Prelate. (e)

Melvil moves for the pulling down the Cathedral at Glaſcow.

Melvil having thus help'd the Archbiſhop into the other World, attempted the Demolition of the Cathedral. This ſingular Reformer, and ſome other Miniſters, had plied the Magiſtracy with ſuch Importunity, that at laſt they conſented to the pulling down this noble Structure. One of their Topicks was, that this Church was a Monument of Idolatry, and the only unruin'd Cathedral in the whole Country. But when the Maſons were brought to take down the Building, the Townſmen ran to Arms, and threatned thoſe with immediate Death that ſhould ſtir the Firſt Stone: And thus by the Bravery of the Burghers, the Cathedral was preſerv'd.

To return to England. The Queen was now treating a Marriage with the Duke of Anjou. This Alliance was not well reliſh'd by the Engliſh. And here the Puritans were lowdeſt in their Remonſtrance. One Stubbs, a Lawyer of that Perſuaſion, wrote a Book againſt the Match, entitled, The gaping Gulph. This Tract was penn'd with a great Deal of Heat and Satyr. The Queen looked upon theſe intemperate Clamours as no better than arraigning the Government. To check this Inſolence therefore, a Proclamation came out for ſeizing the Book, the Author, and Printer. And for prevention of farther Miſchief, the Lords of the Council wrote to Archbiſhop Grindal, acquainting him with the Malignity of the Libel: That the Deſign of it was to miſreport the Queen to her Subjects, as if ſhe intended to alter the Religion eſtabliſh'd: And that ſuch Inſinuations as theſe were altogether Remote from her Majeſty's Intentions. The Archbiſhop therefore is requir'd to ſend for as many of the Clergy of Character as can conveniently be got together: To read the Proclamation to them, to acquaint them with her Majeſty's unalterable Reſolution; never to admit of any Change in Religion. He was likewiſe to admoniſh them to keep within the Compaſs of their Profeſſion, and not concern themſelves with State-Matters in the Pulpit. (f)

This Year the Univerſity of Oxford made a farther Proviſion to guard the Reformation.

A Decree of the Univerſity of Oxford againſt the Spreading of Popery.

Anno Dom. 1579.

The Heads of the Decree paſs'd in Convocation are theſe:

1. For the Extirpation of all Hereſies, and the better Inſtruction of young Students, they order the following Books to be read to them, viz. Alexander Nowel's larger Catechiſm in Latin and Greek; or John Calvin's Catechiſm in Latin, Greek and Hebrew; or Hyperius's Elements of the Chriſtian Religion; or the Hydelberg Catechiſm. And here the Choice is left to the Readers, who are to Regard the Capacity of the Audience. 2. To theſe might be added, Henry Bullinger's Catechiſm, Calvin's Inſtitutions, the Apology for the Church of England, or the Nine and thirty Articles, with an Expoſition upon them: And this Explanation and Defence drawn from the Holy Scriptures, and the Teſtimony of the Fathers.' 3. That all Catechiſms counter to the Orthodoxy in theſe Tracts, and all other Superſtitious and Popiſh Books, are forbidden to be either read or kept in private Studies. 4. This Buſineſs of Reading and Expounding, was enjoin'd Tutors, and publick Catechiſts. There was likewiſe an Examination order'd to be taken every Term of the Proficiency of the Students. (g)

This Year Mathew Hammond, a Plow-wright of Hetherſett, near Norwich, was convented before the Biſhop for Hereſy and Blaſphemy. He denied the Inſpiration of the New Teſtament, the Divinity of our Saviour, and the Holy Ghoſt, and the Neceſſity of Baptiſm, and the Holy Euchariſt. His Blaſphemies I ſhall paſs over. He outrag'd the Queen and Council in opprobrious Language, for which he was ſentenc'd to loſe his Ears, which was executed accordingly. In ſhort, he held to his Hereſies and blaſphemous Expreſſions, and was burnt in the Caſtle Ditch at Norwich.

Robert Horn, Biſhop of Wincheſter, died the Firſt of June this Year. He was born in the Biſhoprick of Durham, and bred in St. John's College in Cambridge: His Exile, the Courſe of his Preferments, and ſome other Paſſages relating to his Character, have been mention'd already.

The next Year ſome Dutch-men coming over ſpread new and dangerous Opinions, * to the Diſturbance of the Church and State. Theſe Men, tho' deſperate Hereticks, made a ſtrong Appearance of Sanctity. They call'd themſelves The Family of Love, or The Houſe of Charity. They made their Proſelytes believe, That none but their Society were within the Number of the Elect: And that the Reſt of Mankind were all Reprobates, and doom'd to Damnation. That they had the Privilege of denying any Thing they pleas'd upon Oath before a Magiſtrate, or any other Perſon of a different Religion from themſelves. A Body of this Enthuſiaſtick and ſcandalous Doctrine, was tranſlated from Dutch into Engliſh. Some of the Books were entitled, The Goſpel of the Kingdom, documental Sentences, the Propheſy of the Spirit of Love, the Publication of Peace upon the Earth, by H. N. They would by no Means tell their Author's Name: But afterwards 'twas found out theſe Tracts were written by one Henry Nicholas of Leiden: This Heretick advanc'd to Blaſphemy, and affirm'd that the divine Nature was communicated to him, and that God was Partaker of his Humanity. To prevent theſe Men from ſhedding their Venom a Proclamation was publiſh'd: The Familiſts Books were order'd to be burnt, and the Magiſtracy commanded to aſſiſt the Ordinaries. *

The next remarkable Occurrence, is the Meeting of the Parliament at Weſtminſter. The Seſſion began on the 16th of January, continued till the 18th of March, when 'twas once more prorogued: 'Twas diſſolv'd on the 19th of April, in the 25th Year of this Reign.

Jan. 16. 158$\frac{0}{1}$.

To obſerve ſomething relating to the Church. Mr. Paul Wentworth, Brother to Peter above-mention'd, mov'd in the Lower Houſe for a publick Faſt, and a Sermon every Morning before the Houſe ſate. Sir Francis Knowles, Treaſurer of the Houſhold, and ſome other Members, oppos'd this Motion: However, That the Commons had Authority to appoint a Faſt, was carried by a Majority: And thus the 29th of January was fix'd for the Day: The Commons were to meet at the Temple Church: And that the Preachers might deliver no offenſive Doctrine, they were to be appointed by thoſe Members who were of the Privy-Council.

The Houſe of Commons appoint a Faſt.

But before the Day came, the Speaker declar'd himſelf ſorry for the Error of this Reſolve: And that her Majeſty was much diſpleas'd with their Proceedings. At the ſame Time the Queen ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe by her Vice-chamberlain. The Purport of it was to acquaint them her Majeſty was extremely ſurpriz'd at the Hardineſs of their Motions: That the taking ſuch Steps againſt her expreſs Order, by the Lord Chancellor, could be conſtrued to nothing but down-right Contempt. In ſhort, both the Speaker and the Vice-Chamberlain propos'd their making a Submiſſion, owning their Fault, and asking Pardon. After ſeveral Speeches in the Houſe to this Purpoſe, the Queſtion was put whether the Vice-Chamberlain, Sir Chriſtopher Hatton, ſhould deliver the Submiſſion to her Majeſty: 'Twas carried in the Affirmative.

On the 25th of January the Vice-Chamberlain came to the Houſe and acquainted them the Queen had accepted their Submiſſion: That ſhe hop'd for the Future they would move more warily: That ſhe did not diſlike their Inclination for Faſting and Prayers: 'Twas the Manner which diſoblig'd: 'Twas their preſuming to appoint a Faſt without pre-acquainting her Majeſty, and receiving her Orders for that Purpoſe: And that this was no leſs than plain Encroachment upon her Eccleſiaſtical Authority. (b)

They make a Submiſſion to the Queen for this Freedom.

(b) D'Ewes's Journal, p. 292.

When this Matter was diſmiſs'd, Sir Walter Mildemay made a long Speech upon the Danger from Popery, and mov'd that a Bill might be brought in for farther Security to the Government. He inſiſted upon the hoſtile Practice, and reſtleſs endeavours of the Court of Rome: That they look'd upon England as the main Strength of the Reformation, and that they were perpetually playing their Batteries againſt this Quarter. For Inſtances of hoſtile Practice, he mention'd the Northern Rebellion, rais'd by the Earls of Weſtmoreland and Northumberland. The affording Shelter and Maintenance to thoſe Rebels, and other Deſerters ever ſince. The Publiſhing a moſt malicious and ſcandalous Bull againſt her Majeſty: The Invaſion of Ireland, by James Fitz-Morris: The Inſurrection headed by the Earl of Deſmond: And the late Landing of Strangers, and fortifying that Country againſt the Government. This Speech made an Impreſſion, and 'tis probable occaſion'd the Paſſing the Bill for retaining the Queen's Subjects in their due Obedience. By this Statute, 'tis High-Treaſon to draw off any Perſon from the Communion of the Church of England to that of Rome: And the ſame Penalty is enacted againſt thoſe reconcil'd to Popery; And thoſe who knowingly maintain or conceal the Reconciling, or Reconciled, and refuſe to diſcover them within Twenty Days to ſome Juſtice of the Peace, or other Higher-Officer, ſhall fall under the Penalty of Miſpriſion of Treaſon: 'Tis likewiſe enacted, That every Perſon convicted of ſaying Maſs, ſhall forfeit Two hundred Marks, and ſuffer a Year's Impriſonment, and thoſe who willingly hear Maſs, are liable to the Forfeiture of a Hundred Marks, and one Year's Impriſonment. Farther, every Perſon above the Age of Sixteen Years, who abſents himſelf from Church, incurs the Forfeiture of 20 Pounds per Month:

And in Caſe the Abſence is continued for 12 Months, he is to be bound to his good Behaviour, to enter into a Recognizance of 200 l. and find Two ſufficient Sureties.

And laſtly, The Keeping a School-maſter, who neither comes to Church, nor is licens'd by the Biſhop of the Dioceſe, is made Ten Pound per Month Forfeiture: And the School-maſter is to ſuffer a Years Impriſonment without Bail or Mainprize. (i)

(i) 23 Eliz. cap. 1.

There was another Act paſs'd this Seſſion to check the Diſorders of the Puritan Faction. Stubbs's Book, entitled, The gaping Gulph, might not improbably give Occaſion to this Bill: For the Libel was penn'd with great Rancour and coarſe Language: The French Nation was outrag'd, and the Duke of Anjou abus'd to the laſt Degree: And which was ſtill more provoking, the Queen was dangerouſly miſreported: As if ſhe had a Deſign to abandon the Reformation, and betray the Kingdom to a foreign Power. To prevent the People from being poiſon'd with ſuch Calumnies, the Statute enacts,
